volcanity (vol-kan'i-ti), n. [< volcan(ic) + -ity.] The state of being volcanic or of volcanic origin. [Rare.]

volcano (vol-kā'nō), n.; pl. volcanoes, volcanos (-nōz). [Formerly also vulcano; = F. volcan (> Sp. volcan = Pg. volcão, vulcão), < It. volcano, also vulcano, a burning mountain, prop. first applied to Mt. Etna, which was especially feigned to be the seat of Hephæstus (Vulcan), < L. Volcanus, later Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire, also fig. fire: see Vulcan.] 1. A mountain or other elevation having at or near its apex an opening in the earth's crust from which heated materials are expelled either continuously or at regular or irregular intervals. These materials are molten rock (lava), ashes, cinders, large fragments of solid rock, mud, water, steam, and various gases. Such openings are ordinarily surrounded by more or less conical accumulations of the erupted materials, and it is to such cones that the term volcano is usually applied. The opening through which the lava rises is called the vent or chimney, and the cup-shaped enlargement of it, to its upper parts, the crater; there may be one such opening at the summit or on the flanks of the cone, or there may be a considerable number of them. In many volcanoes a central cone has upon its flanks a considerable number of minor cones (parasitic cones, as they are sometimes called). Etna has more than two hundred quite conspicuous cones within a radius of ten miles from the center of the main crater. The size and elevation of volcanoes vary greatly. The very high ones, like Cotopaxi and Popocatepetl and many others, are built up on high plateaus; others, like the extinct or dormant volcanoes of the Sierra Nevada of California, are chiefly made up of other than volcanic material, masked by the flow of eruptive matter down the slopes of a preexisting older mass. Volcanoes and volcanic regions vary greatly in the degree of their activity and in the length and frequency of their periods of repose; those volcanoes which during the historic period have shown no signs of activity are said to be extinct, or dormant if a long interval has elapsed since the last eruption. Nothing definite was known of the volcanic forces pent up within the area covered by Vesuvius prior to A. D. 79, when the great catastrophe took place by which Pompeii was overwhelmed, and which was briefly described by Pliny the Younger in his narrative of the death of his uncle, Pliny the Elder. Volcanoes and volcanic areas are very irregularly distributed over the earth, but are chiefly in the neighborhood of the ocean. The Asiatic and the American shores of the Pacific, not continuous, but in many places are dotted with volcanoes, from Java to the islands of the Indian Ocean, and from Patagonia to Alaska. The most active volcanic center in the world is the island of Java and its vicinity. This island, having about the area of England, contains forty-nine great volcanic cones some of which are 12,000 feet in height. The eruption of Krakatoa, an island in the Sunda strait, which took place in the closing days of August, 1883, was the most violent and destructive event of the kind of which history has any record. Nearly forty thousand persons were drowned along the coast adjacent to the Strait of Sunda by waves set in motion by the inrush of water to fill the cavity caused by the expulsion of material from the crater.

2. A kind of firework. See fizgig[1], 2.—Submarine volcano. See submarine.—Volcano-ship, a vessel loaded with combustibles and missiles for explosion against another ship or against a stationary structure.

The burning volcano ship at the siege of Antwerp.
Motley, Hist. Netherlands, II. 177.

volcanoism (vol-kā'nō-izm), n. [< volcano + -ism.] Violent and destructive eruptiveness. [Rare.]

Not blaze out, . . . as wasteful volcanoism, to scorch and consume! Carlyle, Past and Present, ii. 10.

volcanological (vol-kā-nō-loj'i-kal), a. [< volcanolog-y + -ical.] Relating to or in the manner of volcanology; in a scientific manner, from the point of view of the investigator of volcanic phenomena. Also vulcanological.

volcanology (vol-kā-nol'ō-ji), n. [< volcano + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The scientific study of volcanic phenomena. Also vulcanology.

His annual account of the progress in volcanology and seismology for 1885. Athenæum, No. 3068, p. 210.

vole[1] (vōl), n. [< F. vole, < voler, fly, < L. volare, fly: see volant.] In card-playing, a winning of all the tricks played in one deal.

Ladies, I'll venture for the vole.
Swift, Death of Dr. Swift.

"A vole! a vole!" she cried, "'tis fairly won;
My game is ended, and my work is done." Cowley.

vole[1] (vōl), v. t.; pret. and pp. voled, ppr. voling. [< vole[1], n.] In card-playing, to win all the tricks played in one deal.

vole[2] (vōl), n. [Short for vole-mouse.] A short-tailed field-mouse or meadow mouse; a campagnol or arvicoline; any member of the genus Arvicola in a broad sense. All the Arvicolinæ are voles, though some of them, as the jumping and muskrat, are usually called by other names. They are mostly terrestrial, tending to be aquatic, abound in the sphagnous swamps and low moist ground of nearly all parts of the northern hemisphere, and are on the whole among the most mischievous of mammals. The common vole, meadow-mouse, or short-tailed field-mouse of Europe is A. agrestis.

Common European Meadow-vole (Arvicola agrestis).

The water-vole or water-rat is a larger species, A. amphibius, almost as aquatic as a muskrat. Some voles are widely distributed, among them one common to the northerly parts of both hemispheres, the red-backed vole, Evotomys rutilus. The commonest representatives in the United States are Arvicola riparius, A. austerus, and A. pinetorum. A very large species of British America is A. xanthognathus. The name vole is purely British, being seldom heard in the United States, or used in books treating of the American species, which are called field mice and meadow mice. See also cuts under Arvicola, Evotomys, Synaptomys, and water-rat.

volently† (vō'lent-li), adv. Willingly. [Rare.]

Into the pit they run against their will that ran so volently, so violently, to the brink of it.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 287.

volery† (vol'e-ri), n.; pl. voleries (-riz). [Also volary, vollary; < OF. volere, a cage, coop, dovecote, F. volière, an aviary, also OF. voltier, a large cage or aviary: cf. volerie, "a place over the stage which we called the heaven" (Cotgrave), i. e. 'place of flying'; < voler, fly, < L. volare, fly: see volant.] 1. A large bird-cage or inclosure in which the birds have room to fly.

I thought thee then our orpheus, that wouldst try,
Like him, to make the air one volary.
B. Jonson, Underwoods, xvi.

Sitting moping like three or four melancholy Birds in a spacious Vollary. Etherege, Man of Mode, v.

Having seene the roomes, we went to ye volary, wch has a cupola in the middle of it, grande trees and bushes, it being full of birds, who drank at two fountaines.
Evelyn, Diary, March 1, 1644.

2. The birds confined in such an inclosure; a flight or flock of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, . . . is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery, amongst which there will not be wanting some birds of prey. Locke, Education, § 94.

volet (vol'a), n. [OF. volet, a cloth spread on the ground to hold grain, a shutter, etc., < voler, fly, < L. volare, fly: see volant.] 1. A veil, especially one worn by women, and forming a part of the outdoor dress in the middle ages.—2. In painting, one of the wings or shutters of a picture formed as a triptych, as in Rubens's "Descent from the Cross" in Antwerp Cathedral, the volets of which are painted on both sides.

Small triptychs with folding-doors or volets in boxwood. S. K. Cat. Spec. Exh. 1862, No. 1048.

3. A door, or one leaf of a door, in ornamental furniture and similar decorative objects.

volget, n. [< L. vulgus, vulgus, the common people: see vulgar.] The vulgar, the rabble.

One had as good be dumb as not speak with the volget.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., XI. viii. 32. (Davies.)

volitable† (vol'i-ta-bl), a. [< L. volitare, fly to and fro: see volitant.] Capable of being volatilized; volatilizable.

volitant (vol'i-tant), a. [< L. volitan(t-)s, ppr. of volitare, fly to and fro, freq. of volare, fly: see volant.] Flying; having the power of flight: volant: as, the bat is a volitant quadruped.

Volitantia† (vol-i-tan'shi-ạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of volitan(t-)s, flying: see volitant.] In Illiger's classification of mammals (1811), the eleventh order, containing flying quadrupeds, in two families, Dermoptera and Chiroptera.

the so-called flying-lemurs and the bats—thus an artificial group, now abolished.

volitation (vol-i-tā'shon), n. [< L. volitare, pp. volitatus, fly to and fro: see volitant.] The act of flying; the power of flight, or its habitual exercise; flight; volation.

volitational (vol-i-tā'shon-al), a. [< volitation + -al.] Of or pertaining to volitation or flight.

Volitatores† (vol"i-tā-tō'rēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. volitare, fly: see volitant.] In ornith., in Macgillivray's system, an order of birds, the skimmers, composed of such species as swallows, bee-eaters, and goatsuckers: an artificial group.

volitatory (vol'i-ta-to-ri), a. [< L. volitare, pp. volitatus, fly, + -ory.] Same as volitorial.

volitient (vo-lish'ient), a. [Irreg. < volit(ion) + -ent.] Having freedom of will; exercising the will; willing. [Rare.]

> I [Lucifer] chose this ruin; I elected it
> Of my will, not of service. What I do
> I do volitient, not obedient.
> Mrs Browning, Drama of Exile.

volition (vō-lish'on), n. [< F. volition = Sp. volicion = Pg. volição = It. volizione, < ML. volitio(n-), will, volition, < L. velle, ind. pres. volo, will: see *will*1.] 1. The act of willing; the exercise of the will. Volition does not consist in forming a choice or preference, but in an act of the soul in which the agent is generally held to have a peculiar sense of reaction.

> The actual exercise of that power [the will], by directing any particular action or its forbearance, is . . . volition.
> Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxi. 5.

> Will is indeed an ambiguous word, being sometimes put for the faculty of willing, sometimes for the act of that faculty, besides other meanings. But volition always signifies the act of willing, and nothing else. Willingness, I think, is opposed to unwillingness or aversion. A man is willing to do what he has no aversion to do, or what he has some desire to do, though perhaps he has not the opportunity; and I think this is never called volition.
> Reid, Letter to Dr. J. Gregory (Works, ed. Hamilton, p. 709).

> An artist's brain receives and stores images often without distinct volition.
> T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, xvii.

> When a man's arm is raised in sequence to that state of consciousness we call a volition, the volition is not the immediate cause of the elevation of the arm.
> Huxley, in Nineteenth Century, XXI. 405.

2. The power of willing; will.

> In that young bosom are often stirring passions as strong as our own, . . . a volition not less supreme.
> D'Israeli.

> The play of the features, the vocal exclamations, the gesticulations of the arms, &c., come under the domain of our volition.
> A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 362.

volitional (vō-lish'on-al), a. [< volition + -al.] Of or pertaining to volition.

> The volitional impulse.
> Bacon.

> What is termed self-control, prudential restraint, moral strength, consists in the intellectual permanency of the volitional element of our feelings.
> A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 21.

> There is no more miserable human being than one in whom nothing is habitual but indecision, and for whom the lighting of every cigar, the drinking of every cup, the time of rising and going to bed every day, and the beginning of every bit of work, are subjects of express volitional deliberation.
> W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 122.

Volitional insanity, a form of mental disease in which the most striking phenomena are those relating to perverted or impaired will power.

volitionally (vo-lish'on-al-i), adv. In a volitional manner; as respects volition; by the act of willing.

> It was able to move its right leg volitionally in all directions.
> Lancet, 1880, I. 1415.

volitionary (vo-lish'on ā-ri), a. [< volition + -ary.] Volitional.

> Dr. Berry Hayeraft gave an account of some experiments which extend our knowledge of volitionary movement and explain the production of the muscle and heart sounds.
> Nature, XLI. 358.

volitionless (vo-lish'on-les), a. [< volition + -less.] Without volition.

> The volitionless will.
> J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, II. 415.

volitive (vol'i-tiv), a. [< volit(ion) + -ive.] 1. Having the power to will; exercising volition.

> It is, therefore, an unreasonable conceit to think that God will continue an active, vital, intellective, volitive nature, form, power, force, inclination, in a noble substance which shall use none of these for many hundred or thousand years, and so continue them in vain.
> Baxter, Dying Thoughts.

2. Originating in the will.

> Wundt regards apperception as a particular process, inserted between perception and volitive excitement.
> Alien and Neurol. (trans.), VI. 519.

3. In rhet., expressing a wish or permission; as, a volitive proposition.

Volitores (vol-i-tō'rēz), n. pl. [NL., prop. Volatores*, pl. of volator, a flier: see volator.] In Owen's classification, those birds which move solely or chiefly by flight or are preëminent in ability to fly. It is the fifth order of the system, embracing 11 families, as the swifts, humming-birds, goatsuckers, kingfishers, hornbills, etc., intervening between his Cantores or singers and Scansores or climbers. It is an artificial group, practically equivalent to those Picaria which are not yoke-toed, or to Picaria with the old group Scansores eliminated. [Not in use.]

volitorial (vol-i-tō'ri-al), a. [< Volitores + -al.] Of or pertaining to the Volitores.

Volkameria (vol-ka-mē'ri-ä), n. [NL., named in honor of Volkamer, a German botanist.] 1. A Linnean genus of verbenaceous shrubs, now included in Clerodendron. Several species are cultivated for beauty or fragrance in tropical gardens, as C. (V.) aculeatum, an American plant, and especially C. (V.) fragrans from China. C. (V.) inerme of maritime India is richly perfumed, and has a local reputation as a febrifuge. 2. [l.c.] A plant of the former genus Volkameria.

Volkmannia (volk-man'i-ä), n. [NL., < Volkmann (see def.).] A fossil plant found in the coal-measures, and in regard to the nature of which there has been much uncertainty. It has recently been shown to be the fruit of Asterophyllites of Brongniart (Calamodadus of Schimper). The plant was named by Sternberg, in 1820, in honor of G. A. Volkmann, author of "Silesia Subterranea" (1720), in which work some of the fossil plants of that part of Germany were described.

vollenget, n. See valanche.

volley (vol'i), n. [Formerly also vollie, voley; < OF. volee, F. volée = Sp. volada = It. volata, a flight, < ML. as if volata*, < L. volare, fly: see volant.] 1. The flight of a number of missile weapons together; hence, the discharge simultaneously, or nearly so, of a number of missile weapons.

> A volley of our needless shot.
> Shak., K. John, v. 5. 5.

> It may even be the case that in defensive positions, where the extent of ground open to view is considerable, long-range infantry fire regulated by volleys may be attempted.
> Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 357.

2. Hence, a noisy or explosive burst or emission of many things at once.

> A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.
> Shak., T. G. of V., ii 4. 33.

> What were those thousands of blaspheming Cavaliers about him, whose mouthes let fly Oaths and Curses by the voley?
> Milton, Eikonoklastes.

> We heard a volley of oaths and curses.
> Addison, Tatler, No. 254.

3. In lawn-tennis and tennis, a return of the ball by the racket before it touches the ground, especially a swift return. At volley, on the volley [F. à la volée], on the fly, in passing; at random.

> What we spake on the voley begins to work.
> Massinger, Picture, iii 6.

> P. jun. Call you this jeering! I can play at this;
> 'Tis like a ball at tennis.
> Alm. It is indeed, sir,
> When we do speak at volley all the ill
> We can one of another.
> B. Jonson, Staple of News, iv.

volley (vol'i), v. [< volley, n.] I. trans. 1. To discharge in a volley, or as if in a volley: often with out. Compare volleyed.

> Another [hound]
> Against the welkin volleys out his voice.
> Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 921.

2. In lawn-tennis and tennis, to return on the fly; said of the ball; drive (the ball) with the racket before it strikes the ground.

II. intrans. 1. To fly together, as missiles; hence, to issue or be discharged in large number or quantity.

> The volleying ram and tossing breeze.
> M. Arnold, Thyrsis.

> Nothing good comes of brass, from whose embrasures there vollies forth but impudence, insolence, defiance.
> A. B. Alcott, Tablets, p. 72.

2. To sound together, or in continuous or repeated explosions, as firearms.

> And there the volleying thunders roar,
> Till waves grow smoother to the roar.
> Byron, Siege of Corinth, ii.

> Cannon in front of them
> Volley'd and thunder'd.
> Tennyson, Charge of the Light Brigade.

3. In lawn-tennis and tennis, to return the ball before it touches the ground, especially by a swift stroke: as, he volleys well.

volley-gun (vol'i-gun), n. A machine-gun or mitrailleuse.

volowt (vol'ō), v. t. [< ME. folewen, folwen, fulwen, fulien, < AS. fulcian, fullian, baptize: see *full*3. The word is usually derived from L. volo, I will, that being the first word of the response used in the service.] To baptize: applied contemptuously by the Reformers.

> They be ought them to confirmation straight from baptism, so that now oft times they be volowed and bishopped both in one day.
> Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 72.

volower† (vol'ō-ėr), n. One who baptizes.

Volscian (vol'sian), a. and n. [< L. Volsci, the Volscians: see II., 1.] I. a. Pertaining to the Volscians.

II. n. 1. A member of an ancient Italic people who dwelt southeast of Rome.—2. The language of the Volscians, related to Umbrian.

volsella (vol-sel'ä), n. 1. Same as vulsella.—2†. Same as acantholabus.

volt1 (vōlt), n. [< F. volte, a turn or wheel, < It. volta, a turn, < L. volvere, pp. volutus, turn about or round: see *vault*2, volute.] 1. In the manège, a round or circular tread; a gait of two treads made by a horse going sidewise round a center, with the head turned outward.—2. In fencing, a sudden movement or leap to avoid a thrust.

volt2 (vōlt), n. [= F. volte; < It. Volta, the name of the inventor of the voltaic battery.] The practical unit of electromotive force. It is 10^8 absolute units of E. M. F. on the centimeter-gram-second system of electromagnetic units, and is a little less than the E. M. F. of a Daniell cell. It is defined by the International Electrical Congress (1893) and by United States statute (1894) as the electromotive force that, steadily applied to a conductor whose resistance is one ohm, will produce a current of one ampere, and which is practically equal to $\frac{1000}{1034}$ of the E. M. F. between the poles of what is known as the standard Clark voltaic cell, at a temperature of 15° C.

volta (vol'tä), n.; pl. volte (-te). [It., a turn: see *volt*1.] 1. An old dance. See lavolta.—2. In music, turn or time: as, una volta, once; due volte, twice; prima volta, first time. Abbreviated v.

volta-electric (vol'tä-ē-lek'trik), a. Pertaining to voltaic electricity or galvanism: as, volta-electric induction.

volta-electricity (vol'tä-ē-lek-tris'i-ti), n. Same as voltaic electricity, or galvanic electricity. See electricity. See voltaic current, under voltaic.

volta-electrometer (vol'tä-ē-lek-trom'e-tėr), n. An instrument for the exact measurement of electric currents; a voltameter.

volta-electromotive (vol'tä-ē-lek-tro-mō'tiv), a. Producing, or produced by, voltaic electromotion.—Volta-electromotive force, electromotive force produced in a manner analogous to that of the voltaic battery.

voltage1 (vōl'tāj), n. [< *volt*1 + -age.] In the manège, the act of making a horse work upon volts. Ford, Fame's Memorial.

voltage2 (vol'tāj), n. [< *volt*2 + -age.] Electromotive force reckoned in volts. The voltage of a dynamo under any particular working conditions is the number of volts of electromotive force in its circuit under these conditions.

voltagraphy (vol-tag'ra-fi), n. [Irreg. < volta(ic) + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of copying in metals deposited by electrolytic action any form or pattern which is made the negative surface of a voltaic circuit; copying by electrotypy.

voltaic (vol-tā'ik), a. [< Volta (see def.) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to Alessandro Volta, an Italian physicist (1745–1827), who shares with Galvani the honor of having discovered the means of producing an electric current at the expense of chemical action upon one of two united plates of dissimilar metals. Of the two, however, the higher credit is due to Volta; consequently, voltaic is more commonly used than galvanic.—Poles of a voltaic pile. See *pole*2.—Voltaic arc. See *arc*1, and electric light (under electric).—Voltaic arch. Same as voltaic arc.—Voltaic battery, cell. See battery, 8 (b), and cell, 8 (with cuts).—Voltaic current, an electric current produced by a voltaic battery: sometimes applied to electric currents generally.—Voltaic field, the space surrounding the electrodes or plates in an electrolytic cell during the process of electrolysis.—Voltaic induction. See induction, 6.—Voltaic pencil, a pencil by which etchings are executed by the action of a voltaic arc at its point.—Voltaic pile, a column formed by successive pairs of plates of two dissimilar metals, as zinc and copper, alternating with moistened flannel or pasteboard, in regular order of succession: an early form of chemical battery devised by Volta. See cuts under battery, 8.

Voltairean (vol-tār'ē-an), a. Same as Voltairian.

Voltairian (vol-tār'i-an), a. and n. [< Voltaire + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Voltaire (François Marie Arouet, who when about 25 years old took the name of Voltaire, said to be an anagram of "Arouet, l. j." (that is, F. le jeune, the younger)), a famous French poet, dramatist, and historian (1694–1778); resembling Voltaire.

> "Say they're levanting, Buchan," said Miller, who liked his joke, and would not have objected to be called Voltairian.
> George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xiii.

II. n. One who advocates the principles of Voltaire.

Voltairianism (vol-tār'i-an-izm), n. [< Voltairian + -ism.] The Voltairian spirit; the doctrines or philosophy of Voltaire; specifically, the incredulity or skepticism, especially in regard to revealed Christianity, often attributed to Voltaire.

…ism.] The principles or practices of voltaire; skepticism; infidelity.

In Luther's own country Protestantism soon dwindled into a neither hearse affair, . . . the eminence of it sceptical contention: which indeed has jangled more and more down to Voltairism. Carlyle, Heroes, iv.

voltaism (vol'tā-izm), n. [< Volta (see def.) + -ism.] That branch of electrical science which discusses the production of an electric current by the chemical action between dissimilar metals immersed in a liquid. It is so named from the Italian physicist Volta, whose experiments contributed greatly to the establishment of this branch of science. See voltaic.

voltaite (vol'tā-īt), n. [< Volta (see voltaic) + *-ite*².] In mineral., a hydrous sulphate of iron, occurring in isometric crystals of a green to black color: first found at the solfatara near Naples.

voltameter (vol-tam'e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < volta(ic) + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An electrolytic cell arranged for quantitative measurement of the amount of decomposition produced by the passage through it of an electric current, and hence used as an indirect means of measuring the strength of the current.

voltametric (vol-tą-met'rik), a. Pertaining to or involving the use of a voltameter: as, voltametric measurement.

volt-ammeter (vōlt'am'e-tėr), n. 1. A combination of a volt-meter and a transformer, for the measurement of alternating currents. The secondary or thick-wire coil of the transformer is included in the circuit through which the current passes, while the primary or thin-wire coil is closed through the volt-meter. 2. An instrument which can be used for measuring either volts or amperes.

volt-ampere (vōlt'am-pār'), n. The rate of working or activity in an electric circuit when the electromotive force is one volt and the current one ampere; a watt.

voltaplast (vol'tą-plást), n. [< volta(ic) + Gr. πλαστός, verbal adj. of πλάσσειν, mold.] A kind of voltaic battery used in electrotyping.

Volta's pile. See battery, 8 (b).

Volta's pistol. See pistol.

voltatype (vol'tą-tīp), n. [< volta(ic) + Gr. τύπος, type: see type.] Same as electrotype.

volt-coulomb (vōlt'kö-lom'), n. Same as joule.

volte, n. Plural of volta.

volti (vōl'ti), v. [It., impv. of voltare, turn, < L. volvere, pp. volutus, turn: see *vault*¹, volve.] In music, same as verte. — Volti subito. See verte subito.

voltiger† (vol'ti-jėr), n. [< F. voltigeur, a leaper: see voltige, v.] Same as voltigeur.

The voltiger of Ferrara was but as an ape compared to him. He was singularly skilful in leaping nimbly from one horse to another without putting foot to ground, and these horses were called desultories. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 23.

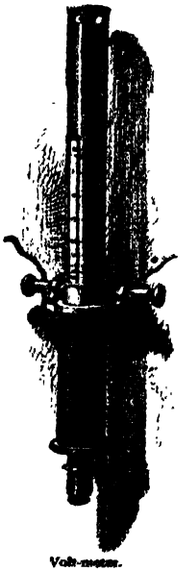
voltigeur (vol-ti-zhėr'), n. [F., < voltiger, < It. volteggiare, vault, < volta, a turn, volt: see *vault*¹.] 1. A leaper; a vaulter. — 2. Formerly, in France, a member of a light-armed picked company, placed on the left of a battalion; under the second empire, a member of one of several special infantry regiments.



Volt-meter.

voltite (vol'tit), n. In elect., an insulating material consisting of a mixture of a specially prepared gelatin with resin-oil, oxidized linseed-oil, resin, and paraffin.

volt-meter (vōlt'mē'tėr), n. An electrometer, or a high-resistance galvanometer, or a galvanometer combined with a resistance calibrated so that its indications show the number of volts E. M. F. in the circuit between its terminals. The cut shows one form of volt-meter, for the construction of which see ampere-meter.

volto†, n. [It.: see *vault*¹.] A vault.

Entring the church, admirable is the breadth of the volto or roofe. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 19, 1644.

Voltolini's disease. A disease of childhood, characterized by cerebral symptoms, and followed by permanent deafness.

Voltz (1785–1840), a French mining engineer.] The generic name given by Brongniart (1828) to a fossil plant which first appeared in the Permian, and found also, in several localities, in the various divisions of the European Trias, and in rocks of the same age in India. Voltzia belongs to the Coniferæ, and is placed by Schenk among the Taxodineæ. It is a tree of considerable height, resembling Araucaria in general appearance, but having a fructification analogous to that of the Taxodineæ. The fossils called Cyclopteris Liebeana by Geinitz are considered by Kidston as being, in all probability, the bracts of a cone of Voltzia. The Glyptolepis of Schimper and the Glyptolepidium of Heer were also (in 1884) placed by Schenk under Voltzia.

voltzine (volt'sin), n. [< Voltz (see Voltzia) + *-ine*².] A rose-red, yellowish, or brownish opaque or subtranslucent mineral, occurring in implanted spherical globules with thin lamellar structure. It is an oxysulphid of zinc.

voltzite (volt'sit), n. [< Voltz (see Voltzia) + *-ite*².] Same as voltzine.

volubilate (vol'ū-bi-lāt), a. [< L. volubilis, turning (see voluble) + *-ate*¹.] In bot., twining; voluble.

volubile (vol'ū-bil), a. [Formerly also volubil; < L. volubilis, whirling, that is turned round: see voluble.] 1†. Same as voluble, 1.

This less volubil earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there.
Milton, P. L., iv. 504.

2. In bot., same as voluble, 4. Encyc. Brit., IV. 95.

volubility (vol-ū-bil'i-ti), n. [< F. volubilité, < L. volubilita(t-)s, a rapid whirling motion, fluency (of speech), < volubilis, whirling, voluble: see voluble.] 1. The state or character of being voluble in speech; excessive fluency or readiness in speaking; unchecked flow of talk.

A lacquey that runs on errands for him, and can whisper a light message to a loose wench with some round volubility. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1.

He [the emperor] first attacked Cardinal Feach, and, singularly enough, launched forth with uncommon volubility into a discussion on ecclesiastical principles and usages, without possessing the slightest notion, either historical or theological, of the subject.
Memoirs of Talleyrand, in The Century, XLI. 701.

2. A rolling or revolving; aptness to roll; revolution; hence, mutability.

Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

Volubility of human affairs. Sir R. L'Estrange.

voluble (vol'ū-bl), a. [< F. voluble = Sp. voluble = Pg. volavel = It. volubile, < L. volubilis, that turns around, whirling, fluent (of speech), < volvere, pp. volutus, turn round or about: see volve.] 1. Formed so as to roll with ease, or to be easily turned or set in motion; apt to roll; rolling; rotating; revolving.

The most excellent of all the figures Geometrical is the round for his many perfections. First because he is even and smooth, without any angle or interruption, most voluble and apt to turne, and to continue motion, which is the author of life. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 81.

Yeares, like a ball, are voluble, and run;
Houres, like false Vowes, no sooner spoke than done.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 141).

Would you like to hear yesterday's sermon over and over again — eternally voluble? Thackeray, Philip, xvii.

2. Characterized by a great flow of words or by glibness of utterance; speaking with plausible fluency: as, a voluble politician.

Cassio, . . . a knave very voluble.
Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 242.

A man's tongue is voluble, and pours
Words out of all sorts ev'ry way. Such as you speak you hear.
Chapman, Iliad, xx. 228.

If a man hath a voluble Tongue, we say, He hath the gift of Prayer. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 90.

[Formerly it might be used of readiness and ease in speaking without the notion of excess.

It [speech] ought to be voluble vpon the tongue, and tunable to the eare.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (ed. Arber), p. 168.

He [Archbishop Abbot] was painful, stout, severe against bad manners, of a grave and voluble eloquence.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 65. (Trench.)

3†. Changeable, mutable.

He . . . almost puts Faith in a fever, and deifies alone
Voluble chance.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2.

4. In bot., of a twining habit; rising spirally around a support, as the hop.

volubleness (vol'ū-bl-nes), n. The character of being voluble; volubility.

volubly (vol'ū-bli), adv. In a voluble or fluent manner.

"O Gods," said he, "how volubly doth talk
This eating gulf!" Chapman, Odyssey, xviii. 41.

…suggested, pass our unanswerable arguments, not only said volubly urged in Parliament, at the bar, or in private conversation. Macaulay, History.

Volucella (vol-ū-sel'ą), n. [NL., (Geoffroy, 1764), < L. volucris, fitted for flight: see Volucres.] A notable genus of syrphid flies, some of them mimicking bumblebees in general appearance, and parasitic, in the larval state, upon the larvæ of these bees and in the nests of wasps. Forty-five species are known in North America, and seven in Europe.

Volucres (vol'ū-krēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. volucres or volucris, fitted for flight, winged, volitorial; as a noun, a bird; < volare, fly: see volant.] 1. In C. L. Bonaparte's classification of birds (1850), the first tribe of the third order of Passeres, embracing those lower Passeres which form Sundevall's scutelliplantar division of that order, together with all the pleurian birds. It is an artificial group, insusceptible of definition, and corresponds exactly with no recognized group or groups; on the whole it agrees best with Picariæ as commonly accepted. 2. In C. J. Sundevall's classification, the second order of birds, agreeing in the main with the Picariæ as commonly understood, but including the parrots and pigeons. It is most nearly a synonym of the old Picæ of Linnæus. [Rare in both senses.]

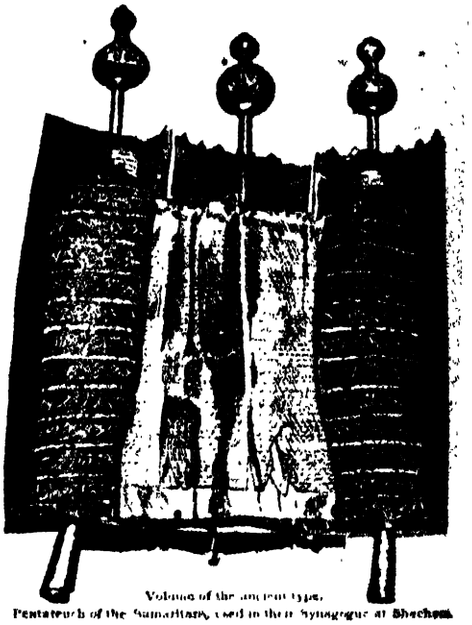
volucrine (vol'ū-krin), a. [< L. volucris, a bird, + *-ine*¹.] Pertaining to birds; bird-like.

The volucrine clamor continued unabated, and when I came downstairs I was not surprised at the sight that awaited me. The passage was filled with bird-cages.
P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 368.

volume (vol'ūm), n. [< F. volume = Sp. volumen = Pg. It. volume, < L. volumen (volumin-), a roll (as of a manuscript), < volvere, pp. volutus, roll round or about: see volute.] 1. A written document (as of parchment, papyrus, or strips of bark) rolled up in a convenient form for keeping or use, such being anciently the prevailing form of the book; a roll; a scroll.



Volume of the ancient type.
Pentateuch of the Samaritans, used in their synagogue at Shechem.

The written sheets were usually wound around a stick, termed an umbilicus, the extremities of which were called the cornua, to which a label containing the name of the author was tied. The whole was placed in a wrapper, and frequently anointed with oil of cedar-wood as a preservative against insects.

In the volume [roll, R. V.] of the book it is written.
Heb. x. 7.

In history a great volume is unrolled for our instruction. Burke, Rev. in France.

Hence — 2. A collection of written or printed sheets bound together, whether containing a single complete work, a part of a work, or more than one separate work; a book; a tome: as, a large volume; a work in six volumes.

He furnish'd me
From mine own library with volumes.
Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 166.

They [men] cannot extinguish those lively characters of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God which are everywhere to be seen in the large volume of the Creation.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I.

An odd volume of a set of books bears not the value of its proportion to the set.

Luther's works were published at Wittemberg in Latin and German, in nineteen volumes, large folio, and at Jena in twelve. Burney, Hist. Music, III. 39, note.

3. Something of a roll-like, rounded, or swelling form; a rounded mass; a coil; a convolution; a wreath; a fold: as, volumes of smoke.

Hid in the spiry Volumes of the Snake,
I lurk'd within the Covert of a Brake.
Dryden, State of Innocence, iv. 2.

Thames's fruitful tides
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play.
Fenton, Ode to John, Lord Gower, st. 4.

4. An amount or measure of tridimensional space; solid contents; hence, an amount or aggregated quantity of any kind.

An enormous log glowing and blazing, and sending forth a vast volume of light and heat.
Irving, Sketch Book, p. 210.

The judge's volume of muscle could hardly be the same as the colonel's; there was undoubtedly less beef in him.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, viii.

Railroad men have found out . . . that so small a matter apparently as the civility or neglect of conductors, or the scarcity or abundance of towels on sleeping cars will sensibly influence the volume of travel.
D. A. Wells, Our Merchant Marine, p. 112.

Very probably these recent climatic changes, both marine and terrestrial, in the North Atlantic region, have been due in large measure to variations in the volume of the Gulf Stream. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XLI. 42.

5. In music, quantity, fullness, or roundness of tone or sound. Atomic volume. See atomic. Specific steam-volume. See steam. Specific volume, the quotient of the molecular weight of a compound body by its specific gravity. In the case of a liquid the specific gravity is taken at the boiling point. To speak or tell volumes, to be full of meaning; be very significant.

The epithet, so often heard, and in such kindly tones, of "poor Goldsmith" speaks volumes.
Irving, Oliver Goldsmith, xiv.

Volume-integral. See integral. = Syn. 4. Bulk, Magnitude, etc. See size.

volume (vol'ūm), v. i.; pret. and pp. volumed, ppr. voluming. [< volume, n.] To swell; rise in bulk or volume.

The mighty stream which volumes high
From their proud nostrils burns the very air.
Byron, Deformed Transformed, I. 1.

volumed (vol'ūmd), a. [< volume + -ed[2].] 1. Having a rounded form; forming volumes or rolling masses; consisting of rounded masses.

With volumed smoke that slowly grew
To one wide sky of sulphurous hue.
Byron, Siege of Corinth, vi.

2. Having volume or volumes (of a specified amount or number).

volumenometer (vol'ū-me-nom'e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < L. volumen, a volume, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring the volume of a solid body by the quantity of a liquid or of air which it displaces, and thence also for determining its specific gravity.

volumenometry (vol-ū-me-nom'e-tri), n. [As volumenometer + -y[3].] The art of determining by displacement the volumes of solid bodies, or the spaces occupied by them; stereometry.

volumeter (vol'ū-mē-tėr), n. [Irreg. < L. volu(men), a volume, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] In chem. and physics, broadly, any instrument for measuring the volumes of gases, as a graduated glass tube in which a gas may be collected over water or mercury, the gas displacing the liquid as it enters the vessel, and the volume displaced being indicated by the graduations. Lunge's volumeter comprises a tube called a reduction tube, in which a volume of one hundred cubic centimeters of air as measured under connected pressure of barometer and temperature is confined. By an ingenious arrangement this confined air is then made to bring to a similar condition of pressure the gas to be measured in a measuring tube, which also forms part of the apparatus. Thus a connection of pressure and temperature need be made only once for a series of volumetric measurements.

volumetric (vol-u-met'rik), a. [Irreg. < L. volu(men), volume, + Gr. μετρικός, (μέτρον, measure.] In chem. and physics, pertaining to or noting measurements by volume, as of gases or liquids: opposed to gravimetric.

It is possible in this way to determine quickly by a volumetric process even so little as one-fourth per cent. of alcohol in a mixture. Ure, Dict. IV. 30.

Mosso's volumetric measurements indicated that in hypnotic catalepsy there was slightly more blood in the left arm. Mind, IX. 605.

Volumetric analysis. Same as titration.

volumetrical (vol-ū-met'ri-kal), a. [< volumetric + -al.] Same as volumetric.

The amount of metallic iron and its condition of oxidation in the ore were determined by Marguerite's volumetrical method. Campin, Mech. Engineering, p. 84.

volumetrically (vol-ū-met'ri-kal-i), adv. [< volumetrical + -ly[2].] By volumetric analysis.

voluminal (vō-lū'mi-nal), a. [< L. volumen (-min-), volume, + -al.] Pertaining to volume or cubical contents: as, voluminal expansion.

voluminosity (vō-lū-mi-nos'i-ti), n. [< voluminous + -ity.] The quality or state of being voluminous; copiousness; prolixity.

The later writings [of H. Müller-Strübing] have gone on with bewildering voluminosity.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 117.

voluminous (vō-lū'mi-nus), a. [< F. volumineux = Sp. Pg. It. voluminoso, < LL. voluminosus, full of windings, bendings, or folds, < L. volumen, a roll, fold: see volume.] 1†. Consisting of coils or convolutions.

Woman to the waist, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast. Milton, P. L., ii. 652.

2. Of great volume or bulk; large; swelling: literally or figuratively.

Why, though I seem of a prodigious waist,
I am not so voluminous and vast
But there are lines wherewith I might be embraced.
B. Jonson, Underwoods, lxxi.

It was essential that a gentleman's chin should be well propped, that his collar should have a voluminous roll.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xvi.

We call the reverberations of a thunder-storm more voluminous than the squeaking of a slate pencil.
W. James, Mind, XII. 1.

3. Having written much; producing many or bulky books; also, copious; diffuse; prolix: as, a voluminous writer.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

4. Being in many volumes; hence, copious enough to make numerous volumes: used of the published writings of an author: as, the voluminous works of Sir Walter Scott.

voluminously (vō-lū'mi-nus-li), adv. In a voluminous manner; in large quantity; copiously; diffusedly.

The doctor voluminously rejoined.
Swift, Battle of the Books.

voluminousness (vō-lū'mi-nus-nes), n. 1†. The state of being in coils or convolutions.

Solid bones crushed by the infinite stress
Of the snake's adamantine voluminousness.
Shelley, A Vision of the Sea.

2. Copiousness; diffuseness.

His [Aquinas's] works mount to that voluminousness they have very much by repetitions.
Dodwell, Letters of Advice, ii.

3. The state of being voluminous or bulky.

The reader will have noticed, in this enumeration of facts, that voluminousness of the feeling seems to bear very little relation to the size of the organ that yields it.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., II. 140.

volumist† (vol'u-mist), n. [< volume + -ist.] One who writes a volume; an author. [Rare.]

Yee write them in your closets, and unwrite them in your Courts, hot Volumists and cold Bishops.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

voluntarily (vol'un-tā-ri-li), adv. [< ME. voluntarily; < voluntary + -ly[2].] In a voluntary manner; of one's own motion; without being moved, influenced, or impelled by others; spontaneously; freely.

When that Gaffray had all thes thynges said,
Raymounde hertly glade reloyng that braide,
That Gaffray gan hire voluntarily.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5055.

At last died, not by his enemies command, but voluntarily in his olde age. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 322.

And the faculty of voluntarily bringing back a wandering attention over and over again is the very root of judgment, character, and will.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 424.

voluntariness (vol'un-tā-ri-nes), n. The state of being voluntary, or endowed with the power of willing, choosing, or determining; the state or character of being produced voluntarily.

The voluntariness of an action.
Hammond, Works, I. 234.

voluntariousness† (vol-un-tā'ri-us), a. [< L. voluntarius, voluntary: see voluntary.] Voluntary; free.

Men of voluntarious wil withsitte that heuens gouerneth.
Testament of Love, ii.

voluntariously† (vol'un-tā'ri-us-li), adv. Voluntarily; willingly.

Most pleasantly and voluntariously to bear the yoke of his most comfortable commandments.
Strype, Eccles. Mem., Edw. VI., an. 1550.

voluntary (vol'un-tā-ri), a. and n. [< ME. voluntarie, < OF. (and F.) volontaire = Sp. Pg. It. voluntario, < L. voluntarius, willing, of free will, voluntā(t-)s, will, choice, desire, < volun(t-)s, volen(t-)s, ppr. of velle, will: see volition, will.] I. a. 1. Proceeding from the will; done of or due to one's own accord or free will; unconstrained by external interference, force, or influence; not compelled, prompted, or suggested by another; spontaneous; of one's or its own accord; free.

The third sort of ignorance is the worst; it is that which is vincible and voluntary.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, IV. i. 4.

Voluntary works be called all manner of offering in the church, except your offering days and your tithes.
Latimer, Misc. Sel.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 1. 16.

The true Charity of Christians is a free and voluntary thing, not what men are forced to do by the Laws.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

I have made myself the voluntary slave of all.
Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, v.

Very little time was allowed between the accusation, condemnation, and death of a suspected witch; and if a voluntary confession was wanting, they never failed extorting a forced one by tormenting the suspected person.
Gifford, Int. to Ford's Plays, p. xxiv.

2. Subject to or controlled by the will; regulated by the will: as, the movement of a limb is voluntary, the action of the heart involuntary.

We always explain the voluntary action of all men except ourselves on the principle of causation by character and circumstances. H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 46.

It follows from this that voluntary movements must be secondary, not primary functions of our organism.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., II. 487.

We see here that atrophy begins in the most voluntary limb, the arm. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXV. 174.

3. Done by design or intention; intentional; purposed; not accidental.

Giving myself a voluntary wound.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 300.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, . . . and kills another passing by, here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntary murther.
Perkins. (Johnson.)

4. Endowed with the power of willing, or acting of one's own free will or choice, or according to one's judgment.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent, intending beforehand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. iii. 2.

5. Of, pertaining, or relating to voluntaryism, or the doctrines of the voluntaries: as, the voluntary theory or controversy. — 6. In law: (a) Proceeding from the free and unconstrained will of the person: as, a voluntary confession. (b) Not supported by a substantial pecuniary or valuable consideration. See voluntary conveyance, below. — Voluntary affidavit or oath. (a) An affidavit or oath made in a case in which the law has not sanctioned the administration of an oath or affirmation. (b) An affidavit offered spontaneously or made freely, without the compulsion of subpœna or other process. — Voluntary agent. See agent. — Voluntary appearance, the spontaneous appearance of a defendant for the purpose of resisting an action or other proceeding without having been served with process, or without requiring the plaintiff to rely upon service of process to compel appearance. — Voluntary association. See association. — Voluntary bankruptcy. See bankruptcy. — Voluntary conveyance, a conveyance made without valuable consideration, a conveyance in the nature of a gift. The importance of the distinction between this and a conveyance for value is that the former may be voidable by creditors in some cases where the latter may not. — Voluntary escape. See escape, 3. — Voluntary grantee, the grantee in a voluntary conveyance. — Voluntary jurisdiction, a jurisdiction exercised in matters admitting of no opposition or question, and therefore cognizable by any of the court judges, and in any place and on any lawful day. — Voluntary manslaughter. See manslaughter, 2. — Voluntary motion. See motion. Voluntary muscle, voluntary muscular fiber, striated red muscular fiber (except that of the heart), as distinguished from smooth pale muscular fiber: so called as being under the control of the will. See cut under muscular. — Voluntary partition, a partition accomplished by mutual agreement, as distinguished from one had by the judgment of a court. Voluntary school, in England, one of a class of elementary schools supported by voluntary subscriptions, many of them in part maintained and regulated by religious bodies. The number of these schools has been greatly reduced since 1870, when education was made compulsory by the Education Act, and board schools were established. In 1897 a sum, not to exceed in the aggregate five shillings per scholar annually, was granted to them by Parliament.

In building cottages, and improving voluntary schools.
Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 732.

Voluntary waste, waste which is the result of the voluntary act of the tenant of property, as where, without the consent of the proprietor, he cuts down timber, or pulls down a wall. = Syn. Voluntary, Spontaneous, Willing. Voluntary supposes volition, and therefore intention, and presumably reflection. Spontaneous views the act as though there were immediate connection between it and the cause, without intervention of the reason and the will: spontaneous applause seems to start of itself. Willing has in the authorized version of the Bible a range of meaning up to desirous or anxious, as in Mat. i. 19, xxvi. 41, Luke x. 29, but now is strictly confined to the to regard to the state of mankind.

Some of the pleasantest recollections of my childhood are connected with the voluntary study of an ancient Bible which belonged to my grandmother.
Hunter, Critiques and Addresses, p. 54.

Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 256.

He lent a willing ear to the artful propositions of Sforza.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 1.

II. n.; pl. voluntaries (-riz). 1. One who engages in any affair of his own choice or free will; a volunteer.

Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 67.

Specifically—2. Eccles., in Great Britain, one who maintains the doctrine of the mutual independence of the church and the state, and holds that the church should be supported by the voluntary contributions of its members and should be left entirely free to regulate its affairs.—3. Any work or performance not imposed by another.

At school he [Wordsworth] wrote some task-verses on subjects imposed by the master, and also some voluntaries of his own, equally undistinguished by any peculiar merit.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 200.

4. In church music, an organ prelude to a service; sometimes, by extension, an interlude or postlude; also, an anthem or other piece of choir-music, especially at the opening of a service. These uses of the word seem to have originated in the fact that such musical exercises are not rubrically prescribed.

The rich may indulge in superfluities. The Ionian muse is somewhat too fond of playing voluntaries.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Virgilius and Horatius.

My dear Herr Capellmeister, they say you play the most exquisite voluntaries! Now do play us one Longfellow, Hyperion, iv. 4.

At voluntary†, voluntarily; by an effort of will.

Cyrces cuppes were too strong for all antidotes, and womens flatteries too forceable to resist at voluntarie.
Greene, Never Too Late (Works, ed. Dyce, Int., p. xli.)

voluntary† (vol'un-tū-ri), adv. [< voluntary, a.] Voluntarily.

Gold, amber, yvorie, perles, owches, rings,
And all that els was pretious and deare,
The sea unto him voluntary brings.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 23.

I serve here voluntary. Shak., T. and C., ii. 1. 103.

voluntaryism (vol'un-tą-ri-izm), n. [< voluntary + -ism.] Voluntary principle or action; the system or principle of supporting anything by voluntary contribution or assistance; especially, the principle of unrestricted personal liberty in matters of religion—this involving on the one hand the obligation of church-members to support and maintain religious ordinances, and on the other the church's entire freedom from state patronage, support, and control.

Esther . . . was unable at present to give her mind to the original functions of a bishop, or the comparative merits of Endowments, and Voluntaryism.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xli.

The transatlantic friend of Vane, at the very nick of time, was the central champion in England of absolute voluntaryism, against the Independents and the famous fifteen proposals for a State Church on their sort of "Christian Fundamentals."
N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 541.

In education, voluntaryism has been most prominent and most beneficent from early times.
Jour. of Education, XVIII. 148.

voluntaryist (vol'un-tą-ri-ist), n. [< voluntary + -ist.] One who believes in or advocates voluntaryism, especially in religion. [Rare.]

We commend this tribute to the Church of England to our friends on the other side of the water, as proof that an American and a Voluntaryist can yet do full justice to that ancient and historical church.
New York Evangelist, Oct. 19, 1876.

voluntative (vol'un-tā-tiv), a. [< L. volunta(t-)s, will, + -ive.] Voluntary.

The simple solution seems to be that the conditioning of a purpose destroys its absolute voluntative power.
Amer. Jour. Philol., IV. 425.

voluntet, n. See volunty.

volunteer (vol-un-tēr'), n. and a. [< F. volontaire, now volontaire = Sp. Pg. It. voluntario, < L. voluntarius, voluntary: see voluntary.] I. n. 1. A person who enters into any service of his own free will.

He has had Compassion upon Lovers, and generously gone'd a Volunteer in this Action, for our Service.
Congreve, Way of the World, v. 14.

2. A person who enters military service of his own free will, and not by constraint or compulsion; one who offers to serve, and generally receives some consideration or privileges on that account; in the United States, especially during the civil war, a soldier of a body other than the regular army, but practically governed by the same laws when in service. In Great Britain the government provides the various bodies of volunteers, or citizen soldiery, with competent instructors, arms, and a part of their ammunition, besides allowing to each corps certain grants proportioned to the number of efficient members, etc. A British volunteer can resign on giving a fortnight's notice, except in a crisis of imminent danger to the country. In the United States the army of volunteers comprises, to all intents and purposes, (1) the regular unpaid forces of State militia which, when called into the actual service of the United States, receive pay from the government, and are subject to the rules and articles of war, and (2) that class of troops which may from time to time be raised by Congress on occasions of national emergency. Such troops are properly United States troops, and the method of officering them is designated by Congress.

At the very outset of the campaign, the inexperience of the Federal volunteers was made evident, even more on the march than on the battle-field.
Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 193.

Volunteers often complain that they are not taken seriously enough. . . . Nor must they ever cease complaining until they have been thoroughly organized for whatever their duties are to be, and until those duties are perfectly clear to themselves and the country at large.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 615.

3. In law, one who claims the benefit of a contract or conveyance although no consideration proceeded from him nor from any one in whose place he stands.—4. A tree which grows spontaneously: as, that pear-tree in my garden is a volunteer. [Southern U. S.]

II. a. 1. Entering into military service by free will and choice: as, a volunteer soldier.—2. Composed of volunteers: as, a volunteer corps.

The volunteer artillery, furnished by the several States, was only organized into batteries, having no officer above the rank of captain.
Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 275.

volunteer (vol-un-tēr'), v. [< volunteer, n.] I. trans. To offer, contribute, or bestow voluntarily, or without constraint or compulsion.

The chief agents who had already volunteered their services against him.
Gifford, Note on B. Jonson's Poetaster, III. 1.

Bit by bit, the full and true
Particulars of the tale were volunteered
With all the breathless zeal of friendship.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 292.

II. intrans. To enter into any service of one's free will, without constraint or compulsion: as, to volunteer for a campaign.

volunteerly† (vol-un-tēr'li), adv. Voluntarily; as a volunteer.

Volunteerly to ramble with Lord Loudon Campbell, Brave Hay did suffer for a'.
Battle of Sheriff-Muir (Child's Ballads, VII. 158).

voluntomotory (vol'un-tō-mo'tō-ri), a. [< volunt(ary) + motory.] Having or pertaining to motor influence or effect which is voluntary, or subject to the will: with Remak specifying the somatopleural division of the body, including the muscular system of ordinary language, as distinguished from the splanchnopleural or involuntomotory (which see).

The volunto motory, corresponding to the body-wall or somatopleure. Encyc. Brit., VIII. 167.

volunty†, n. [< ME. volunte, also volente, voulente, < OF. volente, voluntet, F. volonté = Sp. voluntad = It. volontà, will, < L. volunta(t-)s, will, desire: see voluntary.] Will; wish; will and pleasure.

For that he May not fulfille his voluntee.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 6276.

For of free choice and hertely volente,
She hathe to God avowed chastité
Lydgate, MS. Ashmole 339, f. 15. (Halliwell.)

After me made by thy will and volente
To take this woman of the fayry,
This here diffamed serpent vnto se.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5473.

"Sir," quod thei, "yef it be not thus, doth with vs youre volente."
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 29.

And the seid Tuddenham and Heydon wold after their voulente have it hald vn meen of the manor of Heteresete, which sufficient evidences that ye have specifyeth no thyng soo.
Paston Letters, I. 173.

voluperet, n. [ME., also voluper, volupre.] A cap or head-dress worn in the fourteenth century by either sex.

The tapes of hir white voluper
Were of the same suyte of hir coler
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 55.

voluptiet, n. See volupty.

voluptuary (vō-lup'tū-ą-ri), a. and n. [= F. voluptuaire = It. voluttuario, < L. voluptuarius, for earlier voluptarius, of or pertaining to pleasure, < volupta(t-)s, enjoyment, delight: see volupty.] I. a. 1. Pertaining or contributing to luxury and sensual pleasure; promoting sensual indulgence.

The arts which flourish in times while virtue is in growth are military, and while virtue is in state are liberal, and while virtue is in declination are voluptuary.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

The works of the voluptuary arts are properly attributed to Vulcan, the God of Fire.
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

2. Given to sensual indulgence; voluptuous: as, voluptuary habits.

II. n.; pl. voluptuaries (-riz). A man given up to luxury or the gratification of the appetite and other sensual indulgences; a sensualist.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul?
Sir R. L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries of that time, . . . men who, notwithstanding they professed themselves Jews, lived like Heathens.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xii.

We have the Voluptuary, when first pleasant feelings, and secondly the pleasantness of pleasant feelings, are made the end to which all else is means, and the abstraction of pleasure's sake is pursued.
F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 258, note.

voluptuate† (vō-lup'tū-āt), v. t. [< L. voluptus (-us) + *-ate*2.] To make luxurious or delightful.

Tis watching and labour that voluptuates repose and sleep Feltham, Resolves, ii. 44.

voluptuosity† (vō-lup-tū-os'i-ti), n. [< voluptuous + -ity.] Voluptuousness.

In some children nature is more prone to vice than to virtue, and in the tender wittes he sparkes of voluptuositie voluptuous (vō-lup'tū-us), a. [< ME. voluptuous, < OF. voluptuous*, F. voluptueux = Sp. Pg. voluptuoso = It. voluttuoso, < L. voluptuosus, full of gratification, delightful, < volupta(t-)s, pleasure: see volupty.] 1. Pertaining to, proceeding from, or inclined to sensual gratification: as, voluptuous tastes or habits.—2. Passed or spent in luxury or sensuality.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 6.

Soften'd with pleasure and voluptuous life.
Milton, S. A., l. 534.

3. Contributing to sensual pleasure; exciting, or tending to excite, sensual desires and indulgence; sensual.

He that is temperate feeleth pleasures voluptuous.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 20.

Voluptuous idleness. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 4.

Ah, Love! how soft are thy voluptuous ways!
Byron, Childe Harold, I. 88.

Barbara Palmer, Duchess of Cleveland, was then, no longer young, but still retaining some traces of that superb and voluptuous loveliness which twenty years before overcame the hearts of all men.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., iv.

The face voluptuous, yet pure, funeste, but innocent.
J. S. Fane, Tenants of Mallory, i.

Low voluptuous music winding.
Tennyson, Vision of Sin, ii.

4. Given to the enjoyments of luxury and pleasure; indulging in sensual gratifications.

Thou wilt bring me soon
Where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous as heavens
Thy daughter and thy darling, without end.
Milton, P. L., ii. 389.

Jolly and voluptuous livers.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, IV. iv.

=Syn. Carnal, Sensuous, etc. See sensual.

voluptuously (vō-lup'tū-us-li), adv. In a voluptuous manner; with free indulgence in sensual pleasures; luxuriously; sensually: as, to live voluptuously.

Voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shak., Cor., i. 3. 27.

voluptuousness (vō-lup'tū-us-nes), n. The state or character of being voluptuous, or addicted to the pursuit of pleasure and sensual gratification; luxuriousness.

But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 68.

The voluptuousness of holding a human being in his[the slave owner's] absolute control Emerson, West Indian Emancipation.

To the north-east, in places, the backs and sides of the mountains have a green pastoral voluptuousness, so smooth and full are they with thick turf.
The Century, XXIV. 631.

volupty†, n. [Early mod. E. also voluptie; < OF. volupte, F. volupté = Pr. voluptat = It. voluttà, voluttà, < L. volupta(t-)s, enjoyment, delight.] Voluptuousness. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 20.

Voluspa (vol-us-pä'), n. [< Icel. Völuspá, the song of the sibyl, < völu, gen. of völva, also vala (pl. völur), a prophetess, sibyl, wise woman, + spá, prophecy, also pry, look, > Sc. spae, spae, and cf. spaewife.] 1. The name (literally, 'the Prophecy of the Sibyl') of a poem of the Elder Edda.—2. [l. c.] Erroneously, a Scandinavian prophetess or sibyl.

Here seated, the voluspa or sibyl was to listen to the rhymical inquiries which should be made to her, and to return an extemporaneous answer. Scott, Pirate, xxi.

Voluta (vọ-lu'tạ), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), < L. voluta, a spiral, volute; see volute.] 1. The typical genus of Volutidæ, used with various restrictions, now containing oviparous volutes with a short spire, large aperture, and long first columellar fold, as V. imperialis. See volute, 2, and Volutidæ (with cuts).—2. In arch., same as volute. Evelyn, Architects and Architecture.

Imperial Volute (Voluta imperialis)

Volutacea (vol-ụ-tā'sē-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < Voluta + -acea.] A group of gastropods; the volutes. See Volutidæ.

volutation† (vol-ụ-tā'shon), n. [< L. volutatio(n-), a rolling about, a wallowing, < volutare, freq. of volvere, roll: see volute.] 1. A wallowing; a rolling, as of the body on the earth.—2. A compound circular motion consisting of a rotation of a body about an axis through its center combined with a revolution about a distant axis.

In the sea, when the storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volutation.
Bp. Reynolds, The Passions, xxi.

volute (vọ-lūt'), n. and a. [< F. volute = Sp. Pg. It. voluta, < L. voluta, a spiral scroll, a volute, < volvere, pp. volutus, turn round or about, roll, = E. wallow[1].] I. n. 1. In arch., a spiral scroll forming an essential part of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite capitals, of which it is a characteristic ornament. The number of volutes in the Greek Ionic capital is four, two each on opposite faces. In the Corinthian and Composite orders they are more numerous, in the former order being sixteen in number. See helix, 2 (with cut), and cuts under Acanthus, Corinthian, Ionic, and composite. Also voluta.

Volutes. 1 Greek Ionic. 2 Temple of Artemis, Ephesus. 3 Composite (Roman), Baths of Caracalla, Rome.

2. In conch.: (a) A member of the Volutidæ. The volutes are chiefly tropical shells, especially of Indo-Pacific waters, some of them of great rarity and beauty, and highly prized by collectors, as V. imperialis, the imperial volute, which shows beautiful sculpture and tracery, and has a circlet of spines like a diadem crowning the very large body-whorl (see cut under Voluta). The peacock tail volute, Voluta (or Scaphella) junonia, of quite another form, is white with orange spots, and was long considered one of the rarest of shells, bringing a very high price. Many of the volutes being well known, they take more distinctive names. Such is the West Indian music-shell, Voluta musica, so called because the markings resemble written music. This species, unlike most volutes, is operculate, and is placed by some authors in another genus, Voluticithara or Musica. Some volutes are known as bat shells, as V. vespertilio, others as nets or boat-shells and melon-shells (see cuts under Cymbium and Melo); and some forms, as Cymbium, are oviparous. See also cut under Volutidæ. (b) A volution or whorl of a spiral shell. Canal of a volute, a channel inclosed by a list or fillet, in the face of the circumvolutions of the Ionic capital. False volutes, the Turbanellidæ. F. P. Carpenter.

A Volute, the Music-shell (Voluta or Voluticithara musica).

II. a. In bot., rolled up in any direction.

volute-compass (vo-lut'kum'pas), n. A form of compass used, in drafting, to trace a spiral by means of the gradual mechanical expansion of the legs.

voluted (vọ-lū'ted), a. [< volute + -ed[2].] Having a coil, whorl, or volute, as a shell.

volute-spring (vọ-lut'spring), n. A spring consisting of a flat bar or ribbon, usually of steel, coiled in a helix somewhat in the form of a volute. It is commonly made in a conical form, so that the spring can be compressed in the direction of the axis about which it is coiled.

volute-wheel (vọ-lūt'hwēl), n. 1. A water-wheel with a volute-shaped casing about it to guide the water to its vanes and buckets.—2. A volute-shaped shell, that in revolving presents its open mouth to the air, which is thus gathered into the tube and discharged through the hollow axis. It is a common and effective form of blower. E. H. Knight.

Volutidæ (vọ-lū'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Voluta + -idæ.] A family of rachiglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Voluta; the volutes. They have a large undivided foot, widely separate tentacles, eyes external to the tentacles, and a single (or triple) row of radular teeth, each median tooth generally having a trifurcate or simple apex. The operculum is generally absent; when present, as in Voluticithara, it is corneous and unguiculate, with apical nucleus in the adult. The animals are retractile in a shell generally of a more or less obconic shape, with a plicated columella. They are mostly oviviparous, but in the genus Voluta eggs are laid in a very large thin horny capsule. The species are numerous, especially in tropical seas, and many have shells of remarkable beauty, highly esteemed by conchologists. See Voluta (with cut) and volute, 2 (a) (with cut, and other cuts there cited).

Voluta or Amoria undulata, of Australia, one of the Volutidæ, crawling with extended foot and tentacles.

volution (vọ-lū'shon), n. [< L. volvere, pp. volutus, roll: see volute.] 1. A rolling or winding; a twist; especially, a spiral turn; a convolution.

The foaming base an angry whirlwind sweeps
Where curling billows rouse the fearful deeps. . . .
The swift volution and the enormous train
Let sages versed in nature's lore explain.
Falconer, Shipwreck, ii. 48.

2. In conch.: (a) A whorl; one turn of a spiral shell. (b) A set of whorls; the spire of a shell; the spiral turning or twisting of a shell. See cuts under spire[2], n., and univalve.—3. In anat., a convolution or gyration: a gyrus: as, the volutions of the brain.

A Volute (Volvaria bulloides).

volutite (vol'ụ-tīt), n. [< volute + -ite[2].] A fossil volute, or a similar shell, as a species of Volvaria (which see).

volutoid (vol'ụ-toid), a. and n. [< volute + -oid.] I. a. Resembling a volute; of or relating to the Volutidæ.

II. n. A volute.

volva (vol'vạ), n.; pl. volvæ (-vē). [NL., < L. volva, vulva, a wrapper, covering, < volvere, roll: see volute. Cf. vulva.] In bot., a wrapper or external covering of some sort; specifically, in Hymenomycetes, same as velum universale. Compare exoperidium. See velum, 2, and cut under Fungi.

Volvaria (vol-vā'ri-ạ), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1801), < L. volva, a wrapper, cover: see volva, vulva.] A genus of tectibranchiate gastropods, of the family Tetracanidæ, represented by extinct Tertiary shells, as V. bulloides: formerly including certain smooth shells of the family Marginellidæ. See cut under volutite.

volvate (vol'vāt), a. [< volva + -ate[1].] In bot., producing, furnished with, or characteristic of a volva.

volvet† (volv), v. t. [< L. volvere, turn, roll] round or about, roll. From the same L. verb are ult. E. convolve, devolve, evolve, involve, revolve, etc., volute, volt[1], vault[1], vault[2], etc.] To turn over: revolve, especially in the mind; consider: think over.

I volved, tournel, and redde many volumes and bokes, conteyning famous histories.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., Pref.

I have been volving and revolving in my fancy some time, but to no purpose, by what clean device or facete contrivance I might . . . modulate them.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, V. 109. (Davies.)

volvelle (vol-vel'), n. [F.] A small and generally circular movable plate affixed to an engraving containing a dial or lottery, and made to carry the index-hand or pointer: any movable engraving superimposed on another for the purpose of showing variations. N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. 217.

volvocinaceous (vol'vọ-si-nā'shius), a. [As Volvocin-ex + -aceous.] Belonging to or characterizing the Volvocineæ.

A peculiar condition of the Volvocinaceous Algæ (Stephanosphæra pluvialis, etc.).
H. C. Wood, Fresh-Water Algæ, p. 235.

Volvocineæ (vol-vọ-sin'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. Volvox (-oc-) + -ineæ.] An order of fresh-water algæ, of the class Cœnobieæ, typified by the genus Volvox.

volvocinian (vol-vọ-sin'i-an), a. [As Volvocin-ex + -ian.] Resembling a volvox, as an infusorian; volvocinaceous.

I have cited the two volvocinian genera Pandorina and Volvox as examples of the differentiation of homoplastids into the lowest heteroplastids. Nature, XLI. 318.

Volvox (vol'voks), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), < L. volvere, roll, turn about: see volve.] 1. A small genus of fresh-water algæ, of the order Volvocineæ and class Cœnobieæ. It has a spherical cœnobium of a pale-green color, which is constantly rotating and changing place, looking like a hollow globe, composed of numerous cells (sometimes as many as twelve thousand) arranged on the periphery at regular distances, and connected by the matrical gelatin. It is furnished with a red lateral spot, contractile vacuoles, and two long-asserted cilia. Propagation is both sexual and non-sexual. V. globator, the best-known species, is not uncommon in clear pools, ponds, etc. It was long regarded as an infusorial animalcule.

2. [l. c.] A member of the above genus: as, the globate volvox.

volvulus (vol'vụ-lus), n. [NL., < L. volvere, turn, roll: see volve.] Occlusion of the intestine, caused by a sharp bend or twist of the tube.

volyer (vol'yėr), n. The lurcher. [Prov. Eng.]

vomet, v. [< ME. vomen, < OF. vomir, < L. vomere, vomit: see vomit.] To vomit.

He shal hurtle the hond of Moab in his vomyng.
Wyclif, Jer. xlviii. 26.

vomet, n. [ME., < vome, v.] Vomit.

Alle forsothe hoordis ben fulfild with the vome and filthis. Wyclif, Isa. xxviii. 8.

vomela, vormela, n. The Sarmatian polecat, Putorius sarmaticus. See sarmatier.

vomer (vō'mėr), n. [NL., < L. vomer, a plowshare.] 1. In zool. and anat., a bone of the skull of most vertebrates; a membrane-bone or splint-bone developed in the median line of the skull, beneath the basicranial axis, primitively consisting of paired halves, which sometimes remain separate, one on each side of the middle line. Its special shapes and connections are extremely variable in the vertebrate series; in general, it is situated below or in advance of the basisphenoid, below or behind the mesethmoid, and between the maxillary, palatine, or pterygoid bones of opposite sides, serving thus as a septum between right and left nasal or nasopalatine passages. In man the vomer is plowshare-shaped, articulating with the sphenoid behind, the mesethmoid above, the palatal plates of the maxillary and palatal bones below, and the triangular median cartilage of the nose in front, it thus forms much of the nasal septum, or partition between right and left nasal cavities, its posterior free border definitely separating the posterior nares. In birds its extremely variable shapes and connections furnish valuable zoological characters. (See ægithognathous, and cuts under dromæognathous, desmognathous, saurognathous, and schizognathous.) The vomer is by Owen regarded as the centrum of the fourth or rhinencephalic cranial vertebra—a view now entertained by few, it being generally regarded as a mere splint-bone. It is wanting in many vertebrates. The so-called vomer of fishes and batrachians is not homologically the bone of that name in higher vertebrates, but is identified by some with the parasphenoid (which see, with cut); while others name the ichthyic vomer the antral bone. It often bears teeth. See cuts under Chelonidæ, craniofacial, Cyclodus, Gallinæ, Lepidosiren, Ophidia, parasphenoid, Physeter, Pythonidæ, Rana, teleost, and Thinocoridæ.

Section of Skull of Elephant, greatly reduced, showing Me, mesethmoid; Vo, vomer; an, pn, anterior and posterior nares.

The bones in fish and Amphibians usually denominated vomers must part with their claims to that title and yield it to the so-called parasphenoid.
Sutton, Proc. Zool. Soc. Lond., 1884, p. 570.

2. In ornith., the pygostyle or rump-post; the large, peculiarly shaped terminal bone of the tail of most birds, consisting of several ankylosed vertebræ. See cut under pygostyle.—Wings of the vomer. See ala vomeris, under ala.

vomerine (vō'mėr-in), a. [< vomer + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the vomer.

vomic (vom'ik), a. [< L. vomicus, alcerous, < vomica, a sore, boil, abscess, < vomere, vomit, discharge: see vomit.] Purulent; ulcerous. [Rare.]

vomica (vom'i-kä), n.; pl. vomicæ (-sē). [NL., fem. of L. vomicus, ulcerous: see vomic.] In med., a cavity in the lung, resulting from a pathological process, and containing pus.

vomicine (vom'i-sēn), n. [< vomica in nux vomica + -ine.] In chem., same as brucine.

vomic-nut (vom'ik-nut), n. [An E. rendering of NL. nux vomica: see nux vomica.] Same as vomit-nut.

vomit (vom'it), v. [< L. vomitus, pp. of vomere (> It. vomire = F. vomir: see vomic), vomit, discharge, = Gr. ἐμεῖν = Skt. √ vam, vomit. Cf. emetic.] I. trans. 1. To throw up or eject from the stomach: discharge from the stomach through the mouth: often followed by forth, up, or out.

The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up.
Prov. xxiii. 8.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place; belch forth; emit.

During the night the volcano . . . vomited up vast quantities of fire and smoke. Cook, Second Voyage, III. 5.

II. intrans. 1. To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth; puke; spew.—2. To be emitted; come out with force or violence.

vomit (vom'it), n. [= Sp. vómito = Pg. It. vomito, < L. vomitus, a throwing up, vomiting, vomit, < vomere, pp. vomitus, vomit: see vomit, v.] 1. That which is vomited; specifically, matter ejected from the stomach in the act of vomiting; an attack of vomiting.

So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge, . . .
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., I. 3. 100.

2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.

Whether a vomit may be safely given must be judged by the circumstances. Arbuthnot.

Black vomit, a blackish substance, consisting chiefly of disorganized blood, vomited in certain cases of yellow fever; also, the disease yellow fever.

vomiting (vom'i-ting), n. [Verbal n. of vomit, v.] 1. The ejection of matter from the stomach through the mouth. It is effected mainly by a spasmodic contraction of the abdominal muscles and diaphragm, occurring at the same time with dilatation of the cardiac orifice, assisted also by contraction of the muscular coats of the stomach itself.

2. That which is vomited; vomit.

Hold the chalice to beastly vomitings.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, IV. 1. 2.

Fecal or stercoraceous vomiting, ejection by the mouth of fecal matter which has been regurgitated into the stomach from the intestine; copremesis.

vomitingly (vom'i-ting-li), adv. As in vomiting; like vomit.

Take occasion, pulling out your gloves, to have some epigram or satire, or sonnet fastened in one of them, that may, as it were vomitingly to you, offer itself to the gentlemen Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 116.

vomition (vō-mish'on), n. [= It. vomizione, < L. vomitio(n-), a vomiting, < vomere, vomit: see vomit.] The act or power of vomiting. [Rare.]

How many have saved their lives by spewing up their debauch' whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died.
N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra.

vomitive (vom'i-tiv), a. [< F. vomitif = Sp. Pg. It. vomitivo; as vomit + -ive.] Causing the ejection of matter from the stomach; emetic.

It will become him also to know not only the ingredients but doses of certain cathartic or purging, emetic or vomitive medicines, specific or choleric, melancholic or phlegmatic constitutions, phlebotomy being only necessary for those who abound in blood vomit-nut (vom'it-nut), n. The seeds of the nux vomica tree, Strychnos Nux-vomica; quaker-buttons or poison-nut. See nux vomica. Also vomic-nut.
Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 44.

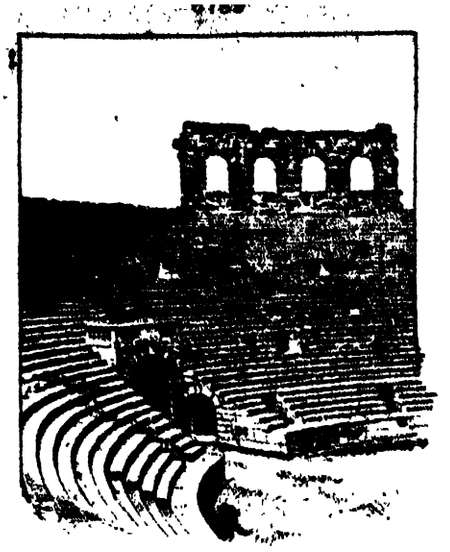
vomito (vom'i-tō), n. [Sp. vómito = E. vomit.] The yellow fever, in its worst form, in which it is usually attended with the black vomit.

The low, marshy regions are to be avoided . . . on account of the vomito—the scourge of those regions.
L. Hamilton, Mexican Handbook, p. 18.

vomitory (vom'i-tō-ri), a. and n. [= F. vomitoire = Sp. Pg. It. vomitorio, < L. vomitorius, vomiting (neut. pl. vomitoria, the passages in an amphitheater), < vomere, vomit, discharge: see vomit.] I. a. Procuring vomiting; causing ejection from the stomach; emetic; vomitive.

II. n.; pl. vomitories (-riz). 1. An emetic.—2. In arch., an opening or passage, usually one of a regularly disposed series, in an ancient Roman theater or amphitheater, which gave direct ingress or egress to the people in some part of the auditorium.



Amphitheater at Verona, showing Vomitories.

The large archway is one of the main entrances to the arena; the smaller one to the right of the first is an opening of the first vaulted passage beneath the seats of the auditorium; the square openings are vomitories.

vomiturition (vom'i-tū-rish'on), n. [< L. as if vomiturire*, desire to vomit, desiderative of vomere, vomit: see vomit.] 1. Ineffectual attempts to vomit; retching.—2. The vomiting of but little matter, or vomiting with little effort.

vomitus (vom'i-tus), n. [L., prop. pp. of vomere, vomit: see vomit.] Vomiting; vomited matter.—Vomitus niger, black vomit; yellow fever.

vondsira, n. Same as vansire. Flacourt, 1661.

Von Graefe's operation for cataract. See operation.

Von Patera process. See process.

voodoo (vō-dō'), n. and a. [Also voudou; < creole F. vaudoux, a negro sorcerer, prob. orig. a dial. form of F. Vaudois, a Waldensian (the Waldenses, as heretics, being accused of sorcery): see Waldenses. Cf. hoodoo.] I. n. 1. A common name among creoles and in many of the southern United States for any practicer of malicious, defensive, amatory, healing, or soothsaying enchantments, charms, witchcrafts, or secret rites, especially when they are tinctured with African superstitions and customs; especially, one who makes such practices a business.

The unprotected little widow should have had a very serious errand to bring her to the voudou's house.
G. W. Cable, Grandissimes, p. 90.

Every one has read of the noisy antics employed by the medicine men among the Indians, and by the fetich-doctors and voodoos among the negroes, for driving diseases out of their patients Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 803.

2. The same title transferred by voodoos to a personal evil spirit supreme among evil powers.

But for the small leaven of more intelligent whites, the black people would soon be victims of voudou. Indeed, it is hard to find a rural community in the South where that dreadful bugbear is not more or less believed in and feared.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 44.

3. pl. The practicers of voodoo rites as a collective body.

II. a. Pertaining to or associated with the superstitions and peculiar practices of the voodoos: as, a voodoo dance (a violent indecent dance belonging to the secret nocturnal ceremonies of the voodoos); a voodoo doctor, or voudou priest (the terms most commonly used in creole countries for any professional voodoo); voodoo king or queen (the person who, by a certain vague election and tenure, holds for life a local preëminence and some slight authority over all voodoos of the surrounding country).

voodoo (vō-dō'), v. t. [Also voudou; < voodoo, n. Cf. hoodoo, v.] To affect by voodoo conjuration or charms.

What was the matter with her head, anyhow? She must be voudoued. New Princeton Rev., I. 106.

The negroes [of Louisiana] took a dislike to the overseer, and sent to the city for a conjuror to come down and voodoo him. The conjuror undertook to rid them of the overseer for $30, but finally came down in his demand to $2.50. The Century, XXXV. 112.

voodooism (vō-dō'izm), n. [Also voudouism; < voodoo + -ism.] The voodoo superstitions and practices. In the main these are only such fantastical beliefs and impotent sexual libations, burnings, etc., as are everywhere the recourse of base and puerile conditions of mind. There seems to be little in voodooism to justify the term "worship"; and still less does it seem to contain any group of beliefs, myths, or pious observances that make it in any sense a separate religion.

vooga-hole (vō'ga-hōl), n. Same as vug.

voracious (vō-rā'shus), a. [= F. vorace = Sp. Pg. voraz = It. vorace, < L. vorax (voracc-), swallowing greedily, ravenous, < vorare, swallow, devour; cf. Gr. √ δαφ in δαφή, food, ἔδαφος, food (see broma), δάπτειν, eat, Skt. √ gar, swallow. Cf. vorant, devour.] 1. Greedy in eating; eating food in large quantities; marked by voracity; ravenous: as, a voracious man.

I have seen of the king carrion crows, . . . They are very voracious, and will despatch a carcass in a trice.
Dampier, Voyages, an. 1676.

They are men of a voracious appetite, but no taste
Addison, Spectator, No. 452.

2. Rapacious.

I would have removed this defect, and formed no voracious or destructive animals, which only prey on the other parts of the creation. Goldsmith, Anim.

Confess to me, as the first proof of it (confidence), didst thou never shrink back from so voracious and intractable a monster as that accursed snake?
Landor, Imag. Conv., Alexander and the Priest of Ammon.

3. Ready to swallow up: as, a voracious gulf or whirlpool.—Syn. 1. Ravenous, etc. See rapacious.

voraciously (vō-rā'shus-li), adv. In a voracious manner; with greedy appetite; ravenously; rapaciously.

voraciousness (vō-rā'shus-nes), n. The state or character of being voracious; greediness of appetite; ravenousness; voracity.

This necessarily puts the good man upon making great ravages on all the dishes . . . near him, and distinguishing himself by a voraciousness of appetite, as knowing that his time is short. Addison, Tatler, No. 255.

voracity (vō-ras'i-ti), n. [< F. voracité = Sp. voracidad = Pg. voracidade = It. voracità, < L. voracita(t-)s, ravenousness, < vorax (vorac-), devouring: see voracious.] The character of being voracious; greediness of appetite; voraciousness.

He ate food with what might almost be termed voracity.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, vii.

—Syn. Avidity, ravenousness. See rapacious.

voraginous (vo-raj'i-nus), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. voraginoso, < LL. voraginosus, full of chasms or abysses, < L. vorago, a chasm, abyss: see vorago.] Of or pertaining to a gulf or whirlpool; hence devouring; swallowing. [Rare.]

A cavern's jaws voraginous and vast.
Mallet, Amyntor and Theodora, i.

vorago (vo-rā'go), n. [L., a gulf, abyss, < vorare, swallow, swallow up. Cf. E. swallow[1], a gulf, abyss, cf. also gorge in similar sense.] A gulf; an abyss. [Rare.]

From hence we passed by the place into wch Curtius precipitated himself for the love of his country, now without any signe of a lake or vorago.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 4, 1644.

vorant (vō'rant), a. [< L. voran(t-)s, ppr. of vorare, swallow: see voracious.] In her., devouring or swallowing: noting a serpent or other creature of prey. The epithet is followed by the name of the object which is being swallowed: as, the arms of Visconti of Milan were a serpent vorant a child.

vormela, n. See vormela.

-vorous. [L. -vorus, < vorare, devour: see voracious, vorant.] The terminal element, meaning 'eating,' of various compound adjectives, as carnivorous, herbivorous, insectivorous, omnivorous, piscivorous, etc.

vortex (vôr'teks), n.; pl. vortices or vortexes (vôr'ti-sēz, vôr'tek-sez). [= Sp. vórtice = Pg. It. vortice, < L. vortex, var. vertex, a whirl, eddy, whirlpool, vortex: see vertex, another form of the word.] 1. A whirl of fluid. An intuitive geometrical idea of the motion is not easily attained. If the motion of a fluid varies continuously both in time and in space, it may be described as such that each spherical particle is at each instant receiving three compressions or elongations at right angles to one another, and has, besides, a motion of translation and a motion of rotation about an axis through it. When this motion of rotation is present, the fluid is said to have a rotational motion; but this must not be confounded with a rotation of the whole mass. Thus, if all the parts of the fluid move in one direction but with unequal velocities in different parallel planes, though there be no rotation of the whole mass, yet the motion is rotational, and if a spherical particle were suddenly congealed its inertia would make it rotate. On the other hand, one or more radial paddles turning about the axis of a cylindrical vessel filled with a perfect fluid, though making the latter revolve as a whole could yet impart no rotational motion, which the fluid would evade by slipping round between the paddles. The motion being perfectly continuous, the axis of rotation of a particle must join the axis of rotation of a neighboring particle, so that a curve, called a vortex line, may be described whose tangents are the axes of rotation of the particles at their points of tangency; and such a curve must evidently return into itself or reach both extremities to the boundaries of the fluid. A vortex is a portion of fluid in rotational motion inclosed in an annular surface which is a locus of vortex-lines; and an infinitesimal vortex is called a vortex-filament. If at any part of a vortex-filament the angular velocity is greater than at another part a little removed along the vortex-line, then (considering a particle a little removed from the central vortex-line) it is plain that of two opposite parts of this particle having the same velocity in magnitude and direction and consequently on its axis of rotation, that one which is in the more rapidly moving stratum must be nearer the central vortex-line, so that the annular boundary of the vortex must present a constriction where the angular velocity is great, and thus it can be shown that the product of the mean angular velocity in any cross-section perpendicular to the vortex-line multiplied by the area of that section is constant at all parts of the vortex. In a perfect fluid, which can sustain no distorting stress even for an instant, the velocity of a rotating particle cannot be retarded any more than if it were a frictionless sphere, and, in like manner, no such velocity can be increased. Consequently a vortex, unlike a wave, continues to be composed of the same identical matter. When the motion is continuous through the fluid, two vortices exercise a singular action upon one another, each ring in turn contracting and passing through the aperture of the other, which stretches, with other singular motions.

2. Any whirling or gyratory motion; also, a whirlpool.

> He soon found himself absorbed in the same vortex of worldly passions and interests from which he had been so anxious to escape. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 5.

3. In the Cartesian philosophy, a collection of material particles, forming a fluid or ether, endowed with a rapid rotatory motion about an axis, and filling all space, by which Descartes accounted for the motions of the universe. This theory attracted much attention at one time, but is now entirely discredited.—3. [cap.] [NL.] In zoöl., the typical genus of Vorticellæ, containing such species as V. viridis. Electrolytic vortices, currents circulating round closed paths in the liquid or liquid and plate but not passing through the external circuit, in an electrolytic cell. Vortex of the heart, the peculiar spiral concentration of the fibers at the apex, produced by the twisting of the external fibers as they pass back to join those of the inner layer. Also called whorl of the heart. Vortex-ring, in physics, a vortical molecular filament or column returning into itself so as to form a ring composed of a number of small rotating circles placed side by side, like beads on a string as the singular smoke-rings which are sometimes produced when a cannon is fired, or when a smoker skillfully emits a puff of tobacco smoke. Recent labors in the theoretical investigation of the motion of vortices, more particularly the theorems relating to vortex-filaments rotating round a central axis in a frictionless or perfect fluid (vortex-atoms), have suggested the possibility of founding on them a new form of the atomic theory. Vortex theory, the theory that atoms of ordinary matter are vortices in a fluid. The object of the hypothesis seems to be to explain away action at a distance—a proceeding hardly in harmony with the theory of energy. Vortices lentis, star-like figures seen on the surface of the crystalline lens of the eye.

vortex-filament (vôr'teks-fil a-ment), n. In hydrodynamics, the portion of fluid included within a vortex-tube.

vortex-motion (vôr'teks-mō'shon), n. A rotational motion of a fluid in which there is circulation about certain vortex-filaments, and no circulation except about them.

vortex-tube (vôr'teks-tub), n. An imaginary tube within a fluid whose surface is the locus of vortex-lines through a small closed curve drawn arbitrarily.

vortex-wheel (vôr'teks-hwēl), n. A turbine.

vortical (vôr'ti-kal), a. and n. [< vorter (vortic-), vortex, + -al.] I. a. Causing a vortex, as an infusorian.

II. n. Any ciliate infusorian which makes a vortex.

vortically (vôr'ti-kal-i), adv. In a vortical manner; whirlingly.

vorticel, vorticell (vôr'ti-sel), n. [< NL. Vorticella.] An infusorian animalcule of the family Vorticellidæ; a bell-animalcule.

Vorticella nebulifera, highly magnified: a, cuticle of the loose sheath; b, vestibule; c, peristome; d, disk; e, contractile vesicle; f, excretory pore; g, food-vacuoles; h, nucleus; i, endosarc; k, contractile infundibuliform beginning of the stem; l, stem, most of the length of which is omitted.

Vorticella (vôr-ti-sel'ä), n. [NL. (O. F. Müller, 1773 or 1786, but existent in form for more than a century before), dim. of L. vortex, a whirl: see vortex.] The typical genus of Vorticellidæ, having a retractile pedicel; the bell-animalcules. Many species are colonial inhabitants of both salt and fresh water, they are very numerous, and among the most elegant animalcules, like tiny tran parent wine-glasses or bells borne on fine elastic stems, and continually waving about in the most graceful manner, "as if they were ringing chimes for Lilliputian dances." V. convallaria was described by Leeuwenhoek in 1675 as an "animalcule of the first size," and called by Linnæus Hydra convallaria in 1758. It occurs in stagnant water and in infusions. See also cut under Infusoria.

Vorticellidæ (vôr-ti-sel'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Vorticella + -idæ.] Vorticels or bell-animalcules, that family of peritrichous ciliate infusorians which are sedentary or attached (the animalcules of all the other families of Peritricha being free-swimming). These animalcules are campanulate ovate, or subcylindrical, with eccentric terminal mouth having a spiral fringe of adoral cilia, the right limit of which descends into the mouth, while the left sweeps about a movable ciliate disk; they rarely if ever have tentacles, but usually a long, slender vestibulum or scion. The family is one of the largest and most easily recognizable among infusorians, the oral structures being very characteristic. The little creatures inhabit both salt and fresh water. Some are naked, constituting the Vorticellinæ, others live in hard (Vaginicolinæ) or soft (Ophrydinæ) horny or investing sheaths. There are several genera and numerous species. See Carchesium, and cuts under Epistylis, Infusoria, and Vorticella.

vorticellidan (vor-ti-sel'i-dan), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Vorticellidæ; vorticelline in a broad sense.

II. n. A bell-animalcule; any vorticel.

Vorticellinæ (vôr'ti-se-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vorticella + -inæ.] In a strict sense, a subfamily of Vorticellidæ, containing only the naked vorticels, solitary or social, and sessile or pedicellate. This definition excludes the Vaginicolinæ and Ophrydinæ, which are not naked.

vorticelline (vor-ti-sel'in), a. Of or pertaining to the Vorticellinæ.

vortices, n. Latin plural of vortex.

vortical (vôr-tish'al), a. An erroneous form of vortical.

> Cyclic and seemingly gyrating or vorticial movements. Poe, Eureka.

Vorticidæ (vor-tis'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Vortex (-tic-) + -idæ.] A family of rhabdocœlous turbellarians, typified by the genus Vortex, containing both fresh water and marine forms, some of which are parasitic on gastropods and holothurians.

vorticose (vôr'ti-kos), a. [< L. vortex (vortic-), a whirl, vortex, + -ose.] 1. Whirling; vortical.

> Only a very small percentage of the spots show any trace of vorticose motion. C. A. Young, The Sun, p. 173.

2. In anat., specifying the veins of the external layer of the choroid coat of the eyeball, the venæ vorticosæ, which are regularly arranged in drooping branches converging to a few equidistant trunks which perforate the sclerotic coat and empty into the ophthalmic vein.

vorticular (vor-tik'ū-lar), a. Same as vorticose.

> They [storms] possess truly vorticular motion. The Atlantic, LXVIII. 68.

vortiginous (vôr-ti-ji'nus), a. [< L. vortiginosus*, assumed var. of vertiginosus, < vertigo, a whirling: see vertiginous.] Having a motion round a center or axis; vortical.

> The fix'd and rooted earth,
> Tormented into billows, heaves and swells,
> Or, with vortiginous and hideous whirl
> Sucks down its prey insatiable.
> Cowper, Task, ii. 102.

votable (vō'ta-bl), a. [< vote + -able.] Capable of voting; having a right to vote. [Rare.]

> When "the votable inhabitance convened in His Majesties name September 24, 1644." Town Records of Wareham, Mass., quoted in New Princeton Rev., IV., 288.

votal (vō'tal), a. [< L. votum, a vow, + -al.] Pertaining to a vow or promise; consisting in or involving a promise. [Rare.]

> Debt is not deadly sin when a man hath no means, but when he hath no meaning to pay. There must be votal restitution, if there cannot be actual. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 145.

votaress (vō'ta-res), n. [< votary + -ess.] A female votary.

> His wuetful queen we leave at Ephesus,
> Unto Diana there a votaress.
> Shak., Pericles, Prol., iv.

votarist (vō'ta-rist), n. [< votar-y + -ist.] A votary.

> The votarists of Saint Clare. Shak., M. for M., I. 4. 5.
> Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed.
> Milton, Comus, l. 180.

votary (vō'ta-ri), a. and n. [< NL. votarius*, < L. votum, a vow: see vote, vow.] I. a. Consecrated by a vow or promise; also, consequent on a vow; devoted; votive.

> Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon, Custom and Education (ed. 1887) p. 397.

II. n.; pl. votaries (-riz). One who is devoted, consecrated, or engaged by a vow or promise; hence, more generally, one who is devoted, given, or addicted to some particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

> Already Love's firm votary. Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 2. 58.
>
> Votaries of business and of pleasure prove > Faithless alike in friendship and in love.
> Cowper, Verses from Valedictus.

> He deemed that a faith which taught that Jupiter of the Capitol was a thing of naught was a faith which it became his votary to root out from all the lands that bowed to Jove and to Janus. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 139.

> Music and painting and sculpture could also boast of distinguished votaries under the Regency.
> The Academy, Oct. 25, 1890, p. 360.

vote (vōt), n. [< F. vote, a vote, = Sp. Pg. It. voto, a vow, wish, vote, < L. votum, a promise, wish, an engagement, < vovere, pp. votus, promise, dedicate, vow, wish: see vow.] 1†. An ardent wish or desire; a prayer; a vow.

> All the heavens consent
> With harmony to tune their notes,
> In answer to the public votes,
> That for it up were sent.
> B. Jonson, Fortunate Isles.

> Id. The end of my > Devotions is that one and the same hour
> May make us fit for heaven.
> Ser. I join with you
> In my votes that way. Massinger, Guardian, v. 1.

> Those interchangeable votes of priest and people, . . . "O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake; O God, we have heard with our ears, &c."
> Prideaux, Euchologia, p. 226.

2. A suffrage; the formal expression of a will, preference, wish, or choice in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a person to fill a certain situation or office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, etc. This vote or choice may be expressed by holding up the hand, by standing up, by the voice (viva voce), by ballot, or otherwise.

> Each party gaped, and looked alternately for their vote almost to the end of their speeches.
> Burke, American Taxation.

> He . . . was already a forty-shilling freeholder, and was conscious of a vote for the county.
> George Eliot, Felix Holt, xi.

Hence—3. That by which will or preference is expressed in elections; a ballot, a ticket, etc.: as, a written vote.

> The freeman, casting with unpurchased hand
> The vote that shakes the turrets of the land.
> O. W. Holmes, Poetry, A Metrical Essay.

4. That which is allowed, conveyed, or bestowed by the will of a majority; a thing conferred by vote; a grant; as, the ministry received a vote of confidence; the vote for the civil service amounted to $24,000,000.—5. Expression of will by a majority; decision by some expression of the minds of a number; result of voting: as, the vote was unanimous; the vote was close.—6. Votes collectively: as, a movement to capture the labor vote.—Casting vote. See casting vote. Cumulative vote. See cumulative system of voting, under cumulative.—Limited vote, a form of voting by which the elector is restricted to a less number of votes than there are vacancies, as in the case of a three-cornered constituency (which see, under three-cornered). Straw vote. See straw. The floating vote. See floating.—To split one's votes. See split.

vote (vōt), v.; pret. and pp. voted, ppr. voting. [< F. voter, vote, < vote, vote: see vote, n.] I. intrans. To give a vote; formally to express or signify the mind, will, or choice in electing persons to office, or in passing laws, regulations, and the like, or in deciding as to any measure in which one has an interest in common with others.

> They voted then to do a deed
> As kirkmen to devise.
> Battle of Balrinnes (Child's Ballads, VII. 221).

> For their want of intimate knowledge of affairs, I do not think this ought to disqualify them (women) from voting at any town meeting which I ever attended.
> Emerson, Woman.

Cumulative system of voting. See cumulative.—To vote straight, to vote the entire ticket, as of a political party, without scratching. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To enact or establish by vote, as a resolution or an amendment.—2. To grant by vote, as an appropriation.

> Parliament voted them a hundred thousand pounds.
> Swift.

3. To declare by general consent; characterize by expression of opinion: as, they voted the trip a failure. [Colloq.]

> It has come to be voted rather a vulgar thing to be married by banns at all.
> Daily Telegraph, March 20, 1888. (Encyc. Dict.)

To vote down, to defeat (a proposition), as in a legislative body; give public judgment against; hence, to put an end to.

> Old truths voted down begin to resume their places.
> Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., II. 5.

It is of no use to vote down gravitation or morals.
Bagehot, Fortnightly Review, Nov. 1867.

To vote in, to choose by suffrage; elect, as to an appointment or office, by expression of will or preference: as, he was voted in by a handsome majority.

voteless (vōt'les), a. [< vote + -less.] Having no vote; not entitled to a vote.

He was not enlightened enough to know that there was a way of using voteless miners and navvies at Nominations and Elections. George Eliot, Felix Holt, xi.

voter (vō'tėr), n. [< vote + *-er*1.] One who votes or has a legal right to vote; an elector.

Of late years, . . . when it has been considered necessary by politicians to cultivate the foreign-born voters, there has been a great tendency to appoint naturalized citizens as consuls. Schuyler, Amer. Diplomacy, p. 81.

Registration of voters. See registration.

vote-recorder (vōt'rē-kôr'dėr), n. An electrical device which records the yea or nay of a voter when the corresponding knob or button is pressed.

voting-paper (vō'ting-pā'pėr), n. A balloting-paper; particularly, according to the British Ballot Act of 1872, a paper used in voting by ballot in the election of members of Parliament, of municipal corporations, etc. Such papers are used only in cases where the number of candidates exceeds the number of vacancies, they contain a list of the candidates, and the voter is required to put a mark opposite the name of each candidate he selects.

votist† (vō'tist), n. [< L. votum, vow, + -ist.] One who makes a vow; a vower; a votarist.

Try
If a poor woman, votist of revenge,
Would not perform it.
Chapman, Revenge of Bussy D'Ambois, iii. 1.

votive (vō'tiv), a. [< F. votif = Sp. Pg. It. votivo, < L. votivus, of or pertaining to a vow, conformable to one's wish, < votum, vow: see vote, vow.] 1. Offered, contributed, or consecrated in accordance with a vow; as, a votive picture.

Not gold, not blood, their altar dowers,
But votive tears and symbol flowers.
Shelley, Hellas.

We set to-day a votive stone,
That memory may their deed redeem,
When, like our sires, our sons are gone.
Emerson, Concord Monument.

Votive tablets commemorative of cures and deliverance were hung around.
C. E. Norton, Travel and Study in Italy, p. 225.

2. Observed, practised, or done in consequence of a vow. [Rare.]

Votive abstinence some cold constitutions may endure.
Feltham, Resolves, i. 85.

Diversions of this kind have a practical value, even though they seem to be those of a knight tilting at a wayside tournament as he rides on his votive quest.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 366.

Votive mass. See *mass*1. Votive offering, a tablet, picture or the like dedicated in fulfilment of the vow (Latin ex voto) of a worshiper. Among the Greeks and Romans such offerings were dedicated to deities or heroes, and were affixed to the walls of temples, or set up in consecrated places, often in niches cut in the rock in a locality reputed sacred. Among Roman Catholics they are usually set up in chapels dedicated to the Virgin or to a saint.

votively (vō'tiv-li), adv. In a votive manner; by vow.

votiveness (vō'tiv-nes), n. The state or character of being votive.

votress† (vō'tres), n. Same as votaress.

vouch (vouch), v. [< ME. vouchen, vowchen, < OF. voucher, vocher, < L. vocare, call, call upon, summon: see vocation, voice. Cf. vouchsafe, avouch.] I. trans. 1†. To call to witness.

And vouch the silent stars, and conscious moon.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xiii. 92.

2. To declare; assert; affirm; attest; avouch.

Praised therefore be his name, which voucheth us worthy this honour.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 176.

What can you vouch against him, Signior Lucio?
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 326.

What we have done
None shall dare vouch, though it be truly known.
Shelley, Revolt of Islam, ix. 31.

3. To warrant; be surety for; answer for; make good; confirm.

Go tell the lords o' the city I am here:
Deliver them this paper: having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place, where I,
Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,
Will vouch the truth of it. Shak., Cor., v. 6. 5.

When I arrived at Scutari, they took my slave from me, as I had not the original writing by me to vouch the property of him. Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 128.

4. To support; back; second; follow up. [Rare.]

Bold words vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Milton, P. L., v. 66.

5. In law: (a) To produce vouchers for, in support of a charge in account. (b) In old Eng. law, to call or summon into court to warrant and defend, or to make good a warranty of title.

He vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. Blackstone, Com., II. xxi.

=Syn. 2. To asseverate, aver, protest.

II. intrans. To bear witness; give testimony or attestation; more specifically, in old Eng. law, to call in some one to make good his alleged warranty of title; be surety or guaranty.

Vouch with me, heaven. Shak., Othello, i. 3. 262.

The Salve of Sir John Friendly's appearing at last, and vouching for Lord Foplington, won't mend the matter.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 215.

A very clear account, upon my word, and I dare swear the lady will vouch for every article of it.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

To vouch to warranty, in old Eng. law, to call in a third person as a substituted defendant, to defend the title acquired from him. =Syn. Of vouch for, warrant, assure, guarantee.

vouch (vouch), n. [< vouch, v.] Approving or supporting warrant; confirmation; attestation.

Why in this woolvish toge should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouches? Shak., Cor., II. 3. 124.

vouchee (vou-chē'), n. [< vouch + *-ee*1.] In law, the person who is vouched or summoned in a writ of right.

All trouble on this score was avoided by choosing as vouchee some one who notoriously had no lands to make it compense withal, and therefore was, as we now say, not worth powder and shot. F. Pollock, Land Laws, p. 31.

voucher (vou'chėr), n. [< couch + *-er*1.] 1. One who vouches, or gives attestation or confirmation; one who is surety for another.

He knows his own strength so well that he never dares praise anything in which he has not a French author for his voucher. Addison, Tatler, No. 165.

Some banks will not take the accounts of persons introduced only by their own clerks, for fear they might be confederates in some scheme of fraud or plunder. Other and responsible vouchers are required.
Harper's Mag., LXXX. 468.

2. A book, paper, document, or stamp which serves to prove the truth of accounts, or to confirm and establish facts of any kind; specifically, a receipt or other written evidence of the payment of money.

The stamp is a mark, . . . and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight.
Locke, Further Considerations concerning Raising the Value of Money.

He caused the accounts to be examined by the proper officer, who, after comparing every article with the voucher, certified them to be right. Franklin, Autobiog., p. 290.

3. In old Eng. law: (a) The tenant in a writ of right; one who called in another to establish his warranty of title. In common recoveries there might be a single voucher or double vouchees. [Also written vouchor.] (b) The calling in of a person to vouch. Double voucher, an incident to the alienation of land by the fiction of common recovery, where the owner was allowed to convey to a third person who, being sued, alleged that the former warranted the title, and he, being called to vouch for it, was allowed to allege that still another warranted it to him, the object being to bar contingent interests etc.

vouchment (vouch'ment), n. [< vouch + -ment.] A declaration or affirmation; a solemn assertion.

Their vouchment by their honour in that tryal is not an oath. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 77. (Davies.) vouchor (vou'chėr), n. [< vouch + *-or*1.] See voucher, 3 (a).

vouchsafe (vouch-sāf'), v.; pret. and pp. vouchsafed, ppr. vouchsafing. [< ME. vouchen safe, saf, sauf, prop. two words, lit. 'guarantee (as) safe'; < couch + safe.] I. trans. 1†. To guarantee as safe; secure; assure.

That the quene be of sent, sauf wel i fauche
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4192.

Sir Philip is wild, on that wise we it take
As go had mad present the kyng vouches it saue
Rob. of Brunne, p. 280. (Richardson.)

2. To permit, grant, or bestow: sometimes with implied condescension: as, not to vouchsafe an answer.

I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice. Shak., Cymbeline, II. 3. 45.

In your pardon, and the kiss vouchsafed me,
You did but point me out a fore right way
To lead to certain happiness.
Massinger, Parliament of Love, iii. 3.

Sir I must thank you for the Visit you vouchsafed me in this simple Cell. Howell, Letters, II. 49.

3†. To receive or accept by way of condescension.

There she sate, vouchsafing my cloak (then most gorgeous) under her. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them. Shak., K. John, iii. 1. 294.

II. intrans. To permit; grant; condescend; deign; stoop.

Than he preyede devoutly to God, that he wolde vouche sauf to suffre him gon up. Mandeville, Travels, p. 149.

God vouched sauf thurgh thee with us to acorde.
Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 27.

Vouchsafe, noble Lady, to accept this slender remembrance. Spenser, Tears of the Muses, Ded.

vouchsafement (vouch-sāf'ment), n. [< vouchsafe + -ment.] The act of vouchsafing, or that which is vouchsafed; a gift or grant in condescension. [Rare.]

Peculiar experiences being such vouchsafements to them, which God communicated to none but his chosen people.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

voudou, voudouism. See vaudoo, vaudooism.

vouge (vōzh), n. Same as vouge.

vough, n. Same as vug.

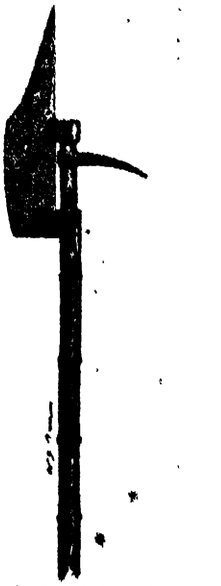
voulge (vōzh), n. [< OF. voulge, vouge, vouege, F. vouge (ML. vauga), a hunting-spear, a lance; origin unknown.] A weapon consisting of a blade fitted on a long handle or staff, used by the foot-soldiers of the fourteenth century and later. It varied in form, resembling sometimes the fauchard, sometimes the war scythe, sometimes the halberd, and was frequently like an ax the blade of which, with but slight projection, has great length in the direction of the staff, and is finished at the end in a sharp point.



Voulge of the end of the 14th century. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. du Mobilier français.") voundt, a. An unexplained word, perhaps a mistake for round, occurring in the following passage:

Though it were of no voundt stone,
Wrought with squyrs and scantilone.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 7063.

vourt, v. t. [ME. vourer, < OF. vourer*, vorer, < L. vorare, devour, eat; cf. voracious, devour.] To devour.

Thei whom the sword denowrede [var. vourede].
Wyclif, 2 Kl. [2 Sam.] xviii. 8.

vourer†, n. A devourer.

Lo! a man denourere, other gloteun [var. vourer or gloteun].
Wyclif, Luke vii. 34.

voussoir (vö-swor'), n. [F.; cf. vousure, the curvature of a vault, prop. < vousser*, < LL. as if volutare*, make round, < L. volutus, a rolling, < volvere, pp. volutus, roll: see volute.] In arch., a stone in the shape of a truncated wedge, which forms part of an arch. The under sides of the voussoirs form the intrados or soffit of the arch, and the upper sides the extrados. The middle voussoir is often termed the keystone. See *arch*1, 2.

voussoir (vö-swor'), v. t. [< voussoir, n.] To form with voussoirs; construct by means of voussoirs. Encyc. Brit., II. 387.

voutet, n. An obsolete form of *vault*1.

voutret, vouture, n. Obsolete forms of vulture.

vow (vou), n. [< ME. vow, < OF. vou, vo, vou, F. vœu = Sp. Pg. It. voto, a vow, < L. votum, a promise, dedication, vow, < vovere, promise, vow: see vote, n., of which vow is a doublet.] 1. A solemn promise; an engagement solemnly entered into. Specifically (a) A kind of promissory oath made to God, or to some deity, to perform some act or dedicate to the deity something of value, often in the event of receiving something specially desired, such as success in an enterprise, deliverance from danger, or recovery from sickness: as, a vow to build an altar.

Would I were even the saint they make thee here to!
How easily I would grant! Fletcher, Pilgrim, i. 2.

Forc'd Consecrations out of another mans Estate are no better than forc'd Vows, hateful to God who loves a cheerful giver. Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

A vow is a deliberate promise made to God in regard to something possessing superior goodness. To be valid, it must proceed from the free, deliberate will of one who, by age and social position, is capable of contracting a solemn obligation. It is to God alone that a vow is taken, and . . . it is an act of religion, or of divine worship. To vow to a saint means in the minds of Catholics, to vow to God in honour of a saint. Rom. Cath. Dict.

(b) A promise to follow out some line of conduct, or to consecrate or devote one's self wholly or in part for a longer or shorter time to some act or service, a pledge of fidelity or constancy: as, a marriage vow.

Pooles therefore
They are which fortune doe by vowes devise,
Sith each unto himselfe his life may fortunize.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. ix. 36.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.
Shak., M. N. D., I. i. 174.

But, for performance of your vow, I entreat
Some gage from you.
Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, ii. 1

2†. A solemn asseveration or declaration; a positive assertion.

What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow?
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 149.

3†. A votive offering; an ex-voto.

Belonging to this church is a world of plate, some whole statues of it, and lamps innumerable, besides the costly vows hung up, some of gold and a cabinet of precious stones. Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

Baptismal vows. See baptismal. Monastic vows. See monastic.

vow (vou), v. [< ME. vowen, < OF. vouer, voer, F. vouer = Sp. Pg. votar = It. votare, promise, vow, vote, < Mil. votare, promise, vow, < L. votum, promise, vow: see vow, n. Cf. vote, v.] I. trans. 1. To promise solemnly; undertake, by a solemn promise, as to God or a deity, to do, perform, or give; devote.

And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, . . . then shall the Lord be my God . . . and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee. Gen. xxviii. 20, 22.

Mine own good master Harvey, to whom I have, both in respect of your worthinesse generally and otherwyse upon some particular and special considerations, vowed this my labour Spenser, To Gabriell Harvey.

By Mahomet
The Turk there vows, on his blest Alcoran, Marriage unto her!
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, I. 1.

I vow and I sweat, by the fan in my hand
That my lord shall nae mair come near me.
The Gypsie Laddie (Child's Ballads, IV. 117).

2. To threaten solemnly or upon oath.

Weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance.
Shak., T. and C., v. 5. 31.

3. To assert or maintain solemnly; asseverate; swear.

He heard him sweat and vow to God
He came but to be duke of Lancaster.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 60.

Brisk. I vow it is a pleasurable Morning, the Waters taste so finely after being fuddled last Night. Neighbour Frisklin, how is't Pht to you.

Frsh. I'll pledge you, Mrs. Brisket, I have drunk eight already. Shadwell, Epsom Wells, i. 1.

Sir Peter vows he has not his equal in England, and, above all, he praises him as a man of sentiment. Sheridan, School for Scandal, i. 1.

It was my first experience with camels, and I vowed that it should be my last for, taking them altogether, they are the most tiresome and troublesome animals I have ever seen. The Century, XLI. 351.

II. intrans. To make vows or solemn promises; protest solemnly; asseverate; declare emphatically.

Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay. Eccl. v. 5.

vow-breach (vou'brech), n. The breaking of a vow.

He that vows . . . never to commit an error hath taken a course that his little infirmities shall become crimes, and certainly be imputed, by changing his unavoidable infirmity into vow-breach.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 697.

vow-break (vou'brak), n. Same as vow-breach.

vow-breaker (vou'brā'kėr), n. One who breaks his vow or vows.

And this is that holy bishop Paphnutius, whom these evangelical vow-breakers pretended to be their proctor for theire unlawful marriages.
M. Harding, quoted in Bp. Jewell's Works (Parker Soc.), III. 388.

vowel (vou'el), n. and a. [Formerly also vouell, < F. voyelle = Sp. Pg. vocal = It. vocale, a vowel, < L. vocalis, a vowel, fem. (sc. littera, letter) of vocalis, sounding, sonorous, < vox (voc-), voice, sound: see voice, vocal.] I. n. 1. One of the openest, most resonant, and continuable sounds uttered by the voice in the process of speaking; a sound in which the element of tone, though modified and differentiated by positions of the mouth organs, is predominant; a tone-sound, as distinguished from a triative (in which a rustling between closely approximated organs is the predominant element), from a mute (in which the explosion of a closure is characteristic), and so on. Vowel and consonant are relative terms, distinguishing respectively the opener and closer utterances, but there is no absolute division between them. Certain sounds are so open as to be only vowels; certain others so close as to be only consonants; but there are yet others which have the value now of vowels and now of consonants. Thus, i and o have frequently vowel value in English, as in apple, take; and r is in various languages a much used vowel. Also, the semivowels y and w are not appreciably different from the i vowel (of pique) and the u vowel (of rule) respectively. A sound, namely, is a vowel if it forms the central or open element of a syllable, being a syllable either alone or in conjunction with the closer sounds (consonants) that accompany it. (See syllable.) The openest of the vowels is a (as in far, father), the closest are i and u (in pique, rule); and these three, with e and o (as in they, tone), intermediate respectively between a and i and a and u, are hardly wanting in any known human language. But many others are found in various languages, and their number is theoretically unlimited.

2. The letter or character which represents such a sound. Neutral vowel. See neutral.

II. a. Pertaining to a vowel; vocal. — Vowel points. See point!

vowel (vou'el), v. t.; pret. and pp. voweled, vowelled, ppr. voweling, vowelling. [< vowel, n.] To provide or complete with vowels; insert vowels in (a word or syllable).

With pauses, cadence, and well-vowelled words.
Dryden, To Roscommon.

The vowelling of Greek and Latin proper names shows that the vagueness of the vowels was not absolute.
Encyc. Brit., XI. 706.

vowelisht (vou'el-ish), a. [< vowel + *-ish*1.] Of the nature of a vowel. B. Jonson, Eng. Grammar, i. 3.

vowelism (vou'el-izm), n. [< vowel + -ism.] The use of vowels.

vowelist (vou'el-ist), n. [< vowel + -ist.] One who is addicted to vowelism.

As a repetitionary vowelist, Mr —— is virtuous compared with Milton. Athenæum, No. 3280, p. 334.

vowelize (vou'el-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. vowelized, ppr. vowelizing. [< vowel + -ize.] To insert vowel-signs in, as in Semitic words or shorthand forms written primarily with consonants only.

"Tom Brown's School-Days" will be immediately issued in the easy reporting style [of shorthand], fully vowelized.
The American, VI. 314.

vowelless (vou'el-les), a. [< vowel + -less.] Without a vowel or vowels.

Hebrew, with its vowel less roots, which require vocalisation before they can attain any meaning.
Farrar, Language and Languages, p. 395.

vowelly (vou'el-i), a. [< vowel + *-ly*1.] Abounding in vowels; characterized by vowel-sounds.

The mellifluence and flexibility of the vowelly language [Italian] were favorable to unrhymed verse.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I. 349.

vower (vou'ėr), n. [< vow + *-er*1.] One who makes a vow.

Those pryckе cared prynces myghte truste those vowers, as hawkes made to theyr handes, yet wolde I counsell the christen prynces in no wyse to trust them.
Bp. Bale, Apology, fol. 142.

vowess (vou'es), n. [< vow + -ess.] A woman who has taken a vow; a nun. [Rare.]

In that church also lieth this ladie, buried . . . in the habit of a vowesse.
Harrison, Descrip. of Eng., ii. 3 (Holinshed's Chron., I. v).

vow-fellow (vou'fel-o), n. One who is bound by the same vow. [Rare.]

Vow fellowes with this virtuous duke.
Shak., L. L. L., ii. 1. 38.

vowless (vou'les), a. [< vow + -less.] Without a vow; not bound by a vow.

He hath done with their own vows, and now descends to us, whom he confesses vowless.
Bp. Hall, Honour of Married Clergy, § 17.

vowsont, n. Same as advowson.

The seyd William was with the prior of Norwiche of counsille in these trewe defence ageyn the entent of the seyd Walter in a sute that he made ageyn the seyd prour of a vowson of the chyrche of Sproustou in the counte of Norffolk. Paston Letters, I. 18.

vox (voks), n. [L., see voice.] Voice: in music, a voice or voice part. Vox angelica, in organ-building, a stop having two pipes to each digital, one of which is tuned slightly sharp, so that by their dissonance a wavy effect is produced. The pipes are of narrow scale, and the tone is delicate. Also vox celestis, vox maris, etc. Vox antecedens, the theme or antecedent of a canon or fugue. Vox barbara, a barbarous or outlandish word or phrase commonly used, in zoology and botany, of those terms which are ostensibly New Latin, but which are neither Latin nor Greek, nor of classic derivation and formation, or are hybrids between Latin and Greek. Some thousands of such words are current, though rejected by some purists; and their use is far less objectionable than the unending confusion in nomenclature which attends the attempt to discard them. (See synonym, 2 (b).) Usually abbreviated vox. bark. Vox cælestis. Same as vox angelica. Vox consequens, the answer or consequent of a canon or fugue. Vox humana, in organ building, a reed-stop having short capped pipes, so constructed as to reinforce the higher harmonics of the fundamental tones, and thus to produce tones more or less resembling those of the human voice. The imitation is not close, but under suitable conditions the illusion of a distant singer or choir is possible. The tremulant is usually combined with the vox humana. A stop of the same name, but of much less effectiveness, is often placed in reed-organs. — Vox quinta. Same as quinta.

voyage (voi'āj), n. [Early mod. E. also voiage; < ME. voyage, voiage, veiage, veage, viage, vyage, < OF. voiage, veiage, vuage, F. voyage = Sp. viaje = Pg. viagem = It. viaggio, travel, journey, voyage, < L. viaticus, provision for a journey. LL. a journey, neut. of viaticus, pertaining to travel, < via, a way, road, journey, travel: see viaduct, of which voyage is a doublet.] 1. Formerly, a passage or journey by land or by sea; now only a journey or passage by sea or water from one place, port, or country to another, especially a passing or journey by water to a distant place or country: as, a voyage to India.

It is longe tyme passed that ther was no generalle Passage ne Viage over the See; and many Men desiren for to here speke of the holy Lond, and han therof gret Solace and Comfort. Mandeville, Travels, p. 4.

Now to this lady lete vs turne ageyn, Whiche to Surry hath take hir viage.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 226.

When I was determined to enter into my fourth voyage, I cast into the ship, in the stead of merchandise, a pretty fardle of books. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Provyded also that no person or persons havinge charge of any Viage, in passinge from the Realme of Ireland or from the Isle of Manne into this Realme of England, do from the laste daye of June next comynge wittingly or wyllingly transporte . . . any Vacabond Roge or Beggar. Laws of 14 Eliz. (1572), quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 109.

The pasha was lately returned from his voyage towards Mecca, it being his office always to set out with provisions to meet the caravan in its return: they go about half way to Mecca, setting out the same day that the caravan usually leaves Mecca. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 161.

All being embarked, they bade farewell to the gazing throng upon the beach, who continued shouting after them, . . . wishing them a happy voyage.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 110.

2. pl. A book of voyages: used like travels. — 3†. The practice of traveling.

Nations have interknowledge of one another by voyage into foreign parts. Bacon.

4†. A way or course taken; an attempt or undertaking; an enterprise; an expedition.

And ek Dïane[1] the bisceⁿ
That this viage be noght to the loth.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 732.

If you make your voyage upon her and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy. Shak., Cymbeline, i. 4. 170.

He ran away from me, . . . and pretended he would go the Island voyage [that against Hispaniola], since, I never heard of him till within this fortnight.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

So great a dignitie in time past was not obteined to the masters ther of by rebellion, . . . but by fighting valiantly with the Moores in the voiage of Granado.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 261.

Broken voyage. See broken. Continued or continuous voyage. See continued. Dance voyage, an unsuccessful fishing voyage. [Local, New Eng.] Mixed voyage. See mixed. To do voyage!, to make a journey: set out on an errand: prize.

Pandare . . . cast, and knew in good plyte was the moone
To doon viage. Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 75.

= Syn. 1. Trip, Excursion, etc. (see journey), cruise, sail.

voyage (voi'āj), v.; pret. and pp. voyaged, ppr. voyaging. [< OF. voyager, travel, < voyage, travel: see voyage.] I. intrans. To take a journey or voyage; especially, to sail or pass by water.

Beautiful bird! thou voyagest to thine home Shelley, Alastor.

A mind for ever
Voyaging through strange seas of Thought alone.
Wordsworth, Prelude, iii.

II. trans. To travel; pass over; traverse.

Long were to tell
What I have done, what suffer'd, with what pain
Voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep.
Milton, P. L., x. 471.

The Rhone of to-day must be something like the Rhine of fifty years ago, though much less voyaged now than that was then. The Century, XL. 636.

voyageable (voi'āj-a-bl), a. [< voyage + -able.] Capable of being sailed or traveled over; navigable.

voyager (voi'āj-ėr), n. [< voyage + *-er*1.] One who voyages; one who sails or passes by sea or water.

You go on to prefer my Captivity in this Fleet to that of a Voyager at Sea. Howell, Letters, ii. 39.

In a few short moments I retrace
(As in a map the voyager his course)
The windings of my way through many years.
Cowper, Task, vi. 17.

voyageur (vwȯ-yȧ-zhėr'), n. [F., < voyager, travel: see voyager.] The Canadian name of one of a class of men employed by the Northwest and Hudson's Bay companies in transporting men and supplies, and, in general, in keeping up communication between their various stations, which was done exclusively in bark canoes, the whole region formerly under the exclusive control of these companies being almost everywhere accessible by water, with few and short portages. These men were nearly always French Canadians or half-breeds.

[illegible] with the swallow of your journey, the sun, [illegible] early morning, taking Gyrfalcon [illegible] of rook and [illegible] of Ulmer. This almost incredible hall the wayfarers bore without a murmur, and generally with such a [illegible] of spirit as few other men could sustain for a single forenoon.

Geo. Simpson, Journey Round the World, I. 22.

voyaging (vol'āj-ing), n. [Verbal n. of voyage, v.] The act or process of taking a voyage; a journey by water.

It is, in fact, a diary of the voyagings and residences of the ambassadors of Henry the Third.

Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 184.

voyalt, n. Same as viol[1], 2.

V. P. An abbreviation of vice-president.

V-point (vē'point), n. The vertex of two or more diverging lines: as, the V-point of cirrus stripes.

vraisemblance (vrā-soṅ-blonṡ'), n. [F., < vrai, true, + semblance, appearance: see very and semblance, and cf. verisimilitude.] The appearance of truth; verisimilitude.

V. s. In music, an abbreviation of volti subito.

V. S. An abbreviation of veterinary surgeon.

vs. An abbreviation of versus.

V-shaped (vē'shāpt), a. Shaped like the letter V; like the two equal sides of an isosceles triangle; lambdoid.—V-shaped barometric depression, a region of low barometer inclosed by one or more V-shaped isobars, the point of the V, in the northern hemisphere, being usually directed toward the south. V-shaped depressions are often accompanied by characteristic squalls, technically called line-squalls.

v. t. The abbreviation, used in this work, of verb transitive.

V-threaded screw. See screw[1].

V-tool (vē'tōl), n. In joinery and carving, a cutting-tool having the cutting edge in two branches, making an impression like a letter V, a sort of angular gouge.

vue (vū), n. [OF., sight, view: see view.] The sight-opening of a helmet: same as ayllere.

vug (vug), n. [Also rugh, vough, vooga; < Corn. vug, vugh, vugga, vooga, etc., a cave, cavern; cf. Corn. fogo, fogou, fou, a cave (= W. ffau, a cave, den), Corn. hugo, googoo, ogoo, ogo (Jago), a cave, W. ogof, gogof, a cave.] In mining, a cavity; a hollow in a rock or in a lode. Vug is the miners' name for that which geologists more generally call a geode. See geode. Also called tick-hole, vooga-hole.

Quartz is very generally found lining the hollow spaces (vughs) in lodes. R. Hunt, British Mining, p. 486.

vuggy (vug'i), a. [< vug + -y[1].] Of the nature of a vug; containing vugs.

vuider, n. Same as vuider.

Vulcan (vul'kan), n. [= F. Vulcain = Sp. Pg. Volcano = It. Vocano, Vulcano, < L. Vulcanus, Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire; cf. Skt. ulkā, a firebrand. Cf. volcano.] 1. In Rom. myth., the god of fire and the working of metals, and the patron of all handicraftsmen. Originally an independent deity, he became with the advance of time completely identified with the Greek Hephæstus. He was the son of Jupiter and Juno, or of Juno alone, and was born with deformed feet, though according to late myths his lameness came from his having been hurled down from heaven by Jupiter in a fit of anger. He was the divine artist, the creator of all that was beautiful as well as of all that was mechanically wonderful in the abodes of the gods. On earth various volcanoes, as Lemnos and Etna, were held to be his workshops, and the Cyclopes were his journeymen. He had the power of conferring life upon his creations, and was thus the author of Pandora and of the golden dogs of Alcinous. In art he was represented as a bearded man, usually with the short sleeveless or one-sleeved tunic (exomis) of the workman, with a conical cap, holding hammer and tongs or other attributes of the smith, and sometimes with indication of his lameness. When Jupiter conceived Minerva in his head, the goddess was delivered full-armed, upon the stroke of an ax in the hands of Vulcan.

2. A hypothetical planet between the sun and the planet Mercury. An object supposed to be a planet was seen crossing the sun's disk on March 26th, 1859. The period of revolution assigned to it was something over 19 days, and its distance from the sun was estimated at about 13,000,000 miles. The existence of Vulcan, however, has not been confirmed (may, indeed, be said to have been practically disproved) by subsequent careful observations.

3†. A volcano.

Also in that Ile is the Mount Ethna, that Men clepen Mount Gybelle; and the Vicanes, that ben everemore brennynge. Mandeville, Travels, p. 55.

Of those [remarkable things] which are in the Vulcans and mouths of fire at the Indies, worthy doubtlesse to be observed, I will speake in their order.

Acosta, Hist. Indies (tr. by E. Grimston, 1604), III. 2 ((Hakluyt Soc., I. 105).

Vulcan powder, an explosive consisting of nitroglycerin, sodium nitrate, sulphur, and charcoal.

Vulcanalia (vul-ka-nā'li-ą), n. pl. [L.: see Vulcan.] An ancient Roman festival in honor of Vulcan, celebrated on August 23d with games in the Flaminian circus, near the temple of the god, and with sacrifices of fishes. As part of the observance on this day, work was begun by lamplight, in honor of the fire-god.

Vulcanian (vul-kā'ni-an), a. [< L. Vulcanius, Vulcanius, < Volcanus, Vulcanus, Vulcan, + -an.] 1. Pertaining to Vulcan, or to works in iron, etc., and occasionally (but not so used by geologists) to volcanoes or volcanic action.

A region of vulcanian activity.

R. A. Proctor, Poetry of Astronomy, p. 238.

2. In geol., pertaining to or designating the system or theory of the Vulcanists, or opponents of Werner.

Vulcanic (vul-kan'ik), a. [= F. vulcanique = Sp. volcanico = Pg. volcanico = It. vulcanico; as Vulcan + -ic. Cf. volcano.] Pertaining or relating to Vulcan or to volcanoes.

Even the burning of a meeting house, in itself a vulcanic rarity (so long as he was of another parish), could not tickle his outworn palate. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 120.

vulcanicity (vul-ka-nis'i-ti), n. [< vulcanic + -ity.] Same as volcanicity.

This [heat-producing] power, inadequate though it may be to explain the phenomena of vulcanicity.

J. Prestwich, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII. 425.

The term vulcanic action (vulcanism or vulcanicity) embraces all the phenomena connected with the expulsion of heated materials from the interior of the earth to the surface. Encyc. Brit., X. 240.

vulcanisable, vulcanisation, etc. See vulcanizable, etc.

vulcanism (vul'kan-izm), n. [< Vulcan + -ism.] In geol., same as volcanism. The words volcano and volcanic are firmly fixed in English, and the former is in universal and exclusive use among those who speak that language. Hence all the derivatives should be spelled correspondingly, thus, volcanism, volcanicity, volcanician, and not vulcanism, etc.

In the lapse of ages . . . the very roots of former volcanoes have been laid bare, displaying subterranean phases of vulcanism which could not be studied in any modern volcano Encyc. Brit., X. 240.

Vulcanist (vul'kan-ist), n. [< Vulcan + -ist.] In the early history of geological science, one who supported the Huttonian theory, or who was in opposition to the views of Werner. See Huttonian.

It is sufficient to remark that these systems are usually reduced to two classes, according as they refer the origin of terrestrial bodies to fire or water; and that, conformably to this division, their followers have of late been distinguished by the fanciful names of Vulcanists and Neptunists. To the former of these Dr Hutton belongs much more than to the latter; though, as he employs the agency both of fire and water in his system, he cannot, in strict propriety, be arranged with either.

Playfair, Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory ((Coll. Works, I. 21).

vulcanite (vul'kan-īt), n. [< Vulcan + -ite[2].] 1. The harder of the two forms of vulcanized india-rubber, the other form being known as soft rubber. Vulcanite differs from soft rubber in that it contains more sulphur, and is cured or vulcanized at a higher temperature. It is of a brownish-black color, is hard and tough, cuts easily, and takes a good polish. It is largely used for making into combs, brooches, bracelets, and many other ornaments. It is not affected by water or by any of the other caoutchouc solvents. As it is especially distinguished by the large quantity of electricity which it evolves when rubbed it is much used in the construction of electric machines. Also called ebonite.

2. A name sometimes given to pyroxene, from its being found in ejected blocks and lavas. — Vulcanite flask, an iron box closed by screw-bolts, for holding an artificial denture while being vulcanized, to fix the artificial teeth in the vulcanite plate. The flask is heated in a vulcanizing furnace.

vulcanizable (vul'kan-ī-za-bl), a. [< vulcanize + -able.] Capable of being vulcanized; admitting of vulcanization. Also spelled vulcanisable.

vulcanization (vul'kan-ī-zā'shon), n. [< vulcanize + -ation.] A method of treating caoutchouc or india-rubber with some form of sulphur, to effect certain changes in its properties, and yield a soft (vulcanized india-rubber) or a hard (vulcanite) product. This was originally effected by dipping the rubber in melted sulphur and heating it to nearly 300°. Several other methods have been employed, probably the best of which for general purposes consists in mechanically mixing the rubber at a moderate heat with flowers of sulphur, and subsequently "curing" it in superheated steam at from 250° to 300° Fahr. The process was invented by Charles Goodyear, who obtained his first patent for it in 1844. Other ingredients, as litharge, white lead, zinc-white, whiting, etc. are added to the sulphur to give color, softness, etc., to the rubber. The substance thus formed possesses the following properties: it remains elastic at all temperatures, it cannot be dissolved by the ordinary solvents, neither is it affected by heat within a considerable range of temperature, finally, it acquires extraordinary powers of resisting compression, with a great increase of strength and elasticity. Vulcanized india-rubber is employed with great success for very many useful purposes, as for waterproofing cloth, for boots, shoes, mats, toys, belting, buffers, wheel tires, washers, valves, pipes, fire-hose, medical and surgical appliances, etc. Hard vulcanized rubber is known as vulcanite or vulcanilite. See vulcanite. Also spelled vulcanization.

vulcanize (vul'kan-īz), v.; pret. and pp. vulcanized, ppr. vulcanizing. [= F. vulcaniser; as Vulcan (with allusion to the melted sulphur of volcanoes) + -ize.] I. trans. To subject to the process of vulcanization, as caoutchouc.—Vulcanized fiber. See fiber[1].—Vulcanized glass, glass cooled by plunging into a bath having a comparatively high temperature. The nature of the bath depends upon the effect desired to be produced.—Vulcanized rubber, caoutchouc incorporated with sulphur and subjected to heat, whereby it combines chemically with the sulphur, and assumes, when cold, a hard consistency resembling that of horn.

II. intrans. To admit of vulcanization.

Rubber vulcanizes at 270° Fah.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LXII. 160.

Also spelled vulcanize.

vulcanizer (vul'kan-ī-zėr), n. [< vulcanize + -er[1].] Apparatus used in vulcanizing india-rubber. Also spelled vulcanizer.

vulcanot, n. An old form of volcano.

vulcanological (vul'ka-no-loj'i-kal), a. Same as volcanological. Nature, XXXVIII. 410.

vulcanology (vul-ka-nol'ǫ-ji), n. Same as volcanology.

vulg. An abbreviation of vulgar or vulgarly.

Vulg. An abbreviation of Vulgate.

vulgar (vul'gėr), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also vulgare; < F. vulgaire = Sp. Pg. vulgar = It. volgare, < L. vulgaris, volgaris, of or pertaining to the multitude or common people, common, vulgar, < vulgus, volgus, a multitude, throng, crowd, the mass of people, the common people, the multitude; cf. Skt. vraja, a flock, herd, multitude, varga, a group, troop, < √ varj, turn, twist, set aside, = L. vergere, bend, turn: see verge[2]. From L. vulgus are also E. vulgate, etc., divulge, etc.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the common people; suited to or practised among the multitude; plebeian: as, vulgar life; vulgar sports.

A fewe of them went a lande for fresshe water, and fownd a greate and high howse after the maner of their buylding, havinge all other of their vulgare cotages placed abowte the same.

Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 70).

An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 3. 90.

"Follow my white plume," said the chivalrous monarch of France, as he plunged into the thickest of the vulgar fight. Sumner, Orations, I. 130.

2. Common; in general use; customary; usually ordinary.

Our intent is to make this Art [Poesie] vulgar for all English mens use. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 12.

As naked as the vulgar air. Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 337.

They have applied the sense of the parables to certain general and vulgar matters, without touching to their full purport. Bacon, Physical Fables, p. 4.

I shall much rejoice to see and serve you, whom I hope our with no vulgar Affection. Howell, Letters, I. ii. 25.

Unspeakable mysteries in the Scriptures are often delivered in a vulgar and illustrative way.

Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 45.

If Wordsworth sometimes puts the trumpet to his lips, yet he lays it aside soon and willingly for his appropriate instrument, the pastoral reed. And it is not one that grew by any vulgar stream, but that which Apollo breathed through, tending the flocks of Admetus.

Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 241.

3. Hence, national; vernacular: as, the vulgar tongue; the vulgar version of the Scriptures; in zool. and bot., specifically, vernacular or trivial, as opposed to scientific or technical, in the names or naming of plants and animals. See pseudonym, 2.

If against Art be but a certaine order of rules prescribed by reason, and gathered by experience, why should not Poesie be a vulgar Art with vs as well as with the Greeks and Latines? Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 3.

We will in this present chapter & by our own idle observations shew how one may easily and contendiously lead all those feete of the ancients into our vulgar language. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 88.

Of the Egyptian letters, or manner of writing, one was vulgar, which all people learnt, others were call'd sacred, which the priests only knew among the Egyptians.

Pocock, Description of the East, I. 227.

4. Pertaining or belonging to the lower or less refined class of people; unrefined; hence, coarse; offensive to good taste; rude; boorish; low; mean; base: as, vulgar men, language, minds, or manners.

Stale and cheap to vulgar company.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 46.

I staid to hear the trumpets and kettle-drums, and the other drums, which are much cried up, though I think it dull, vulgar musick. Pepys, Diary, I. 156.

Gold;
Before whose image bow the vulgar great.

Shelley, Queen Mab, iii.

Vulgar prejudices of every kind, and particularly vulgar superstitions, he treats with a cold and sober disdain peculiar to himself. Macaulay, History.

We can easily overpraise the vulgar hero. Emerson, Conduct of Life.

I go a good deal to places of amusement. I find no difficulty whatever in going to such places alone . . . But, at the theatre, every one talks so fast that I can scarcely make out what they say, and besides, there are a great many vulgar expressions H. James, Jr., A Bundle of Letters, ii

Vulgar era. See era. Vulgar fraction, in arith. see fraction. Vulgar purgation. See purgation, 2. Vulgar substitution. See substitution, 4. = Syn. 1 and 2. Ordinary, etc. See common. 4. Rustic, low-bred

II. n. 1†. A vulgar person; one of the common people; used only in the plural.

Rude mechanicals, that rare and late Work in the market-place, and those are they Whose bitter tongues I shun, . . .
(For those vile vulgars are extremely proud,
And fondly-languaged). Chapman, Odyssey, vi. 125.

2. The vernacular tongue or common language of a country.

In our olde vulgare, profite is called weale. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, I. 1

Therefore, you clown, abandon — which is in the vulgar leave — the society — which in the loorish is company — of this female — which in the common is woman Shak., As you like it, v. 1. 63

The vulgar, the common people collectively; the uneducated, uncultured class

Therefore the vulgar did about him flocke,
Like foolish flies about an hony crocke Spenser, F. Q., V. ii. 24

A mere invention to keep the vulgar in obedience. Burke, Rev. in France.

vulgarian (vul-gā'ri-an), a. and n. [< L. vulgaris, vulgar, + -an.] I. a. Vulgar. [Rare.]

With a fat vulgarian steven,
Little Admiral John
To Boulogne is gone Sir J. Denham, to Sir J. Mennis. (Davies)

II. n. A vulgar person; especially, a rich person with low or vulgar ideas.

There's Dipley, in the tallow trade . . . Curse the whole pack of money-grubbing vulgarians! Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xv

Even the heir of a hundred sovereigns may be born a brute and a vulgarian R. L. Stevenson, Scribner's Mag., III. 655.

vulgarisation, vulgarise. See vulgarization, vulgarize.

vulgarism (vul'gar-izm), n. [< vulgar + -ism.] 1. Coarseness, rudeness, or grossness of manners; vulgarity; commonness.

Degraded by the vulgarism of ordinary life Sir Reynolds

Shall I gulp wine? No, that is vulgarism Keats, To

2. A phrase or expression used only in common colloquial, especially in coarse, speech.

All violations of grammar, and all vulgarisms, solecisms, and barbarisms in the conversations of boys, and also in their most familiar letters, must be noticed and corrected I. Knox, Liberal Education, § 14.

Such vulgarisms are common [as] the Greeks fell to their old trade of one tribe expelling another — the scene is always at Athens, and all the pother is some little jilting story — the haughty Roman snuffed at the suppleness. I. D'Israeli, Lit. Char. Men of Genius, p. 380.

Vulgarisms and low words Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 275.

vulgarity (vul-gar'i-ti), n.; pl. vulgarities (-tiz). [< F. vulgarité = Sp. vulgaridad = Pg. vulgaridade = It. volgarità, < LL. vulgarita(t-)s, vulgarita(t-)s, the multitude, lit. the quality of being common or of the multitude, < L. vulgaris, common, vulgar: see vulgar.] 1. The state or character of being vulgar; mean condition in life; meanness; commonness.

The necessities of public business, its vast extent, complexity, fulness of details, and consequent vulgarity, as compared with that of the ancients De Quincey, Rhetoric.

2. Coarseness, grossness, or clownishness of manners or language; absence of refinement; also, that which is vulgar; a vulgar act or expression: as, vulgarity of behavior; vulgarity of expression or language.

Making believe be what you are not is the essence of vulgarity. O. W. Holmes, Professor at

To learn his negative merits, let us begin with the enumeration of the grosser vulgarities, farcical burlesque, and other evils happily sifted out and thrown away as not comporting with the lofty seriousness of this grand style, this new gospel of comedy, of which Aristophanes is the evangelist. Amer. Jour. Philol. X. 374

3†. The commonalty; the mob; the vulgar.

The mere vulgarity (like swine) are prone to cry out more for a little bite to the ears than for all the sordidness of sin By Gauden, Tears of the Church, Pref., p. 5. (Davies.)

vulgarization (vul"gär-i-zā'shon), n. [< vulgarize + -ation.] 1. Wide dissemination; the process of rendering commonly known or familiar.

The inclusion of anthropology in the general exhibition of liberal arts is of great value in respect of that vulgarization which is the aim of the French anthropologists. Athenæum, No. 3225, p. 229.

Within the last few years competent authorities of different countries have been preoccupied with the inconvenience and injury that may result to public health and morality by the vulgarization of hypnotic phenomena Lancet, 1889, I. 861.

2. A making coarse or gross; the impairing of refinement or elegance.

Perdita has thus fairly well escaped vulgarization and misrepresentation at the hands of the globe-trotter, with his worthless "impressions" Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 454

Also spelled vulgarisation.

vulgarize (vul'gär-īz), v.; pret. and pp. vulgarized, ppr. vulgarizing. [< F. vulgariser = Sp. Pg. vulgarizar = It. volgarizzare; as vulgar + -ize.] I. trans. To make vulgar or common.

The care of Augustus Cæsar, ne nomen suum obsoleferet, that the majesty of his name should not be vulgarized by bad poets, is more seriously needed in our days on behalf of great poets, to protect them from trivial or too parrot-like a citation De Quincey, Style, iii.

His marriage to that woman has hopelessly vulgarized him Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxv.

The image is, therefore, out of all imaginative keeping, and vulgarizes the chief personage in a grand historical tragedy, who, if not a great, was at least a decorous actor. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 262.

II. intrans. 1. To produce vulgarity.

Nothing refines like affection. Family jarring vulgarizes; family union elevates Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, vi.

2†. To act in a vulgar manner.

Nor ever may descend to vulgarise,
Or be below the sphere of her abode. Daniel, To Lady Anne Clifford.

Also spelled vulgarise.

vulgarly (vul'gär-li), adv. 1. In a vulgar manner; commonly; popularly; in the manner usual among the common people.

The clere galnes of those metals, the Kings part defraied, to the Adventurers is but small, and nothing neere so much as vulgarly is imagined. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, II. 74.

It is vulgarly believed that this boat represents a magnificent vessel. E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, II. 262.

2†. By or before the people; publicly.

To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accused. Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 160.

3. Coarsely; rudely; clownishly.

vulgarness (vul'gär-nes), n. The state or character of being vulgar; vulgarity.

vulgate (vul'gāt), a. and n. [I. a. = Sp. vulgado = Olt. vulgato, < L. vulgatus, common, general, ordinary, pp. of vulgare, make common, spread abroad, < vulgus, the common people: see vulgar. II. n. = F. vulgate = It. vulgata, < ML. vulgata, sc. editio, the common edition, fem. of L. vulgatus, common: see I.] I. a. 1. Common; general; popular.

In this, the vulgate text [of "Persæ" of Æschylus], the word ἐκσῳσαιτο might not itself arouse suspicion Amer. Jour. Philol., IX. 321.

2. [cap.] Of or pertaining to the Vulgate, or old Latin version of the Scriptures.

II. n. [cap.] 1. The Latin version of the Scriptures accepted as the authorized version of the Roman Catholic Church. It was prepared by Jerome about the close of the fourth century, partly by translation from the original, partly by revision of prior Latin versions. The Vulgate gradually came into general use between the sixth and the ninth century. The Anglo-Saxon translations were made from it and Wyclif's English version, while other English versions from Tyndale's onward have been much influenced by it. The Vulgate was the first book printed (about 1455). The Council of Trent ordered that the "old and vulgate edition," approved by the "usage of so many ages," should be the only Latin version used in "public lectures, disputations, sermons, and expositions." Authorized editions were afterward published under Sixtus V. in 1590 and Clement VIII. in 1592. The latter, or Clementine edition, is the present accepted standard of the Roman Catholic Church, and is the basis of the Douay Bible. The religious terminology of the languages of western Europe has been in great part derived from or influenced by the Vulgate.

2. The vulgar or popular tongue; the vernacular. [Rare.]

"Here's a pretty mess," returned the pompous gentleman, descending to the vulgate, "you threw on me, forsooth" J. E. Cooke, Virginia Comedians, I. viii.

vulgus (vul'gus), n. [L. vulgus, the common people: see vulgar.] See the quotation.

Now be it known unto all you boys who are at schools whith do not rejoice in the time honoured institution of the Vulgus (commonly supposed to have been established by William of Wykeham at Winchester, and imported to Rugby by Arnold, more for the sake of the Bible words were learnt by heart with it than for any intrinsic value, as I've always understood), that it is a short exercise, in Greek or Latin verse, on a given subject, the minimum number of lines being fixed for each form. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 3.

vuln (vuln), v. t. [< OF. vulnerer*, < L. vulnerare, wound: see vulnerate.] To wound: in heraldry, especially said of the pelican, which is blazoned as vulning herself when represented as tearing her breast to feed her young. Compare pelican in her piety, under pelican.

When in the profile she [the pelican in heraldry] is usually vulning herself. Encyc. Brit., XI. 709.

vulned (vulnd), a. [< vuln + *-ed*2.] In her., wounded: noting any animal used as a bearing, the weapon which inflicts the wound being generally mentioned. Frequently, however, vulned refers to the bleeding of the wound: thus, the blazon may be pierced by an arrow and vulned.

A Pelican with wings expanded argent, Vulned Proper. Guillim, Heraldry (1724), p. 234.

vulnera, n. Plural of vulnus.

vulnerability (vul'ne-ra-bil'i-ti), n. [< vulnerable + -ity (see -bility).] The state or property of being vulnerable; vulnerableness.

vulnerable (vul'ne-ra-bl), a. [< F. vulnérable = Sp. vulnerable = Pg. vulneravel = It. vulnerabile, < LL. vulnerabilis, wounding, injurious, < L. vulnerare, wound, hurt: see vulnerate.] 1†. Capable of wounding; dangerous. [Rare.]

The male children practise to ride great horses, to throw the vulnerable and inevitable darte. Embassy of Sir R. Sherley (1600). (Davies.)

2. Capable of being wounded; susceptible of wounds or injuries, literally or figuratively.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests. Shak., Macbeth, v. 8. 11.

It is the middle compound character which alone is vulnerable: the man who, without firmness enough to avoid a dishonorable action, has feeling enough to be ashamed of it. Junius to Sir W. Draper, March 8, 1769.

The hat is the vulnerable part of the artificial integument. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, viii.

vulnerableness (vul'ne-ra-bl-nes), n. Vulnerability.

vulnerary (vul'ne-ra-ri), a. and n. [= F. vulnéraire = Sp. Pg. It. vulnerario, < L. vulnerarius, of or pertaining to wounds, < vulnus (vulner-), a wound: see vulnerate.] I. a. 1†. Causing wounds. [Rare.]

The aspect of his eye alone does sometimes become not only vulnerary, but mortal. Feltham, Resolves, ii. 56.

2. Useful in healing wounds; adapted to the cure of external injuries: as, vulnerary plants or potions.

Her aunt sought in their baggage for some vulnerary remedy Scott, Quentin Durward, xv.

The plant [henna] is further credited with the possession of vulnerary and astringent properties. Encyc. Brit., XI. 654.

II. n.; pl. vulneraries (-riz). A remedy applied to wounds to favor their healing.

Like a balsamic vulnerary T. Knox, Christian Philosophy, § 38.

vulnerate† (vul'ne-rāt), v. t. [< L. vulneratus, pp. of vulnerare (> It. vulnerare = Sp. Pg. vulnerar = OF. vulnerer*), wound, injure, < vulnus (vulner-), a wound; cf. Skt. vraṇa, a wound, fracture; prob. from the root of vellere, perf. vulsi, pluck, tear: see vulture.] To wound; hurt; injure.

Rather murder me than vulnerate still your creature, unless you mean to medicine where you have hurt. Shirley, Love Tricks, iii. 5.

vulneration† (vul-ne-rā'shon), n. [= F. vulnération = Sp. vulneracion = Pg. vulneração, < LL. vulneratio(n-), a wounding, an injury, < vulnerare, wound: see vulnerate.] The act of wounding, or the state of being wounded.

He speaks of the Son of God, which was to be the Son of Man, and by our nature liable to vulneration. Bp. Pearson, On the Creed, iv.

vulnerose (vul'ne-rōs), a. [= It. vulnerose, < L. vulnus (vulner-), a wound, + -ose.] Full of wounds; having wounds; wounded.

vulnific (vul-nif'ik), a. [< L. vulnificus, wound-making, < vulnus, a wound, + facere, make (see -fic).] Causing wounds; inflicting wounds. Bailey, 1731. [Rare.]

vulnifical (vul-nif'i-kal), a. [< vulnific + -al.] Same as vulnific.

vulnus (vul'nus), n.; pl. vulnera (-ne-rā). [L.] A wound. — Vitis vulnus, the wound-gall of the grape. See vitis gall. — Vulnus sclopeticum, a gunshot-wound: technical in military and naval surgery.

Vulpecula cum Anser (vul-pek'ū-lą kum an'se-rē). [L.: vulpecula, dim. of vulpes, a fox;

...ation, the Fox with the Goose, first appearing in the "Prodromus Astronomiæ" of Hevelius, 1690. It lies between the Eagle and the Swan, and is generally called Vulpecula. It has one star of the fourth magnitude.

vulpecular (vul-pek'ū-lăr), a. [< L. vulpecula, a little fox, dim. of vulpes, a fox: see Vulpes.] Of the nature of a fox; vulpine; of or pertaining to a fox's whelp.

Vulpes (vul'pēz), n. [NL. (Brisson, 1756), < L. vulpes, volpes, also vulpis, a fox; cf. Gr. ἀλώπηξ, a fox.] A genus of foxes, giving name to the Vulpinæ, whose type species is the common red fox, Canis vulpes of earlier naturalists, now Vulpes vulgaris or V. fulvus. All the vulpine quadrupeds have been placed in this genus, which, however, is now restricted by the exclusion of such forms as Urocyon (the gray foxes of America), Otocyon or Megalotis of Africa, and Nyctereutes of Japan. Even with these restrictions there are numerous species, of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America (none in South America), closely related to the common fox; as well as the more different types represented by the African fennec (Vulpes (Pseudopus) zerda), the Asiatic corsac (V. corsac), the North American kit (V. velox), and the circumpolar isatis or arctic fox (V. lagopus). See cuts under arctic, cross-fox, fennec, fox, and kit fox.

vulpicide[1] (vul'pi-sīd), n. [< L. vulpes, a fox, + -cida, < cædere, kill.] A fox-killer.

vulpicide[2] (vul'pi-sīd), n. [< L. vulpes, a fox, + -cidium, < cædere, kill.] The killing of a fox or of foxes.

Vulpicide, committed in defence of property, and condemned neither by religion, nor by equity, nor by any law save that of sportsmen, excites an anger that cries aloud for positive penalties.

H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 345.

Vulpinæ (vul-pī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vulpes + -inæ.] A subfamily of Canidæ, represented by the genus Vulpes in a broad sense, containing the foxes as distinguished from the dogs, wolves, and jackals; the alopecoid canines. The frontal region of the skull is comparatively low from lack of frontal sinuses, and the pupil of the eye usually contracts to a vertical elliptical figure. But the group is not sharply delimited from Caninæ, as the South American fox-wolves (see Pseudalopex) and some African forms (see Thous) connect the two. See Urocyon (with cut), Vulpes (with cuts there cited), and compare Megalotinæ.

vulpinate†, v. i. "To play the fox"; deceive with crafty wiles or deceits. Blount, 1670.

vulpine (vul'pin), a. [= F. vulpin = Sp. vulpino = It. volpino, volpigno, < L. vulpinus, of or pertaining to a fox, < vulpes, a fox: see Vulpes.] 1. Of or pertaining to a fox; technically, resembling the fox as a member of the Vulpinæ; related to the foxes; alopecoid: distinguished from lupine or thooid.

Sometimes I heard the foxes as they ranged over the snow crust, in moonlight nights . . . Sometimes one came near to my window, attracted by my light, barked a vulpine curse at me, and then retreated.

Thoreau, Walden, p. 263.

2. Resembling a fox in traits or disposition; also, characteristic of the fox; foxy; cunning; crafty.

The slyness of a vulpine craft. Feltham, Resolves, I. 12.

Smooth vulpine determination. Kingsley, Hypatia, xiv.

Vulpine opossum, phalanger, or phalangist, Phalangista (now Trichosurus) vulpinus, also called brush-tailed opossum, somewhat resembling a fox, native of Australia, about 2 feet long, with long, hairy, and prehensile tail, and of arboreal habits like other phalangers. — Vulpine series, the alopecoid series of canines.

Vulpine Phalanger (Trichosurus vulpinus).

vulpinism (vul'pi-nizm), n. [< vulpine + -ism.] The property of being vulpine; craft; artfulness; cunning. Carlyle.

vulpinite (vul'pi-nīt), n. [< Vulpino (see def.) + -ite[2].] A scaly granular variety of the mineral anhydrite. It occurs at Vulpino in Italy, and is sometimes employed for small statues and other ornamental work under the name of marino berettino.

vulsella (vul-sel'ă), n. [Also volsella; < L. vulsella, volsella, calsella, pincers, < vellere, pp. vulsus, pluck: cf. vulture.] 1. Pl. vulsellæ (-ē). A forceps; specifically, a forceps, usually with toothed or claw-like blades, used for grasping and holding any of the tissues, and also for removing foreign bodies lodged in the throat or other passages. Also vulsella forceps. — 2. [cap.] [NL. (Lamarck, 1799).] A genus of monomyarian bivalves, containing such as V. lingulata of East Indian seas.

Vulsella lingulata

vulsellum (vul-sel'um), n.; pl. vulsella (-ă). [NL.] Same as vulsella, 1.

The greater part of the growth was severed by working the ecraseur, and removed through the mouth with a vulsellum.

Lancet, 1880, I. 1052.

vulternt, n. An old spelling of vulture.

Vultur (vul'tėr), n. [NL.: see vulture.] A Linnean genus of Falconidæ, variously defined. (a) Including all the vultures of both hemispheres. (b) Restricted to certain old World vultures, as V. monachus.

vulture (vul'tūr), n. [< ME. vultur, voltur, voutur, voutre, < OF. voutour, voltour, voulteu, F. vautour = Pr. voltor, voutor = Sp. buitre = Pg. abutre = Olt. voltore, It. avoltore, avoltojo = W. fwlltur, < L. vultur, voltur, OL. also vulturus, volturus, also vulturius, volturius, a vulture, a bird of prey, lit. 'plucker,' < vellere (perf. vulsi), pluck: see vellicate, and cf. vulnerate.] 1. One of sundry large birds, of the order Raptores, which have the head and neck more or less bare of feathers, the beak and claws less powerful than in most birds of prey, and which feed largely or wholly upon carrion. They for the most part inhabit warm countries. Birds of this description are found both in the Old World and in the New, and, misled by superficial appearances and general habits, naturalists have applied the name to members of different suborders. (a) The Old World vultures which, in spite of their peculiar outward aspect, are so little different from ordinary hawks and eagles that they can at most be considered as a subfamily Vulturinæ of the family Falconidæ. Of these there are several genera and numerous species inhabiting the warmer parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, where they act as efficient scavengers to clear the earth of offal and carcasses, which would otherwise become offensive. The cinereous or brown vulture Vultur monachus or V. cinereus, is a typical example, it inhabits all countries bordering the Mediterranean, and extends thence to India and China. The griffin-vultures are species of Gyps. The Bengal vulture, inhabiting India, is Pseudogyps bengalensis. Related species are the Angola vulture, Gypohierax angolensis (see cut under Gypohierax), the immense Otogyps auricularis of Africa (see Otogyps) and Lophogyps occipitalis. The Egyptian vulture, quite unlike any of the foregoing, is Neophron percnopterus often called Pharaoh's hen (see cut under Neophron). The bearded vulture of the Alps, etc., or the lammergeier, Gypaetus barbatus, has the head feathered, and does not hesitate to attack living animals, this is the connecting-link between vultures and hawks or eagles, being sometimes placed in Vulturinæ, sometimes in Falconinæ (see cut under Gypaetus). (b) The American vultures of the suborder Cathartidæ. The species of this group with which the name vulture is specifically connected are the urubu, or black vulture, Catharista atrata; the turkey-buzzard or turkey-vulture, Cathartes aura, and the king vulture Sarcorhamphus papa: the condor usually keeps its own distinctive name. See Cathartidæ, and cuts under condor, king-vulture, turkey-buzzard, and urubu.

Brown Vulture (Vultur monachus).

Whos stomak fowles tyren evermo,
That hyghten vulturis, as bookes telle.

Chaucer, Troilus, I. 788.

2. Figuratively, one who or that which resembles a vulture, especially inordinately or in the thirst for prey.

Ye drogs of baseness, vultures amongst men,
That live upon the hearts of generous spirits!

Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 1.

Here am I, bound upon this pillared rock,
Prey to the vulture of a vast desire . . .
That feeds upon my life. O. W. Holmes, Keramos.

Let Austria's vulture have food for her beak.

Whittier, From Portugal.

Abyssinian vulture, the Lophogyps occipitalis, in which the head is not bare, the bill is red with black tip and blue base, the feet are flesh-color, the eyes brown, and the length is nearly 3 feet. It inhabits much of Africa, and was first described by Latham in 1821. Arabian vulture, the brown or cinereous vulture, Vultur cinereus, Latham, 1781. Ash-colored vulture, the Egyptian vulture, Latham, 1781. Bearded vulture, see def. 1 (a). — Bengal vulture, see def. 1 (a). Latham, 1781. — Black vulture. (a) See def. 1 (b). (b) The Vultur monachus, Latham, 1781. Brown vulture. See def. 1 (a). — Californian vulture, the californian condor. See cut under condor. — Changoun vulture, the Bengal vulture, so called by Latham, 1801, after le changoun of Levaillant, 1790. — Cinereous vulture. See def. 1 (a). Latham, 1781. — Crane-vulture. See secretary bird. — Crested or coped black vulture, the brown or cinereous vulture, Vultur monachus, Edwards 1760. — Eagle-vulture, the West African Gypohierax angolensis. Also called vulturine sea-eagle. See cut under Gypohierax. — Eared vulture, a vulture of the genus Otogyps, specifically O. auricularis. — Egyptian vulture. See def. 1 (a). — Fulvous vulture, one of the griffin vultures, Gyps fulvus. Latham, 1781. Gingi vulture, Neophron gingianus, the Indian representative of the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1787 and 1821. Indian vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps indicus, of the Indian and Malayan peninsulas, Burma, and Siam. King of the vultures, the king-vulture. See def. 1 (b). Edwards, 1743. — Maltese vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1781. Nubian vulture, one of the eared vultures, Otogyps auricularis. — Pileated vulture, Neophron pileatus, the South African representative of the Egyptian vulture, first described as Vultur pileatus by Burchell in 1824. — Pondicherry vulture, one of the eared vultures, Otogyps calvus. — Rachamah vulture, the Egyptian vulture, Bruce, 1790. — Rüppell's vulture, one of the griffin vultures, Gyps ruppelli. — Sacred vulture, a bird described by William Bartram in 1791, under the name of Vultur sacra, as inhabiting Florida. It has not been identified, but is supposed to be the king-vulture, Sarcorhamphus papa. The vulture†, the fulvous vulture, Gyps fulvus Albin, 1740. — Turkey-vulture. See turkey-buzzard, and cut under Cathartes. — White vulture, the Egyptian vulture.

vulture-raven (vul'tūr-rā'vn), n. A book-name of the thick-billed African ravens, of the genus Corvultur, C. albicollis and C. crassirostris. They are noted for the stoutness and especially the depth of the bill, resulting from the strong convexity of the hardly arched culmen, like that of a bird of prey. C. albicollis is 18 inches long, with the bill 3 inches along the culmen; the plumage is glossy-black, with concealed white on the neck; the beak is dark brown, with the tips of the mandibles whitish; the feet are brownish black, the irides hazel-brown. This species is South African. C. crassirostris, of northeastern Africa, is larger, being 2 feet long, with the beak nearly 4 inches. The former species was originally described by Latham as the South Sea raven, and later by Levaillant as the corbiveau (whence the generic name Corvultur imposed by Lesson in 1831); another synonym is Corvus vulturinus.

Head of Vulture-raven (Corvultur albicollis), reduced.

Vulturidæ (vul-tū'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < L. vultur, a vulture (see vulture), + -idæ.] A family of birds, artificially composed of the birds popularly called vultures in both hemispheres. There are no good characters to distinguish the Old World vultures from the family Falconidæ, of which they may at most form a subfamily Vulturinæ, while, on the other hand, there are strong characters separating the American vultures from all others. The family has in consequence been nearly abandoned by ornithologists, or at least restricted to the Old World vultures. See vulture.

Vulturinæ (vul-tū-rī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vultur + -inæ.] A subfamily of Falconidæ, confined to the Old World, and consisting of the vultures of Europe, Asia, and Africa, characterized chiefly by their naked heads and carrion-feeding habits. See vulture.

vulturine (vul'tūr-in), a. [< L. vulturinus, of or pertaining to a vulture, < vultur, a vulture, see vulture.] 1. Resembling a vulture; of or pertaining to the Vulturinæ. — 2. Characteristic of a vulture, as in scenting carrion. Also vulturish.

The vulturine nose which smells nothing but corruption, is no credit to its possessor.

Kingsley, Two Years Ago, x.

Vulturine eagle, Aquila verreauxi, of Lesson, described also the same year (1830) as Aquila vulturina by Mr. Smith. This is an African eagle, 2 feet long, with the feathered to the toes, and otherwise congeneric with golden eagle. When adult it is black, more or less extensively white on the back, rump, and upper tail-coverts the cere and toes are yellow, the eyes are umber-brown, and the beak is horn-color.—Vulturine guinea-fowl, the naked-necked guinea-fowl, Acryllium vulturinum. This is a remarkable form, with the head and upper part of the neck nearly bare, like a vulture's, the lower neck, the breast, and fore back plumaged with very long discrete lance-linear feathers of black, white, and blue color, the narrow acuminate middle tail-feathers long-exserted, the general plumage black, spotted with white, the lower breast light-blue; and the flanks purple, ocellated with black and white. This guinea-fowl inhabits Madagascar as well as various parts of continental Africa. Vulturine raven, the vulture-raven. Vulturine sea-eagle, an occasional erroneous name of the Angola vulture of West Africa. See cut under Gypohierax.

Vulturine Guinea-fowl (Acryllium vulturinum).

vulturish (vul'tur-ish), a. [< vulture + *-ish*1.] Same as vulturine, 2.

> Hawkish, aquiline, not to say vulturish.
> Carlyle, Misc., IV. 245. (Davies)

vulturism (vul'tūr-izm), n. [< vulture + -ism.] Vulturine character or quality; rapacity. Carlyle.

vulturn (vul'tėrn), n. [Arbitrary var. of vulture, appar. through vulturine.] The brush-turkey of Australia, Talegallus lathami: so named from the nakedness of the head suggesting a vulture. See cut under Talegallus.

vulturous (vul'tur-us), a. [< vulture + -ous.] Like or characteristic of a vulture.

> such gawks (Geckos) are they, and foolish peacocks, and yet with such a vulturous hunger for self-indulgence.
> Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 4.

vulva (vul'vą), n. [= F. vulve = Sp. Pg. vulva = It. volva, < L. volva, volva, a covering, integument, womb, < volvere, roll around or about: see volve, volute.] 1. In anat., the external organs of generation of the female; especially, the orifice of these parts, the external termination of the vagina—of an elliptical contour in the human female.—2. In entom., the orifice of the oviduct.—3. In conch., the oval or vulviform conformation presented by certain bivalve shells when the right and left valves are in apposition. See Veneridæ.—Velamen vulvæ. See velamen.—Vestibule of the vulva. See vestibule.

vulvar (vul'vär), a. [< vulva + *-ar*3.] Of or pertaining to the vulva; vulviform.—Vulvar canal. Same as vulva, 2.—Vulvar enterocele. (a) A vaginal hernia protruding through the vulva. (b) A hernia which has descended between the ramus of the ischium and the vagina into one of the labia majora; pudendal enterocele or hernia. Vulvar hernia. Same as vulvar enterocele.

vulvate (vul'vāt), a. [< vulva + *-ate*1.] Shaped like or formed into a vulva; vulvar; vulviform.

vulviform (vul'vi-fôrm), a. [< L. vulva, womb, + forma, form: see form.] 1. In zoöl., shaped like the vulva of the human female; oval, with raised lips and a median cleft.—2. In bot., like a cleft with projecting edges.

vulvismus (vul-vis'mus), n. [NL., < L. vulva, vulva.] Same as vaginismus.

vulvitis (vul-vī'tis), n. [NL., < L. vulva, vulva, + -itis.] Inflammation of the vulva.

vulvo-uterine (vul-vō-ū'tę-rin), a. Of or pertaining to the vulva and the uterus: as, the vulvo-uterine canal (the vagina).

vulvovaginal (vul-vō-vaj'i-nal), a. Pertaining to the vulva and the vagina.—Vulvovaginal canal. Same as vagina.—Vulvovaginal glands, the glands of Bartholin or odoriferous glands in the female, corresponding to Cowper's glands in the male. See gland.

vulvovaginitis (vul-vō-vaj-i-nī'tis), n. [NL., < vulva + vagina + -itis.] Inflammation of both the vulva and the vagina.

vum (vum), r. i. A corruption or equivalent of vow, used in the expression "I vum," a mild expletive or oath. Compare *swan*2. [New Eng.]

> The Deacon swore (as Deacons do,
> With an "I dew vum," or an "I tell yeou"),
> O. W. Holmes, Deacon's Masterpiece.

V-vat (vē'vat), n. In mining, a pointed or V-shaped box in which crushed or pulverized ores are sized or classified by the aid of water. The earthy particles mingled with the ore entering above fall against a current of water rising from beneath, the velocity of which is regulated so that a more or less complete separation of the ore from the gangue is effected. These boxes are generally arranged in a series of four or more, and there are many varieties of the apparatus, of which the general principle was the invention of Von Rittinger, an Austrian metallurgist. This method has proved to be of great value in ore-dressing. Also called pointed box, pyramidal box, and spitzkasten.

v. y. An abbreviation in book-catalogues of various years.

vycet, n. An obsolete spelling of *vise*1.

vying (vī'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of *vie*1, v.] Competing; emulating.

vyingly (vī'ing-li), adv. Emulously. Encyc. Dict.

vynet, n. An obsolete spelling of vine.

vynert, n. An obsolete spelling of *viner*1, *viner*2.

vyret, n. An obsolete spelling of *vire*1.

vysart, n. An obsolete spelling of vizor.

1. The twenty-third letter and eighteenth consonant-sign in the English alphabet. It has a double value, as consonant and as vowel. As an alphabetic character it is of very modern date, being one of the four that have sprung from the V or U added by the Greeks to the older Phenician alphabet, and one of the three (U, V, W) that have grown out of the Roman form of that character (see U). It was made (as pointed out under U) by doubling the U- or V-sign (hence called double U), in order to distinguish properly the semivowel sound w from the spirant v and the vowel u. It was formerly often printed as two V's, VV, vv. It began to be used in the eleventh century, and gradually crowded out the special sign for the same sound which the Anglo-Saxon alphabet had possessed. The alphabetic sound distinctively represented by w is the labial semivowel, which stands in precisely the same relation to oo (o) in which consonantal y stands to ee (ē). Each of these semivowels, if not of precisely the same mode of production with the corresponding vowel, is at any rate only very slightly different from it; w is virtually an oo which is abbreviated into a mere prefix to another vowel, a close position from which the organs by opening reach another vowel-sound; and a prolonged w is an oo. On the other hand, the semivowel w (like the semivowel y) can be only very imperfectly and indistinctly uttered after a vowel, and our w in that position is but another way of writing u, it is found only in the combinations aw, ew, ow, which are equivalent to au, eu, ou; and as so used it could disappear from the language without any loss, but rather with profit. The semivowel sound w (including wh and qu, which is a way of writing kw: see under Q) is a not uncommon element of English utterance, being about 2¼ per cent. of it (a little less than the spirant v). In many languages — for example, in all those that are descended from the Latin — the semivowel w tends to pass over into the spirant v-sound, and hence the spirant value of our v, which was the representative in Latin of the w-sound. In Anglo-Saxon a w stood and was pronounced also before r (and in a few words before l), in such words as write, wrong, the character is retained, though the sound is lost. In Anglo-Saxon, also, the w was in many words pronounced with a preceding aspiration, the relic of an original prefixed guttural mute, and it was consistently and properly so written: for example, hwæt, white, hwǣr, where. In modern English the h has by an odd and unaccountable caprice had its place in writing changed to after the w (perhaps by analogy with the similar blunder shown in writing rh in Latin for the Greek aspirated r, or hr, or by a blind conformity with the frequent initial digraphs th, ph, sh). There is dispute among phonetists at present as to the true character of this wh sound, some maintaining that it is not a w with preceding aspiration, but a surd counterpart to w, standing related to it as, for example, an f to a v, or an s to a z. This view rests in part, probably, on some actual difference of utterance, but in part also on unfamiliarity with the real wh; for in England the aspiration is now very generally omitted, and when, white, etc. are pronounced as wen, wite, etc. It admits of no question, however, that when, for example, is related to hoo-en precisely as wen to oo-en, the difference in each case consisting in an aspiration prefixed respectively to the vowel and semivowel — just as, correspondingly, hew (which shows an h prefixed to the English "long u" sound, or yoo) is related to hē-oo precisely as ewe to ē-oo: the h being here, as everywhere else (see H), uttered through the same position of the mouth-organs as the following sound. W is sometimes silent, not only as initial before r (see above), but elsewhere, as in two, sword, answer, etc. It is never doubled. The assimilating influence of a w (whether written with w or with u in the combination qu) in a following a-sound is very marked, giving the a in many words the short sound of o (o), as in what, squad, etc., or the broad sound of a (ȧ), as in war, quart, thwart, etc.

2. As a symbol: (a) In chem., the symbol for tungsten (NL. wolframium). (b) [l. c.] In hydrodynamics, the symbol for the component of the velocity parallel to the axis of Z. — 3. As an abbreviation: (a) of west; (b) of western; (c) of William; (d) of Wednesday; (e) of Welsh; (f) of warden; (g) [l. c.] of week.

wa' (wä or wȧ), n. A Scotch form of wall[1].

waat, n. An obsolete form of woe.

waag (wäg), n. [Native Abyssinian name.] The grivet, a monkey.

wabber (wob'ėr), n. Same as cony, 2.

wabble[1], wobble (wob'l), v.; pret. and pp. wabbled, wobbled, ppr. wabbling, wobbling. [< LG. babbeln, wabble, = MHG. wabelen, webelen, be in motion, fluctuate, move hither and thither; a freq. form, parallel to MHG. waberen, etc., E. waver[1], of the orig. verb represented by wave[1]: see wave[1]. In part prob. a var. of wepple*, a var. of wapper, freq. of wap[1]; see wap[1].] I. intrans. 1. To incline to the one side and to the other alternately, as a wheel, top, spindle, or other rotating body when not properly balanced; move in the manner of a rotating disk when its plane vibrates from side to side; rock; vacillate.

To wabble . . . [a low barbarous word]. Johnson, Dict.

When . . . the top falls on to the table, . . . it falls into a certain oscillation, described by the expressive though inelegant word wabbling.
H. Spencer, First Principles, § 170.

It [a pendulum] should be symmetrical on each side of the middle plane of its vibration, or it will wobble.
Sir E. Beckett, Clocks and Watches, p. 42.

Hence — 2. To vacillate, vibrate, tremble, or exhibit unevenness, in senses other than mechanical. [Colloq.]

Ferri . . . made use of the tremolo upon every note, to such an extent that his whole singing was a bad wobbling trill.
Grove, Dict. Music, III. 500.

II. trans. To cause to wabble: as, to wabble one's head. [Colloq.]

wabble[1], wobble (wob'l), n. [< wabble[1], v.] A rocking, unequal motion, as of a wheel unevenly hung or a top imperfectly balanced.

The wind had raised a middling stiff wobble on the water, and the boat jumped and tumbled in a very lively manner.
W. C. Russell, Jack's Courtship, xx.

wabble[2] (wob'l), n. [A dial. var. of warble[3], n.] The larva of the cuticulating bot-fly, Cuterebra emasculator, which infests squirrels in the United States; also, the injury or affection resulting from its presence. See warble[1], and cut under Cuterebra. Also worble.

A very large percentage [of fifty chipmunks] . . . were infested with wabbles.
Rep. of U. S. Dept. of Agriculture (1889), I. 215.

wabble[3] (wob'l), n. An old name of the great auk, Alca impennis. Josselyn, New England Rarities Discovered.

wabbler (wob'lėr), n. [< wabble[1], v., + -er[1].] One who or that which wabbles, specifically (a) Same as drunken cutter (which see). (b) A boiled leg of mutton. [Prov. Eng.]

wabble-saw (wob'l-sâ), n. A circular saw hung out of true on its arbor, used to cut dovetail slots, mortises, etc. E. H. Knight.

wabbly, wobbly (wob'li), a. [< wabble[1] + -y[1].] Inclined to wabble; shaky; unsteady; vibrant; tremulous.

Dismal sounds may express dismal emotions, and soft sounds soft emotions, and wabbly sounds uncertain emotions.
E. Gurney, Nineteenth Century, XIII. 446

wabron-leaf, wabran-leaf (wȧ'bron-, wȧ'bran-lef), n. [< wabron, wabran, perhaps a corruption of waybread (q. v.), + leaf.] The great plantain, Plantago major. See plantain[1] (with cut). [Scotch.]

wabster (wab'stėr), n. A Scotch form of webster.

Willie was a wabster gude,
Could stown a clew wi ony body.
Burns, Willie Wastle.

wacapou (wak'a-pȯ̂), n. A leguminous tree, Andira Aublerii, of French Guiana. It furnishes a brownish straight-grained wood, scarcely sound enough for architectural purposes, but suitable for many domestic uses. A similar but inferior wood is called wacapou gris.

wacchet, waccheret. Old spellings of watch, watcher.

wacke (wak'e), n. [< G. wacke, MHG. wacke, a rock projecting from the surface of the ground, a large flint or stone; origin unknown.] A soft homogeneous clay arising from the decomposition of some form of volcanic or eruptive rock. It is of a greenish or brownish color. Compare graywacke.

wacken[1] (wak'n), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of waken.

wacken[2] (wak'n), a. [< ME. waken, < AS. wacen, pp. of wacan, wake: see wake[1].] 1†. Watchful. — 2. Lively; sharp; wanton. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wad[1] (wod), n. [Early mod. E. wadde; cf. D. watte = G. watte, wad, wadding, = OSw. vadd, clothing, cloth, stuff, Sw. vadd, wadding, = Dan. vat, wadding, = Icel. vaðr*, in comp. vaðmál, a woolen stuff, wadmal (see wadmal); akin to MD. waede, waeye = MLG. wade, G. watte, a large fishing-net, = Icel. vaðr, a fishing-net, and to AS. wǣd, etc., clothing, weed: see weed[3]. Hence (< G. watte) F. ouate (> Sp. huata) = It. ovata (ML. wadda) = Russ. vata, wad, wadding. The relations of the forms are involved; E. wad is perhaps in part short for the obs. wadmal.] 1. A small bunch or wisp of rags, hay, hair, wool, or other fibrous material, used for stuffing, for lessening the shock of hard bodies against each other, or for packing.

A wisp of rushes, or a clod of land,
Or any wadde of hay that's next to hand,
They'l steale. John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

Know you yonder lumpe of melancholy,
Yonder bundle of sighes, yonder wad of groanes?
Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, ed. 1874), II. 17).

2. Specifically, something, as a piece of cloth, paper, or leather, used to hold the powder or bullet, or both, in place in a gun or cartridge. For ordinary double- or single-barreled shot guns, wads are disks of felt, leather, or pasteboard cut by machinery or by a hand-tool, often indented to allow passage of air in ramming home, and sometimes specially treated with a composition which helps to keep the barrels from fouling. See cut under shot-cartridge.

Wads are punched out of sheets of various materials by cutters fixed in a press. Those most commonly used are made of felts, cardboard, or jute.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 300.

3. In ceram., a small piece of finer clay used to cover the body of an inferior material in some varieties of earthenware; especially, the piece doubled over the edge of a vessel. — Junk wad. See junk wad. Selvagee-wad. Same as grommet-wad.

wad[1] (wod), v. t.; pret. and pp. wadded, ppr. wadding. [= G. watten (cf. freq. G. wattiren = D. watteren = Dan. vatte), wad; from the noun.] 1. To form into a wad or into wadding; press together into a mass, as fibrous material. — 2. To line with wadding, as a garment, to give more roundness or fullness to the figure, keep out the cold, render soft, or protect in any way.

A parcel of Superannuated Debauchees, huddled up in Cloaks, Frize Coats and Wadded Gowns.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 300.

The quickest of us walk about well wadded with stupidity.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xx.

3. To pad; stuff; fill out with or as with wadding.

His skin with sugar being wadded,
With liquid fires his entrails burn'd.
J. G. Cooper, tr. of Vet Vert, iv. (an. 1760).

4. To put a wad into, as the barrel of a gun; also, to hold in place by a wad, as a bullet.

wad[2] (wod), v. A Scotch form of wed.

wad[3] (wod). A Scotch form of would.

wad[4] (wod), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of woad.

wad[5] (wod), n. [Also wadd; origin obscure.] 1. An impure earthy ore of manganese, which consists of manganese dioxid associated with the oxid of iron, cobalt, or copper. When mixed with linseed-oil for a paint it is apt to take fire. Also called bog-manganese, earthy manganese. — 2. Same as plumbago. [Prov. Eng.]

wadable (wa'da-bl), a. [< wade + -able.] That may be waded; fordable. Coles; Halliwell.

wad-cutter (wod'kut"ėr), n. A device for cutting wads. There are many kinds. The simplest is a circular chisel or gouge struck with a hammer or mallet.

wadd, n. See wad[5].

wadder (wod'ėr), n. [< wad[4] + -er[1].] A grower of wad or woad. Halliwell.

wadding (wod'ing), n. [Verbal n. of wad[1], v.] 1. Wads collectively; stuffing; specifically, carded cotton or wool used to line or stuff articles of dress, the surface of the spongy web of carded material being covered with tissue-paper or with a coat of size.

The seat, with plenteous wadding stuff'd.
Cowper, Task, i. 31.

Aristoteles, and all the rest of you, must have the wadding of straw and saw dust shaken out, and then we shall know pretty nearly your real weight and magnitude.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Diogenes and Plato

2. Material for gun-wads.

wadding-sizer (wod'ing-si″zėr), n. A machine for applying a coating of size to the surface of a bat of cotton, to make wadding. E. H. Knight.

waddle[1] (wod'l), v.; pret. and pp. waddled, ppr. waddling. [A dim. and freq. of wade.] I. intrans. To sway or rock from side to side in walking; move with short, quick steps, throwing the body from one side to the other; walk in a tottering or vacillating manner; toddle.

Then she could stand alone, nay, by the rood,
She could have run and waddled all about Shak., R. and J., I. 3. 37.

Every member waddled home as fast as his short legs could carry him, wheezing as he went with corpulency and terror. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 437.

=Syn. Waddle, Toddle. Waddling is a kind of ungainly walking produced by the great weight or natural clumsiness of the walker; toddling is the movement of a child in learning to walk.

II. trans. To tread down by wading or waddling through, as high grass. [Rare.]

They tread and waddle all the goodly grass Drayton, Moon Calf.

waddle[1] (wod'l), n. [< waddle[1], v.] The act of walking with a swaying or rocking motion from side to side; a clumsy, rocking gait, with short steps; a toddle.

waddle[2] (wod'l), n. and v. A dialectal form of wattle.

waddle[3] (wod'l), n. [Perhaps a perverted form of waunel*, < wane[1], v.] The wane of the moon. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

waddler (wod'lėr), n. [< waddle[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which waddles.

waddling (wod'ling), n. [Verbal n. of waddle[1].] A wattled fence. [Prov. Eng.]

To arbor begun and quicksetted about,
No poling nor wadling till set be far out.
Tusser, Husbandrie, p. 83. (Davies.)

waddlingly (wod'ling-li), adv. With a waddling gait.

waddy (wad'i), n.; pl. waddies (-iz). [Australian.] 1. A war-club of heavy wood, grooved in such a way that the edges of the grooves serve as cutting edges to increase the efficacy of the blow; used by the Australian aborigines. Also waddie.

In battle, a blow from a waddy lays low a companion
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 78.

Hence 2. A walking-stick. [Australian.]

wade (wād), v.; pret. and pp. waded, ppr. wading. [< ME. waden (pret. waded, earlier wod, pp. waden*), < AS. wadan (pret. wod, pl. wodon, pp. waden), go, move, advance, trudge, also wade, = OFries. wada = D. waden = OHG. watan, MHG. waten, G. waten, wade, ford, = Icel. vatha = Dan. vade = Sw. vada, wade, = L. vadere, go. Hence ult. waddle[1]. From the L. vadere come E. evade, invade, pervade, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To walk through any substance that impedes the free motion of the limbs; move by stepping through a fluid or other semi-resisting medium: as, to wade through water; to wade through sand or snow.

She waded through the dirt to pluck him off me
Shak., T. of the S., iv. 1. 80

2†. To enter in; penetrate.

Whan myght is joyned unto cruelte,
Allas, to depe wol the venym wade.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 504

3. To move or pass with difficulty or labor, real or apparent; make way against hindrances or embarrassments, as depth, obscurity, or resistance, material or mental.

Of this and that they playde and gomen wade
In many an unkouth, glad, and deepe mater
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1.30

Dangerous it were for the feeble brain of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i.

I lament what he [Mr. Fox] must wade through in the next world, if ever he should arrive there Walpole, Letters, II. 168.

-ding birds, the waders. Grallæ or Grallatores.

I. trans. To pass or cross by wading; ford: as, to wade a stream.

Then the three Gods waded the river.
William Morris, Sigurd, ii.

wade (wād), n. [< wade, v.; in def. 2 = waddle = Icel. vad, a ford.] 1. The act of wading; as, a wade in a brook.—2. A place where wading is done; a ford. [Colloq.]

It was a wade of fully a mile, and every now and then the water just touched the ponies' bellies.
The Field, April 4, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

3. A road. See the quotation.

The word wade, properly a ford, is used here to signify a road, and not merely the crossing of water. It is, I believe, extinct as a noun, though it survives as a verb.
A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 271.

wader (wā'dėr), n. [< wade + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wades.

I saw where James
Made toward us, like a wader in the surf,
Beyond the brook, waist-deep in meadow-sweet.
Tennyson, The Brook.

2. In ornith., any bird belonging to the old order Grallæ or Grallatores, comprising a great number of long-legged wading birds, as distinguished from those water-birds which have short legs and webbed feet and habitually swim. The order has been broken up, or much modified; but wader is conveniently applied to such birds as cranes, herons, storks, ibises, plovers, snipes, sandpipers, and rails.

3. High water-proof boots worn by fishermen or sportsmen in general for wading through water.

An ardent votary of fly and bank-fishing, with waders and a two handed rod wadge (waj), v. A dialectal form of wage. Halliwell.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 632.

wad-hook (wod'hůk), n. A ramrod fitted with a wormer, for extracting wads from a gun; also, the wormer of such a rod.

Wadhurst clay. In Eng. geol., a division of the Wealden.

wadi, wady (wod'i), n. [< Ar. wādi, a ravine, hence, a river-channel, river. This word appears in several Spanish river-names—namely, Guadalquivir (Wādi-l-kebir, 'the great river'), Guadalajara, Guadalupe, Guadiana, etc.] The channel of a watercourse which is dry except in the rainy season; a watercourse; a stream: a term used chiefly in the topography of certain Eastern countries.

The real wady is, generally speaking, a rocky valley, bisected by the bed of a mountain torrent, dry during the hot season
R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 180.

wadmal† (wod'mal), n. [Also wadmoll, wadmolle, and irreg. wadmeal, woadmel, and (representing Icel.) wadmaal; < Icel. vathmal (= Dan. vadmel = Sw. vadmal), a woolen stuff, < vathr*, cloth (see wad[1]), + mál, a measure.] A thick woolen cloth Yron, Wooll, Wadmolle, Gotefell, Ridfell also.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 188.

Woadmel. A coarse hairy stuff, made of Iceland wool, and brought from thence by our seamen to Norfolk and Suffolk. Grose, Prov. Gloss.

Her upper garment . . was of a coarse dark-colored stuff called wadmaal, then (early in the eighteenth century) much used in the Zetland Islands. Scott, Pirate, v.

wadmiltilt (wod'mil-tilt), n. [< wadmal*, wadmal, + tilt[2].] A strong rough woolen cloth employed to cover powder-barrels and to protect ammunition.

wadna (wod'na). A Scotch form (properly two words) of would no = that is, would not.

wad-punch (wod'punch), n. A kind of wad-cutter.

wadset (wod'set), n. [Also wadsett; < wad[2] + set[1] stake.] In Scots law, a mortgage, or bond and disposition in security.

And the rental book, Jeanie . . clear three hunder sterling . . deil a wadset, heritable band or burden.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxvi.

wadsetter (wod'set-ėr), n. [< wadset + -er[1].] In Scots law, one who holds by a wadset; a mortgagee.

wady, n. See wadi.

wae[1] (wā), n and a. [An obs. or dial. (Sc.) form of woe.] I. n. Woe.

My sheep beene wasted (woe is me therefore!).
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

He aft has wrought me meikle wae.
Burns, Oh lay thy loof in mine.

II. a Woeful; sorrowful.

And wae and sad fair Annie sat,
And drearie was her sang Fair Annie (Child's Ballads, III. 196).

That year I was the *wae*st man
O' ony man alive.
Burns, Election Ballads.

wae[2], a. Same as way[1].

waeful (wā'fůl), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of woeful.

With woe's me I hear news stated.
Old Mortality (Child's Ballads, II. 448).

waeness (wā'nes), n. [< wae[1] + -ness.] Sadness. [Scotch.]

A feeling of thankfulness, of waeness and great gladness.
Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, ii. 9.

waesome (wā'sum), adv. A dialectal (Scotch) form of woesome.

She kend her lot would be a waesome ane, but it was of her own framing, sae she desired the less pity.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xliv.

waesucks, interj. [< wae[1] + sucks*, perhaps a vague variation of sakes as used in exclamation.] Alas! [Scotch.]

Waesucks! for him that gets nae lass.
Burns, Holy Fair.

waf[1], a. See waff[2].

waf[2]†. An obsolete preterit of weave[1].

wafer (wā'fėr), n. [< ME. wafre, wafoure = OF. waufre, gaufre, goffre (ML. guafra), F. gaufre (Walloon wafe, waufe), < MD. waefel, D. wafel (> E. waffle) = LG. wafel = G. wabe, a honeycomb, cake of wax; cf. Dan. vaffel = Sw. våffla, wafer (< LG.?): see waffle, and cf. gauffer, goffer, and gopher, from the mod. F.] A thin cake or leaf of paste, generally disk-shaped. Specifically—(a) A cake, apparently corresponding to the modern waffle, and, like it, served hot.

For ar [ere] I hane bred of mele, ofte mote I swete.
And ar the comune hane corne ynough, many a colde morwnyge;
So, ar my wafres ben ywrouȝt, moche wo I tholye.
Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 262.

Wafres pipyng hot out of the gleede [fire].
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 193.

(b) A small and delicate cake or biscuit, usually sweetened, variously flavored, and sometimes rolled up.

Thy lips, with age, as any wafer thin.
Drayton, Idea, viii.

She should say grace to every bit of meat,
And gape no wider than a wafer's thickness.
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, ii. 3.

(c) A thin circular disk of unleavened bread used in the celebration of the eucharist in the Roman Catholic Church and in many Anglican churches. The wafer derives its form from the fact that the bread of the Jews was ordinarily in this shape; and both the ancient pictured representations and the references in the early patristic literature confirm the opinion that this was the form in use in the church from the apostolic days. Wafers are usually stamped with the form of a cross, crucifix, or Agnus Dei, with the initials I. H. S., or sometimes with a monogram representing the name of Christ. See altar-bread, and oblate, n., 2.

The usuall bread and wafer, hitherto named singing cakes, which served for the use of the private Masse.
Abp. Parker, Injunctions (1559), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 211.

(d) A thin disk of dried paste, used for sealing letters, fastening documents together, and similar purposes, usually made of flour mixed with water gum, and some non-poisonous coloring matter. Fancy transparent wafers are made of gelatin and isinglass in a variety of forms.

Perhaps the folds [of a letter] were lovingly connected by a wafer, pricked with a pin, and the direction written in a vile scrawl, and not a word spelt as it should be.
Colman, Jealous Wife, i.

(e) In artillery, a kind of primer. See primer[2].

Fortunately, the wafers by which the guns are discharged had been removed from the vents.
Preble, Hist. Flag, p. 471.

(f) In med., a thin circular sheet of dry paste used to facilitate the swallowing of powders. The sheet is moistened, and folded over the powder placed in its center. Sometimes wafers have the form of two watch-glass-shaped disks of pasty material, which are made to adhere by moistening their edges, the powder being placed in the hollow between the two.—Medallion wafer, a wafer bearing some design on a ground of a different color.

wafer (wā'fėr), v. t. [< wafer, n.] 1. To attach by means of a wafer or wafers.

This little bill is to be wafered on the shop-door.
Dickens, Pickwick, i.

2. To seal or close by means of a wafer.

He . . . wafered his letter, and rushed with it to the neighboring post office. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xix.

wafer-ash (wā'fėr-ash), n. The hop-tree, Ptelea trifoliata: so called from its ash-like leaves and flat key-fruit suggesting a wafer. The bark of the root is considerably used as a tonic. See hop-tree.

wafer-bread (wā'fėr-bred), n. Altar-bread made in the form of a wafer or wafers.

To communicate kneeling in wafer-bread.
Abp. Parker, To Sir W. Cecil, April 30, 1565, in Cottus. [Abp. Parker (Parker Soc.), p. 240.

wafer-cake (wā'fėr-kāk), n. 1†. Same as wafer (a).

Oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 2. 53.

2. Same as wafer (c).

The Pope's Merchants also chaffered here [Lombard Street] for their Commodities, and had good markets for their Wafer Cakes, sanctified at Rome, their Pardons, &c.
Stow, quoted in F. Martin's Hist. Lloyd's, p. 60.

waferer (wā'fėr-ėr), n. [< ME. wafrer, wafrere; < wafer + -er[1].] A maker or seller of wafers, either for the table or for eucharistic use. See wafer. Waferers (of both sexes, compare wafer-woman) appear to have been employed as go-betweens in intrigues, probably from the facilities offered by their going from house to house.

Syngeres with harpes, baudes, wafereres
Whiche been the verray develes officeres
To kindle and blowe the fyr of [lecherye].
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 17.

wafer-iron (wā'fėr-ī'ėrn), n. [< wafer + iron. Cf. waffle-iron.] A contrivance in which wafers are baked. Its chief part is a pair of thin blades between which the paste is held while it is exposed to heat.

waferster†, n. [ME. wafrestre, waufrestre; < wafer + -ster.] A woman who makes or sells wafers; a female waferer.

"Wyte god," quath a wafrestre, "wist ich the sothe, Ich wolde no forther a fot for no freres prechinge."
Piers Plowman (C), viii. 285.

wafer-tongs (wā'fėr-tôngz), n. Same as wafer-iron.

Make the wafer-tongs hot over the hole of a stove or clear fire. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 156.

wafer-woman† (wā'fėr-wụm'an), n. A woman who sold wafers. Compare waferer.

'Twas no set meeting certainly, for there was no wafer-woman with her these three days, on my knowledge.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, ii. 1.

wafery[1] (wā'fėr-i), a. [< wafer + -y[1].] Like a wafer; as, a wafery thinness.

wafery[2]† (wā'fėr-i), n. [Early mod. E. wafrie; < wafer + -y[3] (see -ery).] Wafers collectively; pastry; cakes.

The tartes, wafrie, and iunkettes, that wer to be serued and to com in after the meat.
J. Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 102. (Davies.)

waff[1] (wâf), v. [A var. of ware[1], affected by waft, v.] An obsolete form of ware[1].

waff[1] (wâf), n. [< waff[1], v. Cf. waft, n.] 1. The act of waving. Jamieson.—2. A hasty motion. Jamieson.—3. A slight stroke from any soft body. Jamieson.—4. A sudden or slight ailment: as, a waff o' cauld. Jamieson.—5. A spirit or ghost. Halliwell. [Obsolete or provincial in all uses.]

waff[2] (wâf), v. i. [Also waugh; a var. of wap[3].] To bark. [Prov. Eng.]

The elder folke and well growne . . . barked like bigge dogges, but the children and little ones waughed as small whelpes. Holland, tr. of Camden, II. 198. (Davies.)

waff[3], waf (wâf), a. [See waif, a.] Worthless; low-born; inferior; paltry. [Scotch.]

Is it not an oddlike thing that ilka waf carle in the country has a son and heir, and that the house of Ellangowan is without male succession?
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxiv.

waffle[1] (wof'l), n. [= G. waffel = Dan. vaffel = Sw. vaffla, < D. and LG. wafel, wafer; see wafer.] A particular kind of batter cake baked in waffle-irons and served hot.

We sat at tea in Armstrong's family dining-room; . . . the waitress passed out and in, bringing plates of waffles.
The Century, XXVI. 283.

waffle[2] (wof'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. waffled, ppr. waffling. [Freq. of waff[1].] To wave; fluctuate. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

waffle[3] (wof'l), v. i. [Freq. of waff[2].] To bark incessantly. Wright. [Prov. Eng.]

waffle-iron (wof'l-ī'ėrn), n. [= D. wafel-ijzer = G. waffel-eisen; as waffle + iron. Cf. wafer-iron.] An iron utensil for baking waffles over a fire, having two flat halves hinged together, one to contain the batter, the other to cover it Waffle irons.

The iron has handles or projections by which it is readily turned, bringing each side near the fire alternately. The batter is quickly cooked, as the large heating-surface is increased by projections which stud the irons and indent the waffle.

She took down the long-handled waffle-irons, and made a plate of those delicious cakes.
E. Eggleston, The Graysons, xxxi.

wafoure†, n. An old spelling of wafer.

waft (wâft), v. [A secondary form of wave, through the pp. wafed, > waft, pp.: see wave[1]. Cf. waff[1].] I. intrans. To be moved or to pass in a buoyant medium; float.

The face of the waters wafting in a storm so wrinkles itself that it makes upon its forehead furrows.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 61.

High on the summit of this dubious cliff
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., i. 432.

II. trans. 1. To bear through a fluid or buoyant medium; convey through or as through water or air.

Neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all [to Cardract] till the ships at Middleborough were returned into our kingdome, by the force whereof they might be the more strongly wafted over.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 175.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the Pole.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 58.

2†. To buoy up; cause to float; keep from sinking.

Whether cripples and mutilated persons, who have lost the greatest part of their thighs, will not sink but float, their lungs being abler to waft up their bodies, . . . we have not made experiment.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 6.

3†. To give notice by something in motion; signal to, as by waving the hand; beckon.

One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame, Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her.
Shak., T. of A., i. 1. 70.

4†. To cast lightly and quickly; turn.

I met him
With customary compliment, when he,
Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me.
Shak., W. T., i. 2. 372.

waft (wâft), n. [< waft, v.] 1. The act of one who or that which wafts; a sweep; a beckoning. Also spelled weft.

There have already been made two wafts from the warder's turret, to intimate that those in the castle are impatient for your return. Scott, Abbot, xxix.

And the lonely seabird crosses
With one waft of the wing Tennyson, The Captain.

2. That which is blown; a breath; a blast; a puff.

D ye hear, trumpets, when the bride appears, salute her with a melancholy waft. Vanbrugh, Æsop, v. 1.

A waft of peace and calm, like a breeze from paradise, fell upon Malvolti's heart.
J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, xxxv.

3. A transient odor or effluvium. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

The genial fires were perpetual, and the fire of the altar never went out. Spices and wefts of those evils may be found in the sincerest Christians.
Rev. S. Ward, Sermons and Treatises, p. 75.

A strumpet's love will have a waft i' th' end,
And distaste the vessel.
Middleton, Mad World, iv. 3.

4. Naut., a signal displayed from a ship by hoisting a flag rolled up lengthwise with one or more loops. Before the establishment of a universal system of signals, a waft at the flagstaff signified a man overboard, at the peak it indicated a wish to speak, and at a masthead it was used to recall boats. Also dialectally weft and erroneously wheft.

waftage (wâft'aj), n. [< waft + -age.] The act of wafting, or the state of being wafted; conveyance or transportation through or over a buoyant medium, as air or water; especially, passage by water.

A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 1. 95.

Not leaving him so much as a poor halfpenny to pay for his waftage. Randolph, Jealous Lovers, iv. 4.

wafter (wâf'tėr), n. [< waft + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wafts.

Charon, oh Charon,
Thou wafter of the souls to bliss or bane!
Fletcher, Mad Lover, iv. 1.

2†. A boat for passage or transport.

There went before the lord-mayor's barge a foyste for a wafter full of ordinance.
Quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 479.

3†. The master of a passage-boat or transport.

The . . . great master . . . sent vessels called brigantines, for to cause the wafters of the sea to come into Rhodes for the keeping and fortifying of the towne, the which at the first sending came and presented their persons and ships. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 75.

4. A sword having the flat part placed in the usual direction of the edge, blunted for exercises. Meyrick. (Halliwell.) wafture (wâf'tur), n. [< waft + -ure.] The act of wafting or waving; a beckoning or gesture.

But, with an angry wafture of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 246.

Where least expected, the Platonic seed seems blown by the continual wafture of the winds of destiny.
Jour. Spec. Phil., XIX. 81.

wag[1] (wag), v.; pret. and pp. wagged, ppr. wagging. [< ME. waggen, < OSw. wagga, vagga, fluctuate, rock (a cradle), Sw. vagga, rock (a cradle) (cf. Icel. vaggr = OSw. vagge, Sw. vagn, a cradle, = Dan. vogge, a cradle, vugge, rock a cradle); a secondary form (parallel with AS. wagian, wag, > ME. waien (see waie[2]) = OHG. wegon, wecken, cause to move, = Goth. wagjan, gawagjan, make wag, stir, shake) of AS. wegan = OHG. wegan, move, = Goth. gawigan, shake up, cause to move: see weigh.] I. trans. 1. To cause to move up and down, backward and forward, or from side to side, alternately, as a small body jointed or attached to, or connected with, a larger one; cause to move one way or another, as on a pivot or joint, or on or from something by which the body moved is supported; cause to shake, oscillate, or vibrate slightly. From the quick, jerky, or abrupt motion indicated by the word, an idea of playful, sportive, mocking, scornful, or derisive motion is associated with it in certain phrases: as, to wag the head or the finger.

And thanne fondeth the Fende my fruit to destruye
With alle the wyles that he can, and waggeth the rote.
Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 41.

He found him selfe unwist so ill bestad
That him he could not wag. Spenser, F. Q., V. i. 32.

And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads. Mat. xxvii. 39.

Let ditch-bred wealth henceforth forget to wag
Her base, though golden tail.
Quarles, Emblems, ii. 13.

Let me see the proudest
. . . but wag his finger at thee.
Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 3. 131.

He would plant himself straight before me, and stand wagging that bud of a tail. Dr. J. Brown, Rab, p. 12.

2†. To nudge.

Ich wondrede what that was, and waggede Conscience; . . . Quath Conscience, . . . "this is Cristes messanger."
Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 208.

To wag one's chin or jaw. See chin. To wag one's tongue. See tongue.

II. intrans. 1. To move backward and forward, up and down, or from side to side, alternately, as if connected with a larger body by a joint, pivot, or any flexible or loose attachment; oscillate; sway or swing; vibrate: an arrow is said to wag when it vibrates in the air.

Yet aungh I nowere, by my fader kyn,
How that the hopur [hopper] wagges til and fra.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 118.

Old men are the truest lovers, young men are inconstant, and wag with every wind. Shirley, Love Tricks, i. 1.

The dreary black sea-weed lolls and wags.
Lowell, Appledore, i.

2. To be in motion or action; make progress; continue a course or career; stir. [Now colloq.]

"Thus we may see," quoth he, "how the world wags."
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 28.

They made a pretty good shift to wag along.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

3. To move on or away; be off; depart; pack off; be gone. [Now colloq.]

It is said by manner of a proverbiall speach that he who findes himselfe well should not wagge.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 194.

At length the busy time begins
"Come, neighbours, we must wag."
Cowper, Yearly Distress.

wag[1] (wag), n. [< wag[1], v.] The act of wagging; a shake; an oscillation.

He . . . introduced himself with a wag of his tail, intimating a general willingness to be happy.
Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 1st ser., p. 87.

wag[2] (wag), n. [Early mod. E. wagge; perhaps short for waghalter, formerly used humorously for 'a rogue' (cf. 'a mad wag' with 'a mad waghalter'), < wag[1], with ref. to moving the head playfully or derisively: see wag[1].] 1. One who is given to joking or jesting; a witty or humorous person; one full of sport and humor; a droll fellow. The word seems formerly to have been applied to a person who indulged in coarse, low, or broad humor, or buffoonery, as a practical joker.

Sir Fran. A prodigious civil gentleman, uncle; and yet as bold as Alexander upon occasion.
Uncle Rich. Upon a lady's occasion.
Sir Fran. Ha, ha, you are a wag, uncle.
Vanbrugh, Journey to London, iii. 1.

A wag is the last order even of pretenders to wit and good humour. He has generally his mind prepared to receive some occasion of merriment, but is of himself too empty to draw out any of his own set of thoughts; and therefore laughs at the next thing he meets, not because it is ridiculous, but because he is under a necessity of laughing. Steele, Tatler, No. 155.

2. A fellow: used with a shade of meaning sometimes slurring, sometimes affectionate, but without any attribution of humor or pleasantry. [Colloq. and archaic.]

But mildly and calmly shew how discredit redoundeth upon the authors, as dust fleeth back into the wag's eyes that will needs be puffing it up. G. Harvey, Four Letters, Pref.

And, with the Nymphs that haunt the silver streames, Learne to entice the affable young waggs.
Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, II. 62)

My master shall . . . make thee, instead of handling false dice, finger nothing but gold and silver, wag. . . . Wilt be secret?
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 2.

Let us see what the learned wag maintains
With such a prodigal waste of brains.
Longfellow, Golden Legend, vi.

wage (wāj), n. [< ME. wage, < OF. wage, gage, gage = Pr. gatge, gatghe, gaje = Sp. gage = It. gaggio, a gage, pledge, guaranty: see gage[1], n.] 1†. A gage; a pledge; a stake.

But th' Elfin knight, which ought that warlike wage, Disdained to loose the meed he won in fray.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iv. 39.

2. That which is paid for a service rendered; what is paid for labor; hire: now usually in the plural. Sometimes the plural form is used as a singular. In common use the word wages is applied specially to the payment made for manual labor or other labor of a menial or mechanical kind: distinguished (but somewhat vaguely) from salary (which see), and from fee, which denotes compensation paid to professional men, as lawyers and physicians.

I am worthy noon oblyr wage,
But for to dwelle in endeles woo.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 171.

The wages of sin is death. Rom. vi. 23.

Since thou complainest of thy service and wages, be content to go back; and what our country will afford I do here promise to give thee. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, I.

With a wage usually from twenty to twenty-five shillings a week. Nineteenth Century, XXII. 491.

One of the last matters transacted was the issue of the writs to the sheriffs and borough magistrates for the payment of the wages of the representatives in the house of commons. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 447.

Real wages, in polit. econ., wages estimated not in money but in their purchasing power over commodities in general; the articles or services which the money wages will purchase. = Syn. 2. Pay, Hire, etc. See salary[1].

wage (wāj), v.; pret. and pp. waged, ppr. waging. [< ME. wagen, < OF. wager, wagier, gager, gagier, gagier, F. gager = Pr. gatjar, galjar, < ML. wadiare, pledge: see gage[1], v., and cf. wed[1].] I. trans. 1†. To pledge; bet; stake on a chance; lay; wager.

A certeine friende of yours . . . had waged with your honour a certeine wager.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 136.

I dare wage
A thousand ducats, not a man in France
Outrides Rosecliff. Ford, Love's Sacrifice, i. 2.

A new truth! Say, an old one newly come to light; for error cannot wage antiquity with truth.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 172.

The tenant in the first place must produce his champion, who by throwing down his glove as a wage or pledge thus wages or stipulates battle with the champion of the demandant. Blackstone, Com., III. xxii.

2†. To venture on; hazard; attempt; encounter.

To wake and wage a danger profitless.
Shak., Oth. ii. 1. 30.

3. To engage in, as in a contest; carry on, as a war; undertake.

The second battell was waged a little after Vespasian was chosen Emperour. Coryat, Crudities, I. 139.

What need I wage
Other contentious arguments, when I
By this alone can proue noe Diette!
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 5.

I am not able to wage law with him.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, v. 1.

4†. To let out for pay.

Thou that dost live in later times must wage
Thy works for wealth, and life for gold engage.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 18.

5. To hire for pay; engage or employ for wages. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And yf thei wage men to werre thei wryten hem in numbre.
Wol no tresoun take hem wages, trauaylen thei neuere so sore,
Note (unless) hit beon nempned in the numbre of hem that ben yaaged. Piers Plowman (C), xviii. 240

Alexander in the meane season hauing sent Cleander to some mentie of warre out of Peloponese, . . . remoued his army to the Citie of Celenes.
J. Bellenden, tr. of Quintus Curtius, iii.

The cutler prefers to vegetate on his small earnings than to go as a waged labourer in a "House."
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 516.

6†. To pay wages to.

I would have them well waged for their labour.
Latimer, 6th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

At the last
I seem'd his follower, not partner, and He waged me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary. Shak., Cor., v. 6. 90.

7. In ceram., to knead, work, or temper, as potter's clay. To wage one's law, in old Eng. law, to come forward as a defendant, with others, on oath that he (the defendant) owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he has declared. See wager.

II. intrans. 1. To contend; battle. [Rare.]

I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o' the air,
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl.
Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 212.

2. To serve as a pledge or stake for something else; be opposed as equal stakes in a wager; be equal in value: followed by with. [Rare.]

The commodity wages not with the danger.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 2. 34.

wagedom (wāj'dum), n. [< wage + -dom.] The method of paying wages for work done. [Rare.]

The employer of labour pockets the whole of the increment of value, leaving to the labourers only what they had to start with — viz., their own bodies, plus the cost of their maintenance during the process, and a small allowance for wear and tear. . . . Such is the modern system of wagedom. Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 136.

wage-earner (wāj'ėr nėr), n. One who receives stated wages for labor.

Radical manufacturers and traders . . . have no more thought for the condition of the wage-earners who produce this profit than a Southern planter had for the religious welfare of his gang of slaves.
Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 788.

wage-fund, wages-fund (wāj'fund, wā'jez-fund), n. In polit. econ., that part of the total productive capital of a country or community which is employed in paying the wages of labor, as distinguished from the part invested in buildings, machinery, raw materials, etc. See the quotations.

Wages, then, depend mainly upon the demand and supply of labour, or, as it is often expressed, on the proportion between population and capital. By population is here meant the number only of the labouring class, or rather of those who work for hire, and by capital only circulating capital, and not even the whole of that, but the part which is expended in the direct purchase of labour. To this, however, must be added all funds which, without forming a part of capital, are paid in exchange for labour, such as the wages of soldiers, domestic servants, and all other unproductive labourers. There is unfortunately no mode of expressing by one familiar term the aggregate of what may be called the wages fund of a country; and, as the wages of productive labour form nearly the whole of that fund, it is usual to overlook the smaller and less important part, and to say that wages depend on population and capital. It will be convenient to employ this expression, remembering, however, to consider it as elliptical, and not as a literal statement of the entire truth.
J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., II. xi. 1.

As I understand this passage [from Mill's "Pol. Econ."], it embraces the following statements: 1st, Wages-fund is a general term, used, in the absence of any other more familiar, to express the aggregate of all wages at any given time in possession of the laboring population; 2nd, on the proportion of this fund to the number of the laboring population depends at any given time the average rate of wages; 3rd, the amount of the fund is determined by the amount of the general wealth which is applied to the direct purchase of labor, whether with a view to productive or to unproductive employment. If the reader will carefully consider the several propositions, I think he will perceive that they do not contain matter which can be properly regarded as open to dispute. The first is little more than a definition. . . . The second merely amounts to saying that the quotient will be such as the dividend and divisor determine. The third equally contains an indisputable assertion; since, whatever be the remote causes on which the wages of hired labor depend, . . . the proximate act determining their aggregate amount must in all cases be a direct purchase of its services. In truth, the demand for labor, thus understood, as measured by the amount of wealth applied to the direct purchase of labor, might more correctly be said to be, than to determine, the Wages fund. It is the Wages fund in its inchoate stage, differing from it only as wealth just about to pass into the hands of labor is differs from the same wealth when it has got into their hands.
J. K. Cairns, Some Leading Principles of Political Economy Newly Expounded, II. § 5.

wagelingt, n. [< wage + -ling[1].] A hireling.

These are the very false prophets, the instruments of Satan, the deceivers, wolves, wagelings, Judases, dreamers, liars. Bp. Bale, Select Works, p. 439. (Davies.)

wagen-boom, n. [D., < wagen, wagon, + boom, tree (= E. beam).] Same as wagon-tree.

wageourt, n. [< ME. wagen, wage: see wage.] A hired soldier. Barbour, Bruce, xi. 48. (Stratmann.)

wageouret, n. An obsolete form of wager.

wager (wā'jer), n. [< ME. wageour, wajour, < OF. wageure, gageure, a wager, < wager, pledge, wager: see wage, v.] 1. A pledge; a gage; a guaranty.

A mayour he made, so hit was vnlyth,
Ys heyed of to smityte, yef me him brohte in hold.
Execution of Sir Simon Fraser (Child's Ballads, VI. 279).

2. Something hazarded on an uncertain event; a stake. By statutes of England, Scotland, and most if not all of the United States, all contracts or agreements, whether by parole or in writing, involving gaming, are null and void, and the wager or money due thereon cannot be recovered in any court of law. A wager is therefore merely a debt of honor, and if paid it is in the eye of the law the same thing as giving a gratuity, except perhaps as to the liability of a principal to reimburse his agent when the latter has paid it because in honor bound.

Ne wajour non with hym thou lay,
Ne at the dyces with hym to play.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 308.

Her. Content. What is the wager?
Luc. Twenty crowns.
Shak., T. of the S., v. 2. 99.

A wager is a promise to pay money, or transfer property, upon the determination or ascertainment of an uncertain event, the consideration for such a promise is either a present payment or transfer by the other party, or a promise to pay or transfer upon the event determining in a particular way. Anson, Contr., 168.

3. The act of betting; a bet.

We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 156.

4. That on which bets are laid; the subject of a bet. [Rare.]

The sea strave with the winds which should bee louder, and the shrouds of the ship, with a gastful noise to them that were in it, witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the other's contention. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

5. In old Eng. law, an offer to make oath of innocence or non-indebtedness; also, the act of making such oath, the oaths of eleven compurgators being conjoined as fortifying the defendant's oath. Wager of battle or battel. See battel.

Wager of law, an old English mode of trial, whereby in an action of debt brought upon a simple contract between the parties, without any deed or record, the defendant might discharge himself by taking an oath that he did not owe the plaintiff anything. He was required, however, to bring with him eleven of his neighbors, called compurgators, who were to avow upon their oath that they believed in their conscience that he declared the truth.

Wager policy. See policy[2].

wager (wā'jer), v. [< wager, n.] I. trans. 1. To hazard on the issue of a contest, or on some question that is to be decided, or on some casualty; bet; lay; stake.

I . . . waer'd with him
Pieces of gold. Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 182.

"What will you wager, Wise William?"
"My lands I'll wad with thee."
Reidsdale and Wise William (Child's Ballads, VIII. 269).

2. To make a wager on; bet on: followed by a clause as object: as, I wager you are wrong.

We have a maid in Mytilene, I durst wager,
Would win some words of him.
Shak., Pericles, v. 1. 43.

II. intrans. To make a bet; offer a wager.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
. . . bring you in fine together.
And wager on your heads. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 135.

But one to wager with, I would lay odds now,
He tells me instantly. B. Jonson, Volpone, iv. 1.

wager-cup (wā'jer-kup), n. An ornamental piece of plate used as a prize for a race or similar contest.

wagerer† (wā'jer-ėr), n. [< wager + -er[1].] One who wagers or lays a bet.

Deare your wagerer from me to be more cautious in determining on such matters, and not to venture the loss of his money and credit with so much odds against him.
Swift.

wagering (wā'jer-ing), p. a. Of or pertaining to wagers; betting. Wagering policy. See policy[2].

wages-fund, n. See wage-fund.

wages-man (wā'jez-man), n. One who works for wages. [Rare.]

If we don't make a rise before that time we shall have to become wages men.
Rolf Boldrewood, The Miner's Claim, p. 60.

wagett, n. See watchet.

wage-work (wāj'wėrk), n. Work done for wages or hire.

Their fires,
For comfort after their wage-work is done.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

wage-worker (wāj'wėr'kėr), n. One who works for wages.

A civilisation which overtasks or underpays a wage-workers, . . . thus, truly is not a civilisation for any conscientious thinking man to be proud of. Lancet, 1891, I. 464.

waggel, n. See wagel.

waggert, v. i. [< ME. wageren, wagren (= Icel. ragra, ragga — Haldorsen), reel, stumble; freq. of wag[1]. Cf. waggle.] To reel; stumble; stagger. Wyclif, Eccl. xii. 3.

waggery (wag'ėr-i), n. [< wag[2] + -er[1] + -y[3].] The acts and words of a wag: mischievous merriment; waggishness.

He did by the Parliament as an Ape when he hath done some waggery. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 91.

It left Brom no alternative but to draw upon the funds of rustic waggery in his disposition.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 464.

waggle (wag'l), n. [< wagl + -le, *-y*⁶.] The wagtail; a bird. [Prov. Eng.]

wagging (wag'ing), n. [< ME. waggynge; verbal n. of *wag*¹, v.] A stirring; moving; waving; oscillation; vibration.

> The folk devyne at waggynge of a stre.
> Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1745.
>
> A wanton wagging of your head, thus (a feather will teach you).
> B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

waggish (wag'ish), a. [< *wag*² + *-ish*¹.] 1. Like a wag; abounding in sportive or jocular tricks, antics, sayings, etc.; roguish in merriment or good humor; frolicsome.

> Jack, thou think'st thyself in the Forecastle, thou'rt so waggish.
> Wycherley, Plain Dealer, i. 1.

2. Done, concocted, or manifested in waggery or sport: as, a waggish trick; "waggish good humor," Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 431. = Syn. Jocular, jocose, humorous, sportive, facetious, droll.

waggishly (wag'ish-li), adv. [< waggish + *-ly*².] In a waggish manner; in sport.

> Let's wanton it a little, and talk waggishly.
> B. Jonson, Epicœne, v. 1.

waggishness (wag'ish-nes), n. [< waggish + -ness.] The state or character of being waggish; mischievous sport; wanton merriment; jocularity; also, a joke or trick.

> Busbechius reporteth a Christian boy in Constantinople had like to have been stoned for gagging in a waggishness a long-billed fowl.
> Bacon, Goodness, and Goodness of Nature (ed. 1887).

waggle (wag'l), v.; pret. and pp. waggled, ppr. waggling. [= D. waggelen, totter, waver. = Dan. vakle, shake, vacillate, = MHG. wackeln, totter; freq. of wagl. Another freq. form appears in wagger.] I. intrans. To move with a wagging motion; sway or move from side to side; wag.

> I know you by the wagging of your head.
> Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 110.

II. trans. 1. To cause to wag frequently and with short motions; move first one way and then the other.

> She [Mrs Bothell] smiles, . . . and if she's very glad to see you, waggles her little hand before her face as if to blow you a kiss, as the phrase is.
> Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xvii.

2. To whip; beat; overcome; get the better of. [Slang.]

waggle (wag'l), n. [< waggle, v.] A sudden, short movement first to one side and then to the other; a wagging.

> A curious waggle of the focussed image.
> Nature, XXXVIII. 224.

waggon, waggonage, etc. See wagon, etc.

wag-halter† (wag'hal'tėr), n. [< wagl, v., + obj. *halter*² Cf. *wag*².] One who wags (or wags in) a halter; one likely to come to the gallows; a rascal; a thief: chiefly humorous.

> I can tell you I am a mad wag halter.
> Marston, Insatiate Countesse, i.

waging-board (wā'jing-bōrd), n. The board or table on which potters' clay is waged. See wage, v. t., 7.

wagmoire†, n. [A form of quagmire, accom. to *wag*².] A quagmire.

> For they bene like foule wagmoires overgrast.
> Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

wagnak, n. Same as bang-wank.

Wagnerian (väg-nē'ri-an), a. [< Wagner (see def.) + -an. The G. surname Wagner is from the noun wagner, a wagon-maker, cartwright, = E. wagoner.] Of or pertaining to any one named Wagner. Specifically — (a) Of or pertaining to Rudolph Wagner (1805–64), a German anatomist and physiologist. (b) Pertaining or relating to Richard Wagner (1813–83), a celebrated German musical composer, or to his music-dramas; characterized by the ideas or the style of Wagner. See Wagnerism. — Wagnerian corpuscles, the tactile corpuscles of Wagner. See corpuscle. — Wagnerian spot, the germinal spot. See nucleolus, 1.

Wagnerianism (väg-nē'ri-an-izm), n. [< Wagnerian + -ism.] Wagnerism. Contemporary Rev., LI. 448.

Wagnerism (väg'nėr-izm), n. [< Wagner + -ism.] 1. The art theory of Richard Wagner, especially as concerns the musical drama, including the general style of composition based on that theory. Among the many characteristics of the theory are these: the choice of a general subject in which the mythical and heroic elements are prominent; the amalgamation of poetry, music, action, and scenic effect into the most intimate union as equally important cooperating elements; the desertion of the conventionalities of the common Italian opera, especially of its sharply defined and contrasted movements and its tendency to the display of mere virtuosity; the abundant use of leading motives as a means to continuous and reiterated emotional effect; the immense elaboration of the orchestral parts, so that in them is furnished an unbroken presentation of or commentary on the entire plot; and the free use of new and remarkable means of effect, both acoustic and instrumental. The Wagnerian ideal is often called (sometimes derisively) "the music of the future," from the title of one of Wagner's essays. While Wagnerism is best exemplified in the great dramas of Wagner himself, its qualities may be seen more or less in almost all the dramatic music of the last half of this century.

2. The study or imitation of the music of Richard Wagner.

Wagnerist (väg'nėr-ist), n. [< Wagner + -ist.] An adherent of Richard Wagner's musical methods; an admirer of his works. Also Wagnerite.

wagnerite¹ (wag'nėr-it), n. [Named after F. M. von Wagner (1768–1851), head of the Bavarian mining department.] A transparent mineral having a vitreoresinous luster, wine-yellow or honey-yellow in color. It is a fluophosphate of magnesium.

Wagnerite² (väg'nėr-it), n. [< Wagner + *-ite*².] Same as Wagnerist. The American, XVII. 110.

Wagner's corpuscles. See Wagnerian and corpuscle.

wagon, waggon (wag'on), n. [Early mod. E. also in pl. waiganes; < D. wagen, a wagon or wain, = AS. wægn, E. wain: see *wain*¹. Hence F. wagon, a railroad-car.] 1. A four-wheeled vehicle; a wain; specifically, a four-wheeled vehicle designed for the transport of heavy loads, or (of lighter build) for various purposes of business, as the delivery of goods purchased at a shop, or of express packages; loosely, such a vehicle, similar to the lighter business wagons, used for pleasure. The typical heavy wagon is a strong vehicle drawn by two or three horses yoked abreast, the fore wheels much smaller than the hind pair, and their axle swiveled to the body of the wagon to facilitate turning.

> They trussed all their harnes in waganes.
> Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. lxii.
>
> Reeling with grapes, red waggons choke the way.
> Byron, Beppo, st. 42.

Some of the inland traffic was still done by means of pack horses. . . . But there were also waggons, which, by the divine permission, started for every town of note in England.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 166.

2. An open four-wheeled vehicle for the conveyance of goods on railways. [Great Britain.] —3†. A chariot.

> Then to her yron wagon she betakes,
> And with her beares the fowle welfavoured witch.
> Spenser, F. Q., I. v. 2.
>
> O Proserpina,
> For the flowers now, that frighted thou let'st fall
> From Dis's wagon!
> Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 118.

4. A tool for trimming the edges of gold leaf to size for a book. It consists of a frame carrying four edges of cane for cutting the gold-leaf which does not adhere to cane as it would to metal. E. H. Knight.

5. In mining, a cart; a mine-car. — Conestoga wagon, a type of broad wheeled wagon for the transportation of merchandise, made at Conestoga in Pennsylvania, originally for freighting goods over the deep soil of southern and western Pennsylvania, afterward it became the common vehicle of settlers going out on the prairies.

> The . . . [were] armed actually lined with Conestoga wagons, each drawn by six stalwart horses and laden with farm produce.
> Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past, p. 306.

Gipsy wagon. See Gipsy. — Skeleton wagon. See skeleton.

wagon (wag'on), v. t. [< wagon, n.] To transport, convey, or carry in a wagon: as, to wagon goods. [Colloq.]

> Burnside having answered for the safety of the road, it had been determined to wagon a portion of the [bridge] equipage to Fredericksburg.
> Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), II. 563.

wagonage, waggonage (wag'on-āj) n. [< wagon + -age.] 1. Money paid for carriage or conveyance by wagon.

> Waggonage, indeed, seems to the commissariat an article not worth economizing.
> Jefferson, To Patrick Henry (Correspondence, I. 158).

2. A collection of wagons.

wagon-bed (wag'on-bed), n. Same as wagon-box.

> In the grassy plazza two men had a humble show of figs and cakes for sale in their wagon beds.
> Howells, The Century, XXX. 672.

wagon-boiler (wag'on-boi'lėr), n. A kind of steam-boiler having originally a semicylindrical top, the ends and sides vertical, and the bottom flat, thus having the shape of a wagon covered with an arched fill. Improved forms have the sides and bottom slightly curved inward.

wagon-bow (wag'on-bō), n. A bent slat of wood used, generally in combination with others, to support the top or cover of a wagon.

wagon-box (wag'on-boks), n. The part of a wagon mounted upon the wheels and axles, and used to contain the freight or passengers. Also wagon-bed.

wagon-brake (wag'on-brāk), n. A brake used on a wagon.

wagon-breast (wag'on-brest), n. In coal-mining, a breast in which the wagons or mine-cars are taken up to the working-face. Trans. Surv. Glossary.

wagon-ceiling (wag'on-sē'ling), n. A semicircular or wagon-headed ceiling; a wagon-vault. See wagon-headed.

wagon-coupling (wag'on-kup'ling), n. A coupling for connecting the fore and hind axles of a wagon. In a carriage it is also called reach or perch. E. H. Knight.

wagon-drag (wag'on-drag), n. Same as drag, 1 (h).

wagoner¹, waggoner (wag'on-ėr), n. [= D. wagenaar, a wagoner, = OHG. wagenari, a wagon-maker, MHG. wagenær, G. wagner, wagon-maker, cartwright, driver; as wagon + *-er*¹.] 1. One who conducts or drives a wagon; a wagon-driver.

> The waggoner . . . cracked his whip, to awaken[ed] his music (bells), and went melodiously away.
> Dickens, Bleak House, vi.

2†. One who drives a chariot; a charioteer.

> Gallop apace, you fiery footed steeds,
> Towards Phœbus lodging, such a waggoner
> As Phaethon would whip you to the west.
> Shak., R. and J., III. ii. 2.

3. [cap.] The constellation Auriga. See Auriga.

> By this the Northerne waggoner had set
> His sevenfold teme behind the stedfast starre
> That was in Ocean waves yet never wet.
> Spenser, F. Q., I. ii. 1.

wagoner²† (wag'on-ėr), n. An atlas of charts: a name formerly in use, derived from a work of this nature published at Leyden in 1584–5 by Wagenaar.

wagoner-book† (wag'on-ėr-bůk), n. Same as *wagoner*².

wagoness†, waggoness† (wag'on-es), n. [< wagon + -ess.] A female wagoner. [Rare.]

> That she might serve for waggoness, she pluck'd the waggoner backe
> And up into his seate she mounts. Chapman, Iliad, v. 838.

wagonette, waggonette (wag-o-net'), n. [Also wagonet, < F. wagonet; as wagon + -ette.] A pleasure-vehicle, either with or without a top, holding six or more persons. It has at the back two seats facing each other running lengthwise, and either one or two in front, running crosswise.

Wagonette.

wagon-hammer (wag'on-ham'ėr), n. An upright bolt connecting the tongue and the doubletree of a vehicle. Upon it the doubletree swings. E. H. Knight.

wagon-headed (wag'on-hed'ed), a. Having a round arched or semicylindrical top or head, like the cover or tilt of a wagon when stretched over the bows; round-arched: as, a wagon-headed roof or vault. Wagon-headed ceiling, cylindrical or barrel vaulting or a ceiling imitating the form of such vaulting.

wagon-hoist (wag'on-hoist), n. An elevator or lift used in livery-stables, carriage-factories, etc., to convey vehicles up or down.

wagon-jack (wag'on-jak), n. A lifting-jack for raising the wheels of a vehicle off the ground, so that they can be taken off for greasing, repairing, etc.

wagon-load (wag'on-lōd), n. The load carried by a wagon: as, a wagon-load of coal; hence, figuratively, a large amount: as, a very little text serves for a wagon-load of comment.

wagon-lock (wag'on-lok), n. In a vehicle, a device for retarding motion in going downhill. It operates as a brake by bringing a shoe to bear against the face of one rear wheel, or both. It differs essentially from a wagon drag or wheel drag used for the same purpose, the drag being a shoe placed under one of the wheels. A chain used to prevent a wheel from turning in descending a hill by locking the wheel to the body of the wagon is essentially a wagon-locking device, but the term in the United States always implies some form of friction brake. Wagon-locks are used on stages and other vehicles in mountainous districts, and are preferred to the wheel-drag, as being easily managed from the driver's seat, without stopping the vehicle. See drag, 1 (h).

wagon-master (wag'on-mās'tėr), n. A person who has charge of one or more wagons; especially, an officer in charge of wagons in a military train.

wagon-roof (wag'on-rōf), n. A plain semicylindrical vault, or barrel-vault. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 93.

wagon-roofed (wag'on-rōft), a. Having a semicylindrical or wagon-headed roof or vault. See wagon-headed.

wagonryt, waggonryt (wag'on-ri), n. [< wagon + -ry: see -ery.] Conveyance by means of wagons; wagons collectively; wagonage. [Rare.]

He that sets to his hand though with a good intent to hinder the slogging of it, in this unlawfull waggonry who rein it rides, let him beware it be not fatall to him as it was to Uzza. Milton, Church Government, i. 1.

wagon-top (wag'on-top), n. The part of a locomotive-boiler, over the fire-box, which is elevated above the rest of the shell. Its purpose is to provide greater steam room.

wagon-train (wag'on-trān), n. A train, service, or collection of wagons, draft animals, etc., organized for a special purpose; especially, the collection of wagons, etc., accompanying an army, to convey provisions, ammunition, the sick and wounded, etc.

wagon-tree (wag'on-trē), n. [< wagon + tree; tr. D. wagen boom.] A South African shrub, Protea grandiflora, growing 6 or 8 feet high, with the trunk as many inches thick. Its wood is of a reddish-brown color, beautifully marked with a cross or netted grain. It is sometimes used at the Cape of Good Hope for the felloes of wheels, plows, etc.

wagon-vault (wag'on-vâlt), n. A semicylindrical vault, or barrel-vault. See vault[1] and barrel-vault.

wagon-way (wag'on-wā), n. In coal-mining, an underground horse-road. [North. Eng.]

wagonwright (wag'on-rīt), n. [< wagon + wright. Cf. wainwright.] A mechanic who makes wagons.

wagpastiet, n. [Appar. lit. 'a pie-stealer,' < wag[1], v., + obj. pastie, pasty, pie.] A rogue.

A little wagpastie,
A deceiver of folkes by subtill craft and guile.
Udall, Roister Doister, iii. 2.

wagshipt (wag'ship), n. [< wag[2] + ship.] 1. Waggery; waggishness.

Let 's pierce the rundlets of our running heads, and give 'em a neat cup of wagship.
Middleton, Family of Love, ii. 3.

2. The state or dignity of being a wag. Marston, What you Will, iii. 3. [Humorous.]

wagsome (wag'sum), a. [< wag[2] + -some.] Waggish. [Rare.]

Still humoured he his wagsome turn.
W. S. Gilbert, Peter the Wag.

wagtail (wag'tāl), n. [< wag[1], v., + obj. tail[1].] 1. Any bird of the family Motacillidæ (which see): so called from the continual wagging motion of the tail. The species are very numerous, and chiefly confined to the Old World. Those of the subfamily Anthinæ are commonly called pipits or titlarks. (See cut under Anthus.) (a) The white, black, gray, and pied wagtails belong to the genus Motacilla, as M. alba and M. lugubris or yarrellii. (See Motacilla.) (b) The closely related genus Budytes comprises among others the common blue-headed yellow wagtail, B. flava, of very wide distribution in the Old World and found in Alaska.

Quaker-tail, or Pied Wagtail (Motacilla yarrellii).

2. Some similar bird. In the United States the name is frequently given to two birds of the genus Seiurus, the common water-thrush and the large-billed water-thrush, S. naevius and S. motacilla, members of the family Mniotiltidæ, or American warblers. See cut under Seiurus.

3†. A term of familiarity or contempt.

Wagtail, salute them all, they are friends
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, iv. 1.

4. A pert person.

Osw. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life
I have spared at suit of his gray beard,
Kent. . . . Spare my gray beard, you wagtail!
Shak., Lear, ii. 2.

African wagtail, Motacilla capensis of South Africa. Blue-headed yellow wagtail, the true Budytes flava. Cape wagtail, the African wagtail. Collared wagtail, a bird so named by Latham in 1783 from a bird described by Bonnini in 1766 from Luzon: not well identified, but supposed to be the wagtail distributed over most of Asia, with a host of synonyms, from which M. leucopsis is selected as the onym by late authority. — Common wagtail of England, the pied wagtail. — Field-wagtail, a yellow wagtail. — Garden-wagtail, the Indian wagtail. — Gray-headed yellow wagtail, Budytes viridis. — Gray wagtail, Motacilla melanope, or boarula, or sulphurea: more fully called gray water-wagtail (after Edwards, 1758), and also yellow water-wagtail by Albin (1738–40). — Green wagtail, a bird so described by Brown in 1775, and since commonly called Budytes viridis or B. cinereocapillus, ranging from Scandinavia to South Africa and the Malay countries. Hudsonian wagtail (of Latham, 1801), the common titlark of North America, Anthus pennsylvanicus or ludovicianus, originally described and figured by Edwards in 1760 as the "lark from Pensilvania." — Indian wagtail, Nemoricola or Nemoricola indica, now Limonidromus indicus, a true wagtail, but of a separate genus, wide-ranging in Asia and most of the islands zoologically related to that continent. Pied wagtail, Motacilla lugubris or yarrellii, the commonest wagtail of Great Britain. — Tschutschi wagtail†, the gray wagtail. Pennant, 1785. — Wagtail fantail, wagtail flycatcher, a true flycatcher of Australia, New Guinea, the Solomon Islands, etc., with fifteen different New Latin names, among which Rhipidura or Sauloprocta tricolor or motacilloides is most used. It is 7½ inches long, and chiefly black and white in coloration, thus resembling one of the pied wagtails. Also called black fantail. Water wagtail. See water-wagtail. — White wagtail, Motacilla alba, or another of this type. Wood-wagtail, the common gray wagtail, sometimes mistaken for something else, and put in a genus Calobates, as C. sulphurea, Webster, 1880. Yellow wagtail, Budytes rayi, or another of this type.

Wagtail Flycatcher (Rhipidura tricolor).

wagtail (wag'tāl), v. t. [< wagtail, n.] To flutter; move the wings and tail like a wagtail. [Rare.]

A payr of busie chattering Pies. . . .
From bush to bush wag tayling here and there.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Trophies.

wagwant (wag'wont), n. Same as wag-wanton.

wag-wanton (wag'won-ton), n. The quaking-grass, Briza media. [Prov. Eng.]

wag-wit (wag'wit), n. A wag; a would-be wit.

All the wags and wits in the highway are grinning in applause of the ingenious rogue. Steele, Spectator, No. 354.

wah (wä), n. [Native name.] The panda, Ailurus fulgens, of the Himalayan region. See cut under panda.

Wahabi, Wahabee (wä-hä'bē), n. [< Ar. Wahhabi, < Wahhab (see def.).] One of the followers of Abd-el-Wahhab (1691–1787), a Mohammedan reformer, who opposed all practices not sanctioned by the Koran. His successors formed a powerful dominion whose chief seat was in Nejd in central Arabia. They were overthrown by Ibrahim Pasha in 1818, but afterward regained much of their former power in central Arabia. Also Wahabite.

A sect of Muhammadan puritans, known as Wahabis, who affect a strict and sacrificial way of life, such as prevailed in the time of the Prophet, and denounce all commentaries on the Koran and all such modern innovations as the worship of relics.
J. T. Wheeler Short Hist. India, p. 668.

Wahablism (wä-hä'bē-izm), n. [< Wahabi + -ism.] The doctrines, principles, or practices of the Wahabis. R. G. Palgrave.

Wahabite (wä-hä'bit), n. [< Wahabi + -ite[2].] Same as Wahabi. Labaulaye.

wahahe (wä-hä'hä), n. [Maori.] A tree, Dysoxylum (Hartighsea) spectabile, found in New Zealand. It has a height of 40 or 50 feet, and bears panicles of pale colored flowers from 8 to 12 inches long, pendulous from the trunk and main branches. Its leaves are said to be used by the natives like hops, and an infusion of them as a stomachic. Also haha.

Waha Lake trout. See trout[1].

wahoo (wä-hō'), n. [Amer. Ind.] 1. A North American shrub, the burning-bush, Euonymus atropurpureus, ornamental in autumn for its pendulous capsules, revealing in dehiscence the bright-scarlet arils of its seeds. Its bark is an officinal euonymus, credited with cholagogue and laxative properties. — 2. The bearberry of the Pacific United States, Rhamnus Purshiana, the source of cascara sagrada, perhaps so called from its medicinal affinity to the former. — 3. The winged elm, Ulmus alata, a small tree with corky winged branches, found southward in the United States. The wood is unwedgeable, and is largely used for hubs, blocks, etc. The name has also been applied to Tilia heterophylla (see Tilia) and to the Japanese quince (which see, under quince[1]).

Also written wahoo (this form being sometimes used distinctively in sense 1) and whahoo.

waidt, waidet. Obsolete spellings of the preterit and past participle of weigh[1].

waif (wāf), n. and a. [Formerly also waive (from the plural), also waift (see waive, n., waift); < ME. waif, weif, weife (pl. waives, weyves), < OF. waif, wef, guarf, gaif, fem. waive, gaive (pl. waives, gaives), a waif (choses gaives, things lost and not claimed), < Icel. veif, anything waving or flapping about, reifa, a moving about uncertainly, veifa, vibrate, waver: see waive.] I. n. 1. Anything blown by the wind or drifted in by the ocean; a thing tossed abroad and abandoned; a stray or odd piece or article.

Weives, things forsaken, miscarried, or lost.
Cotgrave, 1611.

Rolling in his mind
Old waifs of rhyme. Tennyson, The Brook.

2. In law, (a) Goods found of which the owner is not known.

Of wardes and of wardemotes, straynes and strayues.
Piers Plowman (C), i. 92.

(b) Such goods as a thief, when pursued, throws away to prevent being apprehended.

Waifs . . . are goods stolen, and waved or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended.
Blackstone, Com., I. viii.

3. A wanderer; one who is lost; a neglected, homeless wretch: applied also to beasts.

Virtue and vice had bound'ries in old time; . . .
'Twas hard perhaps on here and there a waif,
Destrous to return, and not receiv'd.
Cowper, Task, iii. 80.

Oh a'ye plous, godly flocks, . . .
Wha now will keep ye frae the fox, . . .
Or wha will tent the waifs and crocks
About the dykes? Burns, The Twa Herds.

4. Same as waft or waft.

The officer who first discovers it [a whale] sets a waif (a small flag) in his boat, and gives chase.
C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 25.

Masthead waif, a light pole, six or eight feet long, with a hoop covered with canvas at the end: used by whalemen in signaling boats. Compare waft, n., 4.

II. a. Vagabond; worthless; ignoble; inferior. Also waff. [Scotch.]

And the Lord King forbids that any waif (i. e. vagabond) or unknown ("uneuth") man be entertained anywhere except in a borough, and there only for one night, unless he or his horse be detained there by sickness so that an essoign [valid excuse by reason of sickness or infirmity] can be shown. Laws of Hen. II., quoted in Ribton Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 26.

And wull and waif for eight lang years
They sail'd upon the sea.
Bosmer Hafmand (Child's Ballads, I. 253).

waif-pole (wāf'pōl), n. The pole to which the masthead waif is made fast.

waift, n. [Early mod. E., < ME. weft; a var. of waif, with excrescent t: see waif.] Same as waif.

For that a waift, the which by fortune came Upon your seas, he claym'd as propertie.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. xii. 31.

wail[1] (wāl), v. [< ME. wailen, waillen, weilen, weylen, < Icel. væla, vala, mod. væla, wail, < væ! vei! interj., woe! see woe. Cf. bewail.] I. intrans. To express sorrow by a mournful inarticulate vocal sound; lament; moan; cry plaintively.

I mot wepe and wayle whyl I live.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 487.

The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows brown and sere. Bryant, Death of the Flowers.

II. trans. To grieve over; lament; bemoan; bewail.

Thou holy chirche, thou maist be wailed.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 6271.

Tell these sad women
'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shak., Cor., iv. 1. 36.

wail[1] (wāl), n. [< wail, v.] The act of lamenting aloud; wailing; a moan; a plaintive cry or sound.

From its rocky caverns the deep-voiced neighboring ocean Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail of the forest. Longfellow, Evangeline, ii. 5.

The dead, whose dying eyes Were closed with wail. Tennyson, In Memoriam, ii.

wail, v. t. See wale.

wailer† (wā'lėr), n. [< wail[1] + -er[1].] One who wails or laments; a professional mourner.

waller[2] (wā'lėr), n. [< wail[2], wale[2], + -er[1].] In coal-mining, a boy who picks out from the coal in the cars the bits of slate and any other rubbish which may have got mixed with it. [North. Eng.]

waileresst (wā'lėr-es), n. [ME. welleresse; < wailer[1] + -ess.] A woman who wails or mourns: used in the quotation with reference to professional mourners.

Beholde ze, and clepe ze wymmen that wellen [var. wailleresses, wailleteris, tr. L. lamentatrices].
Wyclif, Jer. ix. 17.

wailful (wāl'fụl), a. [< wail[1] + -ful.] 1. Sorrowful; mournful; making a plaintive sound.

Thus did she watch, and weare the weary night
In waylfull plaints that none was to appease.
Spenser, F. Q., V. vi. 20.

While thro' the braes the cushat croods
With wailfu' cry!
Burns, To W. Simpson.

2†. Lamentable; worthy of wailing.

Bloody hands, whose cruelty . . . frame
The wailful works that scourge the poor, without regard of blame.
Surrey, Ps. lxxiii.

wailing (wā'ling), n. [< ME. waylyng; verbal n. of wail[1], v.] The act of expressing sorrow, grief, or the like audibly; loud cries of sorrow; deep lamentation.

Myche weping & wo, waylyng of teris,
And lamentacioun full long for loue of hym one.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7155.

There shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.
Mat. xiii. 42.

wailingly (wā'ling-li), adv. [< wailing + -ly[2].] In a wailing manner; with wailing.

Shrilly, wailingly sounded a cry of mortal agony.
The Century, XXIX. 60.

wailment† (wāl'mẹnt), n. [< wail[1] + -ment.] Lamentation.

O day of wailment to all that are yet unborn!
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 224. (Latham.) wailster† (wal'stėr), n. [ME., < wail[1] + -ster.] Same as waileress. Wyclif, Jer. ix. (in MS. I.).

waiment†, waymentt (wā-mẹnt'), v. i. [< ME. waymenten, weymenten, < OF. waimenter, weymenter, guamenter, gamanter, etc., lament; perhaps a variation, in imitation of OF. wai, guai (Sp. Pg. It. guai = Goth. wai, woe: see woe, and cf. wail[1]), of lamenter, < L. lamentari, lament: see lament.] To lament; sorrow; wail.

"Sir," seide Agravain, "ne weymente ye not so, ffor yef god will he ne hath noon harme."
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 513.

Thilke science, as seith Seint Augustin, maketh a man to waymenten in his herte.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

waimentation† (wa-men-tā'shọn), n. [< ME. waymentacioun, wamentacioun, < OF. waimentacion*, < waimenter, lament: see waiment.] Lamentation.

Made swiche waimentacioun
That pite was to heare the soun
The Isle of Ladies, l. 1855.

waimenting†, waymenting†, n. [ME., verbal n. of waiment, v.] Lamentation; bewailing.

The sacred teres, and the waymentinge,
The firy strokes of the desiring
That loves servaunts in this lyf enduren.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1063

wain[1] (wān), n. [< ME. wain, wayn, wein (pl. waines, weines), < AS. wægen, wægn, wæn = OS. wagan = OFries. wein, wein = D. wagen = MLG. wagen = OHG. MHG. G. wagen = Icel. vagn = Sw. vagn = Dan. vogn, a wain, wagon, vehicle; < AS. wegan, etc., carry, = L. vehere, carry: see weigh. From the same ult. root are L. vehiculum (> E. vehicle), Gr. ὄχος = Skt. vahn, a vehicle, car. Cf. wagon, a doublet of wain[1].] 1. A four-wheeled vehicle for the transportation of goods, or for carrying corn, hay, etc.; a wagon or cart. [Obsolete, provincial, or archaic.]

And the Women . . dryven Cartes, Plowes, and Waynes, and Charlottes
Mandeville, Travels, p. 220.

The war-horse drew the peasant's loaded wain.
Bryant, Christmas in 1875.

The shynynge Juge of thinges, stable in hymself, governeth the swifte cart or wayn — that is to seyn, the circuler moevynge of the sonne.
Chaucer, Boëthius, tr. meter 1.

2. Same as Charles's Wain.

My bankrupt wain can beg nor borrow light;
Alas! my darkness is perpetual night.
Quarles, Emblems, iii. 1.

Arthur's Wain. Same as Charles's Wain.

Arthur's slow wain his course doth roll
In utter darkness round the pole.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 17.

Charles's Wain, in astron., the seven brightest stars in the constellation Ursa Major, or the Great Bear, which has been called a wagon since the time of Homer. Two of the stars are known as the pointers, because, being nearly in a right line with the pole-star, they direct an observer to it. Also called the Plow, the Great Dipper, the Northern Car, and some times the Butcher's Cleaver. [The name Charles's wain, Charles' wain is a modern alteration of earlier carl's wain, < late ME. carleswayn, charleswayn, < late AS. curles wæn (= Sw. karl-vagn = Dan. karle-vogn), the carl's or churl's wain, i. e. the farmer's wagon. The word wain came to be associated with the name Charles with ref. to Charlemagne, being also called in ME. Charlemagnes wayne. In the 17th century it was associated with the names of Charles I. and Charles II.]

An it be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wain is over the new chimney.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 2.

The Lesser Wain, Ursa Minor.

When the lesser wain
Is twisting round the polar star Tennyson, In Memoriam, cl.

wain[2] (wan), v. t. [Perhaps < Icel. vegna, go on one's way, proceed: see way[1]. (Cf. wain[1], from the same ult. source. The ME. "waynen," move, etc., found in various texts, is a misreading of waynen, i. e. wayven: see waive.] To carry; convey; fetch.

Then, neighbours, for God's sake, if any you see Good servant for dairie house, wayne her to mee.
Tusser, Husbandrie, p. 107. (Davies.)

So swift they wained her through the light,
'Twas like the motion of sound or sight.
Hogg, Kilmeny.

wain[3]†, n. A Middle English form of gain[1].

wainable† (wā'na-bl), a. [< wain[3], = gain[1], + -able.] Capable of being tilled; tillable: as, wainable land.

wainage (wā'nāj), n. A variant of gainage.

The stock of the merchant and the wainage of the villein are preserved from undue severity of amercement as well as the settled estate of the earldom or barony.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 158.

wain-bote† (wān'bōt), n. [< wain[1] + bote[1].] An allowance of timber for wagons or carts.

wain-house (wān'hous), n. A house or shed for wagons and carts. [Prov. Eng.]

After supper they adjourned to the wain house, where the master pledged the first ox with a customary toast.
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 408.

wain-load (wān'lōd), n. A wagon-load.

Then you shall returne,
And of your best provision sende to us
Thirty wayne-load, beside twelve tun of wine
Heywood, 2 Edw. IV. (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, i. 104).

wainman† (wān'man), n.; pl. wainmen (-men). 1. A driver of a wain or wagon; a wagoner. Fuller, Ch. Hist., XI. i. 64. (Davies.) — 2. A charioteer; specifically [cap.], the constellation Auriga. Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 4.

wain-rope (wān'rōp), n. A rope for pulling a wain or binding a load on a wain or wagon; a cart rope. [Rare.]

Oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together
Shak. T. N., iii. 2. 64.

wainscot (wān'skọt), n. [Early mod. E. also wainscott, waynskot, waynskote (also, as more D., waghenecot); < D. wagenschot (= LG. wagenschot), the best kind of oak-wood, well grain'd and without knots (cf. LG. bokenschot, the best kind of beech-wood, without knots), < wagen, wagon, wain, chariot, carriage, + schot (= E. shot[1]), partition, wainscot. The orig. sense was prob. 'wood used for a board or partition in a coach or wagon'; thence 'boards for panel-work, paneling for walls, esp. oak-wood for paneling.'] 1†. A fine kind of foreign oak-timber, not so liable to cast or warp as English oak, easily worked with tools, and used at first for any kind of paneled work, and afterward in other ways.

A tabyll of waynskott with to trestellis.
Bury Wills (ed. Tymms), p. 115.

He was not tall, but of the lowest stature, round faced, olivaster (like wainscot) complexion.
Aubrey, Lives (William Harvey).

2. A wooden lining or boarding of the walls of apartments, usually made in panels; paneled boards on the walls of rooms. Originally this lining or paneling was made of wainscot-oak.

With their fair wainscots,
Their presses and bedsteads,
Their joint-stools and tables,
A fire we made.
Winning of Cales (Child's Ballads, VII. 139).

Boords called Waghenecot.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 173.

The reader prayed that room of his coat might grow up like cedars to make good wainscot in the House of Sincerity.
Middleton, Family of Love, iii. 2.

We sat down to dinner in a fine long room, the wainscot of which is rich with gilded coronets, roses, and portcullises.
Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 191.

3. One of certain noctuid moths: an English collectors' name. The American wainscot is Leucania extranea; the scarce wainscot is Simyra venosa. — Smoky wainscot. See smoky.

wainscot (wān'skọt), v. t.; pret. and pp. wainscoted or wainscotted, ppr. wainscoting or wainscotting. [Formerly also wenscot; < wainscot, n.] 1. To line or panel with wainscot: as, to wainscot a hall.

A Chappel whose Roof was covered with Lozfe-Gold, wenscotted, and decked with great store of Pearls and Precious Stones
S. Clarke, Geog. Descr. (1671), p. 267.

Music is better in chambers wainscotted than hanged.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 104.

The rooms are wainscotted, and some of them richly parquetted with cedar, yew, cypresse, &c.
Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 23, 1676.

2. To line or panel in the manner of wainscoting, with material other than oak, or, more generally, than wood.

The east side of it [the church] within is wainscotted with jasper and beautiful marbles Pocock, Description of the East, II. ii. 5.

wainscot-chair (wān'skọt-chār), n. A chair the lower part of which below the seat is filled in with solid paneling, or the like, so as to form a box.

wainscot-clock (wān'skọt-klok), n. A tall standard clock with long pendulum and high closed case: so called because such clocks stood against the wainscoting in old houses. Art Journal, 1883, p. 108.

wainscoting, wainscotting (wān'skọt-ing), n. [< wainscot + -ing[1].] Wainscot, or the material used for it.

wainscot-oak (wān'skọt-ōk), n. The Turkey oak, Quercus Cerris. See oak.

wainscot-panel (wān'skọt-pan'el), n. In an American railroad-car, a board forming a panel between the two wainscot-rails formerly placed beneath the windows.

wain-shilling (wān'shil'ing), n. A market toll or tax formerly levied on wagons at markets in English towns. See the quotation under load-penny.

wainwright (wān'rīt), n. A wagon-maker: same as wagonwright.

wair[1]†, v. An old spelling of wear[1].

wair[2] (wār), n. [Origin obscure.] In carp., a piece of timber 6 feet long and 1 foot broad. Bailey, 1731.

waischet. An obsolete past participle of wash.

waise (wāz), v. t.; pret. and pp. waised, ppr. waising. A Scotch form of wess.

waist (wāst), n. [Formerly waste, wast; < ME. wast, waste, < AS. wæst, wæxt*, lit. 'growth,' 'size' (= Icel. vöxtr, stature, = Sw. växt = Dan. vext, growth, size, = Goth. wahstus, growth, increase, stature; cf. AS. wæstm, rarely wæstm, earlier wæstm, growth, fruit, produce, = G. wachsthum, growth), < weaxan, grow: see wax[1].] 1. The part of the human body between the chest and the hips; the smaller or more compressible section of the trunk below the ribs and above the haunch-bones, including most of the abdomen and the loins. A woman's waist, if untampered with, which under the exigencies of modern costume is seldom the case, is naturally less contracted than a man's. The sculptures of the ancients furnish ample evidence of this.

Waste, of a mannys mydyll. Prompt. Parv., p. 517.

The women go straiter and closer in their garments than the men do, with their waists girded.
Hakluyt.

Indeed I am in the waist two yards about.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 3. 46.

Her ringlets are in taste,
What an arm! what a waist
For an arm!
F. Locker, To my Grandmother.

2. Something worn around the waist or body, as a belt or girdle.

I might have giv'n thee for thy pains
Ten silver shekles and a golden waist
Peele, David and Bethsabe.

3. A garment covering the waist or trunk. (a) An undergarment worn especially by children, to which petticoats and drawers are buttoned. (b) The body or bodice of a dress, whether separate from the skirt or joined to it: a corsage, a basque, a blouse.

Doll. What fashion will make a woman have the best body, tailor?

Tailor. A short Dutch waist, with a round Catherine-wheel fardingale.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 1.

4. Figuratively, that which surrounds like a girdle.

Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 39.

5. That part of any object which bears some analogy to the human waist, somewhere near the middle of its height or length.

A pepper box . . . painted in blue on a white ground . . . and the name Richard Chaffers, 1706, round the Jewitt, Ceramic Art, II. 98.

There is a small knop at the small part or waist (of an hour-glass shaped salt-cellar).
South Kensington Handbook, College Corp. Plate.

The date of refounding this bell (1576) is cast upon its waist.
Trans. Hist. Soc. of Lancashire and Cheshire, N. S., V. 133.

Especially — (a) The narrowest part of the body of musical instruments of the violin kind, formed by the bouts, or inward curves of the ribs near the middle of the body. (b) Naut., the central part of a ship.

Quarter your selves in order, some abaft;
Some in the Ships waste, all in martial order.
Heywood, Fortune by Land and Sea (Works, ed. 1874, VI. [416])

(c) The middle part of a period of time.

In the dead waist [var. vast] and middle of the night.
Shak., Hamlet, I. 2. 198.

'Tis now about the immodest waist of night.
Marston, Malcontent, ii. 3.

This was about the waste of day
Lover of Hero and Leander, p. 114

Peasant waist. See peasant.

waist-anchor (wāst'ang'kor), n. An anchor stowed in the waist; a sheet anchor.

waistband (wāst'band), n. 1. A band meant to encircle the waist, especially such a band forming part of a garment and serving to stiffen or maintain it: as, the waistband of a skirt.

A pair of dreadnought pilot trousers, who rest the waistband was so very broad and high that it became a sure cedarnum for a waistcoat. Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxiii.

2. A separate or outer girdle or belt. [Rare.]

waist-belt (wāst'belt), n. A belt worn about the waist.

She wore a tight fitting bodice of cream white flannel and petticoats of gray flannel, while she had a waistbelt and pouch of brilliant blue.
W. Black, Princess of Thule, vii

waist-boat (wāst'bōt), n. A boat carried in the waist of a vessel; specifically, in whaling, the second mate's boat, carried in the waist on the port side.

waist-boater (wāst'bō'tėr), n. The officer of the boat carried in the waist of a whaler; the second mate.

waist-cloth (wāst'klôth), n. 1. A piece of cloth worn by the natives in India around the waist and hanging below it, and, as often worn, passed between the thighs. Compare dhoty. — 2. Naut.: (a) Hammock cloths of the waist nettings. Hamersly. (b) pl Cloths hung about the cage-work of a ship's hull, to protect the men in action. Nares.

The rest of the day we spent in accommodating our Boat, in stead of thooles wee made stickes like Bedsteames, to which we fastened so many of our Massawomeck Targets that invironed her as waist clothes.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 185

My Lord did give me orders to write for flags and scarlett waistcloathes.
Pepys, Diary, May 7, 1660.

waistcoat (wāst'kot, colloq. wes'kot or -kot), n. [Formerly also waistcote, wascote, also dial. weskit; < waist + *coat*².] A name of various garments. (a) A body-garment for men, formerly worn under the doublet, and apparently intended to show through its slashes, or where it was left unbuttoned.

Ruffes for your hands waist cotes wrought with silke.
Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, ed. 1874, III. 42).

This morning my brother's man brought me a new black baize waiste coate faced with silk, which I put on, from this day laying by half-shirts for this winter.
Pepys, Diary, Nov. 1, 1663.

(b) A garment without sleeves worn under a coat. They were formerly long, reaching sometimes to the thighs, and were made of rich and bright colored material; now they are worn much shorter. They are generally single-breasted, but double-breasted waistcoats have been in fashion at different times.

He had on a blue silk waistcoat with an extremely broad gold lace.
Walpole, Letters, II. 359

The dangerous waistcoat, called by cockneys "vest."
O. W. Holmes, Urania

(c) A garment worn by women in imitation of a man's waistcoat. Compare (a).

In a stuffe Waiscote and a Petticote
Like to a chambermayd.
T. Cranley, Reformed Whore (1655). (Fairholt, I. 300)

The queen, who looked in this dress a white laced waist coate and a crimson short pettycoate . . . mighty pretty.
Pepys, Diary, July 1, 1665.

The dress bodice is fitted with two waistcoats, one of pale ecru corded silk overlaid with green and gold soutache braid, the other of silk striped white and green alternately.
New York Evening Post, March 5, 1887.

Sleeved waistcoat. See sleeved.

waistcoateer (wāst-kō-tēr', colloq. wes-kō-tēr'), n. [Formerly also spelled waistcoateer, waist coateer, waistcoteer; < waistcoat + -eer.] One who wears a waistcoat as a principal garment, without a coat or upper gown, in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, in London, a prostitute (probably from being so dressed).

Who keeps the outward door there? here's fine shuffling! You waistcoateer, you must go back.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

I knew you a waistcoateer in the garden alleys,
And would come to a sailor's whistle.
Massinger, City Madam, iii. 1.

waistcoating (wāst'kōt-ing, colloq. wes'kot-ing), n. A textile fabric made especially for men's waistcoats, and different from cloth intended to be used for coats and trousers. These stuffs usually contain silk, and are of a fancy pattern.

Mrs Carver bespoke from him two pieces of waistcoating.
Miss Edgeworth, The Dun, p. 315. (Davies.)

waist-deep (wāst'dēp), a. and adv. So deep as to reach or be covered from the feet up to the waist: as, the ford was waist-deep.

The eager Knight leap'd in the sea
Waist deep, and first on shore was he.
Scott, Lord of the Isles, v. 14.

waisted (wās'ted), a. [Formerly also wasted; < waist + *-ed*².] Having a waist (of some specified shape or type).

Med. I never saw a Coat better cut Sir Fop. It makes me show long-wasted.
Etherege, Man of Mode, iii. 2.

waister (wās'ter), n. [< waist + *-er*¹.] 1. A green hand on board a whaler, usually placed in the waist of the vessel until qualified for more responsible duties. — 2. On a naval vessel, formerly, one of a class of old men who have been disabled or grown gray without rising in the service.

waist-high (wāst'hi), a. [Formerly also wast-high; < waist + high.] As high as the waist.

Contemptible villages, . . . the grasse waist-high, unmoved, uncaten.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 117.

waist-panel (wast'pan'el), n. The panel immediately above the lowest panel on the outside of a carriage-body. Car-Builder's Dict. [Eng.]

waist-piece (wast'pēs), n. The steel skirt, or great braguette, of the armor of the fourteenth century. Compare cut under tasset.

waist-rail (wast'rāl), n. A horizontal piece in the framing of the side of a passenger-carriage. Car-Builder's Dict. [Eng.]

waist-torque (wast'tôrk), n. A girdle, properly one of twisted or spiral bars, worn by the northern nations in the early middle ages. Compare cut under torque.

waist-tree (wast'trē), n. A spare spar formerly placed along the waist of a ship where there were no bulwarks. Also called rough-tree.

wait (wāt), n. [Formerly also, erroneously, waight; < ME. wayte, waite, a watchman, spy, < OF. waite, gaite, a guard, sentinel, watchman, spy, later, guet, watch, ward, heed, also the watch or company appointed to watch (= Pr. gach, gayt), < OHG wahta, MHG wahte, G. wacht, a watchman; cf. Goth. wahtwo, a watch, < AS. wacan = Goth wakan, etc., wake, watch: see *wake*¹, watch. In senses 4, 5, 6, etc., the noun is from the verb.] 1†. A watchman; a guard; also, a spy. Prompt. Parv., p. 513.

And wysly hes ware [beware] wayts to the towne,
On ych half forto hede, that no harme fall.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6285

2. One of a body of musicians, especially in the seventeenth century in England. Originally the waits seem to have been watchmen who sounded horns, or in some other noisy way announced their being on watch. Bands of musicians seem to have borne the name generally at a later time, and it is still preserved in England, as applied to persons who sing out of doors at Christmas time, and seek gratuities from house to house.

A waute, that nightely from Mychelmas to Shrove Thorsdaye pipethe the watche within this courte fower tymes. . . . Also this yeoman waught, at the makinge of Knyghtes of the Bath for his attendance upon them by nyghte time, in watchinge in the chappelle, hath he to his fee all the watchinge clothing that the knyght shall wear upon him.
Rymer, quoted in Chambers's Book of Days, II. 743.

We will have the city waites down with us, and a noise of trumpets.
Shirley, Witty Fair One, iv. 2.

There is scarce a young man of any fashion who does not make love with the town music. The waits often help him through his courtship, and my friend Banister has told me he was proffered five hundred pounds by a young fellow to play but one winter under the window of a lady.
Tatler, No. 242.

A strain of music seemed to break forth in the air just below the window. I listened, and found it proceeded from a band which I concluded to be the waits from some neighboring village.
Irving, Sketch Book, p. 253.

3. An old variety of hautboy or shawm; so called because much used by the waits.

Grete bowys were at the assent,
Bygge bleue, to mete they wente
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 69. (Halliwell.)

The waits or hoboys.
Butler, Principles of Musick (1636), quoted in Chambers's Book of Days, II. 743.

4†. The act of watching; watchfulness.

The nimbleness & wait of the dog too take his vantage, and the fors & experiens of the bear agayn to make the assaults.
Robert Laneham, Letter from Kenilworth (1575).

5†. An ambush; a trap; a plot: obsolete except in the phrase to lie in wait.

Fals semblance hath a visage ful demure,
Lightly to catche the ladies in a waite;
Where-forē we must, if that we wil endure,
Make right good watche.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 78.

6. The act of waiting: as, a wait for the train at a station. — 7. Time occupied in waiting; delay; an interval of waiting; specifically, in theatrical language, the time between two acts. Compare stage-wait.

It was thought I had suffered enough in my long wait for the trial.
Mrs Oliphant, The Ladies Lindores, p. 96.

During the wait between the first and second parts the Prince sent for Herr Schoenberger, a pianist who had pleased him very much, and personally complimented him.
T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 161.

To lay wait. See *lay*¹. — To lie in wait. See *lie*¹. — Waits' badge, a badge formerly worn by town musicians, usually an escutcheon with the arms of the borough. Such badges exist in the treasuries of English towns and corporations.

wait (wāt), v. [< ME. waiten, wayten, < OF. waiter, waitier, gaiter, gaitier, guetter, F. guetter (Walloon wetter) = Pr. gaitar, gachar = It. guatare, watch, ward, mark, heed, note, lie in wait for, < OF. waite, gaite, a guard, sentinel: see wait, n. Cf. await.] I. intrans. 1†. To watch; be on the watch; lie in wait; look out.

He wayted after no pompe and reverence
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 525.

William ful wigtly waited out at an hole, & sek breme burnes bust in ful brigt armes.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2320.

2. To look forward to something; be in expectation: often with for.

She wayteth whan hir herte wolde breste.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 852.

Sil. And so, good rest.
Pro. As wretches have o'er night
That wait for execution in the morn
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 134.

Both waited patiently, and yet both prayed for the accelerating of that which they waited for: Daniel for the deliverance, Simeon for the Epiphany.
Donne, Sermons, iv.

3. To stay or rest in patience or expectation; remain in a state of quiescence or inaction, as till the arrival of some person or event, or till the proper moment or favorable opportunity for action: often with for.

Bid them prepare within.
I am to blame to be thus waited for.
Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 119.

Do but wait till I despatch my tailor, and I'll discover my device to you.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 1.

They also serve who only stand and wait
Milton, Sonnets, xiv.

The dinner waits, and we are tir'd.
Cowper, John Gilpin.

Wait till we give you a dictionary, Sir! It takes Boston to do that thing, sir.
O. W. Holmes, Professor, ii.

A tide of flame
Invective seem'd to wait behind her lips,
As waits a river level with the dam,
Ready to burst and flood the world with foam.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

4. To remain in readiness to execute orders; be ready to serve; be in waiting: perform the duties of an attendant or a servant; hence, to serve; supply the wants of persons at table.

Thou [a page] art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 2. 18.

How one of the Serving-men, untrain'd to wait, spilt the White broth!
Brome, Jovial Crew, v.

Three large men, like doctors of divinity, wait behind the table, and furnish everything that appetite can ask for.
Thackeray, Mrs. Perkins's Ball.

To wait on or upon [On, prep.] (a†) To watch; guard.

Loke that ye waite well upon me, and yef it be mystier *to*meth me to helpe.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 647.

(b†) To look at; look toward.

The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou givest them their meat in due season.
Ps. cxlv. 15.

It is a point of cunning to wait upon him with whom you speak, with your eye.
Bacon, Cunning (ed. 1887).

(c†) To lie in wait for.

This sonnour evere waitynge on his prey.
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 76.

(d†) To expect, look for.

I wot the in witte to waite on myn end.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7903.

(e†) To attend to, perform, as a duty.

According to the grace that is given unto us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy, . . . or ministry, let us wait on our ministering.
Rom. xii. 7.

ready to serve; be the waiting at.

You, lest you that wait on them be ashamed. Ps. xxv. 3.

Therefore turn thou to thy God: keep mercy and judgment, and wait on thy God continually. Hos. xii. 6.

(g) To attend upon as a servant; act as attendant to; be in the service of.

The Syrians had brought away . . . a little maid: and she waited on Naaman's wife. 2 Ki. v. 2.

How now, Simple! where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? Shak., Mr W. of W., i. 1. 208.

(h) To go to see; call upon; visit; attend.

I . . . have been twice to wait upon Dr. Brady; but was both times disappointed.
Edmund Gibson (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 229).

I suppose he will be here to wait on Mrs. Malaprop as soon as he is dress'd. Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 2.

(i) To escort; accompany; attend; specifically, to attend as bridesmaid or groomsman. [Colloq.]

Gentlemen, I beg pardon — I must wait on you down stairs; here is a person come on particular business.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

I used to be waitin' on her to singin' school.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown Stories, p. 123.

(j) To attend or follow as a consequence; be associated with; accompany.

Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both! Shak., Macbeth, iii. 4. 38.

Such silence waits on Philomela's strains.
Pope, Winter, l. 78.

Yet a rich guerdon waits on minds that dare,
If aught be in them of immortal seed.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, ii. 4.

To wait on. (On adv.) In falconry, to fly or hover aloft, waiting for game to be sprung: said of a hawk.

When the hawk has taken two or three pigeons in this way, and mounts immediately in expectation — in short, begins to wait on — she should . . . be tried at game.
Encyc. Brit., IX. 9.

II. trans. 1†. To observe; examine; take notice of; expect; watch for; look out for.

Nyght and day he spedde him that he can,
To wayten a tyme of his conclusioun.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 936.

Waite what y dide to marie maudelayne,
And what y sedde to thomas of ynde.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 165.

2†. To plan; scheme; contrive.

& [he] thongt or he went a-way he wold zif he migt waste hire sum wicked torn what bi tidde after
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 148.

3†. To seek.

Than farde Neetanabus forthe fro that place:
Hee wondes too a wilderness & waites him erbes.
Alexaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 808.

4. To stay for; attend; await; expect.

Go wait me in the gallery.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iv. 1.

They all
Complain aloud of Cato's discipline,
And wait but the command to change their master.
Addison, Cato, i. 3.

Then let him receive the new knowledge and wait us.
Pardoned in Heaven. Browning, Lost Leader.

5. To defer; put off; keep waiting: said of a meal. [Colloq.]

I shall go for a walk, don't you and Herbert wait supper for me. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 9.

6†. To attend upon; accompany; escort.

Most noble consul! let us wait him home.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1.

Proffering the Hind to wait her half the way,
That, since the sky was clear, an hour of talk Might help her to beguile the tedious walk.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 557.

7†. To follow as a consequence of something; attend upon.

Such doom
Waits luxury and lawless care of gain.
J. Phillips, Cider, i.

Defend me from the Woes which Mortals wait.
Congreve, Hymn to Venus.

To wait attendance†, to remain in attendance; be on hand or within call.

Wait attendance
Till you hear further from me.
Shak., T. of A., I. 1. 161.

wait-a-bit thorn. See under thorn.

waiter (wā'tėr), n. [< ME. waitere, wayter, weyter, later watere, < OF. waitier, guaitier, etc., guetter, F. guetter, wait: see wait, v. Cf. MHG. wahtære, wehter, G. wächter, a watchman.] 1†. A watcher.

And the childe weyter heuede vp his eyen, and bihelde.
Wyclif, 2 Ki. [2 Sam.] xiii. 34.

2†. A watchman: a guard or keeper.

During this parley the insurgents had made themselves masters of the West Port, rushing upon the Waiters (so the people were called who had the charge of the gates), and possessing themselves of the keys.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, vi.

3. One who waits; one who abides in expectation of the happening of some event, the arrival of some appointed time, some opportunity, or the like.

Waiters on Providence. Darwall, Callagher, ii. 4.

4. A domestic servant. Specifically — (a) A manservant for rough work about a house.

Dayly till other of these grooms, called waiters, to make fyres, to sett up trenayle and bourdes, with yonen of chambre, and to help dresse the beddes of aylke and arras.
Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 314.

(b†) A waiting-woman.

Enter . . . two waiting-women.
. . . Bid your waiters
Stand further off, and I'll come nearer to you.
Massinger, Unnatural Combat, i. 1.

(c) A man-servant who waits at table: applied more commonly to those who serve in hotels or restaurants.

Enter waiter.
Wait. Here is a gentleman desires to speak with Mr. Vincent.
Vin. I come. [Exit Vincent with Waiter.
Wycherley, Love in a Wood, i. 2.

Head-waiter of the chop-house here,
To which I most resort.
Tennyson, Will Waterproof.

5. An officer in the employ of the British custom-house. See coast-waiter, tide-waiter. — 6. A tray; a salver.

Just then a servant brought Lady Louisa a note upon a waiter, which is a ceremony always used to her ladyship.
Miss Burney, Evelina, lxxviii.

Ezra came quietly into the room again, and took up the waiter with the jelly-glass and the napkin.
The Century, XLI. 684.

Minority waiter, a waiter out of employment: in humorous allusion to a political minority, as being out of office. Compare def. 3.

I told Thomas that your Honour had already initiated five disbanded chairmen, seven minority waiters, and thirteen billiard-markers. Sheridan, The Rivals, ii. 1.

Quarterly waiter. Same as quarter waiter. — Waiters' cramp, an occupation neurosis of public waiters, consisting in pain and muscular spasm, excited by the attempt to carry dishes in the customary manner.

waiterage (wā'tėr-āj), n. [< waiter + -age.] Attendance by a waiter; service.

Imperial Hotel people . . . had brightened up; . . . all was done for me then that human waiterage in the circumstances could do. Carlyle, The Century, XXIV. 23.

waitering (wā'tėr-ing), n. [< waiter + *-ing*¹.] The employment or duties of a waiter.

Nor yet can you lay down the gentleman's service . . . and take up Waitering. Dickens, Somebody's Luggage, i.

wait-fee (wāt'fē), n. In feudal law, a periodical payment by way of commutation for relief from the duty of maintaining a tower and performing guard on the wall of a royal castle.

waiting (wā'ting), n. [< ME. waitynge, waytynge; verbal n. of wait, v.] 1†. Watching; hence, an ogling.

Of the lordshep of lecherye in lengthe and in brede,
As in werkes and in wordes and waitynges of eyes.
Piers Ploughman (C), iii. 94.

2. The act of staying or remaining in expectation.

In all ages, men have fought over words, without waiting to know what the words really signified.
J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., i. 127.

There was an awful waiting in the earth,
As if a mystery greatened to its birth.
R. W. Gilder, Interlude.

3. Attendance; service.

Green grasses for hock, and excellent waiting at table.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xxxvi.

Lords or grooms in waiting, officers of the British royal household who hold the same position under a queen regnant as lords or grooms of the bedchamber under a king.
Encyc. Brit., XXI. 97.

waitingly (wā'ting-li), adv. By waiting; as if waiting.

waiting-maid (wā'ting-mād), n. A maid-servant; a waiting woman.

Tokens for a waiting maid
To trim the butler with.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 2.

waiting-room (wā'ting-rōm), n. A room for the use of persons waiting, as at a railway-station or a public office.

A motley crowd filled the restaurant and waiting rooms.
Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 650.

waiting-vassal (wā'ting-vas'al), n. An attendant.

Your carters or your waiting vassals.
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 1. 121.

waiting-woman (wā'ting-wum'an), n. A woman who attends or waits in service: a waiting-maid.

Chamber-maids and waiting-women.
Shak. Lear, iv. 1. 65.

waitress (wā'tres), n. [< waiter + -ess.] A woman who waits at table: originally used only of one who served in a place of public entertainment.

The curtain drew up, and we beheld, seated at a long table, a company of monkeys! . . . the waiter and waitress were monkeys.
Anna Mary Howitt, Art Student in Munich, xviii.

wait-service (wāt'sėr'vis), n. The act of serving as wait or ward of a castle. — Tenure of wait-service, the holding a virgate or yard-land in consideration of serving as castle-wait or watch.

wait-treble (wāt'treb'l), n. A sort of bagpipe.
Halliwell.

waive (wāv), v.; pret. and pp. waived, ppr. waiving. [Also wave; < ME. waiven, weyven, weiven, weyven, < OF. waiver*, weiver*, weyver, guesver, guever (Mlt. waiviare), waive, refuse, abandon, give over, surrender, give back, resign, perhaps < Icel. veifa, vibrate, swing about, move to and fro, = Norw. veiva, swing about, = OHG. sweifan, MHG. weifen, waifen, fluctuate, waver, = Goth. bi-waibjan, waver; cf. L. vibrare, vibrate. Cf. waif, n. The verb waive is distinct from *wave*¹, with which it is often confounded.]

I. trans. 1†. To refuse; forsake; decline; shun.

Anon he weyveth milk and flessh and al,
And every deyntee that is in that hous.
Chaucer, Manciple's Tale, l. 169.

Within two dales after wee were hailed by two West-Indies men; but when they saw vs waive them for the King of France, they gaue vs their broad sides.
Capt. John Smith, Works, II. 211.

He lent you impreat money, and upbraids it;
Furnished you for the wooing, and now waives you.
B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, iv. 1.

2†. To move; remove; push aside.

Biddeth Amonde gow meke him til his maistre ones,
To wayue vp the wiket that the woman shette,
The (when) Adam and Eue eten apples vnrotted.
Piers Ploughman (B), v. 611.

Thou, by whom he was deceived
Of love, and from his purpose waived.
Gower, Conf. Amant., ii.

3. To relinquish; forsake; forbear to insist on or claim; defer for the present; forgo: as, to waive a subject; to waive a claim or privilege.

Whereas it hath pleased the Heads of the University to understand it for three years absolutely, I purpose not to waive that construction.
Thomas Adams (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 167).

You may safely waive the mobility of your birth, and rely on your actions for your fame.
Dryden, Ded. of Plutarch's Lives.

I have so great a love for you that I can waive opportunities of gain to help you. Steele, Spectator, No. 475.

I have waived his visit till I am in town.
Walpole, Letters, II. 184.

4. In law: (a) To relinquish intentionally (a known right), or intentionally to do an act inconsistent with claiming (it). See waiver. (b) To throw away, as a thief stolen goods in his flight. (c) In old Eng. law, to put out of the protection of the law, as a woman.

If the defendant be a woman, the proceeding is called a waiver: for, as women were not sworn to the law, . . . they could not properly be outlawed, but were said to be waived, i. e., derelicta, left out, or not regarded. Wharton.

II. intrans. To depart; deviate.

Yow be lieth, for youre heighe prudence,
To weyven fro the word of Salomon.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 230.

waivet (wāv), n. [See waif.] 1. A waif; a poor homeless wretch; a castaway.

O Lord! what a waive and stray is that man that hath not thy marks on him! Donne.

2. In law, a woman put out of the protection of the law.

Waive, a Woman that is Out law'd, she is so called as being forsaken of the Law, and not an Out law as a Man is. Glossographia Anglicana (1707).

waiver (wā'vėr), n. [Formerly also waver; < OF. waiver*, weyver, waive, refuse, renounce, inf. as noun: see waive.] In law: (a) The act of waiving; the intentional relinquishment of a known right; the passing by or declining to accept a thing.

Waiver, in a general way, may be said to occur wherever one, in possession of a right conferred either by law or by contract, and knowing the attendant facts, does or forbears to do something inconsistent with the existence of the right or of his intention to rely upon it, in which case he is said to have waived it, and he is estopped from claiming anything by reason of it afterward. Bishop.

The earliest conception . . . of public justice was a solemn waiver on the part of the community of its right and duty of protection in the case of one who had wronged his fellow member of the folk.
J. R. Green, Conq. of England, p. 23.

(b) In old Eng. law, the legal process by which a woman was waived, or put out of the protection of the law.

waivode, waiwode (wā'vōd, wā'wōd), n. Same as voivode.

waiwodeship (wā'wod-ship), n. Same as voivodeship.

Wakasa lacquer. See lacquer.

wake¹ (wāk), v.; pret. and pp. waked or woke, ppr. waking. [Under this form are merged two verbs, one strong, the other weak: (a) < ME. waken (pret. wok, wook, woe; pl. woken; pp. waken, waken), < AS. wacan* (pret. wóc, pp. wacen*), arise, come to life, originate, be born, = Goth. wakan (pret. wôk), wake. (b) < ME. waken, wakien (pret. waked, pp. waked), < AS. wacian (pret. wacode, pp. wacod) = OS. wakôn = OFries. waka = D. MLG. waken = OHG. wachen, wahhên, MHG. G. wachen = Icel. vaka = Sw. vaka = Dan. vaage, wake; cf. AS. weccan, weccean (pret. wehte) = OS. wekkian = D. wekken = OHG. weckken, MHG. G. wecken = Goth. wakjan*, in comp. uswakjan, arouse, awake; akin to L. vigil, wakeful, watchful, vigere, flourish, etc.: see vigil. Cf. watch, wait, from the same ult. source; cf. also waken, awake, awaken.] I. intrans. 1. To be awake; continue awake; refrain from sleeping.

John the clerk, that waked hadde al nyght.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 384.

And, for my soul, I can not sleep a wink
I nod in company, I wake at night.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. i. 13.

I could wake a winter night,
For the sake of somebody Burns, My Heart is Sair.

2. To be excited or roused from sleep; cease to sleep; awake; be awakened: often followed by a redundant or intensive up.

Look you, my lady's asleep: she'll wake presently
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 1.

3. To keep watch; watch while others sleep; keep vigil; especially, to watch a night with a corpse. [Prov. Eng. and Irish.]

And they woke ther al that nyght,
With many torches & candle lyght.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 86.

The people assembled on the vigil, or evening preceding the saint's day, and came, says an old author, "to churche with candelyes burnyng, and would wake, and come toward night to the church in their devocion," agreeable to the requisition contained in one of the canons established by king Edgar, whereby those who came to the wake were ordered to pray devoutly.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 169.

4. To be active; not to be quiescent.

I sleep, but my heart waketh. Cant. v. 2.

To keep thy sharp woes waking.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1136.

5. To be excited from a torpid or inactive state, either physical or mental; be put in motion or action.

Gentle airs, due at their hour,
To fan the earth now waked. Milton, P. L., x. 94.

Breathed in fitful whispers, as the wind
Sighs and then slumbers, wakes and sighs again
O. W. Holmes, Sympathies.

6†. To hold a late revel; carouse late at night.

The king doth wake to night, and takes his rouse,
Keeps wassail, and the swaggering up-spring reels
Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 8.

7. To return to life; be aroused from the sleep of death; live.

That, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 1 Thess. v. 10.

II. trans. 1. To rouse from sleep; awake; awaken: often followed by a redundant or intensive up.

She hath often dreamed of unhappiness and waked herself with laughing Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 261.

She's asleep with her eyes open, pretty little rogue; I'll wake her and make her ashamed of it.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 2.

2. To watch by night; keep vigil with or over; especially, to hold a wake over, as a corpse. See wake[1], n., 3.

And who that will wake that Sparhauk 7 dayes and 7 nyghtes, and, as some men seyn, 3 dayes and 3 nyghtes, with outen Companye and with outen Sleep, that faire Lady schal zeven him, whan he hathe don, the first Wyssche that he will wyssche of erthely thinges.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 145.

You were right, dear, from first to last, concerning the poor creature's dead child: she did not want to have it waked at all, for she is not that way — not an Irishwoman at all.
Miss Edgeworth, Garry Owen.

3. To arouse; excite; put in motion or action: often with up.

Prepare war, wake up the mighty men. Joel iii. 9.

Thou hadst been better have been born a dog
Than answer my waked wrath!
Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 363.

He felt as one who, waked up suddenly
To life's delight, knows not of grief or care
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 171.

4. To bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death; revive; reanimate.

To second life
Wak'd in the renovation of the just.
Milton, P. L., xi. 65.

The willows, waked from winter's death,
Give out a fragrance like thy breath.
Bryant, The Arctic Lover.

5. To disturb; break.

No murmur waked the solemn still,
Save tinkling of a fountain rill.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 26.

wake[1] (wāk), n. [< ME. wake, < AS. wacu*, wake or watch, in comp. niht-wacu, a night-wake (= Icel. vaka = MLG. wake, watch), < wacan, wake: see wake[1], v. Hence, in comp., likewake, lychwake.] 1†. The act of waking, or the state of being awake; the state of not sleeping.

Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep
As is the difference betwixt day and night
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 219.

I have my desire, sir, to behold
That youth and shape which in my dreams and wakes
I have so oft contemplated.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, ii. 1.

2. The act of watching or keeping vigil, especially for a solemn or festive purpose; a vigil; specifically, an annual festival kept in commemoration of the completion and dedication of a parish church; hence, a merrymaking; a festive gathering. The wake was kept by an all-night watch in the church. Tents were erected in the churchyard to supply refreshments to the crowd on the following day, which was kept as a holiday. Through the large attendance from neighboring parishes at wakes, devotion and reverence gradually diminished, until they ultimately became mere fairs or markets, characterized by merrymaking and often disgraced by indulgence and riot. In popular usage this word has the same meaning as vigil. The wake or revel of country parishes was, originally, the day of the week on which the church had been dedicated; afterward, the day of the year. In 1536 an act of convocation appointed that the wake should be held in every parish on the same day, namely, the first Sunday in October, but it was disregarded. Wakes are expressly mentioned in the "Book of Sports" of Charles I. among the feasts which should be observed. The wake appears to have been also held on the Sunday after the day of dedication, or, more usually, on the day of the saint to whom the church was dedicated. In Ireland it is called the patron day. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

He is wit's peddler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassails, meetings, markets, fairs.
Shak., L. L. L., v. ii. 318.

Didsbury Wakes will be celebrated on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of August [1823] . . . The enjoyments consist chiefly of ass races, for purses of gold, prison-bar playing, and grinning through collars, for ale, . . . and balls each evening. Quoted in Hone's Year Book, col. 958.

3. An all-night watch by the body of the dead, before burial. This custom seems to be of Celtic origin, and is now characteristic of Ireland, or of the Irish in other countries; but it was formerly observed in Scotland and Wales. It probably originated from a superstition that the body might be carried off by invisible spirits, or from a more rational fear of injury to it from wild beasts. In early literature it has the name of likewake, lychwake. The wake was originally a combination of mourning for the dead and rejoicing in his memory and for his deliverance, but in later times has often degenerated into a scene of wild grief and gross orgies. See likewake.

How that the lyche-wake was y holde
Al thilke night. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2100.

The late wake is a ceremony used at funerals. The evening after the death of any person, the relations and friends of the deceased meet at the house, attended by a bagpipe or fiddle, the nearest of kin, be it wife, son, or daughter, opens a melancholy ball, dancing and greeting, i. e. crying violently, at the same time; and this continues till daylight, but with such gambols and frolics among the younger part of the company that the loss which occasioned them is often more than supplied by the consequences of that night. If the corpse remain unburied for two nights, the same rites are renewed.
Pennant, Tour in Scotland, p. 112.

wake[2] (wak), n. [= D. wak, an opening in ice, < Icel. vok (vak-), a hole, opening in the ice, = Sw. vak = Norw. vok = Dan. vaage, an opening in ice; allied to Icel. vökr, moist, vökva, moisten, water, > Sc. wak, moist, watery, = D. wak, moist; < Teut. √ wak, wet, = Indo-Eur. √ wag, L. umere, be moist, Gr. ὑγρός, moist: see humid, humor, hygro-, etc. Cf. OF. ouaque, F. ouache, houache, wake, < E.] 1. The track left by a ship or other moving object in the water. A ship is said to follow in the wake of another when she follows in the same track, and to cross the wake of another when she crosses the course in which the other has passed.

In the wake of the ship (as 'tis call'd), or the smoothness which the ship's passing has made on the sea.
Dampier, Voyages (an. 1699). (Richardson.)

2. Hence, a track of any kind; a course of any nature that has already been followed by another thing or person.

I've see or thrive . . . a water-cart went along by the Pyncheon house, leaving a broad wake of moistened earth.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xi.

There we may go on, in the wake of so many travellers and conquerors, to those lands beyond the sea.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 248.

A torpedo could be sent so closely in the wake of another as to take instant advantage of the opening made in the netting.
Daily Telegraph, Sept. 25, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

3. A row of damp green grass. Encyc. Dict. [Prov. Eng.]

wakeful (wāk'fūl), a. [Early mod. E. wakefull; < wake[1] + -ful; a late ME. form substituted for AS. wacol, wacul (= L. vigil), vigilant, wakeful.] 1. Indisposed or unable to sleep; affected by insomnia.

Two swains whom love kept wakeful and the Muse.
Pope, Spring, l. 38.

And her clear trump sings succor everywhere
By lonely bivouacs to the wakeful mind.
Lowell, Commemoration Ode, ix.

2. Watchful; vigilant.

Nor hundred eyes,
Nor brasen walls, nor many wakefull spyes.
Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 7.

Intermit no watch
Against a wakeful foe. Milton, P. L., ii. 402.

3. Rousing from, or as from, sleep.

The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep. Milton, Nativity, l. 166.

= Syn. 1 and 2. See watchful.

wakefully (wāk'fūl-i), adv. [< wakeful + -ly[2].] In a wakeful manner; with watching or sleeplessness.

wakefulness (wāk'ful-nes), n. [< wakeful + -ness.] The state or character of being wakeful; especially, indisposition or inability to sleep.

A state of mental wakefulness is favourable to attention generally. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 89.

waken (wā'kn), v. [< ME. waknen, wacknen, wakenen, < AS. wæcnan, arise, be aroused, be born (= Icel. vakna, become awake, = Sw. vakna = Dan. vaagne = Goth. ga-waknan, awake), with pass. formative -n, < wacan*, etc., wake: see wake[1], and cf. awaken.] I. intrans. 1. To wake; cease to sleep; be awakened: literally or figuratively.

So that he bigan to wakne. Havelok (E. E. T. S.), l. 2164.

'Tis sweet in the green spring
To gaze upon the waken'ing fields around.
Bryant, Spring-Time.

2. To keep awake; refrain from sleeping; watch.

The eyes of heaven that nightly waken
To view the wonders of the glorious Maker Fletcher, Mad Lover, v.

Now sleeps the crimson petal, now the white, . . .
The fire-fly wakens, waken thou with me.
Tennyson, Princess, vii.

II. trans. 1. To excite or rouse from sleep; awaken.

May the winds blow till they have waken'd death.
Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 188.

Go, waken Eve;
Her also I with gentle dreams have calm'd.
Milton, P. L., xii. 594.

2. To excite to action or motion; rouse; stir up.

Yif we wacken vp werre with weghes so fele.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2274.

I'll shape his sins like Furies, till I waken
His evil angel, his sick conscience.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, v. 2.

3. To excite; produce; call forth.

Venus now wakes, and wakens love.
Milton, Comus, l. 124.

They introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high.
Milton, P. L., iii. 369.

waken† (wā'kn), a. [Also dial. wacken; < ME. waken, < AS. wacen* (= Icel. vakinn = Sw. vaken = Dan. vaagen), pp. of wacan*, wake: see wake[1].] Awake; not sleeping.

But that grief keeps me waken, I should sleep.
Marlowe. (Imp. Dict.)

wakener (wāk'nėr), n. [< waken + -er[1].] One who or that which wakens or rouses from sleep, or as from sleep. Feltham, Resolves, ii. 36.

wakening (wāk'ning), n. [Verbal n. of waken, v.] The act of one who wakens; the act of ceasing from sleep.

Sound and safely may he sleep,
Sweetly lily his wauk'ning be!
Burns, Jockey's ta'en the Parting Kiss.

Wakening of a process, in Scots law, the reviving of a process in which after calling a summons, no judicial proceeding takes place for a year and day, the process being thus said to fall asleep.

wake-pintle† (wāk'pin'tl), n. An old name of the wake-robin.

wake-play† (wāk'plā), n. [< ME. wake-pleye; < wake[1] + play[1].] A funeral game.

Ne how that lyche-wake was yholde
Al thilke night, ne how the Grekes pleye
The wake-pleyes, ne kepe I nat to seye.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2102.

waker[1] (wā'kėr), n. [< wake[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who wakes or rouses from sleep.

Lets wenches and no daily waiters.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, i. 4.

2. One who watches; a watcher.—3. One who attends a wake.

I'll have such men, like Irish wakers, hired To sing old "Habeas Corpus." Meere, Corruption.

waker[2], a. [< ME. wakyr, wakeful, < AS. wæcor = Icel. vakr = Sw. wacker, wakeful, watchful.] Watchful; vigilant.

Waker howndes been profitable.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 32.

The waker goos, the cukkow ever unkynde.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 358.

In every plume that on her [a monster's] body sticks . . .
As many waker eyes lurk underneath,
So many mouths to speak, and listening ears.
Surrey, Æneid, iv.

wakerife (wāk'rif), a. [Also waukrife; < wake[1] + rife[1].] Wakeful. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

Be wer, therefor, with wakryfe Ee,
And mend, geue ony myster be.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), l. 489.

Wail thro' the dreary midnight hour
Till waukrife morn!
Burns, On Capt. Matthew Henderson.

wake-robin (wāk'rob'in), n. 1. In Great Britain, the cuckoo-pint, Arum maculatum. The name is extended also to the whole genus.—2. In the United States, a plant of the genus Trillium; birth-root, or three-leaved nightshade.—Virginian wake-robin, the arrow-arum, Peltandra undulata. See tuckahoe, 1.—West Indian wake-robin, a plant of either of the genera Anthurium and Philodendron. See both, also tail-flower.

Flowering Plant of Wake-robin (Trillium erectum).
a, a flower (not open). b, the fruit, with the persistent sepals.

wake-time (wāk'tīm), n. Time during which one is awake. Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, ii.

wakiki (wak'i-ki), n. A variety of shell-money used in New Caledonia and other islands of the Pacific. Compare wampum.

waking (wā'king), p. a. 1. Being awake; not sleeping.

If you're waking call me early.
Tennyson, May Queen, New Year's Eve.

2. Rousing from sleep; exciting into motion or action.—3. Passed in the waking state; experienced while awake: as, waking hours.

Such sober certainty of waking bliss.
Milton, Comus, l. 263.

Waking numbness, a numbness and tingling lasting for a short time, sometimes experienced upon first waking from sleep, but soon disappearing.

waking (wā'king), n. [< ME. wakinge, wakynge, wacunge; verbal n. of wake[1], v.] 1. The act of passing from sleep to wakefulness, or of causing another so to pass.

They sleep secure from waking.
Cowper, Friendship, l. 123.

2. The state or period of being awake.

His sleeps and his wakings are so much the same that he knows not how to distinguish them.
S. Butler, Characters.

3†. Watch.

Aboute the fourth waking of the night
Wyclif, Mark vi. 48.

4. A vigil; especially, the act of holding a wake, or of watching the dead.

To speken of bodily peyne, it stant in preyeres, in wakynges, in fastynges, in vertuouse techinges of ornouns.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

wakon-bird (wā'kon-bėrd), n. A fabulous bird among the American Indians, or some actual bird regarded with superstition or used in religious ceremonial. Various unsuccessful attempts have been made to identify it. The quetzal of Central America has been sometimes so called, or regarded as one of the wakons. Compare sunbird (c), and thunder-bird, 2.

Walachian, a. and n. See Wallachian.

walawa†, interj. Same as wellaway.

Walcheren fever. A severe form of malarial fever: so called from Walcheren, an island of the Netherlands, where it at one time prevailed. During the Walcheren expedition, in 1809, the English lost thousands of troops by a fever caused (as was believed) by the badness of the water, this loss leading to the entire failure of the expedition.

Walchia (wal'ki-ä), n. A generic name given by Sternberg (in 1825) to a fossil plant very abundant in, and characteristic of, the Permian series. This plant belongs to the Coniferæ, and has a close resemblance in its general appearance to the Araucarieæ, but, since its organs of fructification are unknown, its position has not as yet been exactly determined. It is in certain respects allied to Brachyphyllum and Pagiophyllum, conifers found in the Triassic and Jurassic. Schenk (1884) makes a separate division (the Walchieæ) of certain conifers, in which he includes the genera Walchia, Ullmannia, and Pagiophyllum of Heer (Pachyphyllum of Saporta). Ullmannia is also a characteristic plant of the Permian, being found in numerous localities in the Kupferschiefer; while Pagiophyllum occurs in the Trias of the United States, in various places in Europe in the Triassic and Jurassic, and in India in the Gondwana series.

walchowite (wal'kō-it), n. [< Walchow (see def.) + -ite[2].] A yellow translucent mineral resin, occurring in the brown coal of Walchow in Moravia; retinite.

wald†, n. A Middle English form of weld[1].

waldemar (wol'de-mär), n. A variety of velveteen, or cotton velvet, apparently a superior quality of fustian.

Waldenberg's apparatus. An apparatus constructed on the principle of a gasometer, used for compressing or rarefying air which is inhaled, or into which the patient exhales.

Waldenses (wol-den'sēz), n. pl. [Also Valdenses. Cf. F. Vaudois = Sp. Pg. It. Valdese; < ML. Valdenses, pl., so called from Peter Valdo or Waldo of Lyons, the founder of the sect.] The Waldensians.

Waldensian (wol-den'sian), a. and n. [Also Valdensian (see def.); < Waldenses + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Waldensians or Waldenses.

The important point of the origin of the Waldensian Church is clearly established, being referred to Waldo, in opposition to the fanciful theories which tried to carry it back through mysterious paths to the primitive Christian times. The Academy, No. 808, p. 320.

II. n. A member of a reforming body of Christians, followers of Peter Waldo (Valdo) of Lyons, formed about 1170. Its chief seats were in the alpine valleys of Piedmont, Dauphiné, and Provence (hence the French name Vaudois des Alpes, or Vaudois). The Waldenses joined the Reformation movement, and were often severely persecuted, especially in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The Waldensian church in Italy now numbers about 20,000 members.

waldflute (wold'flōt), n. [< G. waldflöte, < wald, forest, + flote, flute.] In organ-building, a flute-stop giving soft but very resonant tones.

waldgrave (wold'grāv), n. [< G. waldgraf, < wald, forest, + graf, grave: see weld[1] and grave[5], graf.] In the old German empire, a head forest ranger; also, a German title of nobility.

Waldheimia (wold-hī'mi-ä), n. [NL., named after Fischer von Waldheim, a German naturalist.] 1. A genus of hymenopterous insects, Braulio, 1846.—2. A genus of brachiopods, such as W. australis, containing a few living as well as many extinct species, and forming the type of the family Waldheimiidæ. Also called Magellana. See also cut under deltidium. King, 1849.

Section of Waldheimia australis, lateral view.
a, dorsal surface; b, ventral surface; c, anterior wall of pericardial cavity; d, brachial appendages; d', right lateral portion of the same; e, great brachial canal; f, small brachial canal; g, brachial grooved ridges; h, shorter transverse portion of calcareous loops; i, j, posterior and anterior lateral adductors; k, divaricator; l, accessory divaricators; m, ends of divaricators attached to cardinal processes; n, ventral wall of renal chamber; o, pedicle; p, pedicular sheath; q, teeth; r, dental muscle; s, œsophagus; t, right hepatic cæca; u, u', ovaries; v, intestine; w, genital cæcum; x, ventral mesentery; y, its upper part; z, pericardium; w', genital papilla; y', blood sinus in mesentery; m, mouth; s, œsophageal ganglia.

Waldheimiidæ (wold-hī-mī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Waldheimia + -idæ.] A family of arthropomatous brachiopods, closely related to Terebratulidæ, and by most naturalists combined with that family, but characterized by the elongated brachial appendages.

waldhorn (wold'hôrn), n. [G., < wald, forest, + horn, horn: see weld[1] and horn.] The old hunting-horn, without valves, from which the modern orchestral or French horn was derived; the corno di caccia. See horn.

Waldsteinia (wold-stī'ni-ä), n. [NL. (Willdenow, 1799), named after Count Franz A. von Waldstein (1759–1823), a German botanist.] A genus of rosaceous plants, of the tribe Potentilleæ. It is characterized by flowers with numerous triseriate rigid persistent stamens, and two to six carpels, their styles not elongated. The 4 species are natives of central and eastern Europe, Siberia, and North America. They are herbs with creeping or stoloniferous stems, suggesting the strawberry-plant, bearing alternate long-petioled leaves, which are entire, cleft, or compound, sometimes with three to five crenate or incised leaflets, and large membranous stipules. The yellow flowers are borne, two to five together, on a bracted scape, often with curving pedicels. W. fragarioides is the barren strawberry of the United States, widely diffused through northern and mountainous parts of the Eastern and Central States.

wale[1] (wāl), n. [Also weal, improp. wheal; < ME. wale, < AS. walu (pl. wala), a weal, mark of a blow; found also in comp. wyrt-walu, root, prop. stump of a root (orig. 'rod'), = OFries. walu, a rod, staff (as in walu-bera, walebera, staff-bearer, pilgrim), = North Fries. waal, staff, = MLG. wol (in wolbreder, pilgrim) = Icel. völr (val-), a round stick, staff, = Sw. dial. val, a stick, flail-handle, = Goth. walus, staff.] 1. A rod. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A ridge or plank along the edge of a ship. Compare gunwale.

Wyghtly one the wale thay wyn up thaire ankers.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 740.

3. A timber bolted to a row of piles to secure them together and in position; a wale-piece.—4†. A wale-knot. Holland.—5. A ridge in cloth, formed by a thread or a group of threads; hence, a stripe or strain implying quality.

Thou art rough-spun fur
And of a coarser wale, father of pride.
Beau. and Fl., Four Plays in One.

By my troth, exceeding good cloth; a good wale 't 'an.
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, ii. 2.

6. A streak or stripe produced on the skin by the stroke of a rod or whip.

The wales or marks of stripes and lashes were all red.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 847.

7. A tumor, or large swelling. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—Wales of a ship. See bend[1], 3 (d).

wale[1] (wāl), v. t.; pret. and pp. waled, ppr. waling. [Also improp. whale; < wale[1], n.] 1. To mark with wales or stripes.

A wyckad wound hath me walled,
And traveyld me from topp to too.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 216.

Thy sacred body was stripped of thy garments, and waled with bloody stripes. Bp. Hall, Christ before Pilate.

2. To weave or make the web of, as a gabion, with more than two rods at a time.

wale[2] (wāl), n. [< ME. wale, < Icel. val = OHG. wala, MHG. wal, G. wahl, choice; from the root of wel[2].] A picking or choosing; the choice; the pick or pink of anything; the best. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

You got your wale o' sev'n sisters,
And I got mine o' five.
Lord Barnaby (Child's Ballads, II. 317).

To wale, at choice; in abundance.

Wilde beastes to wale was there enow.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 332.

wale[2] (wāl), v. t.; pret. and pp. waled, ppr. waling. [Sc. also wail, < ME. walen, welen = OHG. wellen, MHG. welu, wellen, G. wählen = Icel. velja = Sw. välja = Dan. vælge = Goth. waljan, choose; from the noun: see wale[2], n.] To seek; choose; select; court; woo. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

"Where schulde I wale the?" quoth Gauan; "where is the place?
I wot neuer where thou wonyes."
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 893.

A noble man for the noneë [is] named Pelleus.
That worthy hade a wyfe walit hym schon,
The truthe for to telle, Tetys she heght.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 105.

Of chays men syne, walit by out dout, that tuke
A gret numbyr, and hyd in hyghs dern.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), Gloss., p. 208.
(G. Douglas, I. 72.)

He wales a portion with judicious care.
Burns, Cotter's Saturday Night.

wale[2] (wāl), a. [< ME. wale; from the same source as wale[2], n.] Choice; good; excellent. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Myche woo hade the wegh for the wale knight.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1268.

wale[3]†, n. An obsolete form of weal.

wale-knot† (wāl'not), n. Same as wall-knot.

wale-piece (wāl'pēs), n. [< wale[1] + piece.] A horizontal timber of a quay or jetty, bolted to the vertical timbers or secured by anchor-rods to the masonry to receive the impact of vessels coming or lying alongside. E. H. Knight.

Waler (wā'lėr), n. [< Wales (see def.) + -er[1].] A horse imported from Australia, particularly from New South Wales. [Anglo-Indian.]

For sale, a brown Waler gelding.
Madras Mail, June 25, 1873. (Yule and Burnell.)

My Waler was cautiously feeling his way over the loose shale. Rudyard Kipling, Phantom Rickshaw.

wale-wight†, a. [Also wall-wight, wal'-wight; also waled wight; < wale[2], a., + wight[2], a.] Choice and active; chosen and brave.

If fifteen hundred waled wight men
You'll grant to ride with me.
Auld Maitland (Child's Ballads, VI. 220).

Walhalla, n. See Valhalla.

walie[1], a. and n. See waly[1].

walie[2], n. Same as valet.

waling (wā'ling), n. [< wale[1] + -ing[1].] The weaving of the web of a gabion with more than two rods at a time.

walise (wa-lōz'), n. A Scotch form of valise.

walk (wâk), v. [Under this form are merged two verbs, one strong, the other weak: (a) < ME. walken (pret. walk, pl. walken, walken, pp. walke, iwalken), < AS. wealcan (pret. wæalc, pp. wealcen), move, roll, turn, revolve, = MD. walcken, cause to move, press, squeeze, strain, D. walken, felt (hats), = OHG. walchan, full (cloth), roll oneself, wallow, MHG. walken, G. walken, full (cloth), felt (hats). (b) < ME. walken (pret. walkede, walkede, pp. walked) = Icel. valka, volka, roll, stamp, roll oneself, wallow, = Sw. walka, roll, full (cloth), = Dan. valke, full (cloth); prob. akin to L. vulgus, bent, vergere, bend, turn, incline: see verge[2]. I. intrans. 1†. To be in motion or motion; act; move; go; be current.

Se ar knyȝt comlokest kyd of your elde,
Your worde & your worship walkez ay quere [every where].
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (L. E. T. S.), l. 1079.

And over as she went her toung did walke
In fowle reproch. Spenser, F. Q., II. iv. 9.

2. To be stirring; be abroad; move about.

Jesus walked in Galilee, for he would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him. John vii. 1.

She walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies.
Byron, She Walks in Beauty.

3. To go restlessly about; move about, as an unquiet spirit or specter, or as one in a state of somnambulism.

When I am dead,
For certain I shall walk to visit him,
If he break promise with me.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, ii. 1.

4. To move off; depart. [Colloq.]

When he comes foorth, he will make theyr cowes and garrans to walke. Spenser, State of Ireland.

Brownborough has sat for the place now for three Parliaments. . . . I am told that he must walk. If any body would go down who could talk to the colliers every night for a week or so. Trollope, Phineas Redux, I.

5. To live and act or behave in any particular manner; conduct one's self; pursue a particular course of life.

Fadres and Modres that walk a-mys won Schul lone heore children.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 143.

Walk humbly with thy God. Micah vi. 8.

6. To move with the gait called a walk. See walk, n., 5.

O, let me see thee walk, thou dost not halt.
Shak., 1 of the 8, II. 1. 238.

He walks, he leaps, he runs — is wing'd with joy
Cowper, Task, i. 443.

7. To go or travel on foot: often followed by an accusative of distance: as, to walk five miles.

In his slepe hym thoghte
That in a forest faste he walk to wepe.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 235.

But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastward hill.
Shak., Hamlet, I. 1. 167.

I was constrained to walke a foote for the space of seven miles. Coryat, Crudities, I. 92.

I'll walk aside,
And come again anon.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iv. 3.

8. To move, after a manner somewhat analogous to walking as an effect of repeated oscillations and twistings produced by expansion and contraction or by the action of wants. Chimneys have been known to move in this manner. — The ghost walks. See ghost. To walk again † time. See time. To walk awry. See awry. To walk into, to attack: see def. 9. To assault; give a beating or drubbing to. (b) To fall foul of verbally; give a scolding to. (c) To eat heartily of. [Vulgar in all senses.]

There is little Jacob, walking, as the popular phrase is, into a home-made plum-cake, at a most surprising pace.
Dickens, Old Curiosity Shop, lxviii.

To walk over the course, in sporting, to go over a course at a walking or slow pace: said of a horse, runner, etc., coming alone to the scratch, and having to go over the course to win; hence, figuratively, to gain an easy victory, attain one's object without opposition. Also to walk over. Compare walk-over. — To walk Spanish. See Spanish. — To walk tall. See tall[2]. — Walk about, a military phrase used by British officers to sentinels, to waive the ceremony of being saluted.

II. trans. 1†. To full, as cloth.

Payment vj d., for the walkin of like ell [ell] of the said xix ell & a half.
Acts Dom. Conc. A. 1488, p. 95. (Jamieson.)

2. To proceed or move through, over, or upon by walking, or as if by walking; traverse at a walk.

If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus Should with his lion gait walk the whole world.
Shak., Hen. V., II. 2. 122.

Yes — she is ours — a home returning bark; . . .
She walks the waters like a thing of life.
Byron, Corsair, i. 3.

3. To cause to walk; lead, drive, or ride at a walk.

I will rather trust . . . a thief to walk my ambling gelding. Shak., M. W. of W., II. 2. 319.

I am much indebted to you
For dancing me off my legs, and then for walking me
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iii. 1.

4. To escort in a walk; take to walk.

I feel the dew in my great toe, but I would put on a cut shoe, that I might be able to walk you about; I may be laid up to-morrow.
Colman and Garrick, Clandestine Marriage, ii.

Old Pendennis . . . walked the new arrivals about the park and gardens, and showed them the carte du pays.
Thackeray, Pendennis, lvi.

5. To move, as a box or trunk, in a manner having some analogy to walking, partly by a rocking motion, and partly by turning the object on its resting-point in such manner that at each rocking movement an alternate point of support is employed, the last one used being always in advance of the previous one in the direction toward which the object is to be moved. — 6. To send up or keep in a walk. See walk, n., 8 (b).

It is customary to send puppies out at three or four months of age to be kept by cottagers, butchers, small farmers, etc., at a weekly sum for each, which is called walking them. Dogs of Great Brit. and America, p. 197.

To walk one's chalks. See chalk. — To walk the chalk, to walk the chalk-mark, to keep straight in morals or manners: a figurative phrase, from the difficulty a drunken man has in walking upon a straight line chalked upon the floor by his comrades to test his degree of sobriety. Compare I., 5. To walk the hospitals, to attend the medical and surgical practice of a general hospital, as a student, under one or more of the regular staff of physicians or surgeons attached to such a hospital. Walking the plank. See plank.

walk (wâk), n. [< ME. walk, walk, < AS. gewealc, a rolling, moving, = MHG. walc = Icel. valk, a tossing; from the verb.] 1. Manner of action; course, as of life; way of living: as, a person's walk and conversation.

This is the walk an holy walk he lives in,
And chooses ever to increase his holiness.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, iv. 3.

Oh for a closer walk with God!
Cowper, Olney Hymns, i.

2. Range or sphere of action; a department, as of art, science, or literature.

There are strong minds in every walk of life, that will rise superior to the disadvantages of situation.
A. Hamilton, The Federalist, XXXVI.

She [Mrs. Cibber] made some attempts latterly in comedy, which were not, however, in any degree equal to her excellence in the opposite walk.
Life of Quin (reprint 1887), p. 40.

3. The act of walking for air or exercise; a stroll: as, a morning walk.

Make an early and long walk in goodness.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., i. 35.

Nor walk by moon,
Or glittering starlight, without thee is sweet.
Milton, P. L., iv. 665.

To vent thy bosom's swelling rise
In pensive walk.
Burns, The Vision, ii.

4. Manner of walking; gait; step; carriage.

Catherine . . . watched Miss Thorpe's progress down the street from the drawing-room window; admired the graceful spirit of her walk the fashionable air of her figure and dress. Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, iv.

5. The slowest gait of land animals. In the walk of bipeds there is always one foot on the ground; in that of quadrupeds there are always two, and a part of the time three feet on the ground. When very slow, or with heavy draft animals when hauling, all four feet touch the ground at once for brief intervals. In the walk of ordinary quadrupeds the limbs move in diagonal pairs, the movement of the pair not being so nearly simultaneous as in Consecutive Positions of a Horse in Walking.

(After a series of instantaneous photographs by Eadweard Muybridge.)

the trot and varying much in this respect with the different degrees of speed and with the individual habits of the animal. Compare cut under run.

Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig.
Shak., T. N., i. 3. 138.

He stands erect, his slouch becomes a walk,
He steps right onward, martial in his air.
Cowper, Task, iv. 630.

6. A piece of ground fit to walk in; a place in which one is accustomed to walk; a haunt.

His walk
The fiery serpent fled and noxious worm.
Milton, P. R., i. 311.

We intend to lay ambushment in the Indian's walks, to cut off their men.
N. Thomas (Appendix to New England's Memorial, p. 430).

7. A place laid out or set apart for walking; an avenue; a promenade.

I saw a very goodly walke in Mantua rooted over and supported with thirty nine faire pillars.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 148.

Specifically — (a) An avenue set with trees or laid out in a grove or wood.

Get ye all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 19.

Up that long walk of lime I past.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxxvii.

(b†) pl. Grounds; a park.

He hath left you all his walks,
His private arbours and new planted orchards,
On this side Tiber. Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 252.

(c) A path in or as in a garden or street; a sidewalk: as, a flagged walk; a plank walk.

He strayed down a walk edged with box, with apple-trees, pear trees, and cherry trees on one side, and a border on the other, full of all sorts of old-fashioned flowers.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

(d) In public parks and the like, a place or way for retirement: as, gentlemen's walk.

8. A piece of ground on which domestic animals feed or have exercise.

He eats the eggs for breakfast and the chickens for dinner, goes in for fancy breeds, and runs up an ornamental walk for them. A. Jessopp, Arcady, i.

Specifically — (a) A tract of some extent where sheep feed, a pasture for sheep; a sheep-walk. See sheep run.

He had walk for a hundred sheep.
Latimer, 1st Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

(b) A place where puppies are kept and trained for sporting purposes.

Preference should be given to the home rearing if properly carried out, because it has all the advantages of the walk without those disadvantages attending upon it.
Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 197.

(c) A pen in which a gamecock is kept with a certain amount of liberty, but separated from other cocks, to get him in condition and disposition for fighting.

9. A district habitually served by a hawker or itinerant vender of any commodity.

One man told me . . . that he had thoughts at one time of trying to establish himself in a cats' meat walk, and made inquiries into the nature of the calling.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 10.

10. In the London Royal Exchange, any part of the ambulatory that is specially frequented by merchants or traders to some particular country. Simmonds. — 11†. A district in a royal forest or park marked out for hunting purposes.

I will keep . . . my shoulders for the fellow of this walk [i. e. Herne, the hunter, in Windsor Park].
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 29.

They like better to hunt by stealth in another man's walk. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 373.

12. A ropewalk. — 13†. In falconry, a flock or wisp of snipes. — Cock of the walk. See cock. — Heel-and-toe walk, a walk in which the heel of one foot is …ground before the toe of the other foot leaves it.

walkable (wâ'ka-bl), a. [< walk + -able.] Fit for walking; capable of being walked on. [Rare.]

Four new walkable roads.
Swift, Letter to Sheridan, May 15, 1736.

walk-around (wâk'a-round'), n. A comic dance in which the performer describes a large circle.

walker (wâ'kėr), n. [< ME. walker, < AS. wealcere* (= OHG. walkari, MHG. walker, welker = Sw. valkare = Dan. valker), a fuller, < wealcan, roll, full: see walk. Hence the surname Walker, which has the same meaning as Fuller.] 1†. One who fulls cloth; a fuller.

And his clothis ben maad schynynge and white ful moche as snow, and which maner clothis a fullere, or walkere of cloth, may not make white on erthe.
Wyclif, Mark ix. 2.

2. One who deports himself in a defined manner.

There is another sort of disorderly walkers who still keep amongst us.
Bp. Compton, Episcopalia, p. 66. (Latham.)

3. One who walks; a pedestrian: as, a fast walker.

Where the low Penthouse bows the Walker's head,
And the rough Pavement wounds the yielding Tread.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 158.

4. In Eng. forest law, an officer appointed to walk over a certain space for inspection; a forester.—5†. A prowler; one who goes about to do evil.

Wepyng, y warne zow of walkers aboute;
It beth enemyes of the cros that crist upon tholede.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 80

Walkers by nyght, with gret murderers,
Overthwarte with gyle, and joly carders.
Quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 422.

6. One who trains or walks young hounds. See walk, v. t., 6, and n., 8 (b).

The toast, "Success to fox hunting, and the puppy walkers of England." Field, Aug. 27, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

7. In ornith.: (a) A bird of terrestrial but not aquatic habits; especially, one of the Gallinæ: correlated with percher, wader, and swimmer. (b) A bird which belongs to the perching group, but which, when on the ground, advances by moving one foot after the other, instead of both together; a gradient or gressorial as distinguished from a saltatorial bird.—8. pl. In entom., the ambulatory orthopterous insects of the family Phasmidæ; the phasmids or walking-sticks. See Gressoria.—9†. That with which one walks; a foot; a leg.

And with them halted down (Proud of his strength) lame Malchiber, his walkers quite mistrown,
But made him treat exceeding sore.
Chapman, Iliad, xv 39

Double walker, a fanciful name for an amphibæna.—Walker! or Hookey Walker! a slang ejaculation of incredulity uttered when a person tells a story which one believes to be false or "gammon." Various problematical explanations have been offered. [Slang, Eng.]

"I'll stand by it [a prize turkey]." "Walk er!" exclaimed the boy. "No, no," said Scrooge, "I am in earnest."
Dickens, Christmas Carol, v

Walkers' clay, fullers' earth.—Walkers' earth, fullers' earth. The use of the word walker for fuller has now become obsolete in England, but a certain unctuous variety of fullers' earth found in the Lower Ludlow beds, in Wales, appears to be sometimes provincially designated both as walkers' earth and as dye earth.

Walker cell. See cell, 8.

Walker tariff. See tariff.

walking (wâ'king), n. [< ME. walkynge; verbal n. of walk, v.] 1†. The act or process of fulling cloth.—2†. A mode or manner of behaving or living.

He confessed his faults, and promised better walking.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 302.

3. The act of one who or that which walks.

I will find a remedy for this walking (i. e., in sleep), if all the doctors in town can tell it.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 2.

walking (wâ'king), p. a. Proceeding at a walk; proceeding on foot; not standing still.

Alas, I am nothing but a multitude Of walking griefs.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iii. 1.

Walking crane. See *crane*², 1.—Walking delegate, a member of a trade-union or body of organized laborers who visits other organizations and employers in the interests of his order, voices demands of organized laborers in strikes, etc.—Walking funeral, a funeral procession in which the corpse is carried by men on foot and the mourners follow also on foot. [Colloq.]—Walking gentleman, an actor who plays unofficial well-dressed parts of small importance.

The walking gentleman, who wears a blue surtout, clean collar, and white trousers for half an hour, and then shrinks into his worn-out seedy clothes.
Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, xi.

Walking lady, an actress who fills parts analogous to those taken by the walking gentleman.—Walking stationer. See stationer.—Walking toad. Same as watterjack.

walking-beam (wâ'king-bem), n. In mach. See beam, 2 (i).

walking-cane (wâ'king-kân), n. Originally, a walking-stick made of some variety of cane; hence, in common use, a walking-stick of any sort. See *cane*¹.

walking-dress (wâ'king-dres), n. A dress for the street; especially, at the present time, such a dress for women, as distinguished from a dinner-dress, an evening-dress, etc.

walking-fan (wâ'king-fan), n. A fan of great size, with a handle about 18 inches long, carried out of doors to screen the face from the rays of the sun. Compare the quotation.

Nurse. My fan, Peter.
Mercutio. Good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer face.
Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before, and apace.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 4. 112, 223.

walking-fern (wâ'king-fėrn), n. A small tufted evergreen fern, Camptosorus rhizophyllus, native of eastern North America, having the fronds Walking fern (Camptosorus rhizophyllus).

a, frond.

heart-shaped or hastate at the base, and tapering above into a slender prolongation, which frequently takes root at the apex (whence the name). Also walking-leaf.

walking-fish (wâ'king-fish), n. 1. A fish of the family Ophiocephalidæ.—2. A fish of the genus Antennarius.—3. Same as silverfish, 6.

walking-foot (wâ'king-fût), n. A foot or leg fitted for walking; an ambulatory leg: in Crustacea, correlated with jaw-foot and swimming-foot. See cuts under Astacus and endopodite.

walking-leaf (wâ'king-lef), n. 1. Same as walking-fern.—2. An orthopterous insect of the family Phasmidæ, belonging to Phyllium or some closely allied genus. The body is flat, the antennæ are short, the legs have broad leaf-like expansions, the female wing-covers are large, and veined like leaves, which they closely resemble. The females are usually wingless, while the males generally possess large wings, but lack wing-covers or tegmina. Also called leaf-insect. See cut under Phyllium, and compare walking-stick, 2.

walking-papers (wa'king-pa'pėrz), n. pl. A dismissal. [Colloq.]

walking-staff (wâ'king-stâf), n. A staff used for assistance in walking, especially such a staff longer than the ordinary walking-stick or cane.

walking-stick (wâ'king-stik), n. 1. A stick prepared for use as an assistance in walking, differing from the staff (compare pilgrim's staff, under pilgrim, and *bourdon*¹) in being generally shorter and lighter. Walking sticks were especially in fashion as part of the costume of a man of elegance toward the close of the seventeenth and in the eighteenth century. The length of 3 feet or somewhat less has generally been maintained, but temporary fashion has favored much longer ones, and at times has required them to be carried by women. They are sometimes carried so light and limber as to be rather for amusement and occupation of the hands than for support. Compare *cane*¹, 4.

Walking-stick (Diapheromera femorata).

2. Any one of the slender-bodied species of the gressorial orthopterous family Phasmidæ; a stick-bug; a spectre. The common walking stick of the eastern United States is Diapheromera femorata. See also cut under Phasma, and compare walking-leaf, 2. Walking-stick palm. See *palm*².

walking-straw (wa'king-stra), n. A kind of walking-stick, the large Diura or Cyphocrana titan, 6 or 8 inches long, a native of New South Wales.

walking-sword (wâ'king-sôrd), n. Same as city sword (which see, under city).

walking-ticket (wâ'king-tik'et), n. An order to leave; dismissal. [Colloq.]

walking-twig (wâ'king-twig), n. Same as walking-stick, 2. See stick-bug, 1, and walking-straw.

walking-tyrant (wâ'king-ti'rant), n. A South American tyrant-flycatcher, Machetornis rixosa (formerly Chrysolophus cubulans, whence the book name). It is a strong form, with long bill and stout legs, apparently belonging to the tendopterine section of the family. It is of a brownish olive color, beneath bright yellow, the wings and tail brown, the latter with yellowish tip, and a crown with a median scarlet crest. It is 7½ inches long, and inhabits the plains of Brazil, Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, the Argentine Republic, and Venezuela.

Walking tyrant (Machetornis rixosa).

walking-wheel (wâ'king-hwēl), n. 1. A cylinder which is made to revolve about an axle by the weight of men or animals climbing by steps either its external or its internal periphery, being employed for the purpose of raising water, grinding corn, and various other operations for which a moving power is required. See treadwheel.—2. A pedometer. E. H. Knight.

walk-mill† (wâk'mil), n. [< ME. walk-mylne; < walk + *mill*¹.] A fulling-mill.

Hys luddokkys [loins] thay lowke like walk-mylne clogges.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 313

The Clothiers in Flanders, by the flatnesse of their riuers, cannot make Walkmilles for their clothes [clothes].
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 103.

walk-out (wâk'out), n. A laborer's strike. [Colloq., U. S.]

walk-over (wâk'o'vėr), n. In sporting, a race in which but one contestant appears, who, being obliged to go over the course, may walk instead of running; also, the winning of such a race; hence, figuratively, an easy victory; success gained without serious opposition. [Colloq.]

"That's the bay stallion there," said one man to me, as he pointed to a racer, "and he's never been beaten. It's his walk over."
The Century, XXXVIII. 403.

walkyr (wol'kir), n. Same as valkyr.

walkyrian (wol kir'i-an), a. [< walkyrie + -an.] Same as valkyrian.

walkyrie (wol kir'i), n. [ME., < AS. wælcyrie = Icel. valkyrja: see valkyr.] 1. Same as valkyr.—2†. A wise woman; a fate-reader.

As the sage sathrapas that sersey couthe;
Wyches & walkyries wemen to that axle [hall].
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1577.

wall¹ (wâl), n. [< ME. wal, walle, < AS. weal, weall, a rampart of earth, a wall of stone, = OS. wal = OFries. wal = D. wal = MHG. wal, G. wall = Sw. vall = Dan. vold, wall, = W. gwal, rampart, < L. vallum, an earthen wall or rampart set with palisades, a row or line of stakes, a wall, rampart, fortification, < vallus, stake, pale, palisade, circumvallation. From the same L. source are ult. E. vallate, vallation, circumvallation, etc. The native AS. word for 'wall' is wah: see *waw*². The L. word for a defensive stone wall is murus: see mure.] 1. A work or structure of stone, brick, or other materials, serving to inclose a space, form a division, support superincumbent weight, or afford a defense, shelter, or security. Specifically—(a) One of the upright inclosing sides of a building or a room.

And the Helyng of here Houses, and the Wowes and the Bores ben alle of Wode.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 247.

If the walls of their [Assyrian palaces'] apartments had not been wainscoted with alabaster slabs, we should never have been able to trace their form with anything like certainty.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 163.

(b) A solid and permanent inclosing fence of masonry, as around a field, a garden, a park, or a town.

2. A rampart; a fortified enceinte or barrier: often in the plural. See cuts under chemin-des-ronde, fortalice, and retaining wall.

Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 1.

3. Something which resembles or suggests a wall: as, a wall of armed men; a wall of fire.

Within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor.
Shak., K. John, III. 3. 29.

Compass'd round by the blind wall of night,
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

4. A defense; means of security or protection.

They were a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.
1 Sam. xxv. 16.

5. In mining, one of the surfaces of rock between which the vein or lode is inclosed; the country, or country rock, adjacent to the vein. See vein. If the vein is, as is usually the case, inclined at an angle, the wall which is over the miner's head, or overhangs him, is called the hanging wall; that which is under him, the foot-wall. In coal-mining the rock adjacent to the bed of coal which is being worked is called the roof or the floor, according as it is above or beneath, and this is the case whether the strata be horizontal or inclined at an angle. The walls of a vein are called in some parts of England the cheeks.

6. In her., a bearing having some resemblance to a wall, usually embattled. It generally covers a large part of the escutcheon, and the line of division between it and the field may be bendwise, or bendwise sinister. It is, therefore, a division of the field by an embattled or crenelle line, the lower part being masoned, and having usually an arched doorway represented in it.

7. In anat. and zool., a paries; an extended investing or containing structure or part of the body; as, a cell-wall; the walls of the chest or abdomen: generally in the plural.—8. In corals, the proper outer investment of the visceral chamber, whether of a single corallum or of a single corallite of a compound corallum. Hard structures upon the inside of the wall are the endotheca; upon the outside, the exotheca. The condition of the wall varies greatly: it is pervious, as in the Perforata, or impervious, as in the Aporosa; smooth, or variously costate, striate, etc.; and it may be indistinguishably united with the coenenchyme, or replaced more or less completely by the epitheca.

9. Same as wall-knot. Bridge wall. Same as bridge[1], n., 4. Counterscarp, dwarf, grout wall. See the qualifying words. Hanging wall, in mining, that wall of the vein or lode which is over the miner's head while he is working, the vein being supposed to have a decided underlay. The opposite wall is the foot-wall. If the vein is perfectly vertical, there is neither hanging wall nor foot wall, and the two walls are then distinguished by reference to the points of the compass. Also called hanging side. Head wall. See head. Hollow wall, a double wall with a vacant space between the two faces. Mask-wall. See mask[3]. Median, partition, perpend wall. See the qualifying words. Plinth of a wall. See plinth. Retaining wall. See retaining. Straight ends and walls. See straight[1]. The wall, the right or privilege of passing next the wall when encountering another person or persons in the street: a right valued in old-fashioned streets with narrow sidewalks or no footpath, as giving a safer or more cleanly passage: used also in the phrase to give or take the wall.

Spa. Signor Cavalero Dangliatero, I must have the wall.
Eng. I doe protest, hadst thou not enforst it, I had not regarded it, but since you will needs have the wall, He take the paine to thrust you into the kennel.
Heywood, If you Know not me, I

To drive to the wall. See drive. To go to the wall, to be pushed to one side; succumb to rivals or to the pressure of circumstances. To hang by the wall, to hang up neglected; hence, to remain unused.

All the enrolled penalties
Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall
Shak., M. for M., I. 2. 171.

To push or thrust to the wall, to force to give place; crush by superior power.

Women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall.
Shak., R. and J., I. 1. 20.

To take the wall of. See the wall (above) and take. Trapezoidal wall, a retaining wall, upright where it comes against the bank, but with a sloping face. Vitrified wall. See vitrified. Wall-barley. Same as sparrel-tail. Wall-teeth. Same as molar teeth (which see, under tooth). (See also party wall, tramma wall.)

wall[1] (wâl), v. t. [< ME. walle, wallen, wall, surround with walls.] 1. To inclose with a wall or as with a wall; furnish with walls: as, to wall a city.

Certes the Kyng of Thebes, Amphioun,
That with his syngyng walled that citee.
Chaucer, Manciple's Tale, l. 13.

This flesh which walls about our life
Shak., Rich. II., III. 2. 167.

2. To defend by walls; fortify.

The terror of his name that walls us in From danger. Ingham.

3. To obstruct or hinder as by a wall.

On either hand thou there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 5.

4. To fill up with a wall.

The ascent [to the mosque of Sultan Hassan] was by several steps, which are broken down, and the door walled up.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 51.

5. In Eng. university slang, same as gate.

To gate or wall a refractory student.
Macmillan's Mag., II. 222.

To wall a rope, to make a wall-knot on the end of a rope.

wall[2] (wâl), v. i. [< ME. wallen, < AS. weallan (pret. weól, pp. weallen), boil, well, = OS. wallan = OFries. walla = D. wallen = OHG. wallan = MHG. G. wallen = Icel. vella (pret. val) = Goth. wallan* (not recorded), boil, well. Hence ult. well[1] (a secondary form of wall[2]), wall[1], n., well[1], n., wallop[1], etc.] 1. To boil. Ray.—2. To well, as water; spring. Alliterative Poems (E. E. T. S.), l. 305.

wall[2] (wâl), n. [< ME. walle, < AS. weall* (= OFries. walla), a well, < weallan, boil, well: see wall[2], v., and cf. well[1], n.] A spring of water. [Prov. Eng.]

Amyd the toure a walle dede aprynge,
That never is drye but ernynge.
Religious Poems, XV. Cent. (Halliwell.)

wall[3] (wal), n. [Also waule; also erroneously whall, whal, whale, whaul (chiefly in comp.); < Icel. vagl = Sw. vagl, a wall in the eye, a sty on the eye; prob. a particular use of Icel. vagl, a beam, = Sw. vagel = Norw. vagl, a roost, perch. Hence, in comp., wall-eye.] A disease of the eyes: same as wall-eye.

Oeil de chevre, a whall, or ouer-white eye; an eye full of white spots, or whose apple seems diuided by a streake of white. Cotgrave, 1611.

walla, wallah (wol'ä), n. [Anglo-Ind.] A doer; a worker; a dealer; an agent; a keeper; a master; an owner; hence, an inhabitant; a man; a fellow: as, a punka-walla; a Hooghly walla. It is sometimes applied to things.

An inferior type of vessel both as regards coal-stowage, speed, endurance, and seaworthiness, has been built. These "canal wallahs," as they are sometimes called, are quite unfitted for the voyage round the Cape, and, should the [Suez] canal be blocked by war or accident, they would be practically useless in carrying on our Eastern trade. Science, XII. 157.

Chicken-walla. See chicken[2]. Competition walla, a member of the civil service who has received his appointment under the competitive system introduced in 1856, as opposed to one appointed under the older system of influence and interest: a colloquial and hybrid term.

wallaba (wol'a-ba), n. [Guiana name (?).] See Eperua.

wallaby (wol'a-bi), n. [Also wallabee, whallabee; from an Australian name.] A general native name of the smaller kangaroos of Australia, especially those of the genera Halmaturus and Protogale; a rock-kangaroo.

"What does your lordship suppose a wallaby to be?" "Why, a half-caste, of course." "A wallaby, my lord, is a dwarf kangaroo." Contemporary Rev., LIII. 3.

On the wallaby, on the wallaby track, out of work, in search of a job: the wallaby being proverbially shy and elusive. [Slang, Australia.] Wallaby acacia or wattle, an Australian shrub, Acacia rubens, having in place of leaves linear phyllodia 2 or 3 inches long. Wallaby-bush, an Australian evergreen shrub, Boyeria viscosa, of the Euphorbiaceæ; also, other species of the genus. Wallaby-grass, Danthonia penicillata of Australia.

Wallace's line. See line[2].

Wallach, Wallack (wol'ak), n. [< G. Wallach, from a Slav. form represented by Pol. Włoch, an Italian, Wołoch, a Wallach, Serv. Vlah, a Wallach, = Bohem. Vlach, an Italian, = OBulg. Vlahu, a Wallach, also a shepherd; ult. < OHG. walh (= AS. wealh), a foreigner, a Teut. term applied on one side to the Slavic neighbors of the Germans, and on the other to the Celtic neighbors of the Saxons: see further under Welsh.] 1. A member of a race in southeastern Europe: see Roumanian.—2. The language of the Wallachs; Roumanian.

Also Walach.

Wallachian (wo-la'ki-an), a. and n. [< Wallachia (< Wallach) + -ian.] I. a. Pertaining to Wallachia, formerly one of the Danubian principalities, and now a part of the kingdom of Roumania; of or pertaining to the Wallachs.—Wallachian rye. See rye[1], 1.—Wallachian sheep, a variety of the domestic sheep, Ovis aries, having enormously long twisted horns found in parts of western Asia and eastern and southern Europe, whence also called Cretan sheep.

II. n. Same as Wallach. Also called Roumanese.

Also Walachian, Vlach.

Wallack, n. See Wallach.

wall-arcade (wâl'ar-kad'), n. An arcade used as an ornamental dressing to a wall. See cut in next column.

wallaroo (wol-a-ro'), n. [Australian.] A native name of some of the great kangaroos, as Macropus robustus, P. L. Sclater.

wall-bearing (wâl'bâr'ing), n. In mach., a bearing which receives a shaft as it enters or passes through a wall. It has a casing of cast-iron built into the wall to protect the bearing and support the masonry above it, while the bottom forms a bedplate for the plumber block. Also called wall box. E. H. Knight.

Wall arcade, end of the 12th century, St. Julien de Brioude, Department of Haute Loire, Auvergne, France. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. de l'Architecture.") wall-bird (wâl'bėrd), n. The beam-bird, or spotted flycatcher, Muscicapa grisola. Also wall-piat. [Local, British.]

wall-box (wâl'boks), n. 1. Same as wall-bearing.—2. A box set into a wall for the reception of letters for the post. Encyc. Dict.

wall-clamp (wâl'klamp), n. A brace or tie to hold together two walls, or the two parts of a double wall. E. H. Knight.

wall-clock (wâl'klok), n. A clock made to be hung upon the wall.

wall-crane (wâl'krān), n. A crane fixed upon a wall or column so as to command a sweep over a given area, the nearer points being reached by an overhead traveler: used in foundries, forges, etc. E. H. Knight.

wall-creeper (wâl'krē'pėr), n. Any bird of the family Certhiidæ and subfamily Tichodromineæ, of which there are several species. The best known is Tichodroma muraria of Europe, also called spider catcher. See cut under Tichodroma.

wall-cress (wâl'kres), n. A plant of the genus Arabis, particularly those outside of the section Turritis, the tower-mustard; rock-cress. A white-flowered species, A. alpina, a dwarf hardy plant, has been much cultivated, also the allied A. alpina, and with little merit A. procurrens. A blepharophylla of California is desirable for its rose-purple flowers. The species when ornamental are suited to rock-work, but many are of a weedy character.

wall-desk (wal'desk), n. A form of folding desk attached to a wall at a convenient height above the floor.

wall-drill (wal'dril), n. See drill[1].

walled[1] (wâld), p. a. [< ME. walled; < wall[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Provided with a wall or walls; inclosed or fortified with a wall; fortified.

We are bigger in batell, haue a burghe stronge,
Wele walled for the werre, wafris aboute.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2121.

The approach to Troy is a speaking commentary on the state of things in days when no one but the lord of a private fortress could be safe anywhere within a walled town.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 177.

2. In her.: (a) Accompanied by the appearance of stone masonry. Thus, a pale walled is flanked on each side with the representation of quoins, as if at the corner of a building. The blazon should state how many of these quoins there are on each side. (b) Covered with lines representing or indicating stone masonry: noting the field or an ordinary. —Walled plain. Same as ring-plain.

walled[2] (wâld'), a. [< wall[3] + -ed[2].] Having a defect in color or form: said of the eye. [Colloq. or provincial.]

A man with a red goatee, . . . rather undersized, and with one eye a little walled.
E. Eggleston, The Century, XXXV. 865.

wall-engine (wâl'en'jin), n. An engine fastened to a wall. It is generally a vertical engine, and is used for driving shafting or furnishing a supply of feed-water to a boiler. E. H. Knight.

waller[1] (wâ'lėr), n. [< late ME. wallare; < wall[1] + -er[1].] One who builds walls.

waller[2] (wâ'lėr), n. [< wall[2] + -er[1].] One who boils salt, takes it out of the leads, etc.

Wallerian (wo-lē'ri-an), a. [< Waller (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to or associated with A. Waller (died 1856), an English physiologist.—Wallerian degeneration, see degeneration.—Wallerian law, a law in regard to degeneration in nerves, whereby the degeneration follows the course of the impulses in the affected fibers toward either the center or the periphery.—Wallerian method, the method of identifying nerve-fibers by their degeneration at one point following section at another.

wallet (wol'et), n. [< ME. walet, wealette, possibly a transposition or corruption of watel, a bag: see wattle. For a similar transposition, cf. nesld for needle.] 1. A long bag with a slit in the middle, and space for the contents at the two ends: a form familiar in silk knitted purses, and revived for larger bags for women's use.

His walet lay biforn him on his lappe.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 688.

A Wallet, . . . G. Bisac, i. bis saccus, a double sacke or bagge. Minsheu, 1617.

As an instance of another form of the wallet—and that a very old one—may I mention the little triangular piece of stuff, something like a bag, that is suspended from behind the left shoulder of a junior barrister's gown as now worn? . . . about eight or nine inches in length, and divided by a slit at the bottom into two compartments, one of which is open and the other enclosed and capable of holding small articles. N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 78.

2†. Anything protuberant and swagging. Compare wattle.

Who would believe there were mountaineers
Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh? Shak., Tempest, iii. 3. 46.

3. A flat bag of leather, with a flap, or a hinged opening with a clasp, at the top: used for tools, etc., or in a small size for carrying coin on the person.

The wallet, or tool-bag, is generally supplied with the machine [bicycle or tricycle].
Bury and Hillier, Cycling, p. 132.

4. A pocketbook, especially a large one for containing papers, bank-notes laid flat and not folded, and the like.—5. A small kit carried by anglers. A wallet generally includes thread and needles, awl, waxed ends, shoemakers' wax, a few hobnails, coarse and fine twine, a pair of small pliers, a file, a spring-balance to weigh fish, court-plaster, shellac varnish, prepared glue, boiled linseed-oil, etc.

6. In her., a bearing representing a scrip. See scrip[1].—Wallet open, in her., a bearing representing a scrip with the mouth open, usually having a sort of flap or cover turned back.

valleteer† (wol-e-tēr'), n. [< wallet + -eer.] One who bears a wallet; hence, a traveler on foot; a pilgrim. Tollet. (Jodrell.) valletful (wol'et-ful), n. As much as a wallet contains; a purseful.

Wedden hure for hure welthe and wlashen on the morwe
That hus wyf were wex, other a watel-ful of nobles.
Piers Ploweman (C), xi. 230

walleye (wâl'ī), n. [Early mod. E. waule eye; a back-formation from wall-eyed.] 1. An eye in a condition in which it presents little or no color, the iris being light-colored or white, or opacity of the cornea being present; also, this condition itself.

Glaucidus, An horse with a waule eye.
Cooper's Thesaurus.

2. Divergent strabismus, in which the white of the eye is conspicuous.—3. A large staring eye, as of some fishes.—4. A wall-eyed fish. Especially—(a) A pike perch (which see). (b) The alewife, or wall-eyed herring. (c) A surf-fish, Holconotus argenteus. [California.]

wall-eyed (wâl'īd), a. [Formerly waule-eyed, whalle-, chaule-, whall-eyed (also whall, etc., separately), prob. < Icel. rald-eygthr, a corruption of ragl-eygr, wall-eyed, said of a horse, < ragl, a disease of the eye, + eygthr, eyed, < auga, eye: see wall[3] and eye[1].] 1. Having a walleye or walleyes, as a horse.

Walking would be twenty times more genteel than such a paltry conveyance, as Blackberry was wall-eyed, and the colt wanted a tail. Goldsmith, Vicar, x.

2. Showing much of the white of the eye; having a large staring or glaring eye: as, the wall-eyed pike. See pike[2], and cut under pike-perch.—3. See the quotation. [Provincial.]

Any work irregularly or ill done is called a wall-eyed job. It is applied also to any very irregular action.
Halliwell.

4. Glaring; fierce; threatening.

This is . . . the vilest stroke
That ever wall-eyed wrath or staring rage
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.
Shak., K. John, iv. 3. 49.

Wall-eyed herring, the alewife or walleye.

wall-fern (wâl'fėrn), n. A small evergreen fern, Polypodium vulgare, which grows on cliffs or walls. See polypody.

wallflower (wâl'flou'ėr), n. 1. An old favorite garden flower and pot-plant, Cheiranthus Cheiri, native in southern Europe, where it grows on old walls, cliffs, and the sides of quarries. The flowers have four petals, with a spreading limb on long claws, colored a deep-orange, or in cultivation varying from pale-yellow to deep-red, are clustered in short racemes, and are sweet scented. It is grown in many varieties, classed as single and double biennials and double perennials. It grows by preference upon walls, forming there an enduring bush, but may be planted on rocky banks, and is also one of the finest of border-plants. It formerly shared the name of heart's-ease, and in western England a dark-red variety is called bleeding-heart. A common name also is gillyflower, or, for distinction, wall-gillyflower. The name is extended to other species of the genus and to some species of Erysimum.

Wallflower (Cheiranthus Cheiri).

2. A man or woman who, at a ball or party, sits by the wall, or looks on without dancing, either from choice or from being unable to dance or to obtain a partner. [Colloq.]

I believe there are men who have shown as much self-devotion in carrying a lone wall-flower down to the supper-table as ever saint or martyr in the act that has canonized his name. O. W. Holmes, Professor, vi.

Native wallflower of Australia, Pultenæa daphnoides, of the Leguminosæ.—Western wallflower of the United States, Erysimum asperum, a plant found in Ohio, and more commonly westward, with orange yellow flowers of the size of and like those of the wallflower.

wall-fruit (wal'frōt), n. Fruit which, to be ripened, must be planted against a wall.

wall-gecko (wâl'gek'ō), n. A gecko, especially Platydactylus muralis of southern Europe.

wall-germander (wâl'jėr-man'dėr), n. See Teucrium.

wall-gillyflower (wâl'jil'i-flou-ėr), n. See wallflower.

wall-grenade (wâl'grē nād'), n. A bombshell somewhat larger than the hand-grenade. It was thrown by hand from the rampart of a fortification, or from a small mortar called a hand-mortar.

wall-hawkweed (wâl'hak'wēd), n. A European hawkweed, Hieracium murorum, often growing on walls. Also French or golden lungwort.

wallhick (wâl'hik), n. The lesser spotted woodpecker, Picus minor. Montagu. See hickwall. [Local, British.]

walling[1] (wâ'ling), n. [< wall[1] + -ing[1].] 1. Walls collectively; materials for walls.

The general character of the Roman walling is described in Hartshorne's essay "Porchester Castle."
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 323.

2. In mining, the brick or stone lining of a shaft; tenning. Dry walling, walling without the use of mortar or cement.

walling[2] (wa'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wall[2], v.] The act of boiling; a boiling. Grose. [Prov. Eng.]

The walling or making of salt, &c.
Record Soc. Lancashire and Cheshire, XI. 114

wall-ink (wâl'ingk), n. The brook lime, Veronica Beccabunga, a creeping plant of wet places in the northern Old World. [Scotland and Ireland: in the latter sometimes well-ink.]

Wallis's theorem. See theorem.

wall-knot (wâl'not), n. [Formerly also wale-knot.] Naut., a large knot made on the end of a rope by interweaving the strands in a particular manner.

wall-less (wal'les), a. [< wall[1] + -less.] Having no wall.

The blood was poured into wall-less lacunæ.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 263.

wall-lettuce (wâl'let'is), n. A European lettuce, Lactuca (Prenanthes) muralis.

wall-light (wâl'lit), n. A bracket or girandole for candles or lamps.

wall-lizard (wâl'liz'ärd), n. 1. A gecko; any lizard of the family Geckonidæ. See Geckonidæ, and cuts under gecko and Platydactylus.—2. A common European lizard, Lacerta muralis.

wall-louse (wâl'lous), n. The bedbug, Cimex lectularius (Acanthia lectularia). See cut under bug.

wall-moss (wâl'môs), n. 1. The yellow wall-lichen, Parmelia parietaria.—2. The stonecrop or wall-pepper, Sedum acre. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

wall-net (wâl'net), n. A vertical net forming the wall of an inclosed space, as of a pound-net. See cut under pound-net.

wall-newt (wâl'nūt), n. Same as wall-lizard.

The toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt.
Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 138.

Walloon (wo-lōn'), n. and a. [< F. Wallon, < OF. Wallon, Walon, Gualon (also Wallin), < ML. Wallus, L. Gallus, a Gaul, Celt; cf. Gaul, Welsh.] I. n. 1. A member of a people found chiefly in southern and southeastern Belgium, also in the neighboring parts of France, and in a few places in Rhenish Prussia near Malmedy. They are descended from the ancient Belgæ, mixed with Germanic and Roman elements.—2. In America, especially colonial New York, one of the Huguenot settlers from Artois, in northern France, etc.—3. A French dialect, spoken by the Walloons of Belgium, France, etc.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Walloons; as, the Walloon language.

wallop[1] (wol'op), v. i. [< ME. walopen, < OF. waloper*, galoper, boil, gallop, < OFlem. walop, a gallop; with an element -op, perhaps orig. OFlem. op, E. up (cf. the E. dial. var. wall-up), < OFlem. wallen = OS. wallan = AS. weallan, boil, spring forth as water does; see wall[3], well[1]. Cf. gallop.] 1. To boil with a continued bubbling or heaving and rolling of the liquor, accompanied with noise. [Prov. Eng.]

The yellow flour, beatrow'd and stir'd with haste,
Swells in the flood and thickens to a paste,
Then puffs and wallops, rises to the brim,
Drinks the dry knobs that on the surface swim.
Joel Barlow, Hasty Pudding, i.

2. To move quickly with great but somewhat clumsy effort; gallop. See gallop. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And he anon to hym com walopyng.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 3225.

Swerdes swangene in two, swaltand knyghtes
Lyes wyde opyne welterande one walopande stedes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2147.

She [a seal] wallopped away with all the grace of triumph. Scott, Antiquary, xxx.

wallop[1] (wol'op), n. [< ME. wallop, walop: see the verb.] A quick motion with much agitation or effort; a gallop. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Or he wiste, he was war of the white horse,
That went a wal a wallop as thei wod [mad] semed.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1770.

Than the kynge rode formest hym-self a grete wallop, for ane lyon hanged to wite how the kynge Tradilymount hym contened. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 223.

wallop[2] (wol'op), v. t. [Origin obscure; perhaps a particular use of wallop[1]. It is appar. confused with wale[1], whale[2]. There is an absurd notion that the verb is derived from the name of Sir John Wallop, an ancestor of the Earl of Portsmouth, Knight of the Garter, who in Henry VIII.'s time distinguished himself by walloping the French.] 1. To castigate; beat soundly; drub; thrash. [Slang.]

My father is an engineer's labourer, and the first cause of my thieving was that he kept me without grub, and walloped me. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 468.

2. To tumble over; dash down. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

wallop[2] (wol'op), n. [< wallop[2], v.] A severe blow. [Slang.]

walloper[1] (wol'op-ėr), n. [< wallop[2] + -er[1].] A pot-walloper.

walloper[2] (wol'op-ėr), n. [Also wolloper; < wallop[2] + -er[1].] One who or that which wallops. [Slang.]—Cod-walloper, a cod fishing vessel. [Provincetown, Massachusetts.]

walloping (wol'op-ing), a. Great; bouncing. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.] wallow[1] (wol'ō), v. [Early mod. E. also welowe; < ME. walowen, walewen, walwen, wolwen, wallow, < AS. wealwian, roll round, = Goth. walwjan, wallow, roll, = L. volvere, roll (whence ult. E. volute, volve, devolve, etc.).] I. intrans. 1. To roll; tumble about. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Mi witte is waste nowu in wode,
I walowe, I walke, nowe woo is me.
York Plays, p. 432.

He walweth and he turneth to and fro.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 888.

There saw I our great gallioases tost
Upon the wallowing waves.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, ii. 1.

Through the deep gulf of the chimney wide Wallows the Yule-log's roaring tide.
Lowell, Vision of Sir Launfal, ii., Epil.

2. To roll the body in sand, mire, water, or other yielding substance.

The fysshe . . . followeth them with equal pase although they make neuer such haste wyth full wynd and sailes, and wallowth on euery syde and about the shyppe.
R. Eden, tr. of Gonzalus Oviedus's First Books on America, (ed. Arber, p. 231).

Part huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton, P. L., vii. 411.

The mule of the slough was despond . . . Here, therefore, they wallowed for a time, being grievously bedaubed with the dirt. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, I.

3. To plunge into some course or condition; dwell with satisfaction in, addict one's self to, or remain in some way of life or habit, especially a sensual or vicious one.

Pale death oft spares the wretched wight
And woundeth you, who wallow in delight.
G. Whetstone, Remembrance of Gascoigne.

II.† trans. To roll.

He walwede a grete stoon to the dore of the diuel, and wente awei. Wyclif, Mat. xxvii. 60.

These swine, that will not leave wallowing the mire in every mire and puddle.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 56.

wallow[1] (wol'o), n. [< wallow [1], v.] 1. The act of rolling or tumbling, as in sand or mire.

Wrothely thei wrythyne and wryalliche to-gedere
With welters and walowes ouer-with in thase bankes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 114.

2†. A rolling gait.

One taught the toss, and one the new French wallow.
His sword knot this, his cravat that designed.
Dryden, Epil. to Etherege's Man of Mode.

3. A place to which an animal, as a buffalo, resorts to wallow; also, the traces of its wallowing left in the mire. Some localities called by this name (notably the "hog wallows" of the San Joaquin Valley, in California) are on too large a scale to have been formed in this way. Their origin has not been satisfactorily explained.

They had come to an alkali mud hole, an old buffalo wallow, which had filled up and was covered with a sun-baked crust, that let them through as if they had stepped on a trap-door. T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 6.

4. The alder tree. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wallow[2] (wol'o), v. i. [< ME. wallowen, welewen, welhen, wevelwen, < AS. wealwian, wealowian, wealwiinn, fade, wither; perhaps ult. connected with welken, wither: see welk.] To fade away; wither; droop. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

The grond stud barrant, widderit dosk or gray,
Herbis, flowris, and gersis wallowyt away.
Gavin Douglas.

She had na read a word but twa,
Till she wallow't like a lily.
Gowdie (Child's Ballads, VIII. 99).

wallow[3] (wol'o), a. [Also Sc. wauch, waugh; < ME. walow, walwhe, walh, < Icel. valr, lukewarm, insipid. Cf. D. walg, disgust, aversion (> walgen, loathe, turn the stomach).] Insipid; tasteless. [Prov. Eng.]

wallower (wol'o-ėr), n. [< wallow [1] + -er [1].] 1. One who or that which wallows.

Lo huge heaps of gold,
And to and fro amidst them a mighty Serpent rolled . . . I knew that the Worm was Fafnir, the Wallower on the gold. William Morris, Sigurd, iv.

2. In mech., same as lantern-wheel.

wallowing (wol'o-ing), n. [< ME. welwynge, welewynge; verbal n. of wallow [1], v.] The act of rolling, as in mire.

wallowish (wol'o-ish), a. [Early mod. E. also walowish, also contr. walsh; < wallow[3] + -ish[1].] Insipid; flat; nauseous. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

In Persia are kine . . . their milke is walowish sweet. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 400.

Pomelle [F.], the Assyrian citron, a fruit as big as two lemmons, and of a verie good smell, but of a faint-sweet or wallowish taste. Cotgrave.

As unwelcome to any true conceit as sluttish morsels or wallowish potions to a nice stomach.
Sir T. Overbury, Characters, A Dunce.

wall-painting (wâl'pān'ting), n. 1. The painting of the surface of a wall, or of kindred surfaces, with ornamental designs or figure-subjects, as a decoration. Such painting is usually classified as encaustic or as fresco or tempera painting. 2. An example or work of painting of this kind.

wall-paper (wâl'pā'pėr), n. Paper, usually decorated in color, used for pasting on walls or ceilings of rooms; paper-hangings. Modern wall papers are printed from blocks by hand or in color-printing machines. A great variety of styles are now used, including plain papers in single colors, striped patterns, geometrical patterns, and arabesque, flower, pictorial and conventional, and even comic designs. Large pictorial papers, with life-sized figures, were popular forty years ago, and are still made in limited quantities. The styles also include a variety of surface-effects, as satin finish, flock papers, and watered, embossed, and stamped patterns. Gilding and bronzing are also largely used. Cartridge papers are thick, heavy papers in single colors. Japanese papers include imitations of crape and leather, either plain, gilded, or in patterns. Veneers of wood pasted on paper also are used.

wall-pellitory (wâl'pel'i-tọ-ri), n. A plant, Parietaria officinalis, with a diuretic and refrigerant property, considerably used in continental Europe, especially in domestic practice. See pellitory.

wall-pennywort (wâl'pen'i-wėrt), n. See pennywort (a).

wall-pepper (wâl'pep'ėr), n. The stonecrop, Sedum acre, an intensely acrid plant formerly used as a remedy in scorbutic diseases. See stonecrop.

wall-pie (wal'pi), n. Same as wall-rue.

wall-piece (wâl'pēs), n. A piece of artillery prepared for mounting on the wall of a fortress, as distinguished from one intended for transportation from place to place; especially, of ancient firearms, a light gun, a long musket, or the like, mounted on a swivel.

As muzzle loaders, wall-pieces, on account of the length of their barrels, were most difficult to load, so that we find more breech loading wall pieces than early breech-loading small arms. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 91.

wall-plat (wâl'plat), n. 1. Same as wall-bird. —2. Same as wall-plate, 1. Halliwell.

wall-plate (wâl'plāt), n. 1. In building, a timber placed horizontally in or on a wall, under the ends of girders, joists, and other timbers. Its function is to insure even distribution of pressures, and to bind the wall together. The wall-plate of a roof of circular or elliptical plan is called a curb-plate. See cuts under plate, 7, and roof.

2. In mining, one of the two long pieces of timber which with two short ones (end pieces) make up a set in the timbering of a shaft. The sets are usually from 5 to 6 feet apart, and are themselves supported by the studdles in the corners of the shaft.

3. In mach., a vertical plate at the back of a plumber-block bracket, for attaching it to a wall or post. E. H. Knight.—4. A plaque, like that of a sconce; especially, a mirror from the face of which projects the bracket or arm supporting a candle.

wall-pocket (wâl'pok'et), n. A flat pouch or receptacle for newspapers or other articles, designed to be hung upon the wall of a room.

wall-rib (wal'rib), n. In medieval vaulting, a common English name for the longitudinal rib at one end of a vaulting compartment; an arc formeret. In the fully developed style there is no wall at the ends of the compartments, but a window filling the whole space; one of the other names is therefore to be preferred to that of wall rib.

wall-rock (wal'rok), n. In mining, the rock forming the walls of a vein; the country-rock.

wall-rocket (wal'rok et), n. See rocket[2].

wall-rue (wâl'ro), n. A small delicate fern, Asplenium Ruta-muraria, growing on walls and cliffs. Also called rue-fern, wall-pie, tentwort, and wall-rue spleenwort.

wall-saltpeter (wâl'sâlt pē'tėr), n. Nitrocalcite.

wall-scraper (wâl'skrā'pėr), n. A chisel-edged tool for scraping down walls preparatory to papering.

Wallsend (wâlz'end), n. A variety of English coal extensively used in London: so called because originally dug at Wallsend on the Tyne, close to the spot where the Roman Wall ended.

It is of very superior quality for household use, and is mined in the district extending from the Tyne to the Wear and from the Wear to Castle Eden, and in another area about Bishop Auckland. The most important coal in the Newcastle district is the "High main" or "Wallsend" Seam. It is the highest workable coal, and varies from 5 to 6 feet in thickness.
Hull, Coal-Fields of Gt. Brit., 4th ed., p. 274.

wall-sided (wâl'sī'ded), a. Having sides nearly perpendicular, as a ship: opposed to tumble-home.

wall-space (wâl'spās), n. In arch., an expanse of wall unbroken by architectural features or ornaments; especially, such an expanse considered as a feature of design, or as a field for decoration in painting, or of any other nature.

wall-spleenwort (wâl'splēn'wėrt), n. Same as wall-rue.

wall-spring (wal'spring), n. A spring of water issuing from stratified rocks.

wall-tent (wal'tent), n. See tent[1].

wall-tooth (wâl'tōth), n. A large double tooth. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wall-tower (wâl'tou'ėr), n. A tower built in connection with or forming an essential part of a wall; especially one of the series of towers which strengthened the mural fortifications of former times, from remote antiquity until the advance of artillery compelled the modification of military engineering. See also cut under castle.

Wall-tower, 14th century.—Fortifications of Carcassonne, France.
(From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dictionnaire de l'Architecture.")

wall-tree (wâl'trē), n. In hort., a fruit-tree trained upon a wall for the better exposure of the fruit to the sun, for utilizing the radiation of the heat of the wall, and for protection from high winds.

wall-vase (wal'vās), n. In Oriental decorative art, a small vase, having one side flat, and with a hole near the top by which it can be hung upon the wall. In some cases the form is that of half an ordinary vase having a surface of revolution; but sometimes the form is specially fitted to its purpose, irregular, or even fantastic, and may be suggested by a draped figure.

wall-washer (wal'wosh'ėr), n. A plate on the end of a tie-rod or tension-rod, and in contact with the face of the wall strengthened or supported by the rod. These washers are named from their shape: as, bonnet washer, S-washer, star-washer. E. H. Knight.

wall-wasp (wâl'wosp), n. A wasp that makes its nest in walls; specifically, Odynerus muraruus.

wall-wight†, a. Same as wall-wright.

Turn four and-twenty wall-wight men,
Like storks, in feathers gray.
The Earl of Mar's Daughter (Child's Ballads, I. 176).

wallwort (wal'wėrt), n. [< ME. walworte, walwurt, wallwort, < AS. wealwyrt, < weall, wall, + wyrt, wort.] The dwarf elder, or danewort, Sambucus Ebulus; sometimes, also, the wall-pellitory, Parietaria officinalis; the stonecrop, Sedum acre, and the navelwort, Cotyledon Umbilicus.

wally[1] (wol'i), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To cocker; indulge. [Prov. Eng.]

wally[2] (wol'i), interj. Same as waly[2]. [Provincial.]

Wally fa' you! ill luck befall you!

Wally ja' you, Willie,
That ye could nae prove a man.
Eppie Morrie (Child's Ballads, VI. 262).

wallydraigle, wallydraggle (wol'i-drā-gl, -drag-l), n. The youngest of a family; a bird in the nest; hence, any feeble, ill-grown creature. Ramsay. [Scotch.]

walm[1], n. [ME. walm, < AS. wealm*, wælm (= OHG. walm), lit. a boiling up, < weallan, boil, gush forth, as water: see wall[2], well[1].] A bubble in boiling.

Wyth vij. walmes that are so felle,
Hote sprynging out of helle.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 137. (Halliwell.)

walm[2], v. i. [< ME. walmen, welmen, boil; < walm, n.] To rise; boil up; bubble.

The wikkid werchinge that walmed in her daies,
And 3it woll here after but wisdome it lette.
Richard the Redeless, iii. 114.

walnote†, n. A Middle English form of walnut.

walnut (wâl'nut), n. [Formerly also wallnut, wallnutte; < ME. walnot, walnote, < AS. wealhhnutu, walhhnutu* (= MD. walnote, D. walnoot = G. walnuss = Icel. valhnot = Sw. valnöt = Dan. valnød), lit. 'foreign nut' (so called with ref. to Italy and France, whence the nut was first brought to the Germans and English), < wealh, foreign (see Welsh), + hnutu, nut. Cf.

walnut.] 1. The fruit of the nut-bearing tree Juglans regia; also, the tree itself, or its wood. The walnut-tree is native from the Caucasus and Armenia to the mountains of northern India, and is extensively cultivated, and in some places naturalized, in temperate Europe. It grows from 40 to 60 or even 100 feet high, with a massive trunk and broad spreading top, and bears pinnate leaves with few smooth leaflets. It produces the well-known sweet-seeded nuts of this name, in America distinguished as English walnuts. These are surrounded with a thin, brittle, and easily separated husk. The shell is thin in different degrees, or in the wild state thicker. The kernel yields some 50 per cent. of oil, which is largely expressed in France and other parts of Europe, as also in Asia. That of the first pressing is used for food, like olive-oil, though ranked less highly; that of the second pressing, called fire-drauea, the cake having been submitted to boiling water, is more siccative even than linseed-oil, and hence is by some artists the most highly esteemed of all oils, it is a good lamp-oil, and is available for making soft soap, etc. The whole fruit when quite young makes a good pickle. The shell of a large variety, called double walnut, is used in France for making purses, cases for jewelry, etc. The leaves and the hull of the fruit are used in Europe for various medicinal purposes. Walnut-wood is light, tough, and handsome, plain or with a burr; before the introduction of mahogany it was the leading cabinet wood of Europe, and is still preferred to all other wood for gunstocks.

Walnut-tree (Juglans regia).

> As on a walnut with-oute is a bitter barke.
> Piers Plowman (B), xi. 251

> I observed . . . many goodly rowes of walt nutte trees.
> Coryat, Crudities, I. 23.

2. In the United States, frequently, same as black walnut and rock-walnut (the fruit, the tree, or its wood). See below.—3. In parts of New York, New England, and some other localities, same as hickory-nut or hickory. This is sometimes distinguished as shagbark or shellbark walnut. Ash-leafed walnut. Same as Caucasian walnut. Belgaum walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Black walnut, a North American tree, Juglans nigra, or its timber. The tree ranges, in rich bottom lands and on hillsides, through a large part of the eastern half of the United States, but is becoming scarce. It grows from 80 to 140 feet high with a trunk from 6 to 9 feet in diameter. The wood is heavy, hard, and strong, easily worked, and susceptible of a beautiful polish; it is purplish-brown when first cut, but becomes darker with age. It is more generally used for cabinet making, beside finish and gunstocks than any other North American tree. (Sargent.) The nuts are edible, but not very choice; the shell is hard, the husk thick and difficult to remove. The tree grows rapidly, and is more or less planted on the prairies.

> They have a sort of walnut they call black walnuts, which are as big again as any I ever saw in England but are very rank and oily, having a thick, hard, foul shell, and come not clear of the husk as the walnut in France doth, but the inside of the nut, and leaves and growing of the tree declare it to be of the walnut kind.
> Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 14.

Caucasian walnut, the tree Pterocarya (Juglans) fraxinifolia, marked by its two winged fruit. Country walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Double walnut. See def. 1.—English walnut, European walnut. See def. 1.—Highflier walnut, a variety of the common walnut, said to be the best in England.—Indian walnut, the candleberry, Aleurites Moluccana (A. triloba). Also called Belgaum, country, and Otaheite walnut.—Jamaica walnut, a low West Indian tree, Picrodendron Juglans, bearing a small ovoid-globose orange yellow fruit.—Lemon walnut. See lemon-walnut.—Otaheite walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Rock-walnut, a moderate or small tree, Juglans rupestris, found from Texas—where it is generally reduced to a low much-branching shrub—to California, growing along streams and in mountain canons. Its wood is of a dark-brown color, susceptible of polish. Its nuts are small, sweet and edible.—Shagbark or shellbark walnut. See def. 3.—Titmouse walnut, a variety of the common walnut with a shell so thin as to be broken by the titmouse and other birds.—Walnut case-bearer, an American physetid moth, Acrobasis juglandis, whose small green larva constructs a black case between the leaves of the walnut.—Walnut catchup. See catchup.—Walnut leaf-roller, either of two tortricid moths, Tortrix rilaynana and Lophoderus juglandana, whose larvæ roll the leaves of walnut and hickory in the United States. See cut under Tortrix.—Walnut sword-tail, a dull-brown tree-hopper, Oxyrhachis carynæ, occurring on the foliage of walnut and hickory in the United States.—White walnut, the butternut Juglans cinerea, sometimes called oil-nut and lemon-walnut.

walnut-moth (wâl'nut-môth), n. Any moth whose larva feeds on walnut, as the regal walnut-moth, Citheronia regalis, whose larva is known as the hickory horned devil. See cut under royal.

walnut-oil (wâl'nut-oil), n. See walnut, 1.

walnut-scale (wâl'nut-skāl), n. Aspidiotus juglans-regiæ, a flat gray scale-insect found on the bark of the larger limbs of walnut in the United States.

walnut-sphinx (wâl'nut-sfingks), n. See sphinx.

walnut-tree (wâl'nut-trē), n. See walnut.

walpurgine (wol-pėr'jin), n. Same as walpurgite.

Walpurgis night (väl-pėr'gis nīt). [G. Walpurgis nacht, so called with ref. to the day of St. Walpurgis, Walburgis, or Walpurga, the name of an abbess who emigrated from England to Germany in the 8th century.] The night before the first day of May, on which, according to German popular superstition, witches are said to ride on broomsticks, he-goats, etc., to some appointed rendezvous, especially the Brocken in the Harz Mountains, where they hold high festival with their master the devil.

walpurgite (wol-pėr'jīt), n. A hydrated arsenate of uranium and bismuth, occurring in thin scale-like crystals of a yellow color. It is found with other uranium minerals at Neustädtel in Saxony. Also walpurgine.

walrus (wol'rus), n. [= D. walrus = G. walross, < Sw. hvalross = Dan. hvalros, lit. 'whale-horse,' equiv. to Icel. hross-hvalr = AS. horshwæl, lit. 'horse-whale,' a name prob. alluding to the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh, = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk; see whale[1] and horse[1]. Cf. whalefish and narwhal.] Any member of the family Trichechidæ (or Rosmaridæ); a very large pinniped carnivorous mammal, related to the seals, having in the male enormous canine teeth protruding like tusks from the upper jaw. The common walrus, T. rosmarus, the morse, sea horse, sea-ox, or sea-cow, attains a total length of 10 to 12 feet in the full grown male; individuals are reported to exceed 14 feet; a more nearly average length is 8 to 10 feet, with a girth of about as much. A weight of 2,500 to 3,000 pounds is acquired by old bulls, with a yield of 500 pounds of blubber. The whole length of the canines is about 2 feet, when they are full-grown, with a projection of 16 inches or more. These teeth are used in digging for the clams which form the principal food of the animal, and in climbing over uneven surfaces of rock or ice. A walrus 12 feet long has the fore flippers 2 feet long by about 1 foot broad, the flukes each about this length, but 24 feet in extreme breadth when pressed out flat. The mammæ of the female are two pairs, respectively abdominal and inguinal. Young and middle-aged individuals of both sexes are covered with a short coarse hair of a yellowish brown color, deepening into dark reddish brown on the belly and at the bases of the limbs. Old animals, especially the bulls, become almost naked, and the skin grows heavily wrinkled and plaited, especially on the fore quarters. In the glacial period the walrus ranged in North America southward on the Atlantic coast to South Carolina. There is no evidence of its existence in New England since about 1 A.D., from this date to 1600 it lived south to Nova Scotia. It now inhabits some parts of Labrador, shores of Hudson's Bay, Greenland, and arctic regions as far north as Eskimos live or explorers have gone. It has been found in Scotland of late years, and on or off the arctic coasts of Europe and Asia, especially in Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla. It is readily captured, and the systematic destruction to which it has long been subjected has materially diminished its numbers in many different places. The blubber yields a valuable oil, from the hide a very tough and durable leather is made, and the tusks yield a superior ivory. The walrus of the North Pacific is now generally thought to be specifically distinct, and is known as T. or R. obesus, and Pacific walrus (Trichechus or Rosmarus obesus).

Cook's walrus. It attains even greater size and weight than the common morse, and the hide is extremely rough: see also cuts under tusk and ruminator.

walrus-bird (wol'rus-bėrd), n. [Translation of the Eskimo name.] The pectoral sandpiper, Tringa (Actodromas) maculata: so called from its puffing out its breast like a walrus during the breeding-season. See cut under sandpiper. [Recent.]

walsh[1] (wolsh), a. Same as wallowish.

Walsh[2], a. and n. An obsolete form of Welsh. It survives in the surname Walsh.

Walshia (wol'shi-ä), n. [NL. (Clemens, 1864), named after B. D. Walsh (1808–69), an American entomologist.] A curious genus of moths, of the family Tineidæ, having the fore wings with large thick tufts of scales, and the submedian and internal nervures obsolete. Only one species, W. amorphella, is known. Its larva makes a gall on the stems of the false indigo, Amorpha fruticosa, and the False indigo gall-moth (Walshia amorphella).

a, moth; b, larva; c, gall; d, section of same. (Lines and fine show natural sizes of a and b; c and d, natural size.)

moth has also been reared from similar galls at the base of the stem of one of the so-called loco-weeds or crazy-weeds of the western United States.

waltt (wolt), v. [Early mod. E. also vault; < ME. walten, < AS. wealtan, roll, = OHG. walzan, MHG. G. walzen, roll, = Icel. velta, roll. Hence ult. wallt, a., wally, walter, welter, and (from G.) waltz.] I. intrans. To roll; tumble.

> As the welkyn shold walt, a wonderfull noyse
> Skremyt vp to the skrow with a skryke fulle.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 9000.

II. trans. To turn; cast; overturn.

Verser un chariot. To wault, overturne, or ouerthrow a chariot; whence the Prouerbe, Il n'est si bon chartier qui ne verse, the best that driues will sometimes wault a Cart.
Cotgrave.

waltt (wolt), a. [< ME. walt*, < AS. wealt, unsteady, in comp. unwealt, steady, < wealtan, roll; see wallt, v.] Naut., unsteady; crank.

> For covetousnes sake [they] did so over lade her, not only filling her hould, but so stuffed her betweene decks, as she was walte, and could not bear sayle, and they had like to have been cast away at sea.
> Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 291.

walter (wol'ter), v. i. [< ME. walteren, waltren (= MLG. walteren, wolteren), freq. of wallt, roll: see wallt, v. Cf. welter, a var. form of walter.] 1t. To roll; welter.

> The same Thursdaye there fell suche a walme at after noone yt we lay waltering and wawynge in the sea before Modona.
> Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 33.

> The weary wandering wights whom waltering waves environ.
> Peele, Sir Clyomon and Sir Clamydes.

2. To waver; totter; be unsteady; hence, to fall, or be overturned. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

> Thou waltres al in a wyth (that is, you tremble in the balance).
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 947.

walterott, n. [ME., prob. orig. a proper name. Cf. trotevale (?).] A term found only in the phrase "a tale of walterot," applied to some absurdity.

> "That that thou tellest," quath Trouthe, "is bote a tale of Walterot!" > Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 146.

walth (walth), n. A Scotch form of wealth.

Walton crag. In geol., a division of the Red Crag, or Newer Pliocene. See crag[1], 2.

waltront (wol'tron), n. [Appar. connected with walrus, perhaps by some confusion with D. waltraan, whale-oil (?): see train oil.] A walrus. Woodward.

walty (wol'ti), a. [< wallt + -y[1].] Unsteady; crank; noting a vessel. [Rare.]

> A new ship, . . . of about 120 tuns, but so walty that the master (Landerton) often said she would prove their grave.
> J. Pierpont, in C. Mather's Mag. Chris., I. vi.

waltz (walts), n. [= F. valse (> E. valse), < G. walzer, a round dance, waltz, < walzen, roll: see wallt, v.] 1. A round dance, probably of Bohemian origin, which has been extraordinarily popular since the latter part of the eighteenth century. It is danced by couples, the partners in each couple moving together in a series of whirling steps—either advancing continuously in the same direction, or varying this with "reversing" or turning the opposite way. The regular form of the waltz is known as the grand-temps, the more rapid form demi-temps consisting of steps to every two of the other. The derivation of the waltz is disputed, the French often claiming its descent from the volta, and the Germans from the allemande; but it is probably a development of the slow and simple landler. Its popularity has decidedly overshadowed that of all other fashionable dances.

2. Music for such a dance, or in its rhythm, which is triple and moderately quick.

are usually made up of sections of eight or sixteen measures. Several such sections are often written to be performed in succession, and are then provided with an introduction and a coda. — Deux-temps waltz. See deux temps.

waltz (wâlts), v. i. [< waltz, n.] 1. To dance a waltz, or in the movement or step of a waltz.

> Some waltz, some draw, some fathom the abyss > Of metaphysics. Byron, Don Juan, xii. 2.

2. To move lightly or trippingly or swiftly as in a waltz: as, the young people waltzed into the room. [Slang.]

waltzer (wâl'sėr), n. [< waltz + -er[1].] A person who waltzes.

> It may be said, without vanity, that I was an apt pupil and . . . in a single week I became an expert waltzer.
> Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle's Confessions, Dorothea.

waluewite (wal'ju-īt), n. [Named from P. A. Waluew, a Russian.] A variety of xanthophyllite, occurring in tabular crystals of a dull-green color. It is found in the Zlatoust mining region in the Urals.

walwet, v. A Middle English form of wallow[1].

waly[1], walie (wâ'li), a. and n. [An extension of wale[2], a., perhaps mixed with ME. welig, weli, < AS. welig, rich, wealthy, < wel, well: see well[2].]

I. a. 1. Beautiful; excellent.

> I think them a' sae braw and waly. Hamilton
>
> But Tam kenn'd what was what fu' brawlie,
> There was an whissome wench and waly.
> Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

2. Large; ample; strong; robust.

> This waly boy will be an ox.
> Burns, There was a Lad.

II. n.; pl. walies (-liz). Something pretty; an ornament; a toy; a gewgaw.

> Baith lads and lasses busked brawly
> To glower at lika bonny waly > Ramsay, Poems, II. 533. (Jamieson.)

[Scotch in all senses.]

waly[2] (wâ'li), interj. [An abbr. var. of wellaway.] An interjection expressive of lamentation; alas! [Obsolete or Scotch.]

> O waly, waly up the bank,
> And waly, waly down the brae,
> And waly, waly yon burn side,
> Where I and my love wont to gae.
> Waly, Waly, but Love be Bonny (Child's Ballads, IV. 139).

wamara (wa'ma-rą), n. [Native name.] The brown ebony of British Guiana. See ebony.

wamble (wom'bl), v. i.; pret. and pp. wambled, ppr. wambling. [Also dial. wammel, wammle; < ME. wamlen, < Dan. vamle, feel nausea (cf. vammel, mawkish); freq. of the verb seen in Icel. vema = Sw. vamja, refl., loathe, nauseate.] 1. To rumble, heave, or be disturbed with nausea: said of the stomach.

> What availeth to have good meats, when onely the sight thereof moueth bellies, and makes the stomach wamble?
> Guazzo, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 132.
>
> Sad sighing elegie must ring his knell, > Unlesse bright sunshine of thy grace revive
> His wambling stomach
> Marston, Scourge of Villany, viii.

2. To rumble; ferment, and make a disturbance.

> And your cold sallads, without salt or vinegar,
> Lie wambling in your stomachs
> Fletcher, Mad Lover, i. 1.

[Obsolete or provincial in both uses.]

wamble (wom'bl), n. [< wamble, v.] A rumbling, heaving, or similar disturbance in the stomach; a feeling of nausea. [Obsolete or provincial.]

> Our meat going down into the stomach merrily, and with pleasure dissolveth incontinently all wambles
> Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 615.

wamble-cropped (wom'bl-kropt), a. Sick at the stomach; figuratively, wretched; humiliated. [Vulgar.]

wambles (wom'blz), n. Milk-sickness.

wamblingly† (wom'bling-li), adv. With wambling, or a nauseating effect.

> If we should make good their resemblances how then should we please the stomach of God? who hath indeed brooked and borne us a long time. I doubt but wamblingly.
> Rec. S. Rand, Sermons and Treatises, p. 60.

wame (wām), n. A dialectal form of womb.

wametow (wām'tō), n. [< wame + tow[1].] A belly-band or girth: as, a mule with a pad secured on its back with a wametow. [Prov. Eng.]

wammelt, wammle, v. i. Dialectal variants of wamble.

wammus (wam'us), n. [Also wamus; < G. wamms, wams, a doublet, waistcoat, jerkin, < MHG. wembes, wambes, < OF. gambais, a leathern doublet: see gambeson.] A warm knitted jacket resembling a cardigan. [Southern and western U. S.]

> This [wagon spoke] he put into the baggy part of his wamus, of hunting jacket — the part above the belt into which he had often thrust prairie-chickens when he had no game bag.
> E. Eggleston, The Graysons, xxviii.

wamp (womp), n. [Supposed to be < Massachusetts Ind. wompi, white: see wampum.] The American cider-duck: so called from the appearance of the drake. [Massachusetts.]

wampee (wom-pē'), n. [Also whampee; Chinese, f huang, yellow, + pi, skin.] 1. The fruit of a tree, Clausena Wampi, of the Rutaceæ, tribe Aurantieæ, thus allied to the orange. The native country of the tree is unknown, but it is cultivated in China, India, and Malaya for the fruit, which is borne in clusters, and is of the size and somewhat the taste of a grape, with an additional pleasant flavor of its own. The tree is of a sweet terebinthine odor, its leaves pinnate with five to nine smooth and shining leaflets.

2. See Fontederia.

wampish (wom'pish), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To toss about in a threatening, boasting, or frantic manner; wave violently; brandish; flourish. Scott. [Scotch.]

wampum (wom'pum), n. [Formerly also wampom, wampame, wompam; < Amer. Ind. wampum*, wompam, < Massachusetts Ind. wompi, Delaware wapi, white.] Small shell beads pierced and strung, used as money and for ornament by the North American Indians. The shell was cut away, leaving only a cylinder like a European bugle. Wampum was of two kinds, white and black or dark purple. An imitation of wampum consisting of white porcelain beads of the same shape has been made by Europeans for sale to the Indians. See the second quotation under wampumpeag.

White and Purple Wampum. (From specimen in American Museum of Natural History, New York City.)

> Ye said Narigansets . . . should pay . . . 2000 fathome of good white wampane.
> Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 437.

> Sachems of Long Island came voluntarily, and brought a tribute to us of twenty fathom of wampom, each of the m.
> Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 283.

> The Indians are ignorant of Europes Coyne; yet they have given a name to ours, and call it moneagh from the English money. Their owne is of two sorts: one white, which they make of the stem or stocke of the Periwinckle, which they call Meteankhock, when all the shell is broken off, and of this sort six of the n small Beads (which they make with holes to string the bunc elets) are currant with the Englush for a Peny. The second is black, inclining to blew, which is made of the shell of a fish, which some English call Hens, Poquaûhock, and of this sort three make an English peny . . . This one fathom of this theh stringed money, now worth of the English but five shillings (sometimes more), some few yeeres since was worth nine, and sometimes ten shillings per Fathome. . . . Obs. Their white they call Wompam (which signifies white), their black Suckanhock (Sâcki signifying blacke). Both amongst themselves, as also the English and Dutch, the blacke peny is two pence white.
> Roger Williams, Key to Amer. Lang., xxiv.

striped wampum, a kind of wampum snake, Abastor erythrogrammus of North America.

wampumpeag (wom'pum-pēg), n. [Amer. Ind., < wompam, white, + peag, strung beads.] Strings of (originally white) wampum formerly used as tokens of value by the American Indians, and by the whites, especially in trade with the Indians.

> He gave to the governour a good quantity of wampum peage . . . Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 143.

> There was no currency, before this time, . . . unless we choose to give the name of currency to the wampum, or wampumpeage (as it is more properly called), of the Indians. . . . Peage was the name of the substance, which was of two kinds, black and white. Wampum, or wompam, is the Indian word for white, and as the white kind was the most common, wampumpeage got to be the common name of this substance, which was usually abbreviated into wampum. The black peage consisted of the small round spot in the inside of the shell, which is still usually called in this neighborhood by its Indian name of quahog. These round pieces were broken away from the rest of the shell, brought to a smooth and regular shape, drilled through the center, and strung on threads. The white peage was the twisted end of several small shells broken off from the main part. These portions of shell, thus strung, were worn as bracelets and necklaces, and wrought into belts of curious workmanship. They thus possessed an intrinsic value with the natives, for the purposes of ornament, and they were readily taken by them in exchange for their furs. E. Everett, Orations, I. 124.

wampum-snake (wom'pum-snāk), n. The red-bellied snake, Farancea abacura, a harmless colubrine serpent of the United States. See cut under Farancea.

wamsutta (wom-sut'a), n. Cotton cloth made at the Wamsutta Mills, New Bedford, Massachusetts.

wamus (wam'us), n. Same as wammus.

wan[1] (won), a. [< ME. wan, wanne, < AS. wann, wonn, dark, black, lurid (as an epithet of the raven, the sea, flame, night, also of shadows, ornaments, clothes, etc.): connections uncertain. According to some, orig. 'deficient,' as in color, and so connected with AS. wana deficient: see wan- and wane[1], wane[2]. But cf. W. gwan, Bret. gwan = Ir. Gael. fann, faint, feeble. According to others (a view highly improbable), orig. 'worn out with toil, tired out,' < AS. winnan (pret. wan, won), strive, fight: see win.] 1. Dark; black; gloomy: applied to the weather, to water, streams, pools, etc.

> There leuit thay laike, and the laund past:
> Efter the wedur so wete, and the wan showres.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 9958.
>
> And they hae had him to the wan water,
> For a' men call it Clyde.
> Earl Richard (Child's Ballads, III. 5).

2. Colorless; pallid; pale; sickly of hue.

> As pale and wan as ashes were his looke.
> Spenser, F. Q., II. xi. 22.

3†. Sorrowful; sad.

> In maters that meuys the with might for to stir,
> There is no worship in weping, ne in wan teres;
> Bot desyre thi redresse all with derfe strokis.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3602.

4†. Frightful; awful; great.

> Then come thai to Calcas the cause forto wete,
> Of the wedur so wikkid, and the wan stormys.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12070.

= Syn. 2. Pallid, etc. (see pale[2]), ashy, cadaverous.

wan[1] (won), v.; pret. and pp. wanned, ppr. wanning. [< wan[1], a.] I. trans. To render wan.

II. intrans. To grow or become wan.

> All his visage wanned. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 580.
>
> A vast speculation had fail'd,
> And ever he mutter'd and madden'd, and ever wann'd with despair.
> Tennyson, Maud, i. 3.

[Rare in both uses.]

wan[2]† (wan). An old preterit of win[1].

wan-. [< ME. wan-, < AS. wan- = MD. D. wan- = OHG. MHG. wan-, G. wahn- = Icel. van- = Sw. Dan. van-, a negative prefix, being the adj. AS. wan = OFries. wan, won = MLG. wan = OHG. wan = Icel. vanr: see wane[1], wane[2], want[1], wanse. AS. compounds with wan- were numerous: wanhalth, want of health, unhealthy, wanhād, heedlessness, etc.: see wanhelwi, wanhope, wansped, wantan, wantrust, wanwit, etc.] A prefix of Anglo-Saxon origin, frequent in Middle English, meaning 'wanting, deficient, lacking,' and used as a negative, like un-[1], with which it often interchanged. It differs from un-[1] in denoting more emphatically the fact of privation. It still exists as a recognized prefix in provincial use, and in literary use, unrecognized as a prefix, in wanton.

wanbelief†, n. [ME. wanbeleve; < wan- + belief.] Lack of faith. Prompt. Parv., p. 515.

wanbelievert, n. One who disbelieves. Prompt. Parv., p. 515.

wanchancy (won-chān'si), a. [< wan- + chancy. Cf. unchancy.] Unlucky; unchancy; wicked. [Scotch.]

wand (wond), n. [< ME. wand, wond, < Icel. vondr (vand-), a wand, a switch, = OSw. vand = Dan. vaand = Goth. wandus, a rod; so called from its pliancy, < AS. windan (pret. wand), etc., wind: see wind[1].] 1. A slender stick; a rod.

> A toppe of it to settle other a wonde
> Ys holden best right in Aprilles ende.
> When grene, and juce upon hem dothe ascende.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 123.
>
> His spear, to equal which the tallest pine,
> Hewn on Norwegian hills to be the mast
> Of some great ammiral, were but a wand.
> Milton, P. L., i. 294.

2†. A twig; a bough.

> O sweetly sang the nightingale,
> As she sat on the wand.
> The Clerk's two Sons o' Owsenford (Child's Ballads, II. 65).

3. A rod, or staff having some special use or character. Specifically — (a) A staff of authority.

> Though he had both spurs and wand, they seemed rather marks of sovereignty than instruments of punishment.
> Sir P. Sidney.

(b) A rod used by conjurers or diviners.

> Nay, Lady, sit; if I but wave this wand,
> Your nerves are all chained up in alabaster.
> Milton, Comus, l. 658.

(c) A small baton which forms part of the insignia of the messenger of a court of justice in Scotland, and which he must exhibit before executing a caption: called more fully wand of peace. (d) The baton used by a musical conductor. — Electric wand, an electrophorus in the form of a baton. See electrophorus. — Runic wand. See runic.

wander (won'dėr), v. [< ME. wanderen, wandren, wosdriew, < AS. wandrian, wandor, = OS.

wandlen = D. wandelen = OHG. wantalôn, MHG. G. wandern, wandeln = Sw. vandra = Dan. vandre, wander, travel, walk; a freq. form, associated with wend (AS. wendan, etc.), < AS. windan (pret. wand), wind, turn, twist: see wind[1], wend[1].] I. intrans. 1. To ramble without, or as if without, any certain course or object in view; travel or move from place to place; range about; roam; rove; stroll; stray.

> He wandereth abroad for bread. Job xv. 23.
>
> Wandering, each his several way
> Pursues, as inclination or sad choice > Leads him perplexed. Milton, P. L., ii. 523.

2. To leave home or a settled place of abode; depart; migrate.

> When God caused me to wander from my father's house. Gen. xx. 13.

3. To depart from any settled course; go astray, as from the paths of duty; stray; deviate; err.

> You wander from the good we aim at.
> Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 1. 138.

4. To lose one's way; be lost. [Colloq.]—5. To think or speak incoherently; rave; be delirious.

> Litill he sleppit,
> But wandrit & woke for woo of his luernes.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10007.
>
> Tom Bendibow seemed to have something on his mind, but I think he wanders a little. He may speak more explicitly to you. J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 222.

—Syn. 1-3. Roam, Rove, etc. (see ramble), straggle.—3. Swerve, digress.

II. trans. 1. To travel over without a certain course; stroll through; traverse.

> Wand'ring many a famous realm.
> Milton, P. L., iv. 234.

2. To lead astray; cause to lose the way or become lost. [Colloq.]

wandered (won'dėrd), p. a. That has strayed or become lost: as, the wandered scolex of the dog's tapeworm.

wanderer (won'dėr-ėr), n. [< ME. wanderare (= G. wanderer); < wander + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wanders; one who roams about, having no home or certain place of abode; also, one who strays from the path of duty.

> And here to every thirsty wanderer,
> By sly enticement gives his baneful cup.
> Milton, Comus, l. 524.

2. pl. In Arachnida, specifically, the wandering as distinguished from the sedentary spiders; the vagabonds. See Vagabundæ.

wandering (won'dėr-ing), p. a. Roving; roaming; pursuing no fixed course, plan, or object; unsettled: as, a wandering spirit; wandering habits; a wandering minstrel.

> Pray ye, do not trouble him:
> You see he's weak, and has a wandering fancy.
> Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 5.
>
> If a man's wits be wandering, let him study the mathematics, for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again. Bacon, Studies.

Wandering abscess, a chronic abscess which burrows through the tissues, usually in obedience to the law of gravity, and appears on the surface at some distance from its point of origin.—Wandering cells, the leucocytes, cells resembling, and probably identical with, the white blood-corpuscles, found in the tissues outside of the blood vessels.—Wandering Jew. (a) A legendary character who, according to one version (that of Matthew Paris, dating from the thirteenth century), was a servant of Pilate by name Cartaphilus, and gave Christ a blow when he was led out of the palace to execution. According to a later version he was a cobbler named Ahasuerus, who refused Christ permission to sit down and rest when he passed his house on the way to Golgotha. Both legends agree in the sentence pronounced by Christ on the offender, "Thou shalt wander on the earth till I return." A prey to remorse, he has since wandered from land to land without being able to find a grave. The story has been turned to account by many poets and novelists. (b) A plant-name: (1) The beefsteak- or strawberry-geranium, Saxifraga sarmentosa; locally, the Kenilworth ivy, Linaria Cymbalaria. [Great Britain.] (2) One of two or three house-plants, as Zebrina pendula (Tradescantia zebrina), which are planted in baskets or vessels of water, whence they spread in a straggling fashion. Z. pendula has lance-ovate or oblong leaves which are crimson beneath and green or purplish above, with two broad silvery stripes. Another sort has bright green leaves.—Wandering albatross, the great albatross, Diomedea exulans.—Wandering shearwater, the greater shearwater, Puffinus major, a bird of the family Procellariidæ. See cut under hagden.—Wandering spiders. See wanderer, 2.—Wandering tattler, Heteractitis incanus, a bird of the snipe family (Scolopacidæ), widely distributed on the coasts and islands of the Pacific. See cut under tattler.—Wandering tumor, one of the solid abdominal viscera which has become movable through relaxation of its attachments, as a floating kidney.

wandering (won'dėr-ing), n. [< ME. wanderynge, wandringe (= MHG. wanderinge, G. wanderung), verbal n. of wander, v.] 1. The act of one who wanders; a ramble or peregrination; a journeying hither and thither.

> And many a tree and bush my wanderings know,
> And e'en the clouds and silent stars of heaven.
> Jones Very, Poems, p. 85.

2. A straying away, as from one's home or the right way; a deviation or digression in any way or from any course; as, the wandering of the thoughts; a wandering from duty.

> Let him now recover his wanderings.
> Decay of Christian Piety.

3. Incoherence of speech; raving; delirium.

wanderingly (won'dėr-ing-li), adv. In a wandering or unsteady manner.

> When was Lancelot wanderingly loved?
> Tennyson, Holy Grail.

wandering-sailor (won'dėr-ing-sā'lor), n. The moneywort, Lysimachia Nummularia, and the Kenilworth ivy or wandering Jew, Linaria Cymbalaria, from their creeping habit.

wanderment† (won'dėr-ment), n. [< wander + -ment.] The act of roaming or roving. [Rare.]

> Barefoot went > Upon their ten toes in wild wanderment.
> Bp. Hall, Satires, II. iii. 20.

wanderoo (won-de-rō'), n. [Also wanderow, wandaru; = F. ouanderou (Buffon), < Cingalese wandaru, a monkey; cf. Hind. bandar, a monkey: see bander.] A large catarrhine monkey of Malabar, India, Macacus silenus. It is about 3 feet long to the tip of the tail (which is tufted), of a blackish color with pink buttocks, and has an extravagant mane of long hair surrounding the face, of a light or whitish color. Notwithstanding the name, the wanderoo is not found in Ceylon, where that native name applies more properly to species of Semnopithecus, as the great wanderoo or maha, S. ursinus. The misapplication originated with Buffon. Also called Malabar monkey, lion-tailed monkey, baboon, or macaque, nuel chunder, silenus, and by other names.

Wanderoo (Macacus silenus).

wandle (won'dl), a. [Appar. for wandly*, < wand + -ly[1]. Cf. wandy.] Wand like; wandy; supple; pliant; nimble. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wandoo (won'dō), n. [Native Australian.] A eucalypt, Eucalyptus redunca, the white-gum of western Australia. It is a large tree, the trunk sometimes 17 feet in diameter, in one variety suddenly swelling out near the ground. It furnishes a very pale heavy, hard, tough, and durable wood, greatly prized for wheelwork, especially for felloes.

wandreth† (won'dreth), n. [< ME. wandreth, wandrethe, wandrethe, < Icel. vandræthi, difficulty, trouble, genit. as adj., difficult, troublesome, < vandr, difficult, requiring pains and care, hence also select, choice, picked, also zealous, + -æthi, advice, counsel, management, = E. read: see read[1], n., and cf. -reth, -red, in hundreth, hundred, Tuesdreth, Tuesday, quandary.] Difficulty; peril; distress.

> Bettur is a buerne bi hym sum pes
> Than in wandreth & woo to wepe all his lyue.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 11614.

wands (wondz), n. pl. [Prob. < Dan. vand, water, = Norw. vand, water, a lake, tarn: see water.] Roads: a roadstead.

> The 21 day the Primrose remaining at an anker in the wands, the other three shippes bare into Orwel haven.
> Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 330.

wandsomdly†, adv. [ME., for wansomely*, < wan + -some + -ly[2], or wansomly*, < wansome + -ly[2].] Sorrowfully.

> The wave unto Wyn-beatre thay wente at the gayneste,
> Wery and wandsomdly, with woundide knyghtes.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 4013.

wandy (won'di), a. [< wand + -y[1].] Long and flexible, like a wand.

wane[1] (wān), v.: pret. and pp. waned, ppr. waning. [< ME. wanen, wanien, wonen, < AS. wanian, wonian, gewanian = OFries. wania, wania = OHG. wanôn, wenen = Icel. vana, decrease, wane; from the adj., AS. wan = OHG. wan = Icel. vanr = Goth. wans, wanting, deficient (an adj. also appearing as a negative prefix: see wan-), = Skt. una, lacking, deficient, inferior; perhaps an orig. pp. of a root u, be empty, Zend √ u, be lacking, existing also in Gr. ὄνος, bereaved, cf. ede, desolate, etc. Cf. want[1], wont[1]. Hence prob. wanland, wanion.] I. intrans. 1. To decrease; be diminished: applied particularly to the periodical lessening of the illuminated part of the moon: opposed to wax.

> Underneethe his feet she hadde a mone,
> Wexing it was, and shulde wanie soone.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1229.
>
> How slow
> This old moon wanes!
> Shak., M. N. D., i. 1. 4.

2. To decline; fail; sink; approach an end.

> Wealth and ease in waning age
> Shak., Lucrece, l. 143.
>
> Daylight waned, and night came on > M. Arnold, Balder Dead.

II.† trans. To cause to decrease; lessen.

> That he [Christ] takes the name of the son of a woman, and wanes the glorious name of the Son of God.
> Donne, Sermons, iii.

wane[1] (wān), n. [< ME. wane, < AS. wana = Icel. vani, decrease, wane: see wane[1], v.] 1. Periodic decrease of the illuminated part of the moon; period of decreasing illumination.

> How many a time hath Phœbe from her wane
> With Pheebus' fires filled up her horns again.
> Drayton, On his Lady's not coming to London.

2. Decline; failure; declension.

> Men, families, cities, have their falls and wanes.
> Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 94.

3. A beveled edge of a board or plank as sawn from an unsquared log, the bevel being caused by curvature of the log.

> All the thick stuff and plank to be cut straight, or nearly so, and of parallel thickness, and to be measured for breadth at the middle, or half the length, taking in half the wanes. Laslett, Timber, p. 76.

wane[2]† (wān), a. [ME., < AS. wan, deficient: see wan-, want, and wane[1], v.] Wanting; lacking; deficient.

> And qwo-so be wane schal paye a pound of wax.
> English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 30.

wane[3]†, n. Same as wone. York Plays, p. 106.

wane-cloud (wān'kloud), n. A cirro-stratus cloud.

> Modern cloud-ologists have corroborated the speculative notions of the ancients, and have observed the prevalence of the wane cloud to be usually followed by bad weather. Forster, Atmospheric Phenomena.

waney (wā'ni), a and n. [< wane[1] + -y[1].] I. a. Having a natural bevel (compare wane[1], n., 3); hence, making poor lumber from irregularities of the surface, as a log.

II. n. The thin edge or feather-edge of slab cut from a round log without previous squaring. T. H. Knight.

wang[1] (wang), n. [< ME. wange, wonge, < AS. wange, wonge, cheek, jaw (wang-beard, cheek-beard, wang-toth, wang-tooth, jaw-tooth, grinder, thunwange, temple: see thunwanga), = OS. wanga = LG. wang = OHG. wanga, MHG. G. wange, cheek, jaw (Goth. waggo* not recorded); by some supposed to have been orig. 'an extended surface' (the expanse of the face), and thus connected with AS. wang, wong = Icel. vangr = Goth. waggs, a plain, field, meadow, though most names for parts of the body have no such origin.] 1. The jaw, jaw-bone, or cheek-bone. [Obsolete or vulgar.]

> Thy wordis makis me my wangis to wete,
> And chaunges chidis ful often my chere.
> York Plays, p. 64.

2†. [Short for wang-tooth.] A cheek-tooth or grinder. Chaucer.

wang[2]† (wang), n. A dialectal reduction of whang[1].

wangala (wang'ga lā), n. Same as rangla.

wangert, n. [Also wonger, < ME. wangere, wongere, wongere, < AS. wangere (= OHG. wangari = Goth. waggarjo), a pillow, < wange, wonge, etc., cheek: see wang[1].] A rest for the cheek; a pillow.

> His bryght helm was his wonger.
> Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 201.

wang-tooth† (wang'tōth), n. [< ME. wang-toothe, < AS. wangtoth, < wang, cheek, + tōth, tooth: see wang[1] and tooth.] A cheek-tooth; a grinder or molar.

> He bollesteþ me a-boute þe mouthe and bete oute my wang-teth. Piers Plowman (C), xxiii. 195.

Of this asses cheke, that was dreye,
Out of a wang tooth sprang anon a welle.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 54.

wangun (wâng'gun), n. [Amer. Ind.] A place for keeping small supplies or a reserve stock; especially, the chest in a lumber-camp containing clothing, shoes, tobacco, etc., which are sold to the men.

wanhope† (won'hōp), n. [< ME. wanhope (= MD. wanhoop); < wan- + *hope*¹.] 1. Lack of hope; hopelessness; despair.

Thanne wex that shrewe in wanhope and wilde hane hanged him-self. Piers Plowman (B), v. 230.

Wel oughte I starve in wanhope and distresse
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 301.

Alle hise disciplis weren in wanhope,
For to comforte them these thoughte
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 54.

2. Vain hope; delusion.

The foolysshe wanhope . . . of some auncer.
Chaloner, tr. of Morie Encomium, B 3 b. (Nares.) wanlandt, n. [ME. wanland, wanglond, wonglande; appar. a noun use of ME. wanland, ppr. (< AS. wanigende) of wanian, wanen, wane: see *wane*¹. Cf. wanion.] Waning; specifically, the waning of the moon, regarded as implying ill luck.

Be they kynghts or knyghtis in care ȝe thaim cast;
ȝan, and welde thaim in woo to wonne, in the wanyand
York Plays, p. 124.

He would of lyke lyhood hynde them to cartes and beate them, and make theyne wel in the wanand
Sir T. More, Works, p. 306.

wanion† (wan'yon), n. [Also wannion, wenion; prob. a later form of wanand, used in imprecations with a vague implication of ill luck or misfortune.] A word found only in the phrases with a wanion, to the wanion, and wanions on you, generally interpreted to denote some kind of imprecation. With a wanion. (a) Bad luck to you; the mischief take you, or the like.

Marry, hang you!
Westward with a wanion! ye!
Marston, Jonson, and Chapman, Eastward Ho, iii. 3.

"Hide down, with a mischef to you — hide down with a wanion," cried the king. Scott, Fortunes of Nigel.

(b) "With a vengeance"; energetically; vehemently; emphatically; hence, in short order, summarily.

He should have been at home preaching in his diocese with a wanion. Latimer, 2d Sermon before Edw. VI., 1549.

"Marry gep with a wenion," quod Arthur a Bland.
Robin Hood and the Tanner (Child's Ballads, V. 129).

Yet considering with himself that wares would be welcome where money wanteth, he went with a wanion to his mother's chamber, and there, seeking about for odd ends, at length found a little whistle of silver that his mother did use customarily to wear on Harmon, Caveat for Cursetors, p. 76.

Come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wanion.
Shak., Pericles, ii. 1. 47.

I'll tell Ralph a tale in's ear shall fetch him up with a wanion. Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 2.

I beg him out of my company with a wanion. I would rather have a rifler on my perch than a false knave at my elbow. Scott, Abbot.

wankapin (wong'ka-pin), n. [N. Amer. Ind.] The water-chinkapin. Also wonkapin.

wankle (wan'kl), a. [< ME. wankel, < AS. wancol, wancel (= OS. wankal = OHG. wankal, MHG. wankel), unsteady, unstable; cf. OHG. MHG. wanc, unsteady movement, doubt, G. wank, remove, change; OHG. wanchon, MHG. wanken, be unsteady, vacillate, = Icel. vakka = Sw. vanka, wander about; connected with AS. wancian, etc., wink: see wink, wince, and cf. wench.] Weak; unstable; not to be depended on. [North. Eng.]

wanly (won'li), adv. [< wan + *-ly*².] In a wan or pale manner; palely.

wanness (won'nes), n. [< ME. wannesse, < *wan*¹ + -ness.] The state or appearance of being wan; paleness; a sallow, dead, pale color; as, the wanness of the cheeks after a fever.

wannish (won'ish), a. [Early mod. E. also wanish; < *wan*¹ + *-ish*¹.] Somewhat wan; of a pale hue.

The wannish moon, which sheeds its night,
Surrey, Ps. viii.

Upon her crest she wore a wannish fire,
Sprinkled with stars, like Ariadne's tiar.
Keats, Lamia, i.

Mounting arises stormy and pale,
No sun, but a wannish glare
In fold upon fold of hueless cloud Tennyson, Maud, vi. 1.

wanrestful (won-rest'ful), a. [< wan- + rest + -ful.] Restless. [Scotch.]

An may ye never learn the gaets
Of other vice as wanrestfu' pets
Burns, Death of Poor Mailie.

wanrufe†, n. [< wan- + Sc. ruf, ruff, roif, rest; cf. roof.] Disquietude.

Bot I half meevell in certaine
Quhat makis thé this wanrufe.
Rotene and Makyne (Child's Ballads, IV. 246).

wanset† (wons), v. i. [Early mod. E. also wanze; < ME. wansen, diminish, decrease, < AS. wansian, diminish; with verb-formative -s, as in minsian, decrease (see mince), and clænsian, cleanse (see cleanse), < wan, deficient: see *wane*².] To wane; waste; pine; wither.

His lively hue of white and red, his cheerfulness and strength,
And all the things that liked him did wanze away at length.
Golding, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., iii. (Trench.) wanspeedt, n. [ME. wanspede; < AS. wanspéd; < wan- + spéd.] Ill fortune.

What whyleness, or wanspede, wryxles our mynd?
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 9327.

want¹† (wont), a. [ME., also wont, < Icel. vant, n. neut. (with reg. Scand. neut. suffix -t, as seen also in thwart, another word of Scand. origin) of vanr, lacking: see wan-, *wane*¹.] Lacking; deficient.

And tyne wont of tylty, quoth God, I schal forȝete alle.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 740.

want¹ (wont), n. [< ME. want, wante, lack, deficiency, indigence, < Icel. vant, want, < vant, lacking: see *want*¹, a.] 1. Lack; deficiency; scarcity; dearth, or absence of what is needed or desired: as, want of thought; want of money.

Prentices in Paul's Church yard, that scented
Your want of Breton's books.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, iii. 4.

He came the first Night to Mangeea, but, for want of a Pilot, did not know where to look for the Town.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 135.

2. A vacant part, place, or space; a vacancy.

The wants in the wheels of your watch are as useful to the motion as the nicks of solid parts.
Baxter, Divine Life, i. 10.

3. That which is lacking, but needed; the vacancy caused by the absence of some needful, important, or desirable thing.

Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend,
I'll break a custom. Shak., M. of V., i. 3. 84.

4. The state of being without means; poverty; penury; indigence.

An endless Spring of Age the Good enjoy,
Where neither Want does pinch, nor Plenty cloy.
Cowley, Pindaric Odes, i. 7.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxi.

5†. A time of need.

He wept and shed many tears, blessing God that had brought him to see their faces, and admiring the things they had done in their wants.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 112.

6. That which cannot be dispensed with; a necessity.

Habitual superfluities become actual wants.
Paley, Mor. Phil., vi. 11.

7. In coal-mining, same as *nip*¹, 8. Want of consideration. See consideration. — Syn. 1. Insufficiency, scantiness, dearth, default, failure. — 3. Requirement, desideratum. 4. Need, Indigence, etc. (see poverty), distress, straits.

want² (wont), v. [< ME. wanten, wonten, < Icel. vanta, want, lack, < vanr, neut. vant, lacking: see *want*¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To be without; be destitute of; lack: as, to want knowledge or judgment; to want food, clothing, or money.

Many a mayde, of which the name I wante.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 287.

The Lord our God wants neither Diligence,
Nor Love, nor Care, nor Power, nor Providence.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

As a barren Cox-comb, that wants Discourse, is ever entertaining Company out of the last Book
He read in. Etherege, She Would if she Could, iv. 2.

They want many bad qualities which abound in the others. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iii. 10.

2. To be deficient in; fall short in; be lacking in respect of, or to the amount of.

Another will say it [the English language] wanteth Grammer. Nay, truly, it hath that praise, that it wanteth not Grammer: for Grammer it might have, but it needs[t] not. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 70.

We want nothing now but one Dispatch more from Rome and then the Marriage will be solemnized.
Howell, Letters, I. iii. 26.

Trust me, Sir, I thought we had wanted three miles of this house, till you showed it to me.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 64.

3. To do without; dispense with; spare.

For law, physick, and divinitie need we the helpe of tongues and sciences as thei can not want them.
Ascham (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 16).

Which they by this attempt were like to loose, and therefore were willing to want his presence.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 58.

The drawsons will be crying for ale, and they wunna want it, and mannna want it. Scott, Old Mortality, iv.

4. To have occasion for, as something requisite, useful, or proper; require; need.

Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.
Goldsmith, The Hermit.

Not what we wish, but what we want,
Oh! let thy grace supply.
Merrick, Hymn.

5. To feel a desire for; feel the need of; wish or long for: desire; crave.

I want more uncles here to welcome me.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 1. 6.

The good pope . . . said, with scorn and indignation which well became him, that he wanted no such proselytes. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

If he want me, let him come to me.
Tennyson, Geraint.

6. To desire to see, speak to, or do business with; desire the presence or assistance of; desire or require to do something: as, you are the very man we want; call me if I am wanted; the general wanted him to capture the battery. Syn. Need, etc. See *lack*¹, v. t.

II. intrans. 1. To be lacking, deficient, or absent.

If ye wanten in theese tweyne,
The world is lore.
Chaucer, Complaint to Pity, l. 76.

There shall want
Nothing to express our shares in your delight, sir.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iii. 1.

As in bodies, thus in souls, we find
What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with wind.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 208.

2. To fail; give out; fall short.

They of the citie fought valiantly with Engines, Darts, Arrowes, and when Stones wanted, they threw Siluer, especially molten Siluer. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 402.

The front looking to the river, tho' of rare worke for ye carving, yet wants of that magnificence which a plainer and truer designe would have contributed to it.
Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 8, 1644.

3. To be in need; suffer from lack of something.

He cannot want for money. Shak., T. of A., iii. 2. 10.

want²† (wont), n. [Also wont; for wand, < ME. wand, < AS. wand, a mole, also in comp. wandwyrp, a mole (cf. moldwarpe, = G. dial. wond, wonne = Sw. dial. vond = Norw. vand, vaand, vond, vonl, a mole.] The mole or moldwarp.

They found beards of deere feeding by thousands and the Countrie full of strange Conies, headed like ours, with the feet of a Hoor, and tails of a Cat, having under their chins a bagge like those which they gather the musk when they have killed their bodie abroad.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 779.

want³†, n. [Prob. < Icel. vottr (vatt, orig. vant-) = OSw. wante, a glove, = Sw. Dan. vante = D. want, a mitten; cf. OSw. winda, wind, involve, wrap, = E. wind, turn. Cf. OF. want (?), gant, gaut, F. gant = Pr. gan, guan = Sp. guante = Pg. guante (pl.) = It. guanto, prob. < ML. wantus, a glove; < Teut. Hence (from the F. gant) E. *gauntlet*², *gantlet*².] A glove. Imp. Dict.

wa'n't (want). A colloquial and vulgar contraction of was not.

wantage (won'tāj), n. [< *want*¹ + -age.] Deficiency; that which is wanting.

Inspectors and Gaugers shall make a detailed return (in duplicate) of each lot inspected, showing the serial number of each stamp affixed thereto, the gauge, wantage, proof, and number of proof gallons.
New York Produce Exchange Report, 1888–9, p. 256.

wanter (wôn'tėr), n. [< *want*¹ + *-er*¹.] 1. One who wants; one who is in need.

The wanters are despised of God and men.
Davies, Scourge of Folly, p. 21. (Davies.)

2. An unmarried person who wants a mate. Halliwell. [Colloq.]

want-grace† (wônt'grās), n. [< *want*¹, v., + obj. grace.] A reprobate.

Want a want grace to performe the deede.
Davies, Microcosmos, p. 57. (Davies.) want-hill (wont'hil), n. [< *want*² + *hill*¹.] A mole-hill.

Walter Eyres, digging want-hills, 8s.
Darrell Papers (in H. Hall's Society in Elizabethan Age).

wan-thriven (won-thriv'n), a. [< wan- + thriven.] Stunted; decayed: in a state of decline. [Scotch.]

wanting (wôn'ting), p. a. [< *want*¹ + *-ing*².] 1. Deficient or lacking.

Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.
Dan. v. 27.

Each, with streaming Eyes, supplies his wanting Urn.
Congreve, Death of Queen Mary.

The young people of our time are said to be wanting in reverence. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 256.

2†. Needy; poor.

You forget yourself:
I have not seen a gentleman so backward,
A wanting gentleman.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, iii. 4.

The wanting orphans saw with watery eyes
Their founders' charity in dust laid low.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 274.

wanting (wôn'ting), prep. Except; less; minus.

Twelve, wanting one, he slew.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xii. 727.

wantless (wônt'les), a. [< want[1] + -less.] Having no want; abundant: fruitful. [Rare.]

The want-less counties, Essex, Kent, Surrie. Warner, Albion's England, iii. 7.

wanto (wan'tō), n. A reed-buck of western Africa; same as nagor, 1.

wanton (won'ton), a. and n. [< ME. wantown, wantowen, wantogen, also, with loss of pp. suffix -n, wantowe, orig. 'uneducated, unrestrained,' hence 'licentious, sportive, playful,' < wan-, not, + towen (also i-towen), < AS. togen (also getogen), pp. of teón (prot. teah, pl. tugon) = Goth. taúhan, etc., = L. ducere, draw: see wan- and tow[1] (of which -ton is the pp. reduced). Cf. ME. untowen, perverse, G. ungezogen, ill-bred, rude, uncivil. Cf. the opposite ME. wel i-towen, well-taught, modest.] I. a. 1. Ill brought up; undisciplined; unrestrained; hence, free from moral control.

He . . . associate vnto hym certeyn wanton persones, & bete his mayster. Fabyan, Chron., cxxvii.

2. Characterized by extreme recklessness, foolhardiness, or heartlessness; malicious; recklessly disregardful of right or of consequences: applied both to persons and to their acts.

The wanton troopers riding by
Have shot my fawn, and it will dye.
Marvell, Nymph Complaining for Death of her Fawn.

3. Wild; unruly; loose; unrestrained.

And take good hede bi wisdom & reaum
That bi no wantowne laughinge thou do noon offence
To-fore thi souereyne white he is in presence.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 27.

She, as a veil, down to the slender waist
Her unadorned golden tresses wore Dishevel'd, but in wanton ringlets waved.
Milton, P. L., iv. 304.

How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise!
Addison, Cato, i. 5.

4. Playful; sportive; frolicsome.

All wanton as a child, skipping and vain.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 771.

Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers rise
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 136.

5. Rank; luxuriant.

The quaint mazes in the wanton green
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 99.

Every ungovernable passion grows wanton and luxuriant in corrupt religions. Bacon, Fable of Dionysius.

6. Characterized by unrestrained indulgence of the natural impulses or appetites; dissolute; licentious.

The proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton and too full of gawds
Shak., K. John, iii. 3. 36.

Men, grown wanton by prosperity,
Study'd new arts of luxury and ease.
Roscommon, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry.

Wanton professor and damnable apostate.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

7. Particularly, unchaste; lascivious; libidinous; lustful; lewd.

Thou art . . . froward by nature, enemy to peace,
Lascivious, wanton. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 19.

A wanton mistress is a common sewer.
Ford, Lady's Trial, i. 2.

II. n. 1. A pampered, petted creature; one spoiled by fondness or indulgence; also, a frolicsome, roving, sportive creature; a trifler: used sometimes as a term of endearment.

Thy parents made thee a wanton with too much cockering. Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 36.

Shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields?
Shak., K. John, v. 1. 70.

2 A lewd person; a lascivious man or woman.

If ye be set on pleasure, or dis[illegible] to wantons, ye shall have ministers enough to be furtherers and instruments of it. Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

wanton (won'ton), v. [< wanton, a.] I. intrans. 1. To revel; frolic unrestrainedly; sport.

When, like some childish wench, she loosely wantoning
With tricks and giddy turns seems to inisle the shore.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 174.

Nature here
Wanton'd as in her prime. Milton, P. L., v. 294.

Her cap-strings wantoned in front of her in the rising wind. Mrs. Oliphant, May, iii.

2. To sport or dally in lewdness; sport lasciviously.

II. trans. 1†. To make wanton.

If he does win, it wantons him with over-plus, and enters him into new ways of expence. Felltham, Resolves, ii. 56.

2. To spend or waste in wantonness.

Here wantons away his life foolishly that, when he is well, will take physick to make him sick.
Bp. Hall, Defeat of Cruelty.

wantonhead†, wantonhood† (won'ton-hed, -hud), n. [< ME. wantounhede; < wanton + -head, -hood.] Wantonness.

wantoning[1] (won'ton-ing), n. [Verbal n. of wanton, v.] The act of playing the wanton.

wantoning[2] (won'ton-ing), n. [< wanton + -ing[3].] A wanton; a dallier.

But, since, I saw it painted on fame's wings
The Muses to be woman wantonings.
Bp. Hall Satires, I. ii. 34.

wantonize† (won'ton-īz), v. i. [< wanton + -ize.] To frolic; sport; dally; wanton.

That broad and glaring way wherein Wild sinners find full space to wantonize
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 72.

wantonly (won'ton-li), adv. [< wanton + -ly[2].] In a wanton manner. Specifically - (a) Recklessly; unadvisedly, thoughtlessly; without regard for right or consequences.

A plague so little to be fear'd
As to be wantonly incurr'd.
Cowper, Mutual Forbearance.

No nation will wantonly go to war with another if it has nothing to gain thereby. Irving, Knick. Diedrich, p. 289.

(b) Frolicsomely, sportfully; gaily; playfully, carelessly.

How sweet these solitary places are! how wantonly
The wind blows through the leaves, and courts and plays with 'em! Fletcher, Pilgrim, v. 4.

(c) Lewdly; lasciviously.

wantonness (won'ton-nes), n. [< ME. wantounesse, < wanton + -ness.] 1. The state or character of being wanton, in any sense.

Somwhat he lipped for his wantonesse
To make his English swete upon his tonge
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 334.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness.
Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 4. 8.

Wantonness and luxury the wonted companions of plenty grow up as fast Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

2. A wanton or outrageous act.

If were a wantonness, and would demand Severe reproof. Wordsworth, Excursion, i.

wantrust†, n. [< ME. wantrust (= MD. wantrouste); < wan- + trust[1], q. v.] Distrust.

O wantrust ful of fals suspecioun
Chaucer, Manciple's Tale, l. 177.

wantsome† (wônt'sum), a. [< ME. wantsum; < want[1] + -some.] Poor; needy. Ormulum, l. 14824.

wantwit† (wônt'wit), n. [< want[1], v., + obj. wit.] One destitute of wit or sense; a fool.

Such a want-wit sadness makes of me
That I have much ado to know myself.
Shak., M. of V., i. 1. 6.

wanty[1] (won'ti), n.; pl. wanties (-tiz). [Origin not known.] A leather tie or rope; a short wagon rope; a rope used for binding a load upon the back of a beast. [Local, Eng.]

wanty[2] (won'ti), n.; pl. wanties (-tiz). [Dim. of want[1].] A mole; a moldwarp.

Some creatures, albeit they be alwaies covered within the ground yet live and breath nevertheless, and namely the wanty or mold-warpe.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, ix. 7. (Encyc. Dict.) wanwit†, n. [ME. wanuit (= G. wahnwitz = Sw. vanvett = Dan. vanvid); < wan- + wit.] Lack of sense; foolishness.

s. hild me from pein of helle pit,
That I han deserued therow wan wite.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 180.

wany†, a. A Middle English form of wane[2].

wanyand†, n. Same as waniand.

wanze†, v. i. See wanse.

wap[1] (wop), v.; pret. and pp. wapped, ppr. wapping. [< ME. wappen; cf. whap, whop, and quap[1], quop[1].] I. trans. 1. To strike; knock; beat; whip; drub. [Colloq.]

Why, either of my boys could wap him with one hand.
Thackeray.

2. To flap; flutter. [Scotch.]

There's nae a cock in a' the land
But has wapped its wings and crawn.
Glasgerian (Allingham's Ballad book), p. 261.

3. To toss or throw quickly. [Scotch.]

Tak a halter in thy hose,
And o thy purpose dinna fail,
But wap it o'er the Wanton's nose
Lochmaben Harper (Child's Ballads, VI. 4).

II. intrans. To flutter; flap the wings; move violently. [Obsolete or provincial.]

wap[1] (wop), n. [< ME. wappe; < wap[1], v.] A smart stroke; a blow. [Obsolete or provincial.]

The werld wannes at a wappe, and the wedire glounes.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), Oboy, p. 209.

When he stinke ane upon the back,
The swiftest gae his head a wap.
Lowsome Brand (Child's Ballads, II. 343).

wap[2†] (wop), v. t. [< ME. wappen (also comp. atwappen, bewappen), lap or wrap, wrap up (perhaps confused with wrappen, wlappen, wrap, lap); see wrap, lap[3].] To wrap; tie; bind. Halliwell.

wap[3] (wop), n. [Also wapp, wop; < wap[2], v.] 1. A bale or bundle, as of hay or straw. [Scotch and North. Eng.] — 2. A shroud-stopper. — 3. A pendant with a thimble in one end through which running rigging is led.

wap[4†] (wop), v. i. [< ME. wappen, bark; cf. waff[2] and yap.] To bark; yelp.

Wappynge or baffyng as howndys. Prompt. Parv.

'Tis the little wapping of small dogs that stirs up the cruel mastives. C. Mather, Discourse on Witchcraft (ed. 1689), p. 34.

wapacut (wop'a-kut), n. [NL., as specific name wapacuthu; < Amer. Ind. (Cree) wapacuthu, wapow-ke-thu (also wapokoo), a white owl: a name applied by Pennant and Latham to a kind of owl described in the manuscript notes of Mr. Hutchins, who resided on Severn river, near Hudson's Bay.] A large white spotted owl, about 2 feet long and without ear tufts, believed to be the common snowy owl, Nyctea scandiaca. See cut under snowy-owl.

wapen, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of weapon.

wapenshaw (wop'n-shâ), n. [Sc., also wapenshaw, wapinschaw, etc., lit. 'weapon-show,' < wapen (a form of weapon) + shaw.] A show or review of persons under arms, formerly made at certain times in every district. These exhibitions or meetings were not designed for military exercises, but only to show that the lieges were properly provided with arms. The name has been revived in some quarters in Great Britain, and applied to the periodical gatherings of the volunteer corps of a more or less wide district for review, inspection, shooting competitions, etc. [Scotch.]

We went to the field of war,
And to the weapon shaw.
Up and War Them A', Willie (Child's Ballads, VII. 266).

wapenshaw (wop'n-shâ), v. t. To hold or attend a wapenshaw. [Scotch.]

wapenshawing (wop'n-shâ-ing), n. [= D. wapenschouwing; as wapenshaw + -ing[1].] Same as wapenshaw.

But thir ridings and wapenshawings, my leddy, I hae nae no leave o them ava. Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

wapentake (wop'n-tāk), n. [< ME. wapentake, wepentake, < AS. wǽpengetæc, wǽpentac, a district, a wapentake (AL. wapentac or wapentagium), adapted from Icel. vapnatak, < vapna, gen. pl. of vapn, a weapon (= AS. wǽpen = E. weapon), + tak, a taking hold, a grasping, esp. a grasp in wrestling (used of the contact of weapons), < taka, take, grasp), seize, touch; see weapon and take, and cf. wapenshaw.] Formerly, in certain counties of northern, eastern, and midland England, a division or subdivision of a shire, generally corresponding to a hundred in other counties. The term seems to have been originally applied to the armed assemblies of freemen; and there is possibly an allusion to a practice of taking up or "touching" the arms. Wapentake is still a territorial division in Yorkshire.

It is written that King Alured or Alfred, who then reigned, did devide the realme into shires, and the shires into hundrethes and the hundrethes into rapes or wapentakes, and the wapentakes into tithinges. Soe that ten tithinges made an hundrethe, and five made a lathe or wapentake. Spenser, State of Ireland.

The wapentake is found only in the Anglian districts. . . . To the north of these districts the shires are divided into wards, and to the south into hundreds. Hence the wapentake may be a relic of Scandinavian occupation.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 45.

wapiti (wop'i-ti), n. [Also wapiti, wapite, wapiti; < Amer. Ind. (Cree) wapatik, 'white deer,' said to designate the Rocky Mountain goat, Haplocerus montanus, used as E., and also in the NL. form Cervus wapiti, by B. S. Barton, in 1809, for the animal defined.] The North American stag or elk, Cervus canadensis, which is the North American representative of the stag or red deer of Europe, and resembles the latter, though it is much larger and of a stronger make, being one of the largest living representatives of the family Cervidæ. Wapiti is chiefly a book-name of this deer, which has generally been known since about 1800 as the elk: a name applied in Europe to a very different animal, corresponding to that called moose in North America. (See elk) (with cut), moose, stag.) The full-grown male wapiti may exceed a height of 16 hands at the withers, and acquire a weight of more than 1,000 pounds, though not averaging over 600, the form is short for its stature. The coat is some shade of yellowish-gray or brownish gray darkening to chestnut-brown on the head, neck, and limbs, even blackening on the belly; on the rump is a white patch bordered with black and extending into the groin, the tail is extremely short. The antlers are very long, with comparatively slender, cylindric, and regularly curved beam, giving off in front the brow and bez antlers close together, the royal at end of first third of the beam, a large sur-royal at end of second third, and then forking dichotomously (only exceptionally acquiring any palmation like the crown of the European stag). A pair of good sized antlers may weigh, with the skull, 50 or 60 pounds, measure 4 or 5 feet along the curve of the beam, and spread 3 or 4 feet apart. The venison is well flavored and highly nutritious. The wapiti has inhabited North America from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Mexico to about 57° in the interior, but it has been hunted out of nearly all its range, and is now found chiefly in the Rocky Mountain region of the United States, especially of the Upper Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. It is gregarious, goes in herds or droves sometimes of many hundreds, is slaughtered with little difficulty, and would soon become extinct were no measures taken for its preservation.

Wapiti, or American Elk (Cervus canadensis).

wappato (wop'a-to), n. [Also wapatoo; < Oregon Ind. wapatoo, wappatoo (?).] The tubers of Sagittaria variabilis. The Indians of Oregon use them as food.

wappet, v. An obsolete spelling of wap[1].

wappent, n. Same as wapen.

wappenedt, a. A spurious (or perhaps obscene) word occurring only in the following passage. It has been conjectured to be a misprint for weeping.

> This yellow slave [gold]
> Will knit and break religions. . . . This is it
> That makes the wappen'd widow wed again.
> Shak., T. of A., iv. 3. 38.

wappenshaw, n. See wapenshaw.

wapperf (wap'er), v. i. [Freq. of wap[1]; see wap[1], waver[1].] To move tremulously; totter; blink.

> But still he stode his face to set awrye,
> And wapp'ring turnid up his white of eye.
> Mir. for Mags. (Imp. Dict.)

wapper-eyedf (wap'ėr-id), a. [< wapper + eye[1] + -ed[2].] Blear-eyed; blinking.

> A little wapper eyed constable, to wink and blink at small faults. Middleton, Black Book, p. 528.

wapper-jaw (wap'ėr-jâ), n. 1. A wry mouth. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] – 2. A projecting under-jaw. [Colloq., U. S.]

wappet (wap'et), n. [Cf. wap[3].] A cur-dog. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Wappingerf (wop-i ner'), n. [Var. of "Wappinger for Wappinger, q. v.] A man of Wapping, a district of London along the Thames, near the Tower.

> In kennel sowsd o'er head and ears
> Amongst the crowding Wappingers.
> D'Urfey, Collin's Walk, ii. – Davies.)

Wappinger tar, a waterman from Wapping Old Stairs, hence, a fresh-water sailor, a landlubber.

> Flip, The Commadore, a most illiterate Wappinger Tar, hates the Gentlemen of the Navy, gets drunk with his Boates Crew, and values himself upon the Brutish Management of the Navy.
> C. Shadwell, Humours of the Navy, Dramatis Personæ.

Wappingerf (wop'ing-ėr), n. [< Wapping + -er[1].] A man of Wapping, London.

> He was a thorough paced traitor, and looked upon to be paymaster of the mob: a Wappinger, and good at mustering seamen. Roger North, Examen, p. 588. (Davies.) wapplerite (wop'lėr-it), n. A hydrated arseniate of calcium and magnesium, found at Joachimsthal in minute white crystals.

waps (wops), n. A dialectal variant of wasp.

wapynt, n. An obsolete form of weapon.

war[1] (wâr), n. [Early mod. E. warre; < ME. werr, werre, were, weerre, weorre, wyrre, < late AS. werre (also cited in AL. as "war, in comp. -warscot), < OF. werre, guerre, F. guerre = Pr. guerra, gerra = Sp. Pg. It. guerra, war, < ML. werra, war, < OHG. werra, vexation, strife, controversy, confusion, broil (= MD. werre = MLG. werre, strife, war, hostility), < werran (fir-werran), MHG. werren (ver-werren), G. wirren (verwirren), confuse, entangle, embroil, = MD. werren (ver-warren), embroil, entangle; akin to E. worse: see worse, and cf. war[2], ult. a var. of worse. The F. guerre appears in the phrase nom de guerre, and the Sp. in the dim. guerrilla. Hence war[1], v., warray, warrior, etc.] 1. A contest between nations or states (international war), or between parties in the same state (civil war), carried on by force of arms. International or public war is always understood to be authorized by the sovereign powers of the nations engaged in it; when it is carried into the territories of the antagonist it is called an aggressive or offensive war, and when carried on to resist such aggression it is called defensive. Certain usages or rights of war have come to be generally recognized and defined under the name of the Laws of War, which in general (but subject to some humane restrictions which in recent times have been greatly increased) permit the destruction or capture of armed enemies, the destruction of property likely to be serviceable to them, the stoppage of all their channels of traffic, and the appropriation of everything in an enemy's country necessary for the support and subsistence of the invading army. On the other hand, though an enemy may be starved into surrender, wounding, except in battle, mutilation, and all cruel and wanton devastation are contrary to the usages of war, as are also bombarding an unprotected town, the use of poison in any way, and torture to extort information from an enemy; but it is admitted that an enemy may be put to death for certain acts which are in themselves not criminal, and it may be even highly patriotic and praiseworthy, but are injurious to the invaders, such as firing on the invaders although not regularly enrolled in an organized military force, or seeking to impair the invaders' lines of communication.

> 'After this war," quod she, "God send us pees." > Gower's Confessio (E. E. T. S.), I. 900.

Learning and art, and especially religion, weave ties that make war look like fratricide, as it is.

Emerson, War.

2. A state of active opposition, hostility, or contest: as, to be at war (that is, engaged in active hostilities).

> Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war.
> Shak., Sonnets, xlvi.
>
> A wounded thing with a rancorous cry,
> At war with myself and a wretched race.
> Tennyson, Maud, x. 2.

3. Any kind of contest or conflict; contention; strife: as, a wordy war. – 4. The profession of arms; the art of war.

> Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Isa. ii. 4.
>
> War is our business, but to whom is giv'n
> To die, or triumph, that determine heav'n!
> Pope, Iliad, xxii. 171.

5. Forces; army. Compare battle. [Poetical.]

> O'er the embattled ranks the waves return
> And overwhelm their war. Milton, P. L., xii. 214.
>
> In this array the war of either side
> Through Athens passes, with military pride.
> Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 101.

6. Warlike outfit.

> His Complement of Stores, and total War.
> Prior, Henry and Emma.

[War is sometimes used in the plural form with the same signification as it has in the singular.

> I'll to the Tuscan wars. Shak., All's Well, ii. 3. 280.)

Articles of war. See article. – Austro-Prussian war, the war waged by Prussia, Italy, and some minor German states against Austria, the states of South Germany, Saxony, Hanover, etc., in 1866. It resulted in the victory of the former, the dissolution of the Germanic confederation, the replacing of Austria by Prussia in the hegemony of Germany, large additions to Prussian territory, and the cession to Italy of Venetia by Austria. Broad-seal war. See broad seal. Buck-shot war. See buck-shot. Civil war, a war between different factions of a people or between different sections of a country. Specifically – (a) In Rom. hist. the war between Sulla and Marius (commencing 88 B. C.) or that between Pompey and Cæsar (commencing 49 B. C.). (b) In Eng. hist., the war of the great rebellion. See rebellion. (c) In U. S. hist. the war of secession. See secession. – Contraband of war. See contraband goods, under contraband. – Council of war. See council. – Crimean war. See Crimean. – Custom of war, declaration of war, Department of War, effair of war. See custom, declaration, etc. Eighty years' war, the contest between Spain and the Netherlands, extending with intermissions from about 1568 to the recognition by Spain of Dutch independence in 1648. – Franco-German war, or Franco-Prussian war, the war between France and Germany in 1870–1, ending in the defeat of the former, the cession to Germany of Alsace-Lorraine, and the formation of the modern German empire. – French and Indian war, a war waged by Great Britain and its American colonies against France and Indian allies, 1754–63, ending in the acquisition of Canada and the Mississippi region by Great Britain: it was a part of the "Seven Years' War." Holy war, a war waged with a religious purpose: as, the holy wars of the Crusaders; a Mohammedan holy war against the infidels. – Honors of war. See honor. – Hundred years' war, the series of wars between England and France, about 1338–1453. The English, gaining victory in these wars down to about 1429 (Crécy, Poitiers, Agincourt, etc.), and rulers of a great part of France, were finally expelled entirely, except from Calais, which they retained for about a century longer. – Inexpiable war. See inexpiable. – Italian war, the war of 1859 waged by France and Sardinia against Austria. It resulted in the defeat of the latter, its cession of Lombardy to Sardinia, and eventually in the constitution of the kingdom of Italy. – Jugurthine war. See Jugurthine. – King George's war, in Amer. hist., the war waged by Great Britain and its American colonies against France and Indian allies, being the American phase of the War of the Austrian Succession (1741–8). – King Philip's war, in Amer. hist., the war between the New England colonists and the confederated Indians under the lead of Philip (1675–6). – King William's war, in Amer. hist., the war waged by Great Britain and its colonies against France and Indian allies, being the American phase of the contest between various European powers against Louis XIV. of France (1689–97). – Latin war, in Rom. hist., the war between Rome and the Latin League, 340–338 B. C., ending in the subjection of the latter. – Man of war. See man. – Marsic war. See social war. – Mexican war, the war between the United States and Mexico, 1846–8, ending in the defeat of the latter, and its cession of California and other large territories to the United States. – Mithridatic wars, the wars between Rome and Mithridates the Great of Pontus in the first half of the first century B. C., terminating in the overthrow of Mithridates by Pompey about 65 B. C. – Napoleonic wars, a general name for the wars waged by France with various nations, dating from Napoleon's campaigns in Italy in 1796 to his final overthrow in 1815. Peasants' war. See peasant. – Peloponnesian war. See Peloponnesian. – Peninsular war. See peninsular. Pequot war, in Amer. hist., the war between the New England colonists and the Pequot Indians of Connecticut in 1637. – Persian wars, in Gr. hist., the wars between Persia and Greece in the first half of the fifth century B. C., of which the chief episodes were Marathon (490 B. C.) and the unsuccessful invasion of Greece by Xerxes (Thermopylæ, Salamis, Plataea). – Private war. See private. – Punic wars. See Punic. – Queen Anne's war, in Amer. hist., the war waged by Great Britain and its colonies against France and Indian allies, being the American phase of the War of the Spanish Succession (1701–13). – Revolutionary war, in U. S. hist., same as War of the American Revolution. – Russo-Turkish wars, wars between Russia and Turkey. The principal in modern times were those (a) of 1828–9, ending in the defeat of Turkey; (b) of 1853–6 (see Crimean), (c) of 1877–8, between Russia and its allies (Rumania, etc.) and Turkey, resulting in the defeat of Turkey and the reconstruction of southeastern Europe. – Sacred wars, in Gr. hist., wars against certain Greek states which had been adjudged guilty of sacrilege by the Amphictyonic council: as, the sacred war against Phocis (ending 346 B. C.). Saltpeter war. See saltpeter. Samnite wars, three wars waged by Rome against the Samnites and other Italians, (a) 343–341 B. C., (b) 326–304 B. C., (c) 298–290 B. C., ending in the triumph of Rome. – Schleswig-Holstein wars, wars between Denmark and the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein (with allies). They commenced in 1848 and ended in 1864, when Prussia and Austria defeated the Danes and occupied the duchies, which were eventually annexed by Prussia. Secretary at War, Secretary of War. See secretary. – Seven weeks' war, or seven days' war, the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. – Seven years' war. See Silesian wars. – Silesian wars. See Silesian. – Sinews of war. See sinew. Sloop of war. See sloop[1]. – Smalkaldic war. See Smalkaldic. Social war. See social. The name is also given to the war between Athens and her former allies about 358–355 B. C. Thirty years' war. See thirty. – To declare war. See declare. – To make war. See make[1]. – Trojan war. See Trojan. Tug of war. See tug. War measures, a general title for acts passed by the United States Congress and orders made by the President during the civil war, 1861–5, which became necessary to its prosecution, though not expressly authorized by the Constitution, as the Confiscation Acts, the Legal Tender Acts, the ordering of drafts for the military service, the emancipation of slaves, etc. – War of 1812, the war between Great Britain and the United States in 1812–15. War of Liberation, specifically, the war undertaken by Germany in 1813, with the aid of Russia, Great Britain, and other allies, to free Germany and other parts of Europe from the rule or influence of Napoleon and the French. – War of secession. See secession. – War of the American Revolution. See revolution. – War of the rebellion. Same as war of secession. – War powers, powers exercised during or because of war; specifically, the powers exercised in time of war by the President of the United States as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into actual service. – Wars of succession. See succession. – Wars of the French Revolution, the wars growing out of the French Revolution, waged by Austria, Prussia, etc., against France, and commencing in 1792. – Wars of the Roses. See rose[1]. – War to the knife. See knife.

war[1] (wâr), v.; pret. and pp. warred, ppr. warring. [< ME. werren, weorren, werrien (= MD. MLG. werren), war; from the noun. Cf. war-ray.] I. intrans. 1. To make or carry on war; carry on hostilities; fight.

> And the hethen peple that werreden on the kynge Moyse often sithes foughten withe the crystene.
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), I. 24.
>
> Why should I war without the walls of Troy?
> Shak., T. and C., i. 1. 2.

2. To contend; strive violently; be in a state of opposition.

> Lusts which war against the soul. 1 Pet. ii. 11.
>
> Let us alone. What pleasure can we have
> To war with evil?
> Tennyson, The Lotos Eaters, Choric Song.

II. trans. 1. To make war upon; oppose; as in war; contend against.

Lykewyse we sholde keep the vowales of the original, whiche the north weyes the south; from retineo, the north retine, the south retain.
A. Hume, Orthographie (E. E. T. S.), p. 20.

Love and Ambition in their glory sat . . .
Warring each other. Daniel, Civil Wars, viii.

2. To carry on, as a contest.

That thou by them mightest war a good warfare.
1 Tim. i. 18.

war[3] (wâr), a. [Sc. also waur; < ME. warre, werre, wer, a later form, after OFries. werra, wirra, worse, of Icel. verri, a. (verr, adv.) = Dan. værre = Sw. värre, of ME. werse, E. worse; see worse.] Same as worse. [Now only Scotch, commonly misspelled waur.]

They sayne the world is much war then it wont.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

Murder and waur than murder. Scott.

war[3] (wâr), v. t. [Sc. also waur; < war[3], a.] To defeat; worst. [Scotch.]

It was a paper of great significance to the plea, and we were to be wasured for want o't. Scott, Antiquary, ix.

war[3]†, a. and v. A Middle English form of ware[1].

war[4]†, v. A Middle English form of were.

waratah (wâ'ra-tâ), n. [Also warratau.] 1. A stout erect Australian shrub, Telopea speciosissima, also T. oreades, of the Proteaceæ, bearing dense heads, some 3 inches broad, of brilliant crimson flowers. It is sometimes grown in greenhouses, but is not easily cultivated.—2. A variety of the common camellia, with flowers resembling those of Anemone; anemone-flowered camellia.

war-ax (wâr'aks), n. Same as battle-ax.

warbeetle (wâr'bē'tl), n. Same as warble[3], 3.

warble[1] (wâr'bl), v.; pret. and pp. warbled, ppr. warbling. [< ME. werblen, < OF. werbler, quaver with the voice, speak in a high tone, < MHG. werbeln*, G. werbeln, warble, lit. turn, whirl, freq. of MHG. werben (werven) = OHG. werban (werfan), turn, twist, move, be busy about, perform, = OS. hwerbhan, move hither and thither, = AS. hweorfan, turn, move; see wherve, wharf, and cf. whirl, wharl, whorl.] I. intrans. 1. To sing with trills and quavering, or melodious turns, as a bird; carol or sing with sweetly trilling notes.

Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.
Shak., L. L. L., iii. 1. 1.

Birds on the branches warbling. Milton, P. L., viii 264.

2. To sound vibratingly, or with free, smooth, and rapid modulations of pitch; quaver.

Such strains as warble in the linnet a throat.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Wednesday, l. 3.

The stream of life warbled through her heart as a brook sometimes warbles through a pleasant little dell.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

3. To yodel. [U. S.]

II. trans. 1. To sing or utter with quavering trills or turns; as, to warble a song.

She gan againe in melodie to melt,
And many a note she warbled wondrous wel.
Gascoigne, Philomene (Steele Glas, etc., ed. Arber, p. 89).

If she be right invoked with warbled song.
Milton, Comus, l. 864.

2. To describe or celebrate in song.

O Father grant I sweetly warble forth
Vnto our seed the World's renowned Birth.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

Or would you have me turn a sonnetteer,
And warble those brief-sighted eyes of hers?
Tennyson, Queen Mary, iii. 6.

warble[1] (wâr'bl), n. [< ME. werble, < OF. werble, a warble, warbling; from the verb.] A strain of clear, rapidly uttered, gliding tones; a trilling, flexible melody; a carol; a song; any soft sweet flow of melodious sounds.

The well-tuned warble of her nightly sorrow.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1080.

Wild bird, whose warble, liquid sweet,
Rings Eden through the budded quicks.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxviii.

Quiet as any water-sodden log Stay'd in the wandering warble of a brook.
Tennyson, Last Tournament.

warble[2] (wâr'bl), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. warbled, ppr. warbling. [Sc. also warple; < ME. werblen*, turn, whirl (?), ult. same as warble[1], q. v.] In falconry, to cross the wings upon the back.

warble[3] (wâr'bl), n. [Also wormil, wormal, warnle, wornil, wornal, also assimilated wabble, and dim. warblet; cf. equiv. warbeetle, and the adj. worbitten, said of timber pierced by the larvæ of insects; orig. form uncertain; no early instances appearing; perhaps connected with ME. war, pus, humor. Some of the forms indicate simulation of worm.] 1. A small, hard swelling on the back of a horse, produced by the galling of the saddle.—2. A tumor on the back of cattle or deer, produced by the larva of a bot-fly or gadfly.—3. An insect or its larva which produces warbles. Also warbeetle. Compare warble[2].

warble-fly (wâr'bl-fli), n. A fly whose larva produces warbles. Thus, Hypoderma bovis is the warble-fly of the ox. Synonymous in part with bot-fly. The latter word, however, is applied to all Œstridæ.

warbler (wâr'blėr), n. [< warble[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which warbles; a singer; a songster.

In lulling strains the feathered warblers woo.
Tickell, On Hunting.

Dan Chaucer, the first warbler. Tennyson, Fair Women.

2. Specifically, any one of a great number of small oscine passerine birds, or dentirostral insessorial birds, of different families and many different genera, of both the Old World and the New. Especially—(a) A bird of the group composing the family Sylviidæ, or Old World warblers, with scarcely any representatives in America. This is one of the most extensive and varied groups of its grade in ornithology, now generally rated as only a subfamily (Sylviinæ) of Turdidæ. These warblers are all small, active, sprightly birds, and many are remarkable for the clearness, sweetness, and flexibility of their song. Among typical warblers of the subfamily Sylviinæ may be noted the species of Sylvia, the leading genus, as the blackcap and whitethroat; of Melizophilus, as the Dartford warbler; of Regulus, as the goldcrest; of Phylloscopus, as the willow-warbler; of Aëdon, as the rufous warbler; of Hypolais, as the ictorine warbler; of Acrocephalus, as the reed- or sedge-warbler; of Locustella, as the grasshopper-warbler; of Cettia, as Cetti's warbler. Besides these, the accentor or hedge sparrow, the nightingale (Daulias luscinia), the redbreast (Erythacus rubecula), the bluethroat, redstart, whinchat, stonechat, etc., have been brought under the definition of warbler, as members of the sylviine group. (b) In the United States a bird of a different family, the American warblers, Dendrœcidæ or Mniotiltidæ, a smaller and more compact group than the Sylviidæ, though the species are still very numerous and diversified. Few of them are noted for musical ability. The leading representatives of the American warblers are the numerous wood warblers of the genus Dendrœca; the worm-eating warblers, Helmitherus and Helminthophaga; the creeping warblers, Mniotilta and Parula; the ground warblers, as Geothlypis; the chat, Icteria; the water-thrushes, Seiurus, the fly catching warblers, Myiodioctes, Setophaga, and many others of tropical America.

3. In bagpipe music, an appoggiatura, or similar melodic embellishment.

In the music performed upon this instrument [the bagpipe] the players introduce among the simple notes of the tune a kind of appoggiatura, consisting of a great number of rapid notes of peculiar emphasis, which they term warbles. Encyc. Brit., III. 236.

Adelaide's warbler, Dendrœca adelaidæ (Baird, 1866), the representative in Porto Rico of citrea and of the yellow-throated warbler. African warbler† (Latham, 1783), the type species of the genus Spl. curruca, S. africana. Also called spotted yellow flycatcher by Latham, formerly Muscicapa afra, Motacilla or Sylvia africana, etc., and also placed in the genus Drymœca by some authors. Alpine warbler† (Latham, 1783), a kind of hedge warbler, Accentor alpinus, of central and southern Europe, occasionally found in Great Britain. This bird was also called collar-d starc by Latham the same year, having been described by Scopoli in 1769 as Sturnus collaris. Aquatic warbler (Latham, 1783), one of the reed warblers, probably Acrocephalus aquaticus, formerly called Sylvia or Salicaria or Calamodyta aquatica. Audubon's warbler, Dendrœca auduboni, the western representative of the yellow-rump or myrtle-bird, and equally abundant. It differs chiefly in having the throat yellow instead of white. Also called western yellow-rump. Autumnal warbler, the young of the bay-breasted warbler, mistaken for a distinct species. A. Wilson, 1811. Azure warbler, the cerulean warbler. Babbling warbler† (Latham, 1783), the lesser white throat, Sylvia curruca. See whitethroat, 1. Bachman's warbler (named after the American naturalist John Bachman (1790–1874)), Helmithophaga bachmani of the southern United States and some of the West Indies. (Audubon, 1854.) It is one of the swamp-warblers, and still very rare, though it has been quite recently found to be common in some localities. Barred warbler, Sylvia nisoria of Europe, Asia, and Africa.—Bay-breasted warbler, Dendrœca castanea of eastern parts of North America. The adult male has the whole breast chestnut.—Belted warbler†, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Black-and-white warbler, the creeping warbler, Mniotilta varia, more fully called black-and-white creeping warbler or creeper, also white-poll warbler. See cut under Mniotilta.—Black-and-yellow warbler, Dendrœca maculosa. See cut under spotted.—Blackburnian warbler, Dendrœca blackburniæ the prometheus warbler, in adult plumage extensively black varied with white, the breast and some parts about the head of a flaming orange. It is the most richly colored of the warblers, and is common in many parts of North America. It was named by Latham in 1783 after a Mrs. Blackburn of London.—Black-capped warbler, the black-cap, Sylvia (often Curruca) atricapilla, of nearly all Europe, and parts of Asia and Africa.—Black-headed warbler†, the American redstart, Setophaga ruticilla. See cut under redstart. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Black-poll warbler, Dendrœca striata, when adult having the whole crown black, the upper parts olivaceous streaked with black, and the under parts white streaked with black along the sides. In young plumage it is hardly to be distinguished from the bay-breasted warbler. It is very wide-ranging, from Greenland and Alaska through most of America (probably to Chili). It was originally described in 1772 by J. R. Forster from Hudson's Bay as the striped fly-catcher.—Black-throated blue warbler, Dendrœca carulescens, of eastern North America, remarkable for the unusual difference of the sexes in plumage. The male is blue, white below, with black throat and a peculiar white space on the wing; the female is chiefly greenish above and yellowish below, with traces of the characteristic wing-mark. Black-throated gray warbler, Dendrœca nigrescens, of western parts of the United States and Mexico. The adult male is bluish-ash above with a few black streaks, below white streaked on the sides with black; the head black with white stripes and a small bright-yellow spot before the eye.—Black-throated green warbler, Dendrœca virens, one of the most abundant wood warblers of eastern North America. The adult male is olivaceous-green above, below extensively black, with much golden yellow on the sides of the head, and white on the wings and tail. The length is 5 inches. It is one of a group of warblers having several representatives in western North America. See cut under Dendrœca.—Black-throated warbler, the black-throated blue warbler, Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Blanford's warbler, Sylvia blanfordi, of which only one specimen is known, from Abyssinia. Sclebdms. Bloody-side or bloody-sided warbler†, (a) The chestnut-sided warbler Pennant, 1785. (b) One of the golden warblers, Dendrœca rubigenalis, of the West Indies. Latham, 1783. Blue-eyed yellow warbler, the summer yellow bird, Dendrœca æstiva.—Blue golden-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysoptera, a common swamp-warbler of the eastern United States and Canada. See cut under Helminthophaga.—Blue-green warbler, the cerulean warbler in immature plumage, or the female of that species.—Blue Mountain warbler, an American warbler so named by A. Wilson in 1812, and never since identified. It was found in the Blue Mountains of Pennsylvania.—Blue-throated warbler (Latham, 1783), the bluethroat, originally described by Edwards in 1743 as the bluethroat redstart, later variously called Motacilla suecica, Sylvia suecica, Sylvia cyanecula, Cyanecula suecica, etc., all of which names are shared by a related species or variety. See cut under bluethroat.—Blue-winged yellow warbler, Helminthophaga pinus, a common swamp-warbler of the eastern parts of the United States, originally described by Edwards (before Linnæus) as the pine-creeper.—Blue yellow-backed warbler, Parula (or Compsothlypis) americana. See Parula.—Bonaparte's fly-catching warbler, the young of the Canadian fly-catching warbler, mistaken by Audubon for a different species in 1831, and dedicated to Prince Charles Lucien Bonaparte (1803–57).—Booted warbler, a tree warbler, Hypolais caligata.—Bourbon warbler† (Latham, 1783), the yellow-rumped creeper (Latham, 1783); a white eye or silver-eye, Zosterops borbonica, peculiar to the Island of Réunion.—Bowman's warbler, Sylvia myiatacea of Persia, Palestine, and Abyssinia.—Bush-warblers, the members of the genus Cettia, having only ten rectrices. There are about 12 species, with one exception confined to Asia. The exception is Cetti's warbler, C. cetti, which extends throughout the Mediterranean region, and was originally described in 1776, by the naturalist whose name it bears, as usignuolo di fiume, which became the bouscarle of Buffon and Daubenton. See cut under Cettia.—Caffrarian warbler† (Latham, 1783), the so-called red-tailed thrush of Latham (1788), formerly Motacilla or Sylvia cafra, now known as Cossypha cafra (and Bessonornis phœnicurus).—Canadian fly-catching warbler, Myiodioctes canadensis, abundant in eastern parts of North America. Also called Canada and spotted flycatcher. The upper parts are bluish ash varied with black, and the under parts are yellow with black streaks on the breast.—Canadian warbler, (a) The black-throated blue warbler. (b) The Canadian fly-catching warbler.—Cape May warbler, Dendrœca tigrina, formerly Sylvia maritima: so named by A. Wilson, in 1812, from a locality in New Jersey where he found it. In full plumage it is one of the handsomest of the wood warblers, and has peculiarities which have caused a genus (Perissoglossa) to be based upon it.—Carbonated warbler, an American warbler so named by Audubon in 1831, and never since identified. More fully called carbonated swamp-warbler, also dusky warbler.—Cerulean warbler. See cerulean.—Cetti's warbler, one of the bush-warblers.—Chestnut-bellied warbler† (Latham, 1783), an Asiatic redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) erythrogastra.—Chestnut-sided warbler, Dendrœca pensylvanica of the eastern United States and Canada, having, when adult, the under parts pure-white with a chain of chestnut streaks along each side, and the crown rich-yellow.—Chiff-chaff warbler, Phylloscopus rufus. See cut under chiff-chaff.—Children's warbler†, the female or young summer yellow bird, Dendrœca æstiva. Audubon, 1831.—Cingalese warbler† (Latham, 1783), the green warbler of Brown (1770) and yellow-bellied creeper of Latham (1787), one of the Nectariniidæ, Anthothreptes phœnicotis, extending from Bhutan to Malacca and the Sunda Islands, but not known in Ceylon.—Cisticoline warbler, a grass warbler; one of a very large and loose group of Old World warbler-like birds, of which the leading genera, in numbers of species, are Cisticola or Drymœca, with twelve rectrices, and Prinia with ten (as in the genus Cettia). The group is badly defined, and is now generally thrown into the so-called ornithological waste-basket (Turdæ melodæ). Most of the species of the three genera named have been placed in each of the others, and Drymœca has practically included the members of both. Among notable members of the group are the tailor-warblers or tailor birds (see Orthotomus, Sutoria, and tailor-bird, with cuts), with twelve rectrices, and the species of Suya (which see), with ten rectrices. The group is best developed in Africa and Asia. Cisticola cursitans (with thirty technical synonyms) extends from southern Europe, throughout Africa and through the warmer parts of Asia, to the Indo-Malayan islands; C. subruficapilla (with more than thirty synonyms) inhabits most of Africa.—Citrine warbler† (Latham, 1783), the remarkable New Zealand Acanthisitta chloris. See Xenicidæ.—Citron warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva. Swainson and Richardson, 1831.—Connecticut warbler, Oporornis agilis, a ground-warbler so named by Wilson in 1812, common in eastern parts of the United States, especially in the fall.—Creeping warblers, American warblers of the genera Mniotilta and [illegible]. See cut under Mniotilta.—Dartford warbler [illegible] 1783), the Motacilla undata of Boddaert, 1783 [illegible] the pittechou of Daubenton, Planches Enlu[illegible]

fig. 1, 1783), also called Sylvia provincialis, S. undata, S. dartfordensis, S. ferruginea, etc., and type of the genus Melizophilus (which see, with cut), a warbler found from England and France to northern Africa and Palestine. — Daurian warbler† (Latham, 1788), the Daurian redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) aurorea, inhabiting most of Asia and some of the adjacent islands. Desert-warbler, Sylvia nana, characteristic of arid wastes from Algeria to Persia and other parts of Asia. Dusky warbler†. (a) A bird so named by Latham in 1783, but never identified. It is supposed to be a species of Prinia or of Drymoeca. (b) The yellow-rumped warbler, Pennant, 1785. Also audubon's warbler. (c) The carbonated warbler. Nuttall, 1832. Dwarf warbler† (Latham, 1783), Acanthiza pusilla, a warbler-like bird of Australia. Equinoctial warbler† (Latham, 1783), Tatare aequinoctialis, of Christmas Island in the Pacific Ocean. This is closely related to the bird figured under Tatare. Fat warbler†. Same as gravet warbler. Flaxen warbler†, a bird so named by Latham in 1788, apparently Prinia inornata. Fly-catching warblers, the American warblers of the subfamily Setophaginæ, as the redstart, the species of Myiodioctes, Cardellina, Basileuterus, etc., chiefly of tropical and subtropical regions. See cuts under Myiodioctes and redstart. Garden warbler, the common European and African Sylvia hortensis, the greater pettichaps. See cut under pettichaps. Golden-cheeked warbler, Dendroica chrysoparia, a relative of the black throated green warbler, found from Texas to Guatemala. Sclater and Salvin, 1859. Golden-crowned warbler, the yellow rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Also gold-n crowned fly catcher (the original name, bestowed by Edwards). Golden swamp-warbler, the prothonotary warbler. See cut under prothonotary. — Golden warblers. See golden. Gold-wing, gold-winged, or golden-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysoptera. See cut under Helminthophaga. Grace's warbler, Dendroica graciæ (named by S. F. Baird in 1865 after Grace D. Cooke), a wood warbler resembling D. dominica, discovered in Arizona by Couch in 1864. Grasset warbler, the yellow rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Grass-warbler. (a) A citicoline warbler, especially one of the genus Drymoeca in a broad sense. (b) Any member of the genus Lusciniola, a small group of about 12 species chiefly Asiatic, and especially Himalayan, with one species extending into the Mediterranean region, and another in South Africa. There are twelve tail feathers, the tarsus is scutellate, the wings are short with spurious first primary, and the prevailing colors are russet and olive-brown. The type is L. aedon (of Pallas). This genus has six other New Latin names. Great-tailed warbler (Latham, 1783), one of the South African grass-warblers, formerly Sylvia macroura, now known as Prinia (or Drymoeca) maculosa. Green black-capped warbler, Wilson's fly-catching warbler. Nuttall. Green warbler. (a) The Cingalese warbler. Brown, 1776. (b) The black throated green warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Ground-warblers, the American warblers of the genera Geothlypis and related forms, as the Maryland yellow-throat. See cut under Geothlypis. Guira warbler† (Latham), a South American tanager, Nemosia guira. Hedge-warbler, the hedge-sparrow (of Albin, 1738), Accentor modularis. See cut under Accentor. Latham, 1783. Hemlock-warbler, the young Blackburnian warbler, Sylvia parus of Wilson, Nuttall, and Audubon. Hooded warbler, the hooded fly-catching warbler, Myiodioctes mitratus, of the eastern parts of the United States. The adult male is of an olivaceous color above, rich-yellow below, the head mostly black with a mask of rich yellow. Also called mitered warbler, Selby's sylvan flycatcher, and hooded titmouse. Icterine warbler, a tree-warbler, Hypolais icterina. Jamaica warbler, Dendroica dominica, the yellow-throated warbler. Latham, 1783. Kentucky warbler, Oporornis formosus, a ground warbler so named by Wilson in 1811. It is entirely rich-yellow underneath, olivaceous above, with a black bar on each side of the head, and a yellow mark about the eye. It is common in eastern parts of the United States. More fully called by Audubon Kentucky fly catching warbler. Kirtland's warbler, Dendroica kirtlandi, a rare wood warbler named in 1852 by S. F. Baird after Dr. Jared P. Kirtland of Ohio, where the bird was discovered, at Cleveland, May, 1851. Lawrence's warbler [named after George N. Lawrence of New York], Helminthophaga lawrencei. Herrick, 1874. Long-legged warbler† (Latham, 1788), the remarkable New Zealand Acanthiza longipes. See Acanthiza. Long-tailed warbler† (Latham, 1783), the tailor-warbler or tailor bird. See Sutoria. — Louisiana warbler, the blue yellow backed warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Lucy's warbler [named after the daughter of S. F. Baird], Helminthophaga luciæ, of Arizona. J. G. Cooper, 1862. It is clear-ashy, white below, with chestnut crown-patch and upper tail coverts. Macgillivray's warbler, Geothlypis macgillivrayi, the western representative of the mourning warbler, more fully called Macgillivray's ground warbler, originally described by Audubon in 1839, and dedicated to William Macgillivray, a Scotch ornithologist, who wrote most of the technical parts of Audubon's "Ornithological Biography" and "Birds of America." Magellanic warbler† (Latham, 1783), a South American rock wren, Scytalopus magellanicus, of the family Pteroptochidæ. See cut under Scytalopus. Magnolia warbler, the black and yellow warbler, described as Sylvia magnolia by A. Wilson in 1811. Marmora's warbler, Sylvia sarda or Melizophilus sardus, of the Mediterranean region. Marsh-warbler, one of the reed warblers, Acrocephalus palustris, of parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. Maryland warbler, the Maryland yellow-throat. See cut under Geothlypis. Maurice warbler† (Latham, 1783), the white-eye or silvereye of Mauritius, Zosterops mauritiana. Mitered warbler, the hooded warbler. Also called mitered sylvan flycatcher. Moor warbler†, Pratincola (formerly Sylvia) maura, a whin-chat widely distributed in Asia. Mourning warbler, Geothlypis philadelphia, so named by A. Wilson in 1810 from the black veiled with gray on the breast, as if the bird were wearing crape. It is a common ground warbler of many parts of North America. Nashville warbler, Helminthophaga rubricapilla, a common swamp-warbler or worm-eating warbler of most parts of North America discovered by A. Wilson in 1811, and named after a city in Tennessee. New York warbler, the New York water thrush, Seiurus noveboracensis. See cut under Seiurus. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. — Olive warbler. (a) A monotypic American warbler named Sylvia olivacea by J. P. Giraud in 1841; Peucedramus olivaceus of Cones, inhabiting Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and southward, chiefly of an olivaceous color with orange-brown or deep saffron-yellow head and neck, and a black transocular bar. It is 4½ inches long. Also olive-backed and orange-headed warbler. (b) The female of the black-throated blue warbler. P. H. Gosse, [Jamaica.] (c) The summer yellow-bird, Dendroica æstiva, in some obscure plumage. Pennant, 1785; Stephens, 1817. — Orange-breasted warbler. Same as olive warbler (a).

Orange-crowned warbler, Helminthophaga celata, named by Thomas Say (1823). It inhabits all of North America, and several varieties are described. The crown has a concealed patch of orange. — Orange-thighed warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat, which in some autumnal and other plumages has the flanks tinged with orange-brown. The adult male is figured under Geothlypis. Pennant, 1785. — Orange-throated warbler. (a) The prothonotary warbler. See cut under prothonotary. Latham, 1783. (b) The Blackburnian warbler. — Orphean warbler, Sylvia orphea, which, including its variety S. sordida, inhabits most of Europe and much of Asia and Africa. Palestine warbler, Sylvia melanothorax, of Palestine and Cyprus. Party-colored warbler. (a) The blue yellow-backed warbler. (b) The prairie-warbler. Stephens, 1817. Pensile warbler, Dendroica dominica, formerly Sylvia pensilis. Latham, 1783. — Pine-creeping warbler, Dendroica pinus or vigorsi, one of the commonest wood-warblers of the United States, of an olivaceous color above and yellowish below. Pine-swamp warbler, the black-throated blue warbler. — Pine-warbler, one of two different American warblers: (a) The pine-creeper of Edwards, and not of Catesby; the blue-winged yellow warbler, Helminthophaga pinus. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. (b) The pine-creeper of Catesby, 1771; the pine-creeping warbler, Dendroica pinus or vigorsi. See cut under pine warbler. — Prothonotary warbler. See prothonotary. Provincial warbler, the Dartford warbler. Quebec warbler, the chestnut-sided warbler. Pennant, 1785. — Rathbone's warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendroica æstiva, in some immature plumage. Audubon. Red-backed warbler, the prairie-warbler. P. H. Gosse [Jamaica.] Red-faced or red-fronted warbler, Cardellina rubrifrons, a fly-catching warbler of the southern border of the United States and southward. See Cardellina. Redstart warbler†, the European redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) phœnicura. See cut under redstart. Red-throated warbler†, the chestnut sided warbler. Latham, 1783. — Rocky Mountain warbler, Virginia's warbler. Roscoe's warbler, the Maryland yellow-throat, in some variant plumage. Audubon, 1832. — Ruddy warbler†, the rock-warbler. Latham, 1801. Rufous-vented warbler† (Latham, 1801), an Australian thick headed shrike, Pachycephala rufiventris, earlier called by Latham rufous-vented honey-eater, and later by Lewin orange breasted thrush. Rufous warbler, Sylvia (or Aedon) galactodes, of southern Europe and northern Africa. — Rüppell's warbler, Sylvia rueppelli, of southern Europe, Asia Minor, Palestine, and some parts of Africa. Rush-warbler† (Latham, 1783), an unidentified sparrow of the United States, supposed to be the field-sparrow, Spizella pusilla. — Rusty-sided warbler† (Latham, 1801), the cerulean creeper of the same author and date, Zosterops cerulescens, a white-eye of Australia, New Zealand, and the Chatham Islands. St. Domingo warbler, Dendroica dominica, the yellow-throated warbler. Turton, 1806. — Sardinian warbler, Sylvia melanocephala, of the Mediterranean region. — Sennett's warbler [named after George B. Sennett of New York], one of the creeping warblers, Parula nigrilora, of Texas and southward. Coues, 1877. — Siberian warbler (Latham, 1783), the Asiatic Accentor montanellus, occasional in Europe, related to the common hedge-accentor. — Spectacled warbler, Sylvia conspicillata, of the Mediterranean region, extending from Palestine to the Canaries. Spotted warbler. (a) The Cape May warbler. (b) The black-and-yellow warbler, Dendroica maculosa. See spotted (with cut). — Spotted yellow warbler. (a) The Cape May warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. These two accounts are the bases of Motacilla tigrina (Gmelin, 1788). (b) Dendroica maculosa. See cut under spotted. — Streaked warbler (Latham, 1801), an Australian warbler like bird, formerly Sylvia sagittata, now known as Chthonicola sagittata. — Subalpine warbler, Sylvia subalpina, of southern Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia. — Summer warbler, the summer yellow-bird of North America; one of the golden warblers, Dendroica æstiva, among the most abundant and familiar warblers of the United States. The adult male is golden-yellow more or less obscured with olivaceous on the back and has the whole under part streaked with brownish red. Also called, in various plumages, yellow-poll warbler, olive warbler, citron warbler, yellow warbler, Children's warbler, Rathbone's warbler, etc. — Superb warbler, either one of two different maurine birds of Australia, Malurus cyaneus and M. lamberti, formerly placed in the genus Sylvia. Latham; Shaw. Also called blue-wren. — Swainson's warbler [named after William Swainson, an English quinarian naturalist], Helinaia (or Helmitas) swainsoni, described by Audubon in 1834, and long considered one of the rarest of the American warblers, but lately found abundant in South Carolina. — Sylvil warbler†, Pratincola (formerly Sylvia) sybilla, peculiar to Madagascar. — Sylvan warblers, the American fly-catching warblers of the genus Myiodioctes; so called as pertaining to Nuttall's genus Sylvania (1840). See cut under Myiodioctes. — Tennessee warbler, Helminthophaga peregrina, a common swamp-warbler of chiefly eastern parts of North America; named after the State where found by A. Wilson in 1811. — Tolmie's warbler, Macgillivray's warbler. J. K. Townsend, 1839. — Townsend's warbler, Dendroica townsendi, the western representative of the black-throated green warbler, discovered by Townsend and Nuttall on the Columbia river in 1835, and named after the former by Audubon. It ranges from Alaska to Guatemala, and has been taken near Philadelphia. Tristram's warbler [named after Canon H. B. Tristram of England], Sylvia deserticola, of the Algerian Sahara. Umbrose warbler†. Same as dusky warbler (b). Latham 1785. Undated warbler†, a bird so named by Latham in 1783, apparently a species of Cisticola. — Vigors's warbler [named after N. A. Vigors, an English quinarian naturalist], the pine-creeping warbler as mistaken for another species. Audubon, 1832. Also called Vigors's carbo (Nuttall, 1832). — Virginia's warbler, Helminthophaga virginiæ; so named by Baird in 1860 after the wife of Dr. W. W. Anderson; the Rocky Mountain warbler. — Western warbler, the hermit-warbler, discovered by J. K. Townsend at Fort Vancouver, May 28th, 1835, and by Thomas Nuttall at about the same time. — White-eyed warbler† (Latham, 1783), the white-eye of Madagascar, Zosterops madagascariensis. — White-poll warbler, the black and white warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant 1785. White-throated blue warbler, the cerulean warbler. — White-throated warbler, Helminthophaga leucobronchialis. W. Brewster, 1874. — Wilson's fly-catching warbler (named after Alexander Wilson (1766–1813), the American ornithologist), Myiodioctes pusillus, inhabiting all parts of North America: more fully called Wilson's green black-capped fly-catching warbler, and formerly Sylvia wilsonii (Bonaparte, 1824). It is olivaceous and yellow, having in the adult male a square patch of glossy black on the crown. See cut under Myiodioctes. — Worm-eating warbler. See worm-eating. Yellow-backed warbler, the blue yellow backed warbler. Latham, 1783. Yellow-breast or yellow-breasted warbler, the Maryland yellow-throat, Geothlypis trichas. See cut under Geothlypis. Latham 1783; Pennant, 1785. — Yellow-browed warbler (Latham, 1783), Phylloscopus superciliosus (formerly Sylvia superciliosa), a common warbler throughout the greater part of Asia, and a straggler in Europe. Called in full the yellow-browed barred yellow-warbler. See cut under Phylloscopus. — Yellow-crowned warbler, the chestnut sided warbler, one of whose early names was Sylvia vel-cephala Stephens, 1817. — Yellow-fronted warbler, the blue golden-winged warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. See cut under Helminthophaga. — Yellow-poll warbler, the summer yellow bird, Dendroica æstiva. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. — Yellow red-polled warbler. Same as palm warbler. — Yellow-rumped warbler. (a) Dendroica coronata, the myrtle-bird (which see) or yellowrump, which abounds in most parts of North America, and has a host of names. It may be recognized by the distinct yellow marks in four places — on the crown, rump, and each side of the breast — the plumage being otherwise chiefly black, white, and blush-gray when adult, but dingy in the young birds. Also golden-crowned, belted, dusky, umbrose, grasset, etc., warbler, Virginia titmouse, etc. (b) The black-and yellow warbler, Dendroica maculosa, which has yellow upper tail-coverts like the preceding, but is otherwise quite different. Latham, 1783. Also called yellow-rumped flycatcher. See cut under spotted. — Yellowtail-warbler, the female or young male of the American redstart, Setophaga ruticilla. See second cut under redstart. Pennant, 1785. Yellow-throated warbler, Dendroica dominica, an abundant and beautiful wood-warbler of rather southerly regions of the United States and some of the West India islands and Central America. The throat is rich yellow. Also yellow-throated gray warbler. — Yellow warbler. (a) The summer yellow-bird, Dendroica æstiva. See cut under summer warbler. (b) The willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus. (See also grasshopper-warbler, hermit warbler, palm-warbler, prairie-warbler, reed warbler, rock warbler, sedge warbler, swamp-warbler, tailor-warbler, tree-warbler, willow warbler, wood-warbler.)

Yellow Warbler, or Summer Yellow-bird (Dendroica æstiva), male.

warblet (wâr'blet), n. Same as warble[3], 3.

warblingly (wârb'ling-li), adv. In a warbling manner; with warbling.

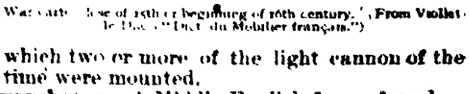
war-cart (wâr'kârt), n. A military engine of the fifteenth century, described as a wagon upon



War-carts. (Use of 15th or beginning of 16th century.) (From Viollet-le-Duc, "Dict. du Mobilier français.") which two or more of the light cannon of the time were mounted.

warchet, v. A Middle English form of work.

warchondt, a. See werkand.

warcraft (wâr'kraft), n. The science or art of war.

> He had officers who did ken the war-craft.
> Fuller, Worthies, Lancashire, i. 555. (Davies.)

war-cry (wâr'kri), n. A cry or phrase used in war for mutual recognition or encouragement; a short pithy expression used in summoning by a body of troops in charging an enemy: as, "Saint George!" was the war-cry of England, "Montjoie Saint Denis!" the war-cry of France.

Faithful to his noble vow, his war-cry filled the air:
"Be honour'd aye the bravest knight, beloved the fairest fair!"
Scott, Romance of Dunois (trans.).

ward[1] (wârd), n. [< ME. ward, < AS. weard, m., a keeper, watchman, guard, guardian, = OS. ward = OHG. MHG. G. wart (in comp.) = Icel. vörthr (varth-), m., a watchman, a watch, = Goth. wards*, in comp. daura-wards, m., doorkeeper; also OHG. warto, MHG. warte = Goth. wardja, m., keeper, watchman; also OHG. warta = Goth. wardô, f., in comp. daura-wardô, a keeper; with formative -d, from the root war* in ware, wary, etc.: see ware[1], wear[2]. Cf. ward[2], and see ward[1], v., which is derived from both ward[1], n., and ward[2], n. Hence, in comp., bear-ward, gateward, layward, steward (stycard), woodward, etc.] A keeper; watchman; warden. [Archaic.]

And with that breth helle brake with alle Beliales barres;
For eny wye other ward wyde opende the gates.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 368.

City ward†. See city.

ward[1] (wârd), v. [< ME. warden, wardien, < AS. weardian, keep, watch, hold, possess (= OS. wardôn = OFries. wardia = MLG warden = OHG. MHG. G. warten, watch, = Icel. vartha, warrant, etc.), < weard, m., keeper, weard, f., keeping: see ward[1], n., ward[2], n. Hence (from MHG. warten) OF. warder, guarder, garder = Pr. gardar, guardar = Sp. Pg. guardar = It. guardare, watch, guard: see guard, v.] I. trans. 1. To take care of; keep in safety; watch; guard; defend; protect.

God me ward and kepe fro wek diabolike,
And stedfaste me hold in feith Catholike!
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 3439.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers Shak., Tit. And., III. i. 195.

Coueting to draw nigh your ships, which if they shal finde not wel watched, or warded, they will assault.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 229.

2. To put under guard; imprison.

Into which prison were these Christians put, and fast warded all the winter season Munday (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 204).

3. To fend off; repel; turn aside: commonly followed by off.

When all is done, there is no warding the Blows of Fortune.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 147.

To ward off the gripe of poverty, you must pretend to be a stranger to her Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 3.

II. intrans. 1†. To keep guard; watch.

The valiant Captaine Francesco Bagone warded at the Keepe.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 123.

2. To act on the defensive with a weapon; guard one's self.

Zelmane, redoubling her blows, drave the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, p.

Halfe their times and labours are spent in watching and warding, onely to defend, but altogether vnable to suppresse the Saluages.
Capt. John Smith, Works, II. 79.

3†. To take care: followed by a clause beginning with that.

I now of all good here schal fynd by grace;
But warde that ye be a Monday in thys place.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 865.

ward[2] (wârd), n. [< ME. ward, warde, < AS. weard, f., keeping, watch, guard, district, ward, = MLG. warde = OHG. warta, MHG. warte, wart, f., keeping, watch, guard; an abstract fem. noun, with formative -d, from the root war* in ware, wary, etc.: see ware[1], wear[2]. From the Teut. are ult., through OF., E. guard, n. and v., regard, reward, guardian, warden[1], etc. Cf. ward[1], n., and ward[1], v., which involves both nouns.] 1. The act of keeping guard; a position or state of watchfulness against surprise, danger, or harm; guard; watch: as, to keep watch and ward. See watch.

But I which spend the darke and dreadful night
In watch and ward.
Gascoigne, Philomene (Steele Glas, etc., ed. Arber, p. 87).

2†. A body of persons whose duty it is to guard, protect, or defend; the watch; a defensive force; garrison.

Th' assieged Castles ward
Their stedfast stonds did nightily maintaine.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xi. 15.

Was frequent heard the changing guard,
And watchword from the sleepless ward.
Scott, L. of L. M., III. 30.

3. Means of guarding; defense; protection; preservation.

The best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependents.
Shak., L. L. L., III. i. 189.

I think I have a close ward, and a sure one—
An honest mind.
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, III. 2.

4†. The outworks of a castle.

And alle the towres of crystalle schene,
And the wardes enamelde and overgylt clene.
Hampole. (Halliwell.)

5. A guarded or defensive motion or position in fencing, or the like; a turning aside or intercepting of a blow, thrust, etc.

1 Scholler. Ah, well thrust!
2 Scholler. But mark the ward.
Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

Thou knowest my old ward: here I lay, and thus I bore my point.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 215.

6. The state of being under a guard; confinement under a guard, warder, or keeper; custody; confinement; jail.

He would be punished and committed to ward.
Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

He put them in ward in the house of the captain of the guard.
Gen. xl. 3.

7. Guardianship; control or care of a minor.

Item, my Lord of Rungerford has writen to me for to have the warde of Robert Monpynsonnis sone, wher of I am agreed that he schal (have) hit like as I has writyn to hym in a letter, of the whech I send now a cope closed here in.
Paston Letters, I. 94.

It is inconvenient in Ireland that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

8. The state of being under the care, control, or protection of a guardian; the condition of being under guardianship.

I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward.
Shak., All's Well, I. i. 5.

The decay of estates in ward by the abuse of the powers of wardship
R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., ii.

9. One who or that which is guarded; specifically, a minor or person under guardianship. (a) In feudal law, the heir of the king's tenant in capite, during his nonage. (b) In British law, a minor under the protection of the Court of Chancery, generally called a ward in Chancery, or a ward of court. To marry a ward of court without consent of the court is a contempt. The court has power, if the ward has property, to appoint a guardian, if there is none, and to supervise his administration, and remove him.

My lord, he 's a great ward, wealthy, but simple.
His parts consist in acres.
Middleton, Women Beware Women, III. 2.

(c) In U. S. law, a minor for whom a guardian is appointed.

10. A division. (a) A band or company.

Habsabbiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, according to the commandment of David the man of God, ward over against ward.
Neh. xii. 24.

(b†) A division of an army; a brigade, battalion, or regiment.

The kyng of Lybie, callid Lamedon,
The ix[e] warde hadde all his leding.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2172.

The thirde warde ledc the kynge Boors of Hannes, that full wele cowde hem guyde, and were in his company iiijxx men wele horsed.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 161.

Somerset, expecting to have been followed by Lord Wenlock, who commanded what was called "the middle ward," that army, allowed himself to be lured into a pursuit.
J. Gairdner, Richard III., i.

(c) A certain division, section, or quarter of a town or city, such as is under the charge of an alderman, or as is constituted for the convenient transaction of local public business through committees appointed by the inhabitants, or meets for the purposes of elections.

Throughout the trembling city placed a guard,
In all a equal share to every ward.
Dryden.

(d) A territorial division of some counties in Great Britain, as Lanarkshire and Renfrewshire in Scotland, and Northumberland and Cumberland in the north of England. (e) The division of a forest. (f) One of the apartments into which a hospital is divided: as, a fever ward, a convalescent ward.

11. A curved ridge of metal inside a lock, forming an obstacle to the passage of a key which has not a corresponding notch; also, the notch or slot in the web or bit of a key into which such a ridge fits when the key is applied. The wards of a lock are often named according to their shapes: as, L ward; T ward. The wards are usually made of sheet metal bent into a round form, and hence are sometimes termed wheels. See cut under pack[1], 4.

A key
That winds through secret wards.
Wordsworth, Memory.

Casual, casualty, condemned ward. See the qualifying words. Casualty of wards. See casualty. Isolating ward, a room in a hospital set apart for the reception of patients suffering with contagious disease, or who must for any cause be kept from contact with others in the hospital. – Police-jury ward, in Louisiana, the chief subdivision of the parish. – Watch and ward. See watch.

ward[2]†, adv. [< ME. ward, a quasi-adverb, being the suffix -ward separated from its base, as in to me ward. See -ward and toward.] The suffix -ward separated as a distinct word.

-ward (wârd). [< ME. -ward, < AS. -weard = OS. -ward = OFries. -ward = D. -waart = MLG. LG. -ward = OHG. MHG. -wert (G. -wärts) = Icel. -verthr = Goth. -wairths; akin to L. versus (vert-tus*), which is postposed in the same way, < vertere, turn, become, = AS. weorthan, become: see worth[1] and verse[1]. Cf. -wards.] A suffix of Anglo-Saxon origin, indicating direction or tendency to or from a point. It is affixed to many adverbs and prepositions, as fore (for-), forth, from (fro-), to, after, back, hind, in, out, hither, thither, whither, up, nether, thence, etc.; to words indicating points of the compass (east, west, etc.) to nouns indicating a goal, center, end, direction, etc., as home, way, wood, down, heaven, God, etc. With some of these it was used pleonastically, as aback-ward, adown-ward. Most of the forms have a collateral form with adverbial genitive -s, as forwards, afterwards, towards, outwards, etc. In toward, the elements were formerly often separated, as in the Bible "to us-ward" (Ps. xl. 5; 2 Pet. iii. 9), "to thee-ward" (1 Sam. xix. 4), "to you-ward" (2 Cor. xiii. 8), "to the mercy seat-ward" (Ex. xxxvii. 9), etc.

Such a newe herte and lusty courage into the lawe wards canst thou never come by of thyne owne strength and enforcement.
J. Udall, Prol. to Romans.

wardage† (wâr'daj), n. [< ward[2] + -age.] Money paid or contributed to watch and ward. Also called ward-penny.

war-dance (wâr'dans), n. 1. A dance engaged in by savage tribes before a warlike excursion. – 2. A dance simulating a battle.

ward-corn† (wârd'kôrn), n. [< OF. warde-corne* (?), < warder, keep, + corne, < L. cornu, a horn: see horn.] In old Eng. law, the duty of keeping watch and ward in time of danger, with the duty of blowing a horn on the approach of a foe.

ward-corset, n. [ME. wardecors, wardecorce, < OF. wardecors, guarde corps, gardecors, < warder, guarder, ward, guard, + cors, corps, body: see ward[1] and corse[1], corpse.] 1. A body-guard.

Though thow preye Argus with his hundred eyen
To be my wardecors, as he kan best,
In feith he shal nat kepe me but me lest.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 259.

2. A cloak. Prompt. Parv., p. 516.

wardein, n. A Middle English variant of warden[1].

warden[1] (wâr'dn), n. [< ME. wardein, wardeyn, Sc. wardane, wardan, a warden, guardian, keeper, < OF. wardein*, gardein, gardain, guardain, F. gardien (ML. gardianus), a keeper, warden, guardian, cf. gardien, n., keeping, watching, < warde, garde, ward, guard, keeping: see ward[2], and cf. guardian, a doublet of warden[1]. Cf. warden[2].] 1. A guard or watchman; a guardian.

Filthe and olde, also moot I thee,
Been grete wardeyns upon chastitee.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 360.

He called to the wardens on the outside battlements.
Scott.

2. A chief or principal keeper; an officer who keeps or guards: as, the warden of the Fleet (or Fleet prison).

The wardeyn of the gates gan to calle
The folk which that without the gates were,
And bad hem dryven in hire beestes alle,
Or al the night they moste bleven there.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1177.

The Countess asked to be shown some of the prisoners' soup. The warden brought some to her in a clean fresh plate.
The Century, XXXVII. 509.

3. The title given to the head of some colleges and schools, and to the superior of some conventual churches.

Our corn is stoln, men wil us fooles calle,
Bathe the wardeyn and oure felawes alle.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 192.

And all way the Wardeyne of the seyd ffreris or sum of hys Brethern by hys assignment Duly accompanyd with vs Informyng And shewing vnto vs the holy places with in the holy lande.
Torkington, Diarie of Lug Travell, p. 26.

4. In Connecticut boroughs, the chief executive officer of the municipal government; in a few Rhode Island towns, a judicial officer. In colonial times the name was sometimes used in place of fire-warden or fire ward. Port warden, an officer invested with the chief authority in a port. – Warden of a church. See churchwarden. – Warden of a university, the master or president of a university. Warden of the Cinque Ports, the governor of the havens called the Cinque Ports, and their dependencies, who has the authority of an admiral and has power to hold a court of admiralty and courts of law and equity. See Cinque Ports, under cinque. – Warden of the marches. See march[1]. Warden of the mint. See mint[1]. – Warden of the stews, a town officer, one of several mentioned in the fifteenth century: apparently one who had charge of pens for cattle, hogs, etc., perhaps a pound. Compare hog-reeve.

warden[2] (wâr'dn), n. [< ME. wardun, wardone, usually associated with warden[1], and taken to mean a pear that may be kept long (cf. OF. poire de garde, "a warden, or winter peare, a peare which may be kept verie long," Cotgrave).]

see warden[1]. But the sense of warden is active, 'one who keeps,' and it does not seem to apply to a pear; and the ME. forms of warden[1] are different from those of warden[2]. Perhaps the origin is in OF. wardon*, a var. of gardon (Godefroy), a var. of gardin, garden: see garden, n.] A kind of pear, used chiefly for roasting or baking.

Wardone, peere, volemum. Wardons tree, volemus
Prompt. Parv., p. 516.

Faith, I would have had him roasted like a warden,
In brown paper, and no more talk on't.
Beau. and Fl., Cupid's Revenge, II. 3.

Ox-cheek when hot, and wardens bak'd, some cry,
But 'tis with an intention men should buy.
W. King, Art of Cookery, l. 541.

Warden pie, a pie made of warden pears, baked or stewed without crust.

I must have saffron to colour the warden pies
Shak., W. T., iv. 3. 48.

wardenry (wâr'dn-ri), n. [< warden[1] + -ry (see -ery).] 1. The district in charge of a warden.

But yet they may not tamely see
All through the Western Wardenry,
Your law contemning kinsman's pride,
And burn and spoil the Border-side.
Scott, L. of L. M., iv. 24.

2. The office of warden.

wardenship (wâr'dn-ship), n. [< warden[1] + -ship.] The office of warden.

His Maj. K. Cha. I gave him the Wardenship of Merton College as a reward for his service, but the times suffered him not to receive or enjoy any benefit by it Aubrey, Lives (William Harvey).

warder[1] (wâr'dèr), n. [Formerly also wardour, < OF. wardour*, gardour, gardeor, a keeper, warder, < warder, ward: see ward[1], v., and -er[1], -or[1].] One who keeps watch and ward; a keeper; a guard.

Memory, the warder of the brain.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 65.

The warders of the gate. Dryden, Æneid, ii. 451.

Warder butcher-bird, the great gray shrike, Lanius excubitor. Sir John Sebright.

warder[2] (wâr'dèr), n. [< ME. warder, wardere, wardevre; appar. < ward[1], v., + -er[2].] A truncheon or staff of authority carried by a king, commander-in-chief, or other important dignitary. Signals seem to have been given by means of it, as by casting it down (a signal to stop proceedings) or throwing it up (a signal to charge).

Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down Shak., Rich. II., I. 3. 118.

Wafting his warder thrice about his head,
[He] cast it up with his auspicious hand,
Which was the signal through the English spread
That they should charge.
Drayton, Battle of Agincourt, st. 181.

warderer†. A doubtful word occurring only in the following passage describing the pursuit of a horse that had run away.

Thise gely clerkes rennen up and doun
With "hey! keepe! keepe! stand! stand! Jossa warderere!" [var. "o, with rer", Camb. MS., warderere, Harl. MS., warth thi re, 10th cent. ed.] Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 181.

ward-holding (ward'hōl'ding), n. The ancient military tenure in Scotland, by which vassals were at first obliged to serve the superior in war as often as his occasions called for it.

Wardian (wär'di-an), a. [< Ward (see def.) + -ian.] Invented by, or otherwise relating to, a person named Ward. Wardian case, a portable inclosure with a wooden base and glass sides and top, invented by Nathaniel B. Ward, an Englishman, and serving for the transportation of delicate living plants, or for their maintenance as an indoor ornament. The base is lined with zinc, or supplied with an earthen tray. The confined air preserves its moisture, and ferns, mosses, and other shade-loving plants develop in it with great beauty.

warding-file (wär'ding-fil), n. A flat file of uniform thickness, cut only at the edges: used to file the ward-notches in keys. E. H. Knight.

wardless (wârd'les), a. [< ward[1] + -less.] That cannot be warded off or avoided. [Rare.]

He gives like destiny a wardless blow.
Stephen Harvey, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, ix. 174.

wardman† (wârd'man), n. [< ward[2] + man.] A town officer in England.

The common wardman . . . carries the largest of the silver maces and in processions immediately precedes the mayor. Jewitt, Art Journal, 1881, p. 105.

ward-mote (ward'mōt), n. A meeting of a ward; also, a court formerly held in every ward in the city of London. Also called wardmote-court or inquest.

wardone†, n. An obsolete form of warden[2].

wardour†, n. An old spelling of warder[1].

ward-penny (wârd'pen'i), n. Same as wardpeny.

wardrobe (wârd'rōb), n. [Formerly also wardrope, wardroppe; < ME. warderobe, wardrobe, wardedope, < OF. wardecobe, garderobe, garderobe, a wardrobe, also a privy, < warder, ward, keep, + robe, robbe, garment: see ward[1] and robe[1].] 1. Originally, a room or large closet in which clothes were kept, and in which the making of clothes, repairing, etc., were carried on.

But who that departed, Gyomar ne departed never, but a-bode spekynge with Morgain, the sustur of kynge Arthur, in a wardrope under the paleys, where she wrought with silke and golde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 507.

The last day of Octobre, the . . . yere of the reyne of King Henri the Sixt, Sir John Fastolf, Knyght, hath lefte in his warde drope at Castre this stuffe of clothys, and othir harnays that followith. Paston Letters, I. 475.

When first he spies
His Prince's Wardrobe ope, quite through is shot
With wondring fear. J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 75.

God clothed us; . . . he hath opened his wardrobe unto us Donne, Sermons, vii.

2. A piece of furniture for the keeping of clothes, especially a large press closed by means of a door or doors, in which clothes can be hung up, and sometimes having shelves and drawers as well.

There! Carter has done with you, or nearly so; I'll make you decent in a trice. Jane, . . . open the top drawer of the wardrobe, and take out a clean shirt and neck-handkerchief: bring them here; and be nimble.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

A ponderous mahogany wardrobe, looking like nothing so much as a grim wooden mausoleum, occupied nearly all of one wall. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 192.

3. The clothes belonging to one person at one time.

Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats.
Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 3. 27.

The most important article of all in a gentleman's wardrobe was still wanting. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 14.

4†. A privy.

I seye that in a wardrobe they him threwe.
Chaucer, Prioress's Tale, l. 120.

wardrober (wârd'rō'bèr), n. [< ME. warderopere; < wardrobe + -er[2].] The keeper of a wardrobe.

An indenture . . . in which Peter Curteys, the king's wardrober, undertakes to furnish by the 3rd of July the articles specified for the coronation of King Richard J. Gairdner, Richard III., Iv.

ward-room (wârd'rōm), n. The apartment assigned to the commissioned officers of a man-of-war other than the commanding officer. Line-officers occupy staterooms on the starboard side and staff-officers on the port side. — Ward-room officers, commissioned officers messing in the ward-room. — Ward-room steward. See steward, 2 (b).

wardrope†, n. A Middle English form of wardrobe.

Wardrop's disease. A malignant form of inflammation occurring at the root, or on one side, of a nail.

Wardrop's operation for aneurism. See operation.

Ward's electuary. A confection of black pepper.

wardship[1] (wârd'ship), n. [< ward[1] + -ship.] The office of a ward or guardian; guardianship, care and protection of a ward; right of guardianship; hence, the feudal tenure by which the lord claimed the custody of the body and custody and profits of the lands of the infant heir of his deceased tenant.

And we . . . come in the court, and Bertylmen havynge this formys to be rad, seying "Sir, forasmoych as the kyng hathe granted I be hesch letres patent the wardship with the profittes of the londes of I. Fastolf duryng hese non age to you and T. H., whervor I am comyn as ther styward, be ther commaundement." Paston Letters, I. 398.

Ecclesiastical persons were by ancient order forbidden to be executors of any man's testament, or to undertake the wardship of children. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 18.

Thou grand impostor! how hast thou obtained
The wardship of the world? Quarles, Emblems, ii. 3.

wardship[2] (wârd'ship), n. [< ward[2] + -ship.] The state or condition of a ward: pupilage.

In certain nations, women, whether married or not, have been placed in a state of perpetual wardship.
Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, xvi. 44, note.

wardsman (wârdz'man), n.; pl. wardsmen (-men). One who keeps watch and ward; a guard. Sydney Smith. [Rare.]

Ward's paste. Same as Ward's electuary.

wardstaff†. (wârd'stâf), n. Same as warder[2].

wardwit (wârd'wit), n. The being quit of giving money for the keeping of ward in a town.

ware[1] (wâr), a. [< ME. ware, war, < AS. wær, also or wær (> E. aware), watchful, heedful, cautious, = OS. war, also giwar = D. gewaar = OHG. giwar, MHG. gewar, G. gewahr, aware, = Icel. varr = Dan. Sw. var = Goth. wars, watchful; from a Teut. √ war, watch, take heed, = L. vereri, regard, respect, esteem, dread (see revere[1]), = Gr. ὁράω, perceive, look out for, observe (> οἰ-ρος, watchman, guard), = Skt. √ vṛ, cover, surround. From the same source are ult. aware (of which ware[1] in mod. use is prob. in part an aphetic form), ward[1], ward[2], guard, regard, reward, etc., revere[1], etc. Ware preceded by be has become merged with it, beware (as gone with be in begone): see beware. Hence the later adj. wary[1].] 1†. Watchful; cautious; prudent; wary.

Of me the worthy was war, & my wille knew.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12228.

The Erle to truste was noo daunger in,
For he was ware and wise, I yow ensure.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1068.

Howe ware and circumspecte they aught to be.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 11.

2. On guard; on the watch (against something). See beware.

Reason he made right,
But bid her well be ware, and still erect;
Lest, by some fair-appearing good surprised,
She dictate false, and misinform the will.
Milton, P. L., ix. 353.

3. Aware; conscious; assured. [Archaic.]

Ful fetys was hir cloke, as I was war.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 167.

And Geaunt reised his axe to recouer a-nothor stroke, but Arthur was ther-of ware, and smote the horse with the spores and passed forth, and than returned with his swerde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 223.

Then was I ware of one that on me moved
In golden armor with a crown of gold.
Tennyson, Holy Grail.

ware[1] (wâr), v. t.; pret. and pp. wared, ppr. waring. [< ME. waren, warien, ware, < AS. warian, be on one's guard, heed, look out (= OFries. wara = OS. waron = OHG. bewarôn, heed, = Icel. vara, heed; hence ult. OF. garer = Pr. garar, guarar, be on one's guard, heed), < wær, watchful, heedful: see ware[1], a. Cf. wear[2], v.] To take care of; take precautions against; take heed to; look out for and guard against; beware of; as, ware the dog. Except in a few phrases, as in ware hawk, ware hounds, beware is now used instead of ware.

Ware the sonne in his ascencioun
Ne fynde yow nat yslept of humours hote.
Chaucer, Prol. to Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 135.

But ware the fox as while that sitte on brode
To sette in an Hande were ful goode.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

ware[2] (wâr), n. [< ME. ware, merchandise, goods, < AS. ware*, pl. waru, wares (= D. waar, a ware, commodity, pl. waren, wares; cf. MD. waren = G. waare, pl. waaren = Icel. vara, pl. varur, wares, = Dan. vare, pl. varer (cf. vare, care), = Sw. vara, pl. varor, ware, wares); prob. akin to AS. warn, guard, protection, care, custody, = G. wehre = Dan. værre = Sw. rara, care; < Teut. √ war, guard: see ware[1], a., and cf. wealth[2].] 1. Articles of manufacture or merchandise: now usually in the plural.

No marchaunt yit ne fette outlandish ware.
Chaucer, Former Age, l. 22.

This is the ware wherein consists my wealth.
Marlowe, Jew of Malta, i. 1.

They shall not . . . sell or buy any maner of wares, goods, or marchandises, secretely nor openly, by way of fraude, barat, or deceite. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 210.

You pretend buying of wares or selling of lands.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

Who but a fool would have faith in a tradesman's ware or his word? Tennyson, Maud, vii.

2. A collective noun used generally in composition with the name of the material, or a term relating to the characters of the articles or the use to which they are put: as, china-ware, tinware, hardware, tableware. — Adams's ware, in ceram., a fine English pottery made at Tunstall, at the end of the eighteenth century, by William Adams, a pupil of Wedgwood. The pieces are often close imitations of the Wedgwood ware. — Agen ware. (a) An inferior kind of Roman pottery, softer and coarser than Samian ware: so called from Agen in the department of Lot-et-Garonne, France, where much of this ware was found with the furnaces. (b) A decorative pottery made in the seventeenth century, many of the pieces having the forms of animals. Brongniart. — Apulian ware. See Apulian pottery under Apulian, and cut under stamnos. — Aretine ware. See Arretine. — Awata ware, pottery and porcelain made at Awata, near Kioto, Japan. The greater number of the pieces known to be of this manufacture are of yellowish hard paste, with a crackled glaze as if in imitation of Satsuma ware; but a curious and beautiful imitation of old Delft and a thin porcelain of a peculiar grayish white are known. — Bamboo ware, a variety of Wedgwood ware so named from its color, and otherwise known as cane-colored ware. — Basalt ware. See basalt. — Benares ware, a name given to a kind of ornamental metal-work made in India, in which a pattern is produced by chasing or in other ways depressing the surface of the metal. — Black ware. Same as basalt ware. — Blue jasper ware, a name given to a blue-glazed pottery of modern manufacture, especially that made at the Faxfleet factory. — Böttger ware. (a) A fine stoneware, varying from red to dark brown, and approaching black, produced by the chemist J. F. Böttger about 1708–9 in the course of his experiments in the search for porcelain. (b) The first real or kaolinic porcelain produced in Europe: it was first made by Böttger about 1710.—Bristol Delft ware, an enameled pottery made at Bristol throughout the eighteenth century, especially a highly decorated ware in which landscapes, figure-subjects, etc., covering the whole dish, bottom and marly alike, and plates or dishes closely imitated from Chinese enameled porcelain, are included. This decorative Delft has not been manufactured since 1788. Jewitt.—Bristol ware. Same as double-glazed ware.—Caffagiolo ware, a variety of the Italian enameled and painted earthenware known as majolica. It was made in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries at a factory belonging to the family of the Medici in the village of Caffagiolo, on the road between Florence and Bologna. The name is also spelled, according to the irregular orthography of the time, Caffaggiolo, Caffagiuolo, Cafaggiuolo, Cafagginolo. The marks of this factory are much varied, but generally include the words da Caffagiolo variously spelled. A characteristic mark of these wares is the free use of a dark but extremely brilliant blue often in large masses, also a brilliant but opaque orange, and an opaque Indian red. Metallic luster was early used at Caffagiolo.—Canton lacquer-ware. See lacquer-ware.—Cashan ware. Same as Kashee ware. Fortnum, S. K. Handbook, Majolica.—Castelli ware, pottery made at Castelli, in eastern Italy; specifically, an enameled and richly decorated pottery made during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and even later. This magnificent ware preserves some of the characteristics of majolica, but is more pictorial in its decoration, being painted with landscapes, mythological scenes, etc. The colors are often heightened with gold.—Cologne ware, a name commonly given to the hard stoneware of which ornamental jugs, tankards, etc., were made, especially in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and formerly called grès de Flandres. The city of Cologne was the chief seat of this manufacture. Compare grès de Flandres (under grès) and stoneware.—Combed ware. See combed.—Coralline ware. See coralline.—Crackled ware. See crackled. Cream-colored ware, pottery or stoneware having a cream-colored paste; specifically, a variety of the fine table-ware made by Wedgwood in the latter part of the eighteenth century. This ware was afterward called queen's-ware, from the supposed preference of Queen Charlotte, wife of George III. The cream-colored ware or queen's ware made by other potters was copied closely from that of Wedgwood.—Crystalline ware. See crystalline.—Cullen ware†, Cologne ware. Delft ware. (a) Pottery made in and near the town of Delft in Holland; specifically, pieces for table use, and decorated vases for domestic interiors. Pottery has been made in this place from ancient times, and dated pieces exist as old as the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the importation from China and Japan of Oriental porcelain stimulated the decorators of later times, so that the richest pieces are of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. (b) A name given in England to vessels of pottery for domestic use, especially for table service. It is common to discriminate pottery from porcelain by the name Delft or Delf, and also Delf-china, etc.—Della Robbia wares. (a) A name given to a class of pottery used for works of art in relief and in the round; generally asserted to have been invented by Luca della Robbia in the fifteenth century. It has a hard and well-baked body of brown terra-cotta upon which a white stanniferous enamel is applied. This is in some cases left white, or white with a background of blue; in others, all parts of the composition are richly decorated with color, especially green, yellow, and purple or maroon. The largest and most elaborate works in Della Robbia ware were made after Luca's death, the most important of all being, perhaps, the frieze on the hospital at Pistoia. Central Italy abounds in the productions of this school of artists, including tabernacles or shrines decorated with sacred subjects, altar-pieces in bas-relief and alto-relief, architectural ornaments, and fountains or lavabos in sacristies of churches and convents. (b) A fine terra-cotta, enameled in colors, made in England for architectural decorations, flower-vases, garden-seats, etc., especially that made at Tamworth at works founded in 1847.—Double-glazed ware, stoneware to which a glaze is applied in liquid form, both inside and outside, before it is fired. Also called Bristol ware.—Egyptian black ware, Egyptian ware. See Egyptian.—Etruscan ware. See Etruscan.—Faenza ware, a name formerly given to Italian majolica. J. C. Robinson, in Cat. of Soulages Coll., 1856. Compare faïence.—Glass-glazed ware. See glass-glazed.—Graffito ware. See graffito.—Green-jasper ware, a variety of Wedgwood ware. The name has been given to that kind of pebbleware which is mottled green and gray.—Hollow ware, vessels deeper than flat ware, and especially such as are made in outside molds, which give the external surface—the clay being forced into the mold from within, and worked over with a sponge so as to give it the required thickness and a smooth inner surface.—Incised ware, pottery decorated by scratches upon the surface. Specifically—(a) A coarse earthenware covered with an outer coat of a different color, which, being deeply scratched, shows the body of the ware. (b) A kind of pottery in which the body is scratched or scored, the whole being then covered with a transparent glaze, which shows a deeper color where it fills these incisions than elsewhere.—India ware, a name inaccurately given in England to the more common varieties of Chinese and Japanese porcelains imported into Europe by the East India Company or otherwise. Kashee ware, a fine ceramic ware made in Persia, and decorated in blue on white in a manner closely resembling Chinese porcelain. It is apparently a mixed or hybrid porcelain, as it is softer than Oriental porcelain, and evidently different from the soft or tender porcelain of Europe. Also called Kashan, Cashan and Kachy ware.

Delft Ware. 18th century. (From "L'Art pour Tous.")

Kioto ware, ceramic ware made in or near the city of Kioto in Japan. Immense quantities of pottery and porcelain are made there, and many characteristic varieties are imitated with great success; but the name is given especially to a hard yellow ware with crackled glaze peculiar to Japan.—Lapis-lazuli ware. See lapis. Lava ware. See lava.—Old Fulham ware, a name given to the English imitations of German grès cérame or hard stoneware made at Fulham from about 1670. Palissy ware, a peculiar kind of pottery, remarkable for its beautiful glaze, the ornamentation being in very high relief, and consisting frequently of models of fish, reptiles, shells or leaves. Bernard Palissy, a French potter of the sixteenth century, was the designer of this ware, and the art of manufacturing it died with him, all attempts to imitate it having failed.—Pebble ware. See pebbleware.—Persian ware. See Persian.—Plated ware. See plated. Plumbeous ware, lead glazed pottery.—Porphyry ware, a variety of pebbleware. The name is generally given to that variety which is speckled red and black.—Raphael ware, an old name for Italian majolica, so called from the occasional appearance of designs by Raphael, or ascribed to him, painted on majolica plates of a late period, or perhaps in some cases, from the use of arabesques similar to those painted under Raphael's direction in the Loggie of the Vatican and elsewhere.—Red porphyry ware, a variety of pebbleware. The name is generally given to pieces which are speckled red and white.—Robbia ware. Same as Della Robbia ware.—Roman red ware. Same as Samian ware.—Rustic, Salopian, Samian, sanitary ware. See the adjectives.—Satsuma ware. (a) Pottery made in the province of Satsuma, in the island of Kiusiu, Japan. It has an extremely hard paste, is pale-yellow or brownish-yellow in color, and is covered with a very minute crackle. (b) A pottery made at Stoke-upon-Trent in England imitated in the main from the Japanese Satsuma.—Serpentine, Sevillan, sigillated, silicon ware. See the qualifying words.—Sinceny ware, an enameled pottery made in Sinceny, in the department of the Aisne, France, decorated with great taste and delicacy, in partial imitation of Rouen ware and later of Chinese ceramic painting and also in various fantastic styles.—Small ware or wares, textile articles of the tape kind, as narrow bindings of cotton, linen, silk or woolen fabric; plaited sash cord, braid, etc.; also, buttons, hooks, eyes, and other dress trimmings; hence, trifles.

Dish of Palissy Ware.

Every one knows Cranbetrect is a market for small wares in all. Swift, To a Young Poet.

Stamped ware. Same as sigillated ware.—Stanniferous ware, earthenware coated with an enamel of which tin is a principal ingredient. This enamel is used for fine wares, such as Delft.—Tinned, tortoise-shell, Umbrian ware. See the adjectives.—Tunbridge ware, a species of inlaid or mosaic work in wood. It derives its name from the place of manufacture, Tunbridge in England.—Verd antique ware, a variety of pebbleware, generally veined with dark green, gray, and black.—Wedgwood ware (named after Josiah Wedgwood (1730–95), the inventor, born in Staffordshire, England), a superior kind of semi-vitrified pottery, without much superficial glaze, and capable of taking on the most brilliant and delicate colors produced by fused metallic oxids and ochers. It is much used for ornamental ware, as vases, etc., and, owing to its hardness and property of resisting the action of all corrosive substances, for mortars in the laboratory.—Welsh ware, a pottery made at Isleworth, near London in England from about 1825, a strong and solid earthenware of yellowish-brown color with a transparent glaze.—Syn. Merchandise, etc. See property.

ware[2] (wâr), v. t.; pret. and pp. warred, ppr. warring. [Also wair; < ME. waren (also bewaren), sell; cf. ware[2], n.] To use; employ; lay out; expend; spend. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

I schal ware my whyte wel, quyl hit lastes, with tale,
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1235.

He would not ware the spark of a flint for him, if they came with the law. Scott, Waverley, xviii.

ware[3] (wâr), n. [E. dial. also wore, waar, ore; < ME. war, < AS. war, wær, seaweed (= MD. D. wier, seaweed).] Seaweed of various species of Fucus, Laminaria, Himanthalia, Chorda, etc. They are employed as a manure and in the manufacture of kelp, etc. See sea-ware.

ware[4]†. An obsolete preterit of wear[1].

ware[5]†, v. t. An obsolete spelling of wear[1], 10.

wareful (wâr'ful), a. [< ware[2] + -ful.] Wary; watchful; cautious.

warefulness† (wâr'ful-nes), n. [< wareful + -ness.] Wariness, cautiousness. Sir P. Sidney.

warega-fly (wa-rē'ga-flī), n. [< S. Amer. Ind. warega + E. fly.] An undetermined muscid fly occurring in Brazil, which is said to lay its eggs in the skin of man and animals, causing large swellings inhabited by the larva. F. Smith, Trans. Entom. Soc., London, 1868.

ware-goose (wâr'gös), n. [< ware[3] + goose.] The brent-goose: so called from feeding on ware or seaweed. [Local, Eng.]

warehouse (wâr'hous), n. [< ware[2] + house.] A house in which wares or goods are kept; a storehouse.

Th' vnsettled kingdom of swift Aeolus,
Great Ware-house of the Windes, whose traffick glues Motion of life to ev'ry thing that liues.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Works, i. 2.

Specifically (a) A store in which goods are placed for safe keeping; a building for the temporary deposit of goods for a compensation. (b) A building for storing imported goods on which customs dues have not been paid. (c) A store for the sale of goods at wholesale; also, often, a large retail establishment. Bonded, Italian, etc., warehouse. See the adjectives.

warehouse (wâr'hous), v. t.; pret. and pp. warehoused, ppr. warehousing. [< warehouse, n.] To deposit or secure in a warehouse; specifically, to place in the government or custom-house stores, to be kept until duties are paid.

Only half the duty was to be paid at once, on warehousing the pepper in a warehouse approved by the customs. S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 76.

warehouseman (wâr'hous-man), n.; pl. warehousemen (-men). 1. One who keeps a warehouse.—2. One who is employed in or has charge of a warehouse. Italian-warehouseman. See Italian. Warehousemen's itch, a form of eczema of the hands, supposed to be caused by the irritation of sugar, grocers' itch.

warehousing (wâr'hou"sing), n. 1. The act of placing goods in a warehouse.—2. The business of receiving goods for storage.—Warehousing system, a customs regulation by which imported articles may be lodged in public or bonded warehouses at a reasonable rent, without payment of the duties on importation until they are withdrawn for home consumption, thus lessening the pressure of the duties which otherwise would bear heavily on the merchant and cripple his purchasing power. If they are reexported no duty is charged. This system affords valuable facilities to trade, and is beneficial to the consumer and ultimately to the public revenue.

warelne†, n. A Middle English spelling of warren.

wareless† (wâr'les), a. [< ware[1] + -less.] 1. Unwary; incautious; heedless.

A bait the wareless to beguile.
Mar. for Mags. (Latham.)

2. Unaware; regardless.

Both they unwise, and wareless of the evill
Spenser, F. Q., IV. ii. 3.

3. Unperceived.

When he wak't out of his wareless paine, . . .
That him he could not wag. Spenser, F. Q., V. i. 22.

warely† (wâr'li), a. [< ME. warly, warliche, < AS. wærlic, cautious, < wær, cautious, + -lic as E. -ly.] Cautious; prudent; wary.

The Petynins thanu bare us warely men fre;
For thor good vitail and whes plente.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1321.

warely† (wâr'li), adv. [< ME. warly, werly, warliche, < AS. wærlice, < wær, cautious, + -lice as E. -ly[2]. Cf. warily.] Cautiously; warily.

Full warely in this wede. Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 484.

Bi bys huge prowesse went it to assaill
In ryght werly wyse for manly was in breste.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1321.

A good lesson for us our tongue warely, that our words and matter make . . . agree together.
Sir T. Wilson, Art of Rhetoric (ed. 1584), p. 166.

wareroom (wâr'röm), n. A room in which goods are stored or laid out for sale.

Phillip was still in the wareroom, arranging goods and taking stock. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xxxiii.

war-fain (wâr'fān), a. Eager to fight. [Poetical.]

Gutthorn the young and the war fain.
William Morris, Sigurd, iii.

warfare (wâr'fâr), n. [Early mod. E. warrefare; < war[1] + fare[1].] 1. A warlike or military expedition; military operations; hostilities; war; armed contest.

What minde doth the Prince to the Capteine that sendes him a warrefare, if he makes him sure to ham the victorie? Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 88.

The Philistines gathered their armies together to warfare. 1 Sam. xxviii. 1.

2. Figuratively, any contest, struggle, or strife.

The weapons of our warfare are not carnal. 2 Cor. x. 4.

warfare (wâr'fâr), v. i. [< warfare, n.] To carry on warfare or engage in war; contend; struggle.

He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true warfaring Christian. Milton, Areopagitica.

warfarer (wâr'fâr-èr), n. One engaged in war, or in a contest or struggle of any sort.

warfaring (wâr'fâr-ing), n. The act of carrying on war. [Rare.]

The Burg of the Niblung people and the heart of their warfaring. William Morris, Sigurd, iii.

war-flail (wâr'flâl), n. A weapon used in the middle ages, resembling the agricultural flail in its general character. Sometimes it was a pole to the end of which a strong bag of leather was secured by a thong, or by rings of metal. The bag seems to have been stuffed with sand. Compare sand-bag, sand-bob, and see Shakspere's 2 Hen. VI., Iv. 1. See also cut under morning-star.

war-flame (wâr'flām), n. A bale-fire used as a signal in time of war, as of the approach of an enemy. See bale-fire and bale[2].

war-fork (wâr'fork), n. A weapon, used in Europe in the middle ages, consisting of a metal fork with several prongs made fast to the end of a long pole.

warfull†, a. [< war[1] + -ful.] Warlike.

Warfull, batallous Palsgrave, p. 298.

wargul (wär'gul), n. [E. Ind.] The Indian otter, Lutra (Barangia) leptonyx.

wargus† (wär'gus), n. [A L. reflex of AS. wearg, outlaw: see warrangle, warry.] An outlaw.

And if any wicked person shall presume contumeliously to dig up or despoil any body placed in the earth, or in a wooden coffin, or in a rock, or under any obelisk or other structure, let him be accounted a wargus.
Laws of Hen. I., quoted in Ribton Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 72.

war-hable† (wâr'hā bl), a. [< war[1] + hable for able.] Fit for war; of an age that fits one for soldiering. Spenser, F. Q., II. x. 62.

war-hammer (wâr'ham"ėr), n. A weapon having a blunt, hammer-like head on one side of the handle or shaft, and usually a beak or point on the opposite side. It was used for breaking the armor of an antagonist, and was generally a weapon for one hand only.

war-head (wâr'hed), n. The explosive head of a locomotive torpedo. It is packed with guncotton or other high explosive and provided with a detonating primer. The war-head is placed on the torpedo only when it is to be exploded, as in time of war.

war-horse (wâr'hôrs), n. 1. A horse used by a mounted soldier or officer in battle; especially, in a somewhat poetical sense, the horse of a knight or commander. Compare cuts under caparisoned and muzzle.

Waiting by the doors the war-horse neigh'd,
As at a friend's voice. Tennyson, Guinevere.

2. A veteran, as a veteran soldier or politician. [Colloq.]

warlanglet, n. See warrangle.

wariated (wa'ri-a-ted), a. In her., same as variated: especially noting an ordinary, which is sometimes wariated on one side, sometimes on both.

warice†, v. Same as warish.

warily (wa'ri-li), adv. [< wary[1] + -ly[2]; but perhaps orig. an error for warely.] In a wary manner; cautiously; with prudence or wise foresight or care.

wariment† (wa'ri-ment), n. [Irreg. < wary[1] + -ment.] Wariness; caution; heed. Spenser, F. Q., IV. iii. 17.

wariness (wa'ri-nes), n. [< wary[1] + -ness.] The character or habit of being wary; caution; prudent care to foresee and guard against evil.

To make sure work, Young Hayden is lock'd up at the first approach of the Enemy: there you have prudence and wariness to the excess of Fable, and Frenzy.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 216.

They were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence. Addison, Freeholder.

=Syn. See wary.

Waring cable. [Named after Richard S. Waring, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.] In elect., a cable in which the separate conductors are insulated with cotton or other fiber saturated with a heavy oil derived from petroleum and mixed with an absorbent material. The wires are sheathed with lead, sometimes a tube surrounding a cable of wires, and sometimes a multiple tube surrounding a series of parallel wires.

Waring's method. [Named after the inventor, Edward Waring (1736–98).] A method for the separation of the roots of an equation by means of the equation of the squared differences of the roots.

waringtonite (wor'ing-ton-īt), n. [Named after Barrington W. Smith (1817–90), an English geologist.] A variety of the copper sulphate brochantite, found in Cornwall.

warish[1]† (war'ish), v. [< ME. warisshen, warischen, warcen, warissen, garissen, cure, heal, < OF. warir, garir, F. guérir, keep, guard, protect, heal, < OHG. werjan, MHG. werren, G. wehren, defend, restrain (cf. AS. wærian), = MD. varen, keep, guard, = Goth. warjan, bid beware, forbid, ward off, protect: see ware[1], wear[2], and cf. warison.] I. trans. To heal; cure.

Thanne were my brother warissched of his wo.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 434.

That ware alle warsht of thaire stange.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 117.

Thow hast warschod me wel with thi medo wordes.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 604.

II. intrans. To be healed or cured; recover.

Youre doughter . . . shal warische and escape.
Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

warish[2]†, a. See wearish.

warison† (war'i-son), n. [< ME. warison, warisoun, wareson, < OF. warison, guarison, garison, guard, protection, < warir, guard: see warish.] 1. Healing.—2. Protection.

War thorn hym & ys men in fair wareson he broghte
Rob. of Gloucester, p. 114.

3. Reward; guerdon; requital.

And thus his warisoun he took
For the lady that he forsook.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 1538.

He wol winne his wareson now wigtly him spede
Forto saue ny y sone.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2379.

He made a cryc thoroowt al the tow[n],
Whedir he be zoman or knave,
That cowthe brynge hym Robyn Hode,
His warisone he shuld have.
Robin Hood and the Monk (Child's Ballads, V. 14).

4. Erroneously, in the following passage, a note of assault.

Either receive within thy towers
Two hundred of my master's powers,
Or straight they sound the warrison,
And storm and spoil thy garrison.
Scott, L. of L. M., iv. 24.

wark[1] (wärk), n. [< ME. werk, warch, < AS. wærc (= Icel. verkr), pain.] Pain; ache. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

wark[1] (wärk), v. i. [< ME. werken, warchen, < AS. wærcian (= Icel. verkja, virkja), pain: see wark[1], n.] To be in pain; ache.

wark[2] (wärk), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of work.

warkamoowee (wär-ka-mō'wē), n. [Cingalese.] A canoe with outriggers, used at Point de Galle, island of Ceylon. It is generally manned by four or five lascars, who sit grouped together at the end of the lever, adding or taking away a man according to the strength of the wind. The warkamoowees, during the northeast monsoon, even when it is blowing very hard, venture 20 or 25 miles from land for the purpose of fishing, or to carry fruits to vessels in the offing. They often sail 10 miles an hour.

Warkamoowee, Point de Galle.

warkand†, a. [ME. also warchond; pp. of wark, v.] Painful.

warkloom (wärk'lūm), n. A tool; an instrument. [Scotch.]

war-knife (wâr'nīf), n. A large knife used in war: especially applied to weapons of primitive times and in a general sense: as, the war-knife of the Anglo-Saxons; the war-knife of the New Zealanders.

warlaw†, n. An obsolete variant of warlock[1].

warld (wärld), n. A Scotch form of world.

warlike (wâr'lik), a. 1. Fond of war; easily provoked to war; ready to engage in war; fit or prepared for war; martial: as, a warlike nation.

She . . . made her people by peace warlike.
Sir P. Sidney.

2. Of or pertaining to war; martial; military.

They were two knights of peerelesse puissaunce,
And famous far abroad for warlike gest.
Spenser, F. Q., II. ii. 16.

The great archangel from his warlike toil Surceased. Milton, P. L., vi. 257.

3. Betokening or threatening war; hostile.

The warlike tone again he took. Scott, Rokeby, v. 19.

4. Having a martial appearance; having the qualities of a soldier; befitting a soldier.

By the buried hand of warlike Gaunt.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 3. 109.

=Syn. 1. Bellicose, hostile. 1–4. Military, etc. See martial.

warlikeness (wâr'lik-nes), n. A warlike disposition or character. [Rare.]

Braveness of mind and warlikeness.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion, cap. i. b. (Latham.) warling†, n. [Appar. a word coined to rime with darling (see def.), either < war[1] + -ling[1], meaning 'one often warred, contended, or quarreled with,' or perhaps < warry, curse, + -ling[1].] A word occurring only in the proverb "Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling," Camden, Remains.

warlock[1] (war'lok), n. [Also warluck; a Sc. form, preserving the orig. guttural (the reg. mod. E. form would be warlow), < ME. warloghe, warlaghe, werlaghe, warlowe, warlowe, wartaw, warlauc, < AS. wǣrloga (= OHG. wārlogo), a traitor, deceiver, liar, truce-breaker, < wǣr, a covenant, truce, compact, the truth (cf. wǣrlǣs, truthless, false), + loga*, a liar, < lēogan (pp. logen), lie: see very and lie[2].] 1†. A deceiver; a truce-breaker; a traitor.

Quen fondin was this hall crois,
the warlaghe saide on-loft with vois.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 121.

2. A person in league with the devil; a sorcerer; a wizard.

Where is this warlowe with his wande,
That wolde thus wynne oure folke away?
York Plays, p. 81.

Ye're but some witch or wil warluck,
Or mermaid o' the flood.
The Lass of Lochroyan (Child's Ballads, II. 109).

It seems he [Æneas] was no Warluck, as the Scots commonly call such men, who, they say, are iron-free, or lead-free. Dryden, Epic Poetry.

3†. A monster.

Loke of Lyvyaton [leviathan] in the lyffe of saynt Brandon,
There this warlouhe, I wis, a water eddur is cald,
That this saint there seghe in the se occeiane.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4439.

warlock[2]† (wâr'lok), n. [ME. warlok, warloc; < war- (uncertain) + lock[1].] A fetterlock.

Warlok, a fetyr lok (warloc of fetterloc, P.), Sera pedicalis, vel compedicalis (compedalis, S. P.).
Prompt. Parv., p. 517.

I com wyth those tythynges, thay tume hylyue,
Pyner me in a prysoun, put me in stokkes,
Wrythe me in a warlok, wrast out myn yzen.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 90.

warlockry (wâr'lok-ri), n. [< warlock[1] + -ry: see -ery.] The condition or practices of a warlock; impishness. [Rare.]

The true mark of warlockry. J. Baillie.

warlow†, n. An obsolete variant of warlock[1].

warluck, n. Same as warlock[1].

warly[1]†, a. and adv. See warely.

warly[2] (wâr'li), a. [< war[1] + -ly[1].] Warlike.

Warly feats. Chaloner, in Nugæ Antiquæ, II. 388.

warly[3] (wär'li), a. A Scotch form of worldly.

Awa', ye selfish warly race.
Burns, First Epistle to J. Lapraik.

warm (warm), a., and n. [< ME. warm, < AS. wearm = OS. OFries. D. warm = OHG. MHG. G. warm = Icel. varmr = Dan. Sw. varm = Goth. warms* (in verb warmjan), warm; with formative -m, < √ war, be hot, seen in OBulg. varŭ, heat, variti, be hot, boil, vrěti, be hot, boil, vrěšti, hot, Russ. varitĭ, boil, brew, scorch, Lith. virti, cook, seethe, boil. In another view, the word is connected with L. formus, Gr. θερμός, hot, Skt. gharma, heat.] I. a. 1. Having a moderate degree of heat; not cold: as, warm water; warm milk; warm blood; a warm bath.

He stretched himself on the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm. 2 K. iv. 34.

3. Heated; having the sensation of heat; exhibiting the effects of being heated to a moderate degree; hence, flushed.

> 'Twas well, indeed, when warm with wine,
> To pledge them with a kindly tear.
> Tennyson, In Memoriam, xc.

3. Communicating a sensation of warmth, or a moderate degree of heat: as, a warm fire; warm weather.—4. Subject to or characterized by the prevalence of a comparatively high temperature, or of moderate heat: as, a warm climate; warm countries.—5. Intimate; close; fast: as, warm friends.—6. Hearty; earnest: as, a warm welcome; warm thanks.

> The exploit of Hampden in the affair of the ship-money met with the warm approbation of every respectable Royalist in England.
> Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

7. Fresh: said of a scent or trail.—8. Close to something that is sought, as in games involving search or guessing; on the right track; on the way to success, as in searching or hunting for something. [Colloq.]

> He's warm—he 's getting cold—he 's getting colder and colder—he 's freezing.
> Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iii. 6.

9. Comfortable; well-off; moderately rich; in easy circumstances. [Colloq.]

> Water-Camlet. Believe it, I am a poor commoner, > Sir F. Cres. Come, you are warm, and blest with a fair wife. Middleton, Anything for a Quiet Life, i. 1.

> We have been thinking of marrying her to one of your tenants, . . . a warm man, . . . able to give her good bread. Goldsmith, Vicar, xv.

10. Comfortably fixed or placed; at home; acquainted; well adjusted. [Colloq.]

> A gentleman newly warm in his land, sir.
> B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

> Scarcely had the worthy Mynheer Beekman got warm in the seat of authority on the South River than enemies began to spring up all around him.
> Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 409.

11. Undesirable; unpleasant, as on account of unpopularity or obnoxiousness to law, etc.

> Their small Stock of Credit gone,
> Lest Rome should grow too warm, from thence they run.
> Congreve, tr. of Eleventh Satire of Juvenal

12. Ardent; earnest; full of zeal, ardor, or affection; enthusiastic; zealous.

> I'me half in a mind to transcribe it, and let it go abroad in the Catalogue; but I'me sensible the warm people of two opposite parties will be ready to blame my forward zeal. Humphrey Wanley (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 288).

> When she saw any of the company very warm in a wrong opinion, she was more inclined to confirm them in it than oppose them. Swift, Death of Stella.

> Now warm in love, now with'ring in my bloom,
> Lost in a convent's solitary gloom!
> Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 37.

> Till a warm preacher found a way t' impart
> Awakening feelings to his torpid heart.
> Crabbe, Works, V. 74.

13. Animated; brisk; keen; heated; hot: as, a warm engagement.

> We shall have warm work on't
> Dryden, Spanish Friar, i. 1.

> He argued with perfect temper in society, or, if he saw the argument becoming long or warm, in a moment he dashed over his opponent's trenches, and was laughingly attacking him on some fresh point.
> Lady Holland, Sydney Smith, vii.

14. Stirred up; somewhat excited; hot; nettled: as, to become warm when contradicted.

> A fine boggle-di-botch I have made of it. . . . I am aware it is not a canonical word—classical, I mean, nor in nor out of any dictionary perhaps—but when people are warm they cannot stand picking terms.
> Miss Edgeworth, Helen, xxvi

15. Having the ardor of affection or passion.

> Mirth and youth and warm desire.
> Milton, May Morning

> The enactments of human laws are vain to restrain the warm tides of the heart. Sumner, Orations, I. 229.

16. Having too much ardor; coarse; indelicate. [Colloq.]

> I do not know the play; but, as Maria says, if there is any thing a little too warm (and it is so with most of them) it can be easily left out. Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xv.

Warm bath, in med., a bath in water of a temperature from 92° to 98° F.—Warm colors, in painting, such colors as have yellow or red for their basis: opposed to cold colors, as blue and its compounds: the term, however is a relative one.—Warm plaster. See plaster.—Warm register, a heated register-plate used in the manufacture of tarred ropes.—Warm sepia. See sepia.—Warm wave. See wave!.—Warm with, an abbreviation for "warm with sugar," as in the order given for a beverage of that sort, in contrast with cold without. [Slang.]

> Two glasses of rum-and water warm with.
> Dickens, Sketches.

Syn. 4. Sunny, mild, close, oppressive.—6. Earnest, hearty, enthusiastic, eager.—1–6. Warm is distinctly weaker than hot, fervent, fervid, fiery, vehement, passionate.

II. n. 1†. Warmth; heat.

> The winter's hurt recovers with the warm;
> The parched grass restored is with shade.
> Surrey.

2. An act or process of warming; a heating. [Colloq.]

> Boil it (barley-malt) in a kettle; one or two warms is enough. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 151.

warm (wârm), v.; pret. and pp. warmed, ppr. warming. [< ME. warmen, < AS. wearmian (= D. warmen = MHG. warmen, G. wärmen = Icel. verma = Dan. varme = Sw. värma = Goth. warmjan), become warm, < wearm, warm: see warm, a.] I. intrans. 1. To become warm or moderately heated; communicate warmth.

> Wyndis wastid away, warmyt the ayre;
> The rede beames alone blusshet with hete.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4036.

> All are but parts of one stupendous whole, . . .
> That, changed through all, and yet in all the same, . . .
> Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze.
> Pope, Essay on Man, i. 271.

2. To warm one's self.

> There shall not be a coal to warm at. Isa. xlvii. 14.

3. To become ardent, animated, or enthusiastic.

> I know the full value of the snood; and Mact'allum more's heart will be as cold as death can make it when it does not warm to the tartan.
> Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxxv.

> As the minister warms to his sermon there come through these cracks frequent exclamations.
> W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 73.

II. trans. To make warm. (a) To communicate a moderate degree of heat to; impart warmth to.

> And there, without the dore, in ye courte on the left hand, is a tree with many stones about it, where the mynysters of the Jewes, and seynt Peter with them, warmed theym by the fyre. Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 13.

> Either the hostess or one of her maids warms his bed, puts on his night cap, cuts his corns, puts out the candle.
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

> The room is warmed, when necessary, by burning charcoal in a chafingdish.
> E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, I. 20.

(b) To heat up; excite ardor or zeal in; interest; animate, enliven; inspirit; give life and color to; flush; cause to glow.

> It would warm his spirits
> To hear from me you had left Antony.
> Shak., A. and C., iii. 13. 69.

> With those hopes Socrates warmed his doubtful spirits against that cold potion. Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, iv.

> I love such mirth as does not make friends ashamed to look upon one another next morning, nor men that cannot well bear it to repent the money they spend when they be warmed with drink. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 87.

> How could I, to the dearest theme
> That ever warm'd a minstrel's dream,
> So foul, so false a recreant prove!
> Scott, Lay of L. M. iii. 1.

> All beauty warms the heart, is a sign of health, prosperity, and the favor of God. Emerson, Success.

(c) To administer castigation to: as, I'll warm him for that piece of mischief. [Colloq.] (d) Figuratively, to occupy.

> His brother . . . had a while warmed the Throne
> Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 84.

To warm one's jacket, to castigate one. [Colloq.]—Warming plaster. See plaster.

war-man (wâr'man), n. A warrior. [Rare.]

> Thar lordis lo'pt on at afternoone,
> With all thair warrayn wight
> Battle of Balrinnes (Child's Ballads, VII. 229).

> The sweet war-man is dead and rotten.
> Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 666.

war-marked† (wâr'markt), a. Bearing the marks or traces of war; experienced in war; veteran.

> Your army, which doth most consist > Of war-mark'd footmen. Shak., A. and C., iii. 7. 45.

warm-blooded (wârm'blud'ed), a. 1. Having warm blood; hematothermal: in zoology and physiology noting mammals and birds whose blood ranges in temperature from 98° to 114° F., in consequence of the complete double blood circulation, and the oxygenation or combustion which goes on in the lungs: opposed to cold-blooded or hematocryal.—2. Figuratively, characterized by high temper and generous impulses; warm-hearted; also, passionate.—Warm-blooded fish. See fish.

warmer (wâr'mėr), n. [< warm + *-er*1.] One who or that which warms.

warmful (wârm'ful), a. [< warm + -ful.] Giving warmth; warm. [Rare.]

> About him a mandilion, that did with buttons meet,
> Of purple, large, and full of folds, curl'd with a warmful nap. Chapman, Iliad, x. 121.

warm-headed (wârm'hed'ed), a. Easily excited; enthusiastic; fanciful.

> The advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas and the more lively. Locke.

warm-hearted (wârm'här'ted), a. Having warmth of heart; having a disposition such as readily shows friendship, affection, or interest; proceeding from such a disposition; cordial; sincere; hearty: as, a warm-hearted man; warm-hearted support.

warm-heartedness (warm'här'ted-nes), n. The state or character of being warm-hearted; affectionate disposition; cordiality.

> He was looking from Arabella to Winkle with as much delight depicted in his countenance as warm-heartedness and kindly feeling can communicate to the human face.
> Dickens, Pickwick.

warming (wâr'ming), n. [Verbal n. of warm, v.] 1. The act of one who warms; specifically, in silver-plating, the heating of the object to be plated until it causes a slight hissing when immersed in water. The object is then dipped in dilute nitric acid, to cause a slight roughening of the surface in order to afford a better hold to the silvering.

2. A castigation; a thrashing. [Colloq.]

warming-pan (wâr'ming-pan), n. 1. A large covered long-handled flat vessel (usually of brass) into which live coals are put; used to warm the inside of a bed.

> Put of your clothes in winter by the fire side, and cause your bed to bee heated with a warming panne.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 252.

> A dagger with a hilt like a warming-pan
> Marlowe, Jew of Malta, iv. 4. 33.

2. A person put into a situation, post, or office temporarily, to hold it for another till the latter becomes qualified for it. [Slang.]

warming-stone (wâr'ming-ston), n. A foot-warmer; a slab of soapstone, cut to a convenient size: when used it is first heated in the fire or on a stove, and afterward placed under the feet: it is chiefly made use of in driving in very cold weather. Soapstone is selected for this purpose because it stands the heat better than any other stone, not cracking or crumbling when exposed to sudden changes of temperature.

warmly (wârm'li), adv. In a warm manner. (a) With warmth or heat. Milton, P. L., iv. 244. (b) With warmth of feeling, eagerly, earnestly; ardently.

> Each prince shall thus with honour have > What both so warmly seem to crave.
> Prior, Alma, ii. 111.

warmness (wârm'nes), n. [< ME. warmnesse; < warm + -ness.] Warmth.

> Phebus hath of gold his stremes doun ysent
> To gladen every flour with his warmnesse.
> Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 977.

war-monger† (wâr'mung"gėr), n. One who fights for hire; a mercenary soldier, or bravo. Spenser, F. Q., III. x. 29.

warmouth (war'mouth), n. A centrarchoid fish: same as bigmouth.

warm-sided (warm'sī'ded), a. Naut., mounting heavy guns: said of a ship or a fort. [Colloq.]

warmth (wârmth), n. [< ME. wermthe (= LG. wermde); < warm + *-th*1.] 1. The state of being warm; gentle heat: as, the warmth of the sun or of the blood; also, the sensation of moderate heat.

> No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou livest.
> Shak., R. and J., iv. 1. 98.

> The birth of Its December,
> And the warmth of its July.
> Praed, I remember, I remember.

2. Cordiality; geniality; hearty kindness or good feeling.

> I took leave of Colonel Cubbon, who told me, with a warmth which I was vain enough to think sincere, that he had not passed three such pleasant days for thirty years.
> Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 325.

3. A state of lively and excited feeling; ardor; zeal; fervor; earnestness, often approaching anger; intensity; enthusiasm.

> What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors? Shak., M. of V., i. 2. 36.

> The sister fell into a little warmth and contradiction.
> Steele, Tatler, No. 172.

> The monarch spoke; the words with warmth address'd,
> To rigid justice steel'd his brother's breast.
> Pope, Iliad, vi. 79.

4. In painting, a glowing effect which arises from the use of warm colors (which see, under warm), and also from the use of transparent colors in the process of glazing.

warnt (warn), n. [< ME. warne, < AS. wearn, a denial, refusal, obstacle, impediment, a guarding of oneself, a defense of a person on trial, = OHG. warna (in comp.), MHG. warne, werne, preparation, = Icel. vörn = Sw. värn = Dan. værn, a defence; with formative -n, < Teut. √war, defend, guard: see *ware*1, ward.] A denial; refusal.

> Without more warne. Cursor Mundi, l. 11[illegible] warn (warn), v. t. [Under this word are merged two orig. diff. but related verbs: (a) < ME. warnen, warnien, warn, admonish, < AS. warnian, warn, admonish, = OS. warnōn = OFries. warna = MHG. warnen, werne, G. warnen = Icel. varna = Sw. varna = Dan. varne, warn, admonish, = Goth. warnjan, take heed, beware, < war, aware: see aware, *ware*1, wary. (b) < ME. warnen, warnien, refuse, deny, < AS. wearnian, refuse, deny, = OS. warnōn = OFries. warna = MHG. warnen, werne, G. warnen = Icel. varna = Sw. värna = Dan. værne, refuse, deny, < wearn, a denial, refusal: see warn, n.] nian, warnian, take heed, warn, = OHG. warnôn, warn, warnen (werněn), MHG. warnen, provide, take heed, protect, warn, G. warnen, warn, = Icel. varna = Sw. varna, warn (cf. OF. warnir, guarnir, garnir, provide, garnish, preserve, > ult. E. garnish, garniture, etc.); (b) < ME. wernen, < AS. wyrnan, refuse, deny, = OS. wernian = OHG. warnen = OFries. warna, werna = Icel. varna, refuse, deny; from the noun: see warn, n.] 1. To put on guard by timely notice; wake, ware, or give notice to beforehand, as of approaching danger or of something to be avoided or guarded against; caution; admonish; tell or command admonishingly; advise.

> The doubt of future foes exiles my present joy,
> And wit me warnes to shun such snares as threaten mine annoy.
> Queen Elizabeth, quoted in Puttenham's Arte of Eng. Poesie, Int., p. xii.

> Being warned by God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way. Mat. ii. 12.

> And then I fear'd
> Lest the gray navy there would splinter on it,
> And fearing waved my arm to warn them off.
> Tennyson, Sea Dreams.

2. To admonish, as to any duty; advise; expostulate with.

> Warn them that are unruly. 1 Thes. v. 14.

3. To apprise; give notice to; make ware or aware; inform previously; notify; direct; bid; summon.

> William & hise wiges were warned of here come.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4288.

> Er the sun vp soght with his softe beames,
> Pallenus full prestly the peopull did warne
> To appere in his presens, princes and dukys.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1092.

> Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls?
> Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 201.

> The Bishop of Ross is warn'd by the Lords of the Council, that he shall no longer be esteemed an Ambassador, but be punish'd as his Fault shall deserve.
> Baker, Chronicles, p. 345.

4†. To deny; refuse; forbid.

> Thou canst not warne him that with good entente > Axeth thyn help. Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 11.

> The kynges hed, when hyt vs brogt,
> A kysse wyll y warne the noght,
> For lefe to me hyt were!
> Octavian (ed. Halliwell), l. 871.

5†. To defend; keep or ward off. Spenser.

warner (wâr'nėr), n. 1. One who or that which warns; an admonisher.—2. See the quotation.

> Sotilties . . were nothing more than devices in sugar and paste, which, in general, . . had some allusion to the circumstances of the entertainment, and closed the service of the dishes. The warners were ornaments of the same nature, which preceded them.
> H. Warner, Antiquitates Culinariæ (ed. 1791), p. 134, note.

warnesture†, v. t. [ME., < OF. warnesture, garnesture, garnisture, garniture, provision, stores, furniture, garniture: see garniture.] To furnish; store.

> Wel ther were warnestured of vitayles i-now, > plentinously for al peple to passe where thei wold.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1121.

> I shal warnestoure myn hous with foures, swiche as han castelles and other maneir edifices, and armeure and artelries. Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

warning (wâr'ning), n. [< ME. warninge, a warning, admonition, < AS. ġewarnung (= OHG. warnunge, G. warnung, a warning), verbal n. of wearnian, warnian, warn: see warn, v.] 1. Notice beforehand of the consequences that will probably follow continuance in some particular course; admonitory advice to do or to abstain from doing something, as in reference to approaching a probable danger.

> Hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. Ezek. iii. 17.

2. That which warns, or serves to warn or admonish.

> Let Christian's slips before he came hither, and the Lattes that he met with in this place, be a warning to thee that come after. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

3. Heed; the lesson taught by or to be learned from a caution given.

> I think it is well that they stand so near the highway, that others may see and take warning.
> Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

4. Previous notice: as, a short warning.

> Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 2. 14.

5. A summons; a call; a bidding.

> It [shorris] illumineth the face, which as a beacon gives warning . . . to arm. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 117.

6. A notice given to terminate a business relation, as that of master and servant, employer and employee, landlord and tenant; a notice to quit.

> Servants in husbandry [23 Hen. VI., c. 12] are required to give their masters warning, and to engage with some other master before quitting their present service.
> Ribton-Turner, Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 66.

warning (wâr'ning), p. a. In biol., serving as a menace to enemies; of threatening aspect: somewhat specially used of a strikingly conspicuous coloration. See the quotation.

> A never-failing interest attaches to the subject of Warning Colours. The history of the discovery of warning colors in caterpillars is quoted with many examples, showing that the education of enemies is assisted by the fact that warning colors and patterns often resemble each other, and there is abundant evidence to show that insect-eating animals learn by experience. Amer. Nat., Oct., 1890, p. 929.

warningly (wâr'ning-li), adv. In a warning manner; so as to warn; by way of notice or admonition.

warning-piece (wâr'ning-pēs), n. Something that warns. (a) A warning-gun; a signal-gun; the discharge of a cannon intended as a notification. Compare piece, 4 (b).

> Hark! upon my life, the knight! 'tis your friend;
> This was the warning piece of his approach.
> Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, v. 2.

> The treason of Watson and Clerk, two English seminaries, is sufficiently known; it was as a "præludium" or warning-piece to the great "fougade," the discharge of the powder-treason. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 97.

(b) In horol., a part of the striking-mechanism of a clock that, by the movement of the lower wheel, throws the striking-system periodically into action. It is also operated by the strike or silent mechanism, so that the striking-mechanism may be thrown out of gear at will. When in position to work, it causes a slight noise at the instant of starting the striking-parts, and thus gives warning that the clock is about to strike.

warning-wheel (wâr'ning-hwēl), n. In horol., a warning-piece in the form of a wheel.

warnisht, warniset, v. t. Middle English forms of garnish.

> He wigtly hem of sent,
> & het hem alle hige thider as harde as thei migt,
> Wel warnished for the werre with clene hors & armes.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1083.

war-office (war'of'is), n. A public office or department in which military affairs are superintended or administered. (a) The department or bureau of the British government presided over by the Secretary of State for War, assisted by a parliamentary, a permanent, and a financial under secretary. It is subdivided into various departments, as the military, ordnance, and financial. (b) In the United States, the War Department.

warp (wârp), v. [(a) Trans., cast, throw, < ME. werpen, weorpen, worpen (pret. warp, pp. worpen), < AS. weorpan (pret. wearp), cast, throw, = OS. werpan = D. MLG. werpen = OHG. werfan, MHG. G. werfen, throw, cast, = Icel. verpa = Goth. wairpan, throw; cf. Lith. werpti, spin, Gr. βάπτειν, incline downward, βάπτειν, throw. (b) < ME. warpen (pret. warped), < Icel. varpa, throw, cast, also cast or lay out a net, = Sw. varpa = Dan. varpe, warp (a ship), < varp, a casting, also a cast with a net, also a warping, = Sw. varp, the draft of a net, = Dan. varp, a warp; from the strong verb above.] I. trans. 1†. To cast; throw; hurl.

> Wente to hys wardrope, and warpe of hys wedez.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 901.

> Ful sone it was ful lounde kid
> Of Havelok, how he warp the ston
> Ouer the londes cuerichon. Havelok, l. 1003.

2†. To utter; ejaculate; enunciate; give utterance to.

> Hit fyrst mynged,
> Wylde wordez hym warp wyth a wrast noyce.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1423.

> A note ful nwe I herde hem warpe,
> To lysten that watz ful lufly dere.
> Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), l. 878.

3. To bring forth (young) prematurely: said of cattle, sheep, horses, etc. [Prov. Eng.]—4. In rope-making, to run (the yarn of the winches) into hauls to be tarred. See haul of yarn, under haul.—5. To weave; hence, in a figurative sense, to fabricate; plot.

> But now: How, Where, of What shall I begin
> This Gold grownd Web to weave, to warp, to spin?
> Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Battle of Ivry.

> She acquainted the Greeks underhand with this treason, which was a warping against them.
> Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 409.

6. To give a cast or twist to; turn or twist out of shape or out of straightness, as by unequal contraction, etc.; contort.

> Oh state of Nature, fall together in me,
> Since thy best props are warp'd.
> Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 2.

> Confess, or I will warp
> Your limbs with such keen tortures ——.
> Shelley, The Cenci, v. 3.

> The cracked door, ill-fitting and warped from its original shape, gaped on us by a score of glittering crevices to the room we sought.
> D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxiii.

7. To turn aside from the true direction; cause to bend or incline; pervert.

> This first avowed, nor folly warped my mind.
> Dryden, Sig. and Guis., l. 402.

> By the present mode of education we are forcibly warped from the bias of nature. Goldsmith, Taste.

> His heart was form'd for softness — warp'd to wrong.
> Byron, Corsair, iii. 23.

> Men's perceptions are warped by their passions.
> H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 182.

8. Naut., to move into some desired place or position by hauling on a rope or warp which has been fastened to something fixed, as a buoy, anchor, or other ship at or near that place or position: as, to warp a ship into harbor or to her berth.

> They warped out their ships by force of hand.
> Mir. for Mags., p. 881.

> Seeing them warp themselues to windward, we thought it not good to be boorded on both sides at an anchor.
> Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 41.

9. In agri., to fertilize, as poor or barren land, by means of artificial inundation from rivers which hold large quantities of earthy matter, or warp (see warp, n., 4), in suspension. The operation, which consists in inclosing a body or sheet of water till the sediment it holds in suspension has been deposited, can be carried out only on flat low-lying tracts which may be readily submerged. This system was first systematically practised in Great Britain on the banks of the Trent, Ouse, and other rivers which empty into the estuary of the Humber.

10. To change. [Rare.]

> Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
> Thou dost not bite so nigh
> As benefits forgot;
> Though thou the waters warp,
> Thy sting is not so sharp
> As friend remember'd not.
> Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 187.

II. intrans. 1. To turn, twist, or be twisted out of straightness or the proper shape.

> After the manner of wood that curleth and warpeth with the fire. Holland, tr. of Pliutarch, p. 561.

> It's better to shoot in a bow that has been shot in before, and will never start, than to draw a fair new one, that for every arrow will be warping.
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

> Ye are green wood, see ye warp not.
> Tennyson, Princess, ii.

2. To turn or incline from a straight, true, or proper course; deviate; swerve.

> There is our commission,
> From which we would not have you warp.
> Shak., M. for M., i. 1. 15.

> Now, by something I had lately observed of Mr. Treasurer's conversation on occasion, I suspected him a little warping to Rome. Evelyn, Diary, May 17, 1671.

> By and by, as soon as the shadow of Sir Francis hath left him, he falls off again warping and warping till he come to contradict himself in diameter, and denies flatly that it is either variable or arbitrary, being once scttl'd.
> Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

> Whatever these warping Christians might pretend as to zeal for the Law and their ancient Religion, the bottom of all was a principle of infidelity.
> Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

3. To change for the worse; turn in a wrong direction.

> Methinks
> My fav'our here begins to warp.
> Shak., W. T., i. 2. 395.

4†. To weave; hence, to plot.

> Who like a fleering slavish parasite
> In warping profit or a traitorous sleight,
> Hoops round his rotten body with devotes.
> Marlowe, Hero and Leander, vi.

5. To fly with a twisting or bending to this side and that; deflect the course of flight; turn about in flying, as birds or insects.

> As when the potent rod
> Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
> Wav'd round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud
> Of locusts warping on the eastern wind.
> Milton, P. L., i. 341.

6. To wind yarn off bobbins, to form the warp of a web. See the quotation.

> Warping, therefore, consists in arranging the threads according to number and colour, or in any special manner that may be necessary, and to keep them in their relative places after they have been so laid.
> A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 62.

7. To slink; cast the young prematurely, as cows.—8. Naut., to work forward by means of a rope fastened to something fixed, as in moving from one berth to another in a harbor, or in making one's way out of a harbor in a calm, or against a contrary wind.

> I sat out of the Mole of Chio into the sea by warping fourth, with the helpe of Genoeses boies.
> Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 103.

warp (wârp), n. [< ME. warp; < warp, v.] 1†. A throw; a cast.—2. Hence, a cast of herrings, haddocks, or other fish; four, as a tale of count-lag lamb [Prov. Eng.]—3. A cast lamb, kid, calf, foal, or the like; the young of an animal when brought forth prematurely. [Prov. Eng.]—4. The sediment which subsides from turbid water; the alluvial deposit of muddy water artificially introduced into low lands in order to enrich or fertilize them. The term warp is sometimes applied to tidal alluvium. "The Humber warp is a marine and estuarine silt and clay, which occurs above the Peat beds." (Woodward.) As the word is used by J. Trimmer, it has nearly the same meaning as surface-soil. The word is rarely, if ever, used in the United States as meaning a sedimentary deposit.

5. A cast or twist; the twist or bending which occurs in wood in drying; the state of having a cast, or of being warped or twisted.

Somebody in Berkshire, I fancy, had warped his mind against you, and no mind is more capable of warps than his. S. Rowles, in Merriam, II. 337.

6. The threads which are extended lengthwise in a loom, and across which the woof is thrown in the process of weaving.

The ground of the future stuff was formed by a number of parallel strings called the warp, having their upper ends attached to a horizontal beam, and drawn taut by weights hung from their lower ends.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 206.

Weaving through all the poor details
And homespun warp of circumstance.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

7. Naut., a rope, smaller than a cable, used in towing, or in moving a ship by attachment to something fixed; a towing-line.

We furled now for the last time together, and came down and took the warp ashore.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 430.

A warp of weeks, four weeks; a month. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Cerficus . . . was the first May-lord or captaine of the Morris-daunce that on those embenched shelves stampt his footing, where cods and dog-fish swomme not a warp of weeks forerunning. Nashe, Lenten Stuffe. (Davies.)

To part a warp. Same as to part a line (which see, under *line*²). Warp-dyeing machine, an apparatus for drawing warp-threads, laid out in sets, through a dye-beck. Each warp is separated from the next by a pin, and the set is passed through the dye between rollers, and delivered from between squeezing-cylinders, which press out the superfluous dye. E. H. Knight.

warpage (wär'pāj), n. [< warp + -age.] The act of warping; also, a charge per ton made on shipping in some harbors.

war-paint (wär'pānt), n. 1. Among some savage tribes, paint applied to the face and other parts of the person, according to a recognized and traditional system, as a sign that the wearer is about to engage in war. Its origin may have been an attempt to strike terror to the mind of the enemy.

The war paint on the Sachem's face,
Unwet with tears alone fierce and red.
Whittier, Bridal of Pennacook, iii.

2. Hence, full dress and adornment; official costume. [Slang.]

war-path (wär'päth), n. Among the American Indians, the path or route followed by a warlike expedition; also, the military undertaking itself. To go on the war-path, to go to war.

"The warrior whose eye is open can see his enemy," said Magua. . . . "I have brought gifts to my brother. His nation would not go on the warpath, because they did not think it well."
J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxvii.

warp-beam (wärp'bēm), n. In a loom, the roller on which the warp-threads are wound, and from which they are drawn as the weaving proceeds. It is placed at the back, opposite the cloth-beam, which receives the finished fabric. E. H. Knight.

warp-dresser (wärp'dres'ėr), n. In weaving, a machine for treating yarns with size before winding them on the yarn-beam of a loom. It is superseded in some mills by the larger machine called a slasher. E. H. Knight.

warper (wär'pėr), n. [< warp + *-er*¹.] 1. A weaver.—2. One who winds yarn in preparation for weaving, to form the warp of a web.—3. A warping-machine.

warp-frame (wärp'frām), n. In lace-manuf., a machine employing a thread for each needle, the threads being wound on a beam like the warp-beam of a loom (whence the name). Also called warp-net frame.

warping-bank (wär'ping-bangk), n. A bank or mound of earth raised around a field for retaining the water let in for the purpose of enriching the land with the warp or sediment.

warping-block (wär'ping-blok), n. A block used in a rigging-loft in warping off yarn.

warping-chock (wär'ping-chok), n. Naut., a large chock of timber secured in a port, with a notch in it to lead hawsers through in warping. See *chock*⁴, 3.

warping-hook (wär'ping-hůk), n. 1. In rope-making, a brace for twisting yarn.—2. A hook to which yarn is hung as it is prepared for the warp of a textile material.

warping-jack (wär'ping-jak), n. In a warping-machine, a contrivance hung between the traverse and the revolving warp-frame, and serving to separate the warp-threads into the two alternate sets called leas: same as heck-bar. E. H. Knight.

warping-machine (wär'ping-ma-shēn'), n. A machine for preparing and arranging the yarns intended for the warp of a textile material.

warping-mill (wär'ping-mil), n. In weaving, an apparatus for winding the warp-yarns from the bobbins to a large cylindrical reel, and arranging them in two leas or sets, ready for the heddles in the loom.

warping-penny (wär'ping-pen'i), n. Money paid by the spinner to the weaver on laying the warp. Wright. [Prov. Eng.]

warp-lace (wärp'lās), n. Any lace having warp-threads, or threads so placed as to resemble the warp of a fabric.

warp-land (warp'land), n. Low-lying land that has been or can be fertilized by warping. See warp, v. t., 9. [Eng.]

The warp-land, as it is called, over which the waters of the Ouse and the Aire are permitted to flow by means of sluices which absorb and retain the water till the sediment is deposited, is peculiarly rich and luxuriant.
T. Allen, Hist. County of York, II. 307.

warple (wär'pl), v. See *warble*².

war-plume (wär'plōm), n. A plume worn in war.

The tomahawk . . . cut the war-plume from the scalping-tuft of Uncas, and passed through the frail wall of the lodge as though it were hurled from some formidable engine. J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxiv.

war-proof (wär'prōf), n. The qualities of a soldier: proved fitness for military life. [Rare.]

On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war proof!
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 1. 18.

warp-stitch (wärp'stich), n. A kind of embroidery in which the threads of the weft are pulled out in places, leaving the warp threads exposed, which are then held together by ornamental stitches.

warp-thread (wärp'thred), n. One of the threads which form the warp of a web.

warragal (war'a-gal), n. [Australian.] The Australian dingo, Canis dingo. Also warrigal. See cut under dingo.

warrandice (wor'an-dis), n. [Also warrandice, var. of warrantise.] In Scots law, the obligation by which a party conveying a subject or right is bound to indemnify the grantee, disponee, or receiver of the right in case of eviction, or of real claims or burdens being made effectual against the subject, arising out of obligations or transactions antecedent to the date of the conveyance; warranty. Warrandice is either personal or real. Personal warrandice is that by which the grantor and his heirs are bound personally. Real warrandice is that by which certain lands called warrandice lands are made over eventually in security of the lands conveyed.

warrant (wor'ant), n. [Formerly also warrand, < ME. warant, < OF. warant, guarant, garant, garent, a warrant, also a warranter, supporter, defender, protector, = Pr. garen, guaren = Sp. Pg. garante = Olt. guarento (ML. reflex warantum, warrentum, warranda), a warrant; perhaps orig. a ppr. of OF. warir, warer, defend, keep, < OHG. warjan, werjan, MHG. wern, weren, G. wehren, protect: see ward, *weir*², *weir*³. Hence warrantise, warranty, guaranty, etc. Cf. warren.]

1†. Protector; protection; defense; safeguard.

He gripes his sword in both his hondes, and whom that he raught a full stroke was so harde smyten that noon armure was his warande fro deth.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 408.

Thy safe warrand we will be.
Hobie Noble (Child's Ballads, VI. 190).

2. Security; guaranty; assurance; voucher; attestation; evidence; pledge; that which attests or proves.

His promise is our plain warrant that in his name what we ask we shall receive.
St. Cyprian, in Hooker's Eccles. Polity, v. 37.

Before Emilia here
I give thee warrant of thy place.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 93.

Any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1. 10.

His books are by themselves the warrant of the fame which he so widely gained.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 376.

3. Authority; authorization; sanction; justification.

May we, with the warrant of womanhood and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?
Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 2. 220.

Nay, you are rude, pray you, forbear, you offer now
More than the breeding of a gentleman
Can give you warrant for.
Beau. and Fl., Love's Cure, iv. 4.

4. An act, instrument, or obligation by which one person authorizes another to do something which he has not otherwise a right to do; an act or instrument investing one with a right or with authority, and thus securing him from blame, loss, or damage; hence, anything which authorizes or justifies an act; a license.

A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant,
For me, most wretched, to perform the like.
Shak., Tit. And., v. 3. 44.

It was your own command to bar none from him.
Beside, the princess sent her ring, sir, for my warrant.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iv. 2.

I have got a Warrant from the Lords of the Council to travel for three Years any where, Rome and St. Omers excepted. Howell, Letters, I. i. 3.

Specifically—(a) An instrument or negotiable writing authorizing a person to receive money or other things: as, a dividend warrant. See dock-warrant. (b) In law, an instrument authorizing the officer to whom it is issued to seize or detain a person or property, or carry a judgment into execution. Some instruments used for such a purpose are, however, called writs, executions, etc., rather than warrants.

The justice keeps such a stir yonder with his charges,
And such a coil with warrants!
Fletcher, Pilgrim, iii. 7.

Did give warrants for the seizing of a complice of his, one Blinkinsopp. Pepys, Diary, I. 268.

(c) In the army and navy, a writ or authority inferior to a commission. See warrant-officer.

5. In coal-mining, underclay. [Leicestershire coal-field, Eng.]—Clerk of the warrants. See clerk. Dispossess, distress, dividend warrant. See the qualifying words.—General warrant, a warrant directed against no particular individual, but against suspected persons generally.

Nor is the case at all parallel to that of general warrants, or any similar irregularity into which an honest government may inadvertently be led. Hallam.

Judge and warrant. See judge. Justice's warrant, a warrant, usually of arrest on a criminal charge, issued by a justice of the peace. Compare bench-warrant.—To back a warrant. See *back*¹. Treasury warrant. See treasury. Warrant of arrest, warrant of attachment, a written mandate or precept directing an officer to arrest a person or to seize property.—Warrant of attorney. See *attorney*².—Warrant of commitment, a written mandate directing that a person be committed to prison. (See also bench warrant, death-warrant, search warrant.)

warrant (wor'ant), v. t. [< ME. warantēn, warenten, warranden, < OF. warantir, later guarentir, garantir, warrant, F. garantir = Pr. garentir = Sp. Pg. garantir = It. guarentire, guarantire, warrant; from the noun.] 1†. To protect; defend; safeguard; secure.

Our liege lordes seel on my patente,
That shewe I first my body to warente.
Chaucer, Prol. to Pardoner's Tale, l. 62.

Thei hem diffended to warante their lyves.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 531.

2. To guarantee or assure against harm; give assurance or surety to; give authority or power to do or forbear anything by which the person thus authorized or empowered is secured or saved harmless from any loss or damage which may result from such act or forbearance.

By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 180.

3. To give guaranty or assurance for, as the truth or the due performance of something; give one's word for or concerning.

A noble fellow, I warrant him. Shak., Cor., v. 2. 115.

I . . . warranted him, if he would follow my directions, to cure him in a short time. Selden, Table Talk, p. 45.

May. Is my wife acquainted with this?
Bell. She's perfect, and will come out upon her cue, I warrant you. Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

4. To declare with assurance or without fear of contradiction or failure; assert as undoubted; pledge one's word: used in asseverations and governing a clause.

Yond is Moyses, I dar warand.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 60.

I warrant 'tis my sister. She frown'd, did she not, and looked lightingly? Brome, Northern Lass.

I han't seen him these three Years—I warrant he's grown. Congreve, Love for Love, iii. 4.

5. To make certain or secure; assure by warrant or guaranty.

He had great authority over all Congregations of Israelites, warranted to him with the Antra seale.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 168.

6. To give a pledge or assurance in regard to; guarantee (something) to be safe, sound, genuine, or as represented: as, to warrant a horse; warranted goods.

> New titles warrant not a play for now,
> The subject being old.
> Fletcher (and another), False One, Prol.
>
> What hope can we have of this whole Council to warrant us a matter 400. years at least above their time?
> Milton, Prelatical Episcopacy.

7. To support by authority or proof; afford ground for; authorize; justify; sanction; support; allow.

> How far I have proceeded,
> Or how far further shall, is warranted
> By a commission from the consistory.
> Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 91.
>
> Warrant not so much ill by your example
> To those that live beneath you.
> Shirley, Love's Cruelty, i. 2.
>
> If the sky
> Warrant thee not to go for Italy.
> May, tr. of Lucan's Pharsalia, v.

Reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true. Locke.

There are no truths which a sound judgment can be warranted in despising. Stubbs, Mediæval and Modern Hist., p. 18.

warrantable (wor'an-ta-bl), a. [< warrant + -able.] 1. Capable of being warranted, in any sense; justifiable; defensible; lawful.

> In ancient times all women which had not husbands nor fathers to govern them had their tutors, without whose authority there was no act which they did warrantable.
> Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 74.
>
> It is not a warrantable curiosity to examine the verity of Scripture by the concordance of human history.
> Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 29.

He can not be fairly blamed, and not a pound should be deducted from his warrantable value, simply because he now did what any other young horse in the world would have felt to be his proper course.
R. D. Blackmore, Cripps the Carrier, iii.

Specifically — 2. Of sufficient age to be hunted: as, a warrantable stag (that is, one in its sixth year).

> It will be either by great good luck or by great perseverance on the huntsman's part that a warrantable deer will be found at all while there is light to hunt him by.
> Nineteenth Century, XX. 603.

warrantableness (wor'an-ta-bl-nes), n. The character of being warrantable. Barrow.

warrantably (wor'an-ta-bli), adv. In a warrantable manner; in a manner that may be justified; justifiably. Thomas Adams, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 150.

warrantee (wor-an-te'), n. [< warrant + *-ee*1.] One to whom a warranty is given.

warranter (wor'an-ter), n. [< warrant + *-er*1. Cf. warrantor.] One who warrants. Specifically (a) One who gives authority or legally empowers. (b) One who assures, or covenants to assure, one who contracts to secure another in a right or to make good any defect of title or quality: as, the warrantor of a horse.

warrantiset, warrantizet (wor'an-tiz), n. [Early mod. E. also warrandise, warrandice (see warrandice); < ME. warantyse, < OF. waranise*, warentise, warandise, garantise, garantize (ML. reflex warandisia), < warantir, warrant: see warrant.] 1. Warrant; security; warranty.

> And yf thou may in any wyse
> Make thy chartyr on warantyse
> To thyne heyres & assygnes alle so,
> This shalle a wyse purchasser doo.
> Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 24.
>
> There's none protector of the realm but I > Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 3. 13.

2. Guaranty; pledge; promise.

> In the very refuse of thy deeds
> There is such strength and warrantise of skill
> That, in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds.
> Shak., Sonnets, cl.

warrantiset (wor'an-tiz), v. t. [Also warrantize; < ME. warrantisen; < warrantise, n.] 1. To save; defend.

> "Ye," quod Orfeus, "but yet I may have batilly cher his body, he shall be so defouled that ther ne shall nothinge in the worlde hym warrantise."
> Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 269.

2. To warrant; pledge; guarantee.

> You will undertake to warrantize and make good unto vs those penalties and forfaitures which shal unto vs appertaine. Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 111.

warrant-officer (wor'ant-of'i-sėr), n. An officer who acts under a warrant from a department of the government, and not from the sovereign or head of the state as in the case of commissioned officers. Gunners, boatswains, sailmakers, and carpenters in the navy, and master armorers and quartermaster sergeants in the army, are examples of warrant-officers.

warrantor (wor'an-tor), n. [< OF. warantor*, warentor, also garantor*, garator, garantour, etc. (cf. guarantor), < warrantir, warrant: see warrant, v.] One who warrants: correlative of warrantee: a form chiefly used in legal phraseology.

warranty (wor'an-ti), n.; pl. warranties (-tiz). [Formerly also warrantie; < OF. warantie, later garantie (> E. guaranty, guarantee) (= Pr. garentia, guarentia, guerentia = Sp. garantia = Pg. garantia = It. guarentia, ML. reflex warantia), < warantir, warrant: see warrant. Cf. guaranty, guarantee.] 1. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept; warrant.

> From your love I have a warranty
> To unburden all my plots and purposes.
> Shak., M. of V., i. 1. 132.
>
> Nor farther notice, Arete, we crave
> Than thine approval's sovereign warranty.
> B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

There is no scientific warranty for saying that Matter is absolutely indestructible, and more than one consideration indicates that the structure of Matter may be such as to denote that in its present form it has had a beginning and may have an end
A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, Int., p. 7.

2†. Security; assurance; guaranty; warrant.

> The stamp was a warranty of the public. Locke.

3. In law, a statement, express or implied, of something which the party making it undertakes shall be part of the contract and in confirmation or assurance of a direct object of the contract, but which is not only collateral to that object. More specifically: (a) In the law of real property: (1) Formerly, a covenant in a grant of freehold, binding the grantor and his heirs to supply other lands of equal value, should the grantee be evicted from those granted by any paramount title. (2) In modern practice, an assurance in a deed that the premises are conveyed in fee simple absolute except as otherwise specified, the effect being that, if the title fail, the grantee is exonerated from paying any purchase money remaining unpaid, or may recover damages, the grantor's heirs and devisees being liable to the extent only that they may have received assets from the grantor. (b) In the law of insurance, a statement on the part of the insured or the applicant for insurance, forming a part of the contract, and on the actual truth of which, irrespective of its materiality, the validity of the policy depends. (c) In the law of sales, an assurance or engagement by the seller, express or implied, that he will be answerable for the truth of some supposed quality of the thing sold, as its soundness, or its fitness for the buyer's purpose, or its title. — Collateral warranty, in old Eng. law, a warranty which did not come from the same ancestor from whom the land would have descended, but descended in a line collateral to that of the land: distinguished from lineal warranty, where the land and the warranty were descended from the same ancestor. — General warranty, a warranty against the acts and claims of all persons whomsoever, as distinguished from a warranty against claims of specified persons, called special warranty. — Implied warranty, a warranty not expressed in the contract, but resulting by operation of law from the making of the contract: as, where one sells a thing in his possession, there is an implied warranty on his part that he has ownership. Lineal warranty. See collateral warranty. — To vouch to warranty. See vouch.

warranty (wor'an-ti), v. t.; pret. and pp. warrantied, ppr. warrantying. [< warranty, n.] To warrant; guarantee.

warrayt (wor'a), v. t. [Early mod. E. also warrey; < ME. werreen, werreyen, < OF. werreer*, guerreier, F. guerroyer = Pr. guerreiar = Sp. guerrear = It. guerreggiare, make war, < werre, guerre, war: see *war*1. Hence ult. warrior.] To wage war upon; invade in arms; ravage or harry, as a country or district.

> At Sarray, in the londe of Tartarye,
> Ther dweite a king, that werreyed Russye.
> Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 2.
>
> Six years were run since first in martial guise
> The Christian lords warray'd the Eastern lands.
> Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, i. 6.

warret. An obsolete spelling of *war*1, *war*2.

warree1, n. [Native name.] The tagnicati, or white-lipped peccary, Dicotyles labiatus.

warree2, n. The common millet. Panicum miliaceum: same as kuli-kane.

warren (wor'en), n. [< ME. warrayne, warene (= D. warande, a park), < OF. warenne, varenne, garenne (ML. warenna), a warren or preserve for rabbits, hares, fish, etc., < warir, keep, defend: see *war*1, warrant.] 1. A piece of ground appropriated to the breeding and preservation of rabbits or other game; a place where rabbits abound.

> A town gentleman has lamed a rabbit in my warren.
> Landor, Imag. Conv., Southey and Landor, ii.

2. In Eng. law, a franchise or place privileged by prescription or grant from the crown, for keeping beasts and fowls of warren, which are hares, rabbits, partridges, and pheasants, though some add quails, woodcocks, and waterfowl. The warren is the next franchise in degree to the park; and a forest, which is the highest in dignity, comprehends a chase, a park, and a free warren.

> Vncoupled thei wenden
> Bi-twen a wareine and in waste where hem leue lyketh.
> Piers Plowman (B), Prol., l. 183.

3. A preserve for fish in a river.

warrener (wor'en-ėr), n. [Formerly also warriner; < ME. wareiner*, warener*, warnere; < warren + *-er*1. Hence the surnames Warner, Warrener, and Warrender.] The keeper of a warren.

> He hath fought with a warrener.
> Shak., M. W. of W., i. 4. 22.

warrenite (wor'en-it), n. [Named after R. B. Warren, of Crested Butte, Colorado.] A sulphid of antimony and lead, occurring in wool-like aggregates of grayish-black acicular crystals. It is found at the Domingo mine, Gunnison county, Colorado.

warrer (wär'ėr), n. [< *war*1 + *-er*1.] One who wars or makes war.

> Female warrers against modesty.
> E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, II. 168.

warriangle (wor'i-ang'gl), n. [Also wariangle; < ME. waryangle, weryangle (Sc. wairingle, wearangle), < AS. wearging-el* (Stratmann) = MLG. warging-el = OHG. warchengil (G. würgengel), the butcher-bird, shrike; < AS. wearg, weark, accursed, as a noun, a man accursed, an outlaw, wretch (see warry), + -incel, a dim. suffix, confused in MLG. and G. with engel, angel, so that G. würgengel, a butcher-bird, is identical in form with würgengel, a destroying angel (würgen, destroy, = E. worry: cf. warry and worry). Cf. MLG. worgel, a butcher-bird, from the same source.] A shrike or butcher-bird. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

> This somonour that was as ful of jangles
> As ful of venym been this waryanndes [var. weryangles].
> Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 110.

Warrianoles be a kind of birdes, full of noyse and very ravenous, preying upon others, which, when they have taken, they use to hang upon a thorne or pricke, and teare them in peces and devoure them. And the common opinion is, that the thorn whereupon they thus fasten them and rate them is afterward poysonsome.
Speght, note under aruncl in Cotgrave (ed. 1598).

warrick (wor'ik), v. t. [ME.; cf. warrok.] 1†. To fasten with a girth; gird.

> Sette my sadel vppon Sorre til I-seo my-tyme,
> And loke thou warroke him wel with swithe feole gurthes.
> Piers Plowman (A), iv. 19.

2. To twitch (a cord) tight by crossing it with another. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

warrigal, n. Same as narragal.

warrin (wor'in), n. The blue-bellied brush-tongued parrot, Trichoglossus multicolor, a lory or lorikeet of Australia, of notably varied and brilliant colors.

warring (war'ing), a. Adverse; conflicting; contradictory; antagonistic; hostile: as, warring opinions.

warrior (wor'i-ėr or wär'yėr), n. [Early mod. E. also warriour; < ME. werriour, werryour, werreyour, werreiour, werreour, warreur, < OF. werreor*, guerreeor, guerroyeur, guerrieur, guerreor, etc., a warrior, one who wars, < werreer*, guerreer, make war: see warray.] 1. A soldier; a man engaged in warfare; specifically, one devoted to a military life; in an especially honorable sense, a brave or veteran soldier.

> This like senatour
> Was a ful worthi gentil werreyour.
> Chaucer, Good Women, l. 597.
>
> Kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu!
> Shak., Hen. V., iv. 3. 16.
>
> And the stern joy which warriors feel
> In foemen worthy of their steel.
> Scott, L. of the L., v. 10.

2. A humming-bird of the genus Oxypogon. Also called helmet-crest.

warrior-ant (wor'i-ėr-ant), n. An ant, Formica sanguinea, of Europe and North America; one of the slave-making ants which keep workers of other species in their nest. See soldier, 6.

warrioress (wor'i-ėr-es or wär'yėr-es), n. [Early mod. E. warriouresse; < warrior + -ess.] A female warrior. Spenser, F. Q., V. vii. 27. [Rare.]

warriourt, n. An old spelling of warrior.

warrish (wär'ish), a. [< *war*1 + *-ish*1.] Militant; warlike. [Rare.]

> I know the rascals have a sin in petto,
> To rob the holy lady of Loretto;
> Attack her temple with their guns so warrish.
> Wolcot (Peter Pindar), Epistle to the Pope.

warri-warri (wor'i-wor'i), n. [A native name in Guiana.] A kind of fan made by the natives of Guiana from the leaves of the acuyuru-palm, Astrocaryum aculeatum.

warrokt, n. [ME.; origin obscure.] A saddle-girth; a surcingle.

warrokt, v. t. [ME. warroken; < warrok, n.] Same as warrick, 1.

warry, v. t. [< ME. warien, werien, werȝen, werȝien, werȝen, curse, execrate, revile, < AS. wergian, werȝan, wyrȝan, curse, revile, execrate (= OHG. far-gerȝen = Goth. gawargjan, condemn), < wearg, weark, accursed, as a noun, an accursed person, an outlaw, felon, wretch. = AS. wearg = OHG. warg, a felon, = Icel. vargr, an outlaw, felon, an ill-tempered person, = Goth. wargs,* an evil-doer, in comp. launawargs, ungrateful; in AS. and Icel. applied also to a wolf. Hence also (from AS. wearg) E. scurrilous, and worry, a parallel form to warry.] To curse; execrate; abuse; speak evil of.

> Answerde of this ech werse of hem than other,
> And Poliphete they gonnen thus to waryen.
> Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1619.

> Thurgh the craft of that cursed, knighthede may shame
> And wary all oure workes to the worldes end.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12212.

war-saddle (wâr'sad'l), n. See saddle.

warsaw (wâr'sâ), n. [A corruption of guasa.] A serranoid fish, Promicrops guasa or P. itaira. See cut under jewfish.

warsch†, v. Same as warish.

warscot (wâr'skot), n. [< AS. (cited in a Latin text) werscot, prop. werwot,* burden of war, contribution toward war; as war[1] + scot[2].] A payment made by the retainer to his lord, usually as a kind of commutation of military services.

war-scythe (wâr'sīTH), n. A weapon consisting of a blade set on a long handle or staff, and having the edge on the concave side of the blade, which is curved like that of a scythe, differing in that respect from the halberd, partizan, fauchard, guisarm, etc.

warse (wârs), a. An obsolete or dialectal form of worse.

warsen (wâr'sn), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of worsen.

war-ship (wâr'ship), n. A ship built or armed for use in war; a vessel for war.

war-song (wâr'sông), n. 1. A song or chant raised by warriors about to engage in warfare, or at a dance or ceremony which represents actual warfare, especially among savage tribes. —2. A song in which military deeds are narrated or praised.

warst (wârst), a. and adv. A dialectal (Scotch) form of worst.

warstle (wär'sl), v. and n. A dialectal form of wrastle for wrestle.

wart[1] (wârt), n. [Also dial. wrat, wrot; < ME. wert, werte, sometimes wrete, < AS. wearte (pl. weartan) = MD. warte, wratte, D. wrat = OHG. warza, MHG. G. warze = Icel. varta = Dan. vorte = Sw. vårta, a wart, excrescence on the skin; cf. OBulg. vrědŭ, eruption; perhaps connected with AS. wearre (and L. verruca), a wart.] 1. A small circumscribed elevation on the skin, usually with an uneven papillary surface and a broad base, caused by a localized overgrowth of the papillæ and epidermis; verruca; hence, a similar natural excrescence of the skin. Any part of the skin of mammals, parts about the head and beak of birds, the skins of various reptiles, batrachians, fishes, and numberless invertebrates, may be studded with such formations, to which the name wart commonly and not improperly applies. The toad is a good example.

> Upon the cop right of his nose he hade
> A werte, and theron stood a tuft of heres.
> Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 555.

> We Mountains to the land like warts or wens be,
> By which fair'st living things disfigur'd oft they see.
> Drayton, Polyolbion, vii. 78.

2. In farriery, a spongy excrescence on the pastern of the horse.—3. In bot., a firm glandular or gland-like excrescence on the surface of a plant.—4. In entom., a small obtuse, rounded, or flattened elevation of a surface, often of a distinct color from the rest of the part: used principally in describing larvæ.—Fig-wart. Same as ficus, 3.—Peruvian warts. Same as verrugas.—Venereal warts. See venereal.—Vitreous warts of Descemet's membrane. See vitreous.—Wart-like cancer, papillary epithelioma.

war-tax (wâr'taks), n. A tax imposed for the purpose of providing funds for the prosecution of a war.

wart-cress (wârt'kres), n. See Senebiera.

warte†. An old form of ware[4], preterit of wear[1].

warted (wâr'ted), a. [< wart[1] + -ed[2].] 1. In bot., having little knobs on the surface; verrucose: as a warted capsule.—2. In zool., verrucose; warty; having a wart or warts; studded with warts.—Warted gourds, varieties of winter squash with a warted rind.—Warted goose, an Australian goose, Chloëphaga rubidiceps, with other species of its genus useful for grazing.

wart-grass (wârt'gras), n. The sun-spurge, Euphorbia Helioscopia, and sometimes E. Peplus. Also wartweed and wartwort: so named from the popular notion that its juice removes warts. [Prov. Eng.]

warth (wärth), n. [< ME. warth, waruth, < AS. wearth, wearoth (= OHG. warid), shore; prob. from the root of werian, protect, defend: see wear[2], ward[1], ward[2], etc.] A ford. [Prov. Eng.]

> At vche warthe other water ther the wyȝe passed,
> He fonde a foo hym byfore, bot ferly hit were,
> & that so foule & so felle, that feȝt hym by-hodo.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 715.

wart-herb (wârt'ėrb), n. See Rhynchosia.

wart-hog (wârt'hog), n. A swine of the genus Phacochœrus, of which there are several species, the best-known being the halluf of North Africa, P. æliani, and the vlack-vark of South Africa, P. æthiopicus. The wart-hogs are so named from the warty excrescences of the face. They are without exception the ugliest of mammals. The canine teeth project outward from both jaws, the head is large and unshapely, and the whole form ungainly. See cut under Phacochœrus.

war-thought (wâr'thât), n. A thought of war; martial reflection, consideration, or deliberation. [Rare.]

> Now . . . that war-thoughts
> Have left their places vacant.
> Shak., Much Ado, i. 1. 303.

wartless (wârt'les), a. [< wart[1] + -less.] Having no warts; not warted or warty.

wartlet (wârt'let), n. [< wart + -let.] 1. In bot., a little wart.—2. One of several different sea-anemones, as the warty sea-rose. Gosse, Actinologia Britannica, p. 206.

wart-pock (wârt'pok), n. The eruption of varicella or chicken-pox, when it occurs in the form of acuminate vesicles containing a clear fluid.

wart-shaped (wârt'shāpt), a. In bot., of the form of a wart; verruciform.

wart-snake (wârt'snāk), n. A harmless colubriform viviparous serpent, of the family Acrochordidæ, having the scales warty or verrucose.

Wart-snake (Acrochordus javanicus).

The leading species is Acrochordus javanicus. Another, Chersydrus granulatus, is aquatic. These snakes belong to the Oriental or Indian region; they were formerly grouped with the Hydrophidæ, and erroneously supposed to be venomous.

wart-spurge (wârt'spėrj), n. The sun-spurge, Euphorbia Helioscopia. See wartweed.

wartweed (wârt'wēd), n. The sun-spurge, Euphorbia Helioscopa, the acrid milky juice of which is used to cure warts. Also cat's-milk, wart-grass, and wartwort. The name is given rarely to E. Peplus, and to the celandine, Chelidonium majus. [Prov. Eng.]

wartwort (wârt'wėrt), n. 1. A common name for certain verrucariaceous lichens, so called from the warty appearance of the thallus.—2. Same as wartweed. The name is occasionally applied also to the wart-cress or swine-cress, Senebiera Coronopus, and the cudweed, Gnaphalium uliginosum. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

warty (wâr'ti), a. [< wart[1] + -y[1].] Resembling a wart; of or relating to a wart or warts; covered with warts or wart-like excrescences; verrucous.—Warty cicatricial tumor, a new growth, appearing in the form of nearly parallel rows of wart-like tumors, coming on occasionally in old scars. It usually ulcerates, forming the warty ulcer.—Warty sea-rose, the sea-anemone Urticina nodosa.—Warty ulcer, Marjolin's ulcer; an ulcer resulting from the breaking down of a warty cicatricial tumor.—Warty venus. See Venus.

warty-faced (wâr'ti-fāst), a. Noting a certain honey-eater, the wattle-bird, of the family Melithagidæ. See wattle-bird.

war-wasted (wâr-wās'ted), a. Wasted or devastated by war. Coleridge.

war-wearied (wâr'wēr'id), a. Wearied by war; fatigued by fighting.

> The honourable captain there
> Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 4. 32.

war-whip (wâr'hwip), n. Same as scorpion, 3.

war-whoop (wâr'hūp), n. A whoop or yell of a particular intonation, raised as a signal for attack, and to strike terror into the enemy; used generally with reference to the American Indians.

> Well-known and terrific war-whoops.
> J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxx.

> They never raise the war-whoop here,
> And never twang the bow.
> Bryant, White-Footed Deer.

warwickite (wâr'wik-īt), n. [< Warwick (see def.) + -ite[2].] A borotitanate of magnesium and iron, occurring in dark-brown to black acicular crystals embedded in granular limestone. Named from the locality of its occurrence, near Warwick, New York.

warwolf[1]†, n. Same as werwolf.

warwolf[2] (wâr'wůlf), n. [< war[1] + wolf, or perhaps a particular use of warwolf[1], werwolf.] A military engine used in the early middle ages in the defense of fortresses.

> He [Edward I.] with another engine named the warwolf, pierced with one stone, and cut as even as a thread, two vaunt-mures. Camden, Remains, Artillery, p. 206.

> The war-wolfs there > Hurl'd their huge stones.
> Southey, Joan of Arc, viii.

war-worn (wâr'wôrn), a. Worn with military service; especially applied to a veteran soldier, or one grown old in arms.

> The stout old general whose battles and campaigns are over, who has come home to rest his war-worn limbs, . . . what must be his feelings? Thackeray, Philip, xvi.

wary[1] (wā'ri), a. [An extended form of ware[1] (< ware[1] + -y[1]), perhaps orig. due to misreading the adv. warely as a trisyllable.] 1. Cautious of danger; carefully watching and guarding against deception, artifices, and dangers; watchful; on the alert against surprise or danger; ever on one's guard.

> Be wary then; best safety lies in fear.
> Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 65.

> Are there none here?
> Let me look round; we cannot be too wary.
> Fletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 5.

> All things work for good, and tend to make you more wary. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

2. Guarded; careful as to doing or not doing something; chary.

> Yet this I can say, I was very wary of giving them occasion, by any unseemly action, to make them averse to going on pilgrimage. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

3. Characterized by caution; guarded.

> And in > Wary hypocrisy lets slip her hand
> Much farther than she seemed to understand.
> J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 136.

> It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;
> And that craves wary walking. Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 15.

4. Prudent; circumspect; wise.

> Neither is it safe, or warie, or indeed Christianly, that the French King, of a different Faith, should afford our nearest Allyes as good protection as we. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

—Syn. Careful, circumspect, etc. See list under cautious.

wary[2]†, v. t. Same as warry.

waryonet, n. Same as warison.

was (woz), v. [< ME. 1 was, wes, wæs, 2 were, 3 was, wes, wæs, pl. 1, 2, 3 were, ware, wore, weren, waren, woren, weoren, < AS. 1 wæs, 2 wǣre, wǣre, 3 wæs, pl. wǣron, wēron = OS. was = OFries. was, wes = D. was = OHG. MHG. G. war = Icel. Dan. Sw. var = Goth. was, pl. wēsum (subj. AS. wǣre, wǣren = D. waar, etc., = Goth. weraju); pret. of a verb otherwise used in AS. only in the present imperative wes, and the inf. wesan (pp. gewesen), = OFries. wesa = D. weezen = MLG. LG. wesen = OHG. wesan, MHG. wesen (G. wesen, n.) = Icel. vesa, vera = Sw. vara = Dan. være, be, = Goth. wisan, dwell, remain, be; = L. √ ves (in vernа for vesna,* one dwelling in the house, a home-born slave; see vernacular) = Gr. √ feσ (in ἄστυ, city, orig. dwelling-place) = Skt. √ vas, dwell. The impv. of the verb of which was is pret. is contained, unrecognized, in the wassail. The verb has no connection with which is a form of the verb represented by theme am, nor with be; but it has come to be used to supply the preterit of the verb be. See *be*1.] A verb-form used to supply the past tense of the verb be: as, I was, thou wast or wort, he was; we, you, or they were. In the subjunctive, I were, thou wert, he were; we, you, they were, etc.

In war was never lion raged more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 1. 173.

A scene which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 55 (song).

Nay, nay, God wot, so thou wert nobly born Thou hast a pleasant presence.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

The forms wast and wert in the second person singular of the indicative (cf. feel, felt, and wert in the second person singular of the subjunctive, are modern, being conformed to the model of art. The older form of the second person singular in both moods is were. The ungrammatical combination you was became common in the eighteenth century, but is now condemned.

I was sorry you was disappointed of going to Vauxhall to-night. H. Walpole, To the Misses Berry, Sept. 25th, 1791.

As I told you when you was here.
Cowper, To Rev. W. Unwin, June 8, 1780.

wase1 (wāz), n. [< ME. wase, < MD. wase = MLG. wase, a bundle, torch, = Icel. vasi = Sw. Dan. vase, a bundle, sheaf.] 1. A wisp; a bundle of hay, straw, etc. Also waese, weese. Jamieson. [Scotch.]—2. A cushion or pad of straw, etc., worn on the head in order to soften the pressure of a load. Wilhals. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]—3†. A torch.

wase2†, n. An obsolete form of wooze.

waselt, v. i. [ME., < *wase*2, later wooze.] To bemire one's self; sink in the mire.

This whit waselde in the [fen] almost to the nacle.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 439.

wash (wosh), v. [< ME. washen, waschen, wreschen, wasshen, waseen, wassen, wesse (pret. wesh, wosch, wossch, wessh, wosh, pl. weshen, wesshen, wessen, woschen, pp. waschen, iwaschen, iwasche), < AS. wascan, also warcan (pret. wose* or wox, pp. wascen, wæscen) = D. wasschen = OHG. wascan, MHG. waschen, wischen, G. waschen = Icel. Sw. vaska = Dan. vaske (cf. OF. gascher, F. gacher = It. guazzare, steep in water, < Teut.); Teut. waskan* or watskan*, wash (cf. Skt. √ uksh, sprinkle, wet), perhaps with formative -s from the √ wak, wag, moisten, or with formative -sk, < √ wat, water, wet (see water, *wet*1). Cf. Olr. usce, Ir. uisce, water (see *whisky*1).] I. trans. 1. To apply a liquid, especially water, to for the purpose of cleansing; scrub, scour, or cleanse in or with water or other liquid; free from impurities by ablution: as, to wash the hands and face; to wash linen; to wash the floor; to wash dishes.

They washen hym and wyped hym in cloth. Piers Plowman (B), ii. 220.

Hir forehoed shoon as bright as any day,
So was it washen whan she leet hir werk.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 125.

The maiden her silf wosh his visage and his nekke, and dried it full softely with a towaille and than after to the tother twey kynges. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 225.

He took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person. Mat. xxvii. 24.

2. Hence, to free from ceremonial defilement, or from the stains of guilt, sin, or corruption; purify.

And thei suffre not the Latynes to synge at here Awteres: And zif thei done, be ony Aventure, anon thei wasschen the Awteer with holy Watre. Mandeville, Travels, p. 19.

Wash me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. Ps. li. 2.

3. To wet copiously, as with water or other liquid; moisten; cover with moisture.

The pride of Italy, that did bestow
On Earth a beauty, washt by silver Po.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 2.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly washed with dew.
Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 174.

4. To lap; lave, as by surrounding water; surround; overflow or dash over or against; sweep, as with flowing water.

Galatia . . . on the North is washed with the Euxine Sea the space of two hundred and fifty miles.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 871.

5. To remove by ablution or by the cleansing action of water; dispel by or as by washing: either literally or figuratively: used with away, off, out, etc.

Go get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2. 47.

Be baptized and wash away thy sins. Acts xxii. 16.

Wash the black from the Ethiop's face,
Wash the mist out of man or river!
Lowell, Villa Franca.

6. To overwhelm and carry along (in some specified direction) by or as by a rush of water: as, a man washed overboard; debris washed up by the storm; roast beef washed down with ale.

These dainties must be washed downe well with wine,
With sacke & sugar, egges & muskadine.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 87.

I don't want my wreck to be washed up on one of the beaches in company with devil's aprons, bladder weeds, dead horse shoes, &c. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, vii.

7. To cover with a watery or thin coat of color; tint lightly, thinly, or evenly, in water-color, with a pigment so mixed as to be very fluid and rapidly and smoothly applied.—8. To overlay with a thin coat or deposit of metal; as, to wash copper or brass with gold.

Those who were coming in "the Art of making Black Dogs, which are Shillings, or other pieces of Money made only of Pewter, double Wash'd."
J. Ashton, Social Life in the Reign of Queen Anne, II. 225.

9. In mining, metal., etc., to separate from the earthy and lighter matters by the action of water: as, to wash gold; to wash ores. Washing is a common expression used in the most general way, as nearly an equivalent for ore-dressing, or the separation of ore from the gangue with which it is generally mixed. The term washing is, however, more especially used to designate the separation of gold from the detrital formation in which it so frequently occurs. The same term is also commonly employed to designate the process of separating coal from various impurities which frequently occur intermingled with it, such as shale, pyrites, argillaceous iron ore, gypsum, etc. The machines by which this is done are called coal-washers, as machines for washing gold are called gold-washers. Washing is also the term in general use for designating the operation of cleansing the ore when, as is frequently the case, it comes from the mine mixed with clay or dirt (material which cannot properly be called gangue). This is a coarse operation, which is sometimes a necessary preliminary to the operations of sizing and dressing, or concentrating, as sometimes called. To wash one's hands of. See hand.

II. intrans. 1. To perform the act of ablution on one's own person.

I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush or no. Shak., Cor., i. 9. (2)

2. To cleanse clothes in or with water.

I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 4. 101.

3. To stand the operation of washing without being destroyed, spoiled, or injured: said both of fabrics and of dyes: as, a dress that will not wash; colors that do not wash well.

I had no idea your mousseline delaine would have washed so well. Why, it looks just out of the shop.
C. Reade, Love me Little, x.

4. Hence, to stand being put to the proof; stand the test; prove genuine, reliable, trustworthy, capable, or fit, when submitted to trial. [Colloq.]

He's got pluck somewhere in him. That's the only thing after all that'll wash, ain't it?
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 2.

5. To be eroded, as by a stream, by rainfall, etc.

What kind of grass is best on a hill that washes?
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVII. 203.

6. To use washes or cosmetics.

Young Ladies who notoriously Wash and Paint, though they have naturally good Complexions.
Etherege, Man of Mode, ii. 1.

7. To make a swish, swash, or swirl of the water: as, the shad are washing. See shad-wash.

wash (wosh), n. [< wash, v.] 1. The act or operation of cleansing by the application of water; a cleansing with water or other liquid: as, to give one's face a wash.

Though she may have done a hard day's wash, there's not a child ill within the street but Alice goes to offer to sit up. Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, i.

A tub and a clothes-horse at the other end of the kitchen indicated an intermittent wash of small things also going on. George Eliot, Middlemarch, iii. 24.

2. Articles in the course of being cleansed by washing, or the quantity of clothes or other articles washed on one occasion.

Military washes flapped and fluttered on the fences.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, etc., p. 23.

3. The flow or sweep of a body of water; the onward rush of water as its billows break upon the shore; the dash or break of waves upon a shore.

Katie walks
By the long wash of Australasian seas.
Tennyson, The Brook.

4. The rough or broken water left behind by a vessel as it moves along: as, the wash of the steamer nearly filled the boat.—5. The splash or lapping noise made by rippling water as it comes in contact with a boat, a pier, the strand, or the like; the swish-swash of water disturbed as by wind or by ebb or flow.

The water ebbs away with a sulky wash in the hollow places. R. D. Blackmore, Maid of Sker, iii.

6. A piece of ground washed by the action of the sea or river, or sometimes overflowed and sometimes left dry; a shallow part of a river or arm of the sea; also, a morass or marsh; a bog; a fen; a quagmire.

Half my power this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln Washes have devoured them.
Shak., K. John, v. 6. 42.

7. Substances collected and deposited by the action of water, such as alluvium.

The wash of pastures, fields, commons, and roads, where rain-water hath a long time settled, is of great advantage to all land. Mortimer, Husbandry.

The debris-piles which stretch along the lower slopes of the ranges in the Cordilleran Region are locally known as washes. J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 138.

8. Waste liquor containing the refuse of food, collected from the cleansed dishes, etc., of a kitchen, such as is often given to pigs; swill or swillings.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar . . .
Swills your warm blood like wash.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 2. 9.

Wrinkles like troughs, where swine-deformity swills
The tears of perjury, that lie there like wash
Fallen from the slimy and dishonest eye.
Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, ii. 1.

9. In distilling: (a) The fermented wort, from which the spirit is extracted. The grain ground and infused is called the mash, the decanted liquor is called the wort, and the wort when fermented becomes the wash. (b) A mixture of dunder, molasses, scummings, and water, used in the West Indies for distillation. Bryan Edwards.—10. A liquid used for application to a surface or a body to cleanse it, color it, or the like—especially a thin and watery liquid, as distinguished from one that is glutinous or oily. Specifically—(a) A liquid used for toilet purposes, such as a cosmetic, a liquid dentifrice, or a hair-wash.

My eyes are none of the best since I have used the last new wash of mercury-water.
Wycherley, Love in a Wood, iv. 2.

It [modesty] renders the face delightfully handsome; is not subject to be rubbed off, and cannot be paralleled by either wash, powder, cosmetic, etc.
Addison, Spectator, No. 347.

(b) In med., a lotion. (c) A thin even coating of color spread over a surface, as of a painting. See def. 11.

There is no handsomeness
But has a wash of pride and luxury.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iii. 3.

By this [a seene who lives by faith and certain knowledge, and who by credulity and the prevailing opinion of the age; whose virtue is an unchangeable grains, and whose of a slight wash. Milton, Church-Government, i. 7.

(d) In zool., a light or slight surface coloration, as if laid over a ground-color; a superficial tone or tinge: as, a frosty wash over black. (e) A thin coat of metal applied to anything for beauty or preservation.

11. In water-color painting, the application of a pigment so mixed as to be in a very fluid condition, or a coat so applied. It is usually a very thin and transparent coat, applied quickly with a large brush, flat and often gradated so as to be darker at one edge than at the opposite edge, or to shade off without mark of separation from one tint into another.

12. The blade of an oar.—13. A measure of shell-fish; a stamped measure capable of holding 21 quarts and a pint of water.

"I buy my winks," said one, "at Billingsgate, at 3*s.* and 4*s.* the wash." A wash is about a bushel.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 73.

Each smack takes about 40 wash of whelks with her for the voyage. Encyc. Brit., IX. 264.

14. A fictitious kind of sale, disallowed on the stock and other exchanges, in which a broker who has received orders from one person to buy and from another person to sell a particular amount or quantity of some particular stock or commodity simply transfers the stock or commodity from one principal to the other and pockets the difference, instead of executing both orders separately to the best advantage in each case, as is required by the rules of the different exchanges. [Stock-exchange slang.]—Black wash. See black-wash.—Eye-wash, collyrium.—Rain-wash. (a) A washing along or away by the force of rain; displacement effected by rainfall.

He was sceptical as to the lacustrine origin of these breccias. Why not subaerial, like those in the interior of Asia? - subangular masses, transported by rainwash to a distance of 10 or 12 miles.
W. L. Blanford, Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLVI. 54.

…is moved by the force of rain; subject to wash.

Position of the drift with the overlying bed or rock-wash. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLIV. 110.

Red wash, (a) A lotion composed of corrosive sublimate, red sulphid of mercury, and creosote, in water. (b) Eaton's camphorated water, made by adding copper sulphate, Armenian bole, and camphor to boiling water, and then straining.—Tooth-wash, a liquid dentifrice.—White wash, Goulard's lotion; lead-water.—Yellow wash, a lotion prepared by dissolving 30 grains of corrosive sublimate in one pint of lime-water.

wash† (wosh), a. [< wash, v. (cf. washy); perhaps < wærsk* for wearish.] Washy; weak; easily losing its qualities.

Faith, 'tis but a wash scent.
Marston, What you Will, i. 1.

Their bodies of so weak and wash a temper.
Fletcher, Bonduca, iv. 1.

'Tis a wash knave; he will not keep his flesh well.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

washable (wosh'a-bl), a. [< wash + -able.] Resisting or enduring washing: noting the fabric, and also the color.

Like washable beaver hats that improve with rain, his nerves were rendered stouter and more vigorous by showers of tears. Dickens, Oliver Twist, xxxvii.

wash-back (wosh'bak), n. In distilling, a cistern or vat in which the wort is fermented to form the wash. E. H. Knight.

wash-ball (wosh'bâl), n. A ball of soap sometimes combined with cosmetics.

We furnish'd ourselves with wash-balls, the best being made here, and being a considerable commodity.
Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

wash-basin (wosh'bā'sn), n. A large basin or bowl in which to wash the hands and face.

wash-basket (wosh'bas'ket), n. A circular shallow basket holding about a peck, with a half handle, used in oystering. [Rhode Island.]

wash-bear (wosh'bâr), n. [= G. waschbar.] The raccoon or washing-bear. See cut under raccoon.

wash-beetle (wosh'bē'tl), n. A pounder used to beat or pound clothes in the process of washing. E. H. Knight.

wash-board (wosh'bôrd), n. 1. A board or wooden frame having a ribbed or corrugated surface of sheet-metal, vulcanite, earthenware, or wood, used as a scrubber in washing clothing by hand.—2. Naut., a broad thin plank sometimes fixed on the top of the gunwale of a boat or other small vessel's side, to prevent the sea from breaking over; also, a piece of plank on the sill of a lower deck port, for the same purpose. Also called waste-board.—3. A board carried around the walls of a room at the bottom. Also called mopboard, skirting-board.

To stand looking out of the study-window at the rain, and kicking his foot against the wash-board in solitude.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ii. 3.

wash-boiler (wosh'boi'lėr), n. A vessel of sheet-metal in which clothes to be washed are boiled.

wash-bottle (wosh'bot'l), n. 1. In chem., a flask provided with a stopper and tubes so arranged that by blowing with the mouth the water or other liquid in the flask may be forced out in a small stream for washing chemical preparations and utensils.—2. A bottle partly filled with water or other washing fluid through which gases are passed to purify them.

wash-bowl (wosh'bōl), n. 1. A large bowl or basin used for washing the hands, face, etc.

Emerson alone took no part in this "storm in a wash-bowl." Quarterly Rev., CXLV. 132.

2†. A wash-tub.

Education is not form'd upon Sounds and Syllables, but upon Circumstances and Quality. So that, if he was resolv'd to have shown her thus unpolish'd, he should have made her keep Sheep, or brought her up at the Wash-Bowl. Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 222.

wash-brew (wosh'brō), n. The dish usually known as flummery or (as in Scotland) sowens. [Prov. Eng.]

wash-cloth (wosh'klôth), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing, as in washing dishes or the person.

wash-day (wosh'dā), n. The day set apart in a household for clothes-washing.

wash-dirt (wosh'dėrt), n. In placer and hydraulic mining, sand or gravel containing, or supposed to contain, gold enough to pay for washing. Also wash-stuff, wash-gravel.

washdish (wosh'dish), n. The dish-washer or wagtail. Also molly or polly washdish. See cut under wagtail. [Local, Eng.]

wash-drawing (wosh'drâ'ing), n. See drawing.

washed (wosht), a. 1. That has been subjected to washing, in any sense.—2. Of the nature of a "wash": applied on the exchanges to a mere transfer by a broker of the stock of commodity which one principal had instructed him to sell to another customer who had given instructions to purchase a similar quantity of the same stock or commodity. [Stock-exchange slang.]

Washed or fictitious sales are positively forbidden, and will render the parties concerned liable to suspension or expulsion from the Produce Exchange.
New York Produce Exchange Report, 1888–9, p. 265.

3. In zoöl., overlaid, as a surface or a ground-color, with a wash or light tint or color: as, a fox's black pelt washed with silver. See wash, n., 10 (d).—Washed brick. See brick.

washent. An obsolete past participle of wash. Chaucer.

washer (wosh'ėr), n. [< wash + *-er*1.] 1. One who or that which washes: as, a washer of clothes; a dish-washer; a wool-washer.—2. An annular piece of leather, rubber, metal, or other material placed at a joint in a water-pipe or faucet to make the joint tight and prevent leakage, or over a bolt, or a similar piece upon which a nut may be screwed. Washers serve as cushions or packing between many parts of machines, rails, vehicles, and iron structures. When used in buildings at the ends of tie-rods, they are often of large size and diverse shapes, and are called specifically wall-washers. Some forms are used as locks, to prevent a nut from shaking loose, as in a railroad fish-plate. Such washers are made in the shape of a spring, to allow a certain amount of vibration without disturbing the nut. See lock-nut, and cuts under bolt, packing, and plug-cock.

3. A similar article forming an ornament, as at the socket or pin that holds any adjustable utensil: as, the mother-of-pearl washers of a fan. Compare rosette.—4. In paper-manuf., a straining-and-washing machine used in the process of cleaning rags, to bring them to a pulpy condition; a beating-engine.—5. In plumbing, the outlet of a cistern. It includes the pipe, the joint or union, and the plug, as for a basin.—6. A washing-machine; as, a clothes-washer, window washer, gold-washer.—7. In coal-mining (short for coal-washer), any machine for washing coal. In the Pennsylvania anthracite region the coal is sometimes washed by jets of water, and separated from the slate, pyrites, and other refuse by jigging. The number of machines which have been invented in different countries for washing coal is very great, but most of them are based on some form or modification of the jig of the metal-miner.

8. The wagtail, a bird. Also dish-washer, jaggy dish-washer, moll-washer, molly or polly washdish, washtail, nanny washtail, etc. See cut under wagtail.—9. The wash-bear.—Beveled washer. See beveled.

washer (wosh'ėr), v. t. [< washer, n.] To fit with washers.

I had worked myself up, as I always do, in the manner of heavy men; growing hot like an ill washered wheel revolving, though I start with a cool axle.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxx.

He washered the knobs of the doors that had a rattling play whenever handled. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV. 199.

washer-cutter (wosh'ėr-kut'ėr), n. A rotating cutting-tool with two adjustable cutters, worked by a hand-brace or by a drill, and used for cutting out annular disks for washers. E. H. Knight.

washer-gage (wosh'ėr-gāj), n. A graduated tapering rule used for measuring the diameter of bolts, nuts, and washers, and of holes, etc., to receive them.

washer-hoop (wosh'ėr-hōp), n. In a water-wheel, a gasket placed between the flange and the curb. E. H. Knight.

washerman (wosh'ėr-man), n.; pl. washermen (-men). A man who washes clothes, etc.—Washermen's itch. Same as dhobies' itch (which see, under dhobie).

washerwoman (wosh'ėr-wum'an), n.; pl. washerwomen (-wim'en). 1. A woman who washes clothes for others or for hire.—2. The dish-washer or washdish, a wagtail. See cut under wagtail.—Washerwoman's itch or scall, a variety of psoriasis occurring on the hands of washerwomen.

wash-gilding (wosh'gil'ding), n. Gilding by means of an amalgam of gold from which the mercury is afterward driven off by heat. Also called mercurial gilding, and water-gilding, in allusion to the semi-liquid character of the amalgam.

wash-gravel (wosh'grav'el), n. Same as wash-dirt.

wash-hand basin (wosh'hand bā'sn), n. Same as wash-bowl.

wash-hand stand (wosh'hand stand), n. Same as wash-stand.

He . . . locked the door, piled a washhand stand, chest of drawers, and table against it.
Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvi.

wash-house (wosh'hous), n. [ME. wesshous, < AS. æt-wæs-hus, < wæscan, wash, + hūs, house; as wash + *house*1.] A house, generally fitted with boilers, tubs, etc., for washing clothes, etc.; a washing-house.

washiness (wosh'i-nes), n. The state of being washy, watery, or worthless; want of strength.

washing (wosh'ing), n. [< ME. washinge, waschynge, wessinge, wæschunge, < AS. wæscing, washing, verbal n. of wæscan, wash: see wash, v.] 1. The act of cleansing with water; ablution. Ceremonial washing has been practised in ancient and modern times and among various peoples. The principal ceremonial washings in the modern Christian church are two: washing of feet in commemoration of the washing of the feet of the disciples by Christ (see feet); and washing of the hands especially in connection with the celebration of the eucharist. In the Western Church, as well as in the Greek and other Oriental churches, the priest washes his hands before celebration. In the Western Church he also washes his fingers after the offertory and at the end of the eucharistic office. See ablution, lavabo, purification, and holy water (under water).

John wondered why the Messias, the Lamb of God, pure and without spot, who needed not the ablutions of repentance, or the washings of baptism, should demand it. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1836), I. 96.

2. Clothes washed, especially those washed at one time; a wash.—3. The result of washing; that which is washed from something else, as gold dust.—To give one's head for washing†, to submit to insult.

So am I, and forty more good fellows, that will not give their heads for the washing, I take it.
Beau. and Fl., Cupid's Revenge, iv. 2.

washing-bear (wosh'ing-bâr), n. The wash-bear or raccoon, Procyon lotor: so called from its habit of putting its food into water before eating it, as if to wash it. See lotor, and cut under raccoon.

washing-crystals (wosh'ing-kris'talz), n. pl. See sodium carbonate, under sodium.

washing-drum (wosh'ing drum), n. In mining, same as washing-trommel.

washing-engine (wosh'ing-en'jin), n. In paper-manuf., the first of the series of rag-cutting and -cleaning machines used to reduce rags to pulp. It cleans the rags and cuts them to the size known as half-stuff, which is passed on to the beating-engine. See rag-engine. E. H. Knight.

washing-gourd (wosh'ing-gord), n. Same as sponge-gourd.

washing-house (wosh'ing-hous), n. A wash-house.

washing-machine (wosh'ing-ma-shēn'), n. An apparatus, operated by hand or steam-power, for washing clothing, fabrics, wool, or other material; a clothes-washer. Washing machines for domestic and laundry use have been made in the form of churns, rubbing- or beating-machines, and tumbling-boxes. While a great variety of machines have been introduced, all depend essentially upon some mechanical device for stirring and beating the clothes in a vessel containing hot soapy water. Rubbing the clothes against a ribbed surface under water appears to be the most common method. For bleacheries and mills where large quantities of fabrics are to be washed, the material is made up into continuous bands, and is drawn through vats over rollers. In some machines beaters are used to assist in cleansing the fabrics. Such machines are of the nature of fucking-machines, kolts, wheeling machines, and dash-wheels. Washing-machines are designed to be used with wringers. One form for domestic use is practically a form of wringer, the clothes being cleaned by drawing them between rollers of corrugated rubber.

washing-powder (wosh'ing-pou'dėr), n. A powdered preparation (as of soda-ash and Scotch soda) used in washing clothes.

washing-rollers (wosh'ing-rō'lėrz), n. pl. Rollers for squeezing goods or yarn after scouring. They are of cast-iron, turned true and smooth. The requisite pressure is applied by means of compound levers or movable weights. E. H. Knight.

washing-shield (wosh'ing shēld), n. In weaving, a ridged or corrugated shield for the palm of the hand, or a shield at once to protect the person and supply a surface on which to rub the clothes. E. H. Knight.

Washington canvasback. Same as redhead, 2.

Washington cedar. 1. See cedar, 2, and cut under Sequoia. 2. Thuja gigantea. See Thuja.

Washingtonia (wosh-ing-tō'ni-ą), n. [NL. (Wendland, 1879), named after George Washington (1732–99), first President of the United States.] A genus of palms, of the tribe Corypheæ. It is characterized by bisexual flowers with slightly imbricated segments, and a three-lobed ovary with elongated filiform style. The albumen of the seed is uniform, like that of the related genera Corypha and Sabal, but the embryo, unlike the others, is sub-basilar. There is but one species clearly known, W. filifera, native of southern California and the adjacent border, called desert-palm, and locally fan palm and San Diego palm. It produces a tall robust cylindrical trunk, enlarged at the base, often 40, sometimes 75, feet high, crowned by a cluster of light green circular plicate leaves with from 40 to 60 folds about 4 feet across, cleft nearly to the base into indupliate segments fringed with fine white lous threads often a foot long. The stout leaf-stalk ends in a large appressed ligule, is about 8 feet long, and is set with strong, hooked spines on its edges. The mature tree bears in June three or four smooth elongated paniculate spadices with very many slender flexuous branchlets. The small dry flowers are white, sessile, and persistent without change, the corona salver-shaped with a fleshy tube and sharp lanceolate lobes, and the six projecting stamens have large filaments and anthers. A single spadix 8 feet long hangs pendent at ripening, in September or October, bearing about ten pounds of small black ellipsoidal one-celled fruits, each with a single shining brown bony seed surrounded by a thin sweetish pulpy pericarp. This is the only arborescent palm in the United States far from the sea; it occurs there chiefly in the desert in San Diego county, California; in Lower California it approaches the coast. It was discovered by Dr. C. C. Parry, 1849–50; it is now frequent in cultivation, especially along the Californian coast, often under the name of Pritchardia flamentosa or Brahea filifera, when very young, it is valued in America as a house-plant. Since 1875 it has been grown by thousands along the Mediterranean near Nice for outdoor decoration, where the characteristic appearance after twelve years' growth is that of a huge bulbous trunk, often 10 feet in girth and 10 feet high, bearing a crown of foliage 20 feet across, composed of from 50 to 80 white-fringed leaves. It varies greatly in habit with age. It has been known to blossom at twenty-two years; one fifty years old was 68 feet high and 11 feet in girth. At maturity, its older leaves turn down, and cover the trunk with a dry thatch, a protection from the desert heat and winds, but burning so readily that it forms a source of danger from fire. The W. robusta of cultivation, peculiar in its reddish petiole-bases, is now considered a variety of the foregoing. W. Sonoræ of Mexico, with deep crimson-brown petioles and stem, is said to be distinct.

Washingtonian (wosh-ing-to'ni-an), a. and n. [< Washington (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Pertaining or relating to George Washington (1732–1799), first President of the United States, or to Washington, the capital of the United States, or, to Washington, one of the United States, named after him.

II. n. An inhabitant of Washington, the capital of the United States, or of Washington, one of the United States.

washingtonite (wosh'ing-ton-īt), n. [< Washington (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A variety of ilmenite found near Washington in Litchfield county, Connecticut.

Washington lily, thorn. See lily, 1, and *thorn*1 (with cut).

washing-trommel (wosh'ing-trom'el), n. A trommel used for washing ores. A washing trommel consists usually of a cylinder of sheet-iron from 6 to 10 feet long, which turns on its axis, and through which a copious stream of water flows, the stuff as it passes out being caught on one or more perforated sheet-iron screens, by which the clayey particles are separated from the ore, and this latter sometimes roughly sorted. The form and arrangement of washing trommels vary considerably according to the character of the ore and of the impurities with which it is mixed. See trommel. Also washing drum.

washing-up (wosh'ing-up'), n. In mining, same as clean-up, 2. Also washing-off (Australia).

washing-vessel (wosh'ing-ves'el), n. [< ME. washynge vessel, < washing + vessel.] A vessel to wash in. Prompt. Parv., p. 517.

wash-leather (wosh'leтн'ėr), n. A fine white or light-yellow, very soft, and flexible leather, originally made from the skins of Rupicapra tragus, the Alpine chamois. Leather very closely resembling it in all its properties is now made from skins of sheep, goats, deer, calves, and from split hides, the coarser qualities being known as wash leather. The skins are limed to remove the hair, steeped in a weak solution of lactic or acetic acid to neutralize the lime, and then frizzed or rubbed with pumice stone or a blunt knife to remove the grain. Repeated fulling by pounding or rolling in oil, washing with weak alkaline solution to remove the oil, stretching, drying, and smoothing complete the process of manufacture.

The greengrocer put on a pair of wash leather gloves to hand the plates with. Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvii.

washman (wosh'man), n.; pl. washmen (-men). 1. A washerman.—2†. A beggarman covered with simulated sores. [Old cant.]

A Washman is called a Palliard, but not of the right making. He vseth to lye in the lye way with lame or sore legs or armes to beg. These men ye right Palliards will often times spoile, but they dare not complayn. They be bitten with Spickworts, and sometime with rats bane.

Fraternity of Vagabonds (1561), quoted in Rutton-[Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 64.

Washoe process. See *pan*1, 3.

wash-off (wosh'of), a. [< wash off: see under wash, v.] In calico-printing, fugitive; that will not stand washing: applied to certain colors or dyes. [Colloq.]

washout (wosh'out), n. [< wash out: see under wash, v.] The excavation, by erosive action of water, of a part of a road-bed, the bank of a stream, a hillside, or the like; also, the hole or break resulting from such excavation.

The rains and torrents cutting away the land into channels, which at last are called washouts, and at last grow into deep canyons. T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 153.

wash-pot (wosh'pot), n. 1. A vessel prepared for the washing of anything. Ps. lx. 8.—2. In tin plate manuf., a pot kept filled with clean bright melted tin, in which each sheet of iron, after it has left the tin-pot and had the superfluous metal removed from it with a hempen brush, receives its final coating of tin. From the wash-pot the sheet passes to the "patent-pot," and from this to the steel rollers by which the coating of tin is made smooth and uniform. This is the modern method of manufacture, now almost universally followed in Wales.

wash-rag (wosh'rag), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing the person.

She employed the interval while her guests were at their lunch on in plying the wash-rag and comb, to such good effect that Cinderella suffered no greater transformation at the hands of the fairy godmother.

E. L. Bynner, Begum's Daughter, iv.

wash-stand (wosh'stand), n. A piece of furniture like a table, with or without a lower shelf, drawers, and a back, arranged to hold a basin and ewer and other appurtenances for washing the person. Since the introduction of elaborate plumbing, the name is given also to the set or fixed wash-bowl, with a marble slab above, and wooden inclosure or support of the basin and pipes, with the faucets, and other conveniences.

I returned, sought the sponge on the washstand, the salts in my drawer, and once more retraced my steps.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx

wash-stuff (wosh'stuf), n. In gold-mining, same as wash-dirt.

washtail (wosh'tal), n. Same as washer, 8. [Local, Eng.]

wash-tub (wosh'tub), n. A tub for washing, especially one in which clothes are washed.

The vulgar words wash tub, shoe horn, brew-house, cook-stove, . . . which are merely slovenly and uncouth abbreviations of washing-tub, shoeing-horn, brewing-house, and cooking-stove. R. G. White, Words and their Uses, p. 232.

washy (wosh'i), a. [< wash + *-y*1.] 1. Watery; damp; moist; soft: as, "the washy ooze," Milton, P. L., vii. 303.—2. Too much diluted; weak; thin: as, washy tea.

Meats of a washy and fluid nature, that slip through the stomach and tarry not for concoction, do no more feed a man's health than almost if he lived on air.

Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 432.

Hence—3. Wanting in solidity, substantialness, strength, stamina, or the like; feeble; worthless.

Alas! our women are but washy toys.

Dryden, Epil. to the King and Queen (1682).

Washy he is, perhaps not over-sound.

Prior, Daphne and Apollo.

wasp (wosp), n. [Also dial. waps, wops (and wop); < ME. waspe, < AS. wæsp, wæps, found also in the form wæfs in an early gloss. = D. wesp = MLG. wespe = OHG. wefsa, MHG. wefse, wasp (cf. MHG. wespe, vespe, G. wespe, Dan. vespe, a wasp, < L.), = L. vespa, a wasp, = Lith. wapsa, a gadfly, horsefly, = Russ. osa, a wasp (cf. OF. guespe, F. guêpe, < MHG. wespe); with formative -s, perhaps < √ wap, sting (cf. E. *wap*1, strike). The word has appar. nothing to do with Gr. σφήξ, a wasp (with which cf. Gael. speach, a wasp, speach, bite).] 1. Any one of several families, many genera, and very numerous species of aculeate hymenopterous insects, whose wings fold lengthwise in a peculiar manner when the insects rest, which insects are hence collectively called Diplоptera. Most wasps dig holes for themselves, whence they are also called Fossores (though not all are fossorial). There are 13 families of wasps, namely Scoliidæ, Sapygidæ, Pompilidæ, Sphegidæ (or Sphecidæ), Larridæ, Nyssonidæ, Bembecidæ, Philanthidæ, Pemphredonidæ, Crabronidæ, Masaridæ, Eumenidæ, and Vespidæ. The members of the first ten of these families are indiscriminately known as digger wasps; those of the last three are wasps more strictly so called. The Masaridæ and Eumenidæ, like all the digger wasps, are of solitary habits, and are hence known as solitary wasps (which see, under solitary). The Vespidæ alone are social wasps.

Nest of Paper-wasp (Vespa).

Nest of Social Wasp (Polistes).

Nest of Solitary Wasp (Eumenes).

These are also called paper-wasps, from the character of their nests, and include the various species of Vespa, known as hornets. See, besides the family names, Polistes, Ammophila, Odynerus, Pelopæus, Sphex, etc., mud-dauber (-wasp), mud dauber, also digger-wasp, potter-wasp, sand-wasp, spider-wasp, wood-wasp, with numerous others.

Ther is no waspe in this werlde that will wantonliche stynge
For stappyng on a toe of a styncande frere!

Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 633.

Meanwhile the troops beneath Patrocles' care
Invade the Trojans, and commence the war.
As wasps, provok'd by children in their play,
Pour from their mansions by the broad highway.

Pope, Iliad, xvi. 314.

2. Figuratively, a person characterized by ill nature, petulance, peevishness, irritability, or petty malignity.

Come, come, you wasp; i' faith, you are too angry.

Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 213.

Golden wasp. Same as goldwasp.—Great-tailed wasp, Vespa (or Sirex) gigas.—Northern wasp, Vespa borealis.—Tailed wasps, the Scoliidæ or Urosphidæ (which see).—Wasp's-nest boil, a sort of carbuncle situated on the nape of the neck, usually only in people of advanced years.

wasp-bee (wosp'bē), n. A cuckoo-bee; any bee of the genus Nomada.

wasp-beetle (wosp'bē'tl), n. A beetle of the genus Clytus, as the British C. arietis, or of a related longicorn genus, as the American Cyllene pictus: so called from their wasp-like maculation.

wasp-fly (wosp'fli), n. A British syrphid fly, Chrysotoxum fasciculatum, spotted with yellow on a black ground, and thus somewhat resembling a hornet.

wasp-grub (wosp'grub), n. The larva of a wasp, used for bait by anglers. [Eng.]

waspish (wos'pish), a. [< wasp + *-ish*1.] 1. Like a wasp in any way. (a) Having a very slender waist, like the petiole of a wasp's abdomen; wasp-waisted; tight-laced. (b) Quick to resent any trifle, injury, or affront; snappish, petulant; irritable, irascible.

In age [they be] none testie, very waspishe, and alwaies ouer miserable. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 32.

Ah! thou knowest not What sting this waspish fortune pricks me with.

Randolph, Amyntas, ii. 2.

waspish-headed† (wos'pish-hed'ed), a. Irritable; passionate.

Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows.

Shak. Tempest, iv. 1. 99.

waspishly (wos'pish-li), adv. In a waspish manner; so as to be like a wasp in any respect.

He answered rather waspishly "Why should you bring me into the matter?"

George Eliot, Middlemarch, ii.

waspishness (wos'pish-nes), n. Waspish character or state.

wasp-kite (wosp'kīt), n. The honey-buzzard or bee hawk, Pernis apivorus. See cut under Pernis.

wasp-tongued† (wosp'tungd), a. Petulant-tongued; shrewish.

Why, what a wasp tongued [var. wasp-stung] and impatient fool Art thou!

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3. 238.

wasp-waisted (wosp'wās'ted), a. Very slender-waisted; laced tightly.

waspy (wos'pi), a. [< wasp + *-y*1.] Waspish.

She had none of your Chinese feet, nor waspy unhealthy waists, which those may admire who will.

Thackeray, Fitz Boodle's Confessions, Dorothea.

wassail (wos'āl), n. [Also wassel; < ME. wæs-sayl, wasseyl, wessel, < AF. wassail, a reflex of ONorth. wæs hæl or ODan. wæs heil. AS. wes hāl, 'be whole, be well' (i. e. 'here 's to your health'); also wes thū hāl, and in pl. wese gē hale, 'be ye whole' (so ME. hayl be thou, etc.), a salutation used like weorth hāl, ME. hail wurth thu, Icel. kom heill, 'come hale,' far heill, 'fare hale,' sit heill, 'sit hale,' etc.: AS. wes, impv. of wesan, be; hāl, whole, hale, well, = Icel. heill, whence E. hale, and the greeting hail: see was and *hale*3, *hail*2, whole.] 1. The salutation, toast, or form of words in which healths were formerly pledged in drinking, equivalent to 'health,' or 'your good health,' now in use.

A knc to the Kyng hco seyde: lord Kyng, wesseyl!

Rob. of Gloucester (ed. Hearne), p. 117.

Hingistus having inuited King Vortiger to a Supper, . . . since (Rowena) came . . . into the Kings presence, with a cup of gold filled with wine in her hand, and, making . . . a low reuerence vnto the King, sayd . . . "Wæs hæil hlaford Cyning," which is, being rightly expounded according to our present speech, be of health Lord King.

Verstegan, Rest. of Decayed Intelligence (ed. 1628), p. 197.

Then lift the can to bearded lip,
And smite each sounding shield;
Wassaile! to every dark-ribbed ship,
To every battle-field!

Motherwell, Battle-King of Scots.

we are met . . . pledge you all In wassail. Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

2. A festive occasion or meeting where drinking and pledging of healths are indulged in; festivities; a drinking-bout; a carouse.

The king doth wake to-night and takes his rouse,
Keeps wassail. Shak., Hamlet, I. 4. 9.

3. The liquor used on such occasions; specifically, ale mixed with a smaller amount of wine, sweetened and flavored with spices, fruit, etc.

Wassail, or rather the wassail bowl, . . . was a bowl of spiced ale formerly carried about by young women on New-year's eve. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 466.

But let no footstep beat the floor,
Nor bowl of wassail mantle warm.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cv.

†4. A merry drinking-song.

Have you done your wassail? 'tis a handsome drowsy ditty, I'll assure you. Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 1.

=Syn. 2. Revel, Debauch, etc. See carousal.

wassail (wos'āl), v. [Also wassel, < wassail, n.] I. trans. To drink to the health or prosperity of: as, to wassail the apple (an old custom on Christmas eve).

Wassaile the Trees, that they may beare
You many a Plum, and many a Peare;
For more or lesse fruits they will bring,
As you doe give them Wassailing.
Herrick, Hesperides, Ceremonies for Christmas, lv.

The ceremony of wassailing the apple orchard on Twelfth Night is said to be obsolete.
The Academy, April 19, 1890, p. 265.

II. intrans. To drink healths; carouse.

Spending all the day, and a good part of the night, in dancing, carolling, and wassailing.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

wassail-bout (wos'āl-bout), n. Same as wassail, 2.

Many a wassail-bout
Wore the long winter out.
Longfellow, Skeleton in Armor.

wassail-bowl (wos'āl-bōl), n. The bowl in which wassail was mixed and served.

The woods, or some near town
That is a neighbour to the bordering down,
Hath drawn them thither, 'bout some lusty sport,
Or spiced wassail bowl
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, v. 1.

wassail-bread (wos'āl-bred), n. Bread eaten at a wassail.

wassail-candle (wos'āl-kan'dl), n. A candle used at a wassail.

wassail-cup (wos'āl-kup), n. A cup from which wassail was drunk.

wassailer (wos'āl-ėr), n. One who takes part in a wassail or drinking-bout.

The rudeness and swilled insolence
Of such late wassailers. Milton, Comus, l. 179.

wassail-horn (wos'āl-hôrn), n. A drinking-horn of the middle ages. The name is taken from the appearance of the word wassail in the silver-gilt mounting of an ancient horn preserved at Queen's College, Oxford.

wassel, n. and v. See wassail.

wasser (wos'ėr), n. [Appar. < G. wasser = E. water, perhaps through some popular myth imported from Germany. Cf. wassermun.] A water-demon (?).

The horrible huge whales did there appeare;
The wasser that makes mariners to feare.
The Newes Metamorphosis (1600).

wassermant (wos'ėr-man), n. [< G. wasser, water, + mann, man. Cf. E. dial. wassel-man, a scarecrow. Cf. waterman.] A male sea-monster of human form; a sort of merman.

The grisely Wasserman, that makes his game
The flying ships with swiftnes to pursew.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 24.

wasshet, v. An old spelling of wash.

wast[1] (wost). See wax.

wast[2]†, n. An obsolete spelling of waist.

wastable (wās'ta-bl), a. [< waste[1] + -able.] 1. Liable to waste.

For ale that is newe is wastable with-owten dowt.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 129.

2†. Wasteful.

For much of this chaffare that is wastable
Might be forborne for dere and deceivable.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 193.

wastage (wās'tāj), n. [< waste[1] + -age.] Loss by use, wear, decay, leakage, etc.; waste.

The manufacture of it (shell money) was large and constant, to replace the continual wastage which was caused by the sacrifice of so much upon the death of wealthy men, and by the propitiatory sacrifices performed by many tribes, especially those of the Coast Range.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 201.

There is a subtlety which here in Rome
Men look for in blind wastage of their lives,
Not knowing where to seek it.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 178.

waste[1] (wāst), a. [Formerly also wast; < ME. west, waast, < OF. west, guast, gast, gaste, waste (faire west, make waste), < L. vastus, waste, desolate, vast: see vast. The word was confused with the adj. related early ME. weste, < AS. wēste = OS. wōsti = OFries. weste = OHG. wuosti, MHG. wueste, G. wüst, waste, desolate: see waste[1], n.] 1. Desert; desolate; uninhabited.

So wide a forest and so waste as this,
Nor famous Ardeyn, nor fowle Arlo, is.
Spenser, Astrophel, l. 95.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deut. xxxii. 10.

Far in the waste Soudan.
Tennyson, Epitaph on General Gordon.

2. In a state of desolation and decay; ruined; ruinous; blank; cheerless; dismal; dreary.

Certayne old waast and broken howeses.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. cclxix.

I will make thee [Jerusalem] waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee.
Ezek. v. 14.

3. Unused; untilled; unproductive.

It had layne waast two hundred yeares.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 150.

Almost one-fourth of the cultivable land of a country which was held to be over-populated was lying waste.
W. S. Gregg, Irish Hist. for Eng. Readers, p. 145.

4. Rejected as unfit for use, or spoiled in the using; refuse; hence, of little or no value; useless: as, waste paper; waste materials.—5†. Idle; empty; vain; of no value or significance.

Where is oure semely sone?
I trowe oure wittis be waste as wynde
York Plays, p. 157.

He hath maad mi covenant waast. Wyclif, Gen. xvii. 14.

His waste wordes retourned to him in vaine.
Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 42.

6. Exuberant; over-abundant; hence, superfluous; useless.

Strangled with her waste fertility.
Milton, Comus, l. 729

7†. Wasteful; prodigal; profuse.

My waast expensis y wole with drawe;
Now, certis, waast wool callid thei be,
For thei were spent my boost to blowe,
My name to here bothe on londe & see.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 170.

To lay waste. See lay[1]. — Waste-steam pipe, in a steam-engine, a pipe for conveying away the steam that escapes through the safety-valve.

waste[1] (wāst), n. [< ME. waste, < OF. wast, a waste, guast, gast, vast, waste, devastation; cf. MHG. waste, a desert; forms confused with early ME. weste, < AS. wēsten = OS. wostun = OHG. wuosti, MHG. wueste, G. wüste, a waste, desert: see waste[1], a.] 1. A wild, uninhabited, or desolate place or region; a desert; a wilderness.

The world's great waste, the ocean.
Waller, To my Lord Protector

No other object breaks
The waste but one dwarf tree.
Shelley, Julian and Maddalo

A dreary waste, exhibiting scarcely a vestige of civilization. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., I.

[The Barbary States were] bounded . . . on the south by the vast, indefinite, sandy, flinty wastes of Sahara Summer, Orations, I. 205.

Fancy flutters over these vague wastes like a butterfly blown out to sea, and finds no foothold.
Lowell, Harvard Anniversary.

2. Untilled or uncultivated ground; a tract of land not in a state of cultivation, and producing little or no herbage or wood.

One small gate that open'd on the waste
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

3. In coal-mining, gob; also, the fine coal made in mining and preparing coal for the market; culm; coal-dirt; dirt: in the Pennsylvania anthracite region, used to signify both the mine-waste (or coal left in the mine in pillars, etc.) and the breaker waste.—4. Gradual loss, diminution, or decay, as in bulk, substance, strength, or value, from continued use, wear, disease, etc.: as, waste of tissue; waste of energy.

Beauty's waste hath in the world an end.
Shak., Sonnets, ix.

Were Life uniform in its rate . . . repair and waste of all organs, including nervous organs, would have to keep an approximately even pace, one with the other.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 57.

5. Consumption; decline; a pining away.

There 's many a one as works in a carding room who falls into a waste, coughing and spitting blood, because they're just poisoned by the fluff.
Mrs. Gaskell, North and South, xiii.

6. Broken, spoiled, useless, or superfluous material; stuff that is left over, or that is unfitted or cannot readily be utilized for the purpose for which it was intended; overplus, useless, or rejected material; refuse, as the overflow water from a dam or reservoir, broken or spoiled castings in a foundry, paper scraps in a printing-office or bindery, or shreds of yarn in a cotton- or woolen-mill.

What is called in typographical language the waste of works printed at the Academy is seldom or never preserved, as it ought to be.
Rev. W. Tooke (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 436).

"I don't know how it is, sir," said one waste collector, . . . "I can't make it out, but paper gets scarcer or else I'm out of luck. Just at this time my family and me really couldn't live on my waste if we had to depend entirely upon it."
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 11.

7. Rubbish; trash; nonsense.

Why fader, in faith, are yo so for troublet
At his wordys of waste, & his wit febill?
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2546.

8. A weir or sluice for carrying off the overflow from a dam, reservoir, or canal.—9. A waste-pipe, or any contrivance for allowing waste matter or surplus water, steam, etc., to escape.

If more than one basin is fixed upon the same waste, the size should be proportionately increased.
S. S. Hellyer, The Plumber, p. 67.

10. Unnecessary or useless expenditure: as, waste of time, labor, or money.

So to order and dispende the same that no waste or unprofitable excesse be made. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 237.

Prefaces, and passages, and expostulations, and other speeches of reference to the person, are great wastes of time. Bacon, Dispatch (ed. 1887).

11. A superfluity.

We'll girt them with an ample waste of love.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., i. 1.

12. In law, anything suffered by a tenant in the nature of permanent injury to the inheritance, not occasioned by the act of God or a public enemy; the result of any act or omission by the tenant of a particular estate by which the estate of the remainder-man or reversioner is rendered less valuable. Cotton waste. See cotton waste. Equitable waste, injuries to the inheritance which fall short of waste as defined by the common law, but which a court of equity will treat as equivalent to waste. — Impeachment of waste. See impeachment.—In waste†, in vain.

Ich haue wrouzt al in waast as I nel ne more.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 7[illegible].

This wise worldis ware nought wrouzt in waste,
To waffe and wende away als wynde.
York Plays, p. 98.

Permissive waste, waste by omission to prevent it.—Tanners' waste. See tanner[1]. To run to waste, to become exhausted, useless, or spoiled, as from want of proper judgment, management, care, or skill; become lost for any useful purpose.

Alas! our young affections run to waste,
Or water but the desert.
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 120.

Voluntary waste. See voluntary.—Waste-picking machine, a machine for shredding waste fabric into shoddy; a rag picker. Waster waste. See the quotation under waster[1], n., 4 (b).—Syn. 6. Refuse, Damage, etc. See loss.

waste[1] (wāst), v.; pret. and pp. wasted, ppr. wasting. [< ME. wasten, waasten, < OF. waster, guaster, gaster, F. gâter, waste (= Pr. gastar, guastar = Sp. Pg. gastar = It. guastare, < MHG. *waste*n, lay waste), < L. vastare, waste, devastate, < vastus, waste, desert: see waste[1], a., and cf. vastate, devastate. Cf. G. wasten, lay waste.]

I. trans. 1. To lay waste; devastate; destroy; ruin.

For thi statil with werre I wasted alle hire londes, & brouzt hire at swiche bale that sche mercy craued.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4587.

And at the Fote of this Hille was sumtyme a gode Cytee of Cristene Men, that Men cleped Cayphas. For Cayphas first founded it; but it is now alle wasted.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 112.

Bathy sent Cuban to pursue the King into Sclavonia, still fleeing before him who wasted Bosna, Servia, and Bulgaria. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 466.

He more wasted the Britains then any Saxon King before him Milton, Hist. Eng., iv.

2. In law, to damage, injure, or impair, as an estate, voluntarily, or by allowing the buildings, fences, etc., to fall into decay.—3. To diminish or reduce in bulk, substance, strength, value, or the like, as by continued use, wear, loss, decay, or disease; consume or wear away; use up; spend.

Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 1[illegible]

The span of time
Doth waste us to our graves.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, [illegible]

My heart is wasted with my woe. Tennyson, [illegible]

"That sorceress, my brother's wife," cried Richard, "and others with her — see how they have wasted my body by their sorcery and witchcraft!" And, as he spoke, he bared his left arm and showed it to the council, shrunk and withered. J. Gairdner, Richard III., ii.

4. To expend without adequate return; spend uselessly, vainly, or foolishly; employ or use lavishly, prodigally, improvidently, or carelessly; squander; throw away.

Thof alche gadlynges be grevede, it greves me bot lyttille!
Thay wyne no wirshipe of me, bot wastys theire takle!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2445.

Mary, to testify the largeness of her affection, seemed to waste away a gift upon him.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 22

I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
Shak., Rich. II., v. 5. 49.

Waste the solitary day
In plucking from yon fen the reed,
And watching it float down the Tweed.
Scott, Marmion, i., Int.

So much fluency and self possession should not be wasted entirely on private occasions.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, vi. 2.

I that have wasted here health, wealth, and time,
And talents, I — you know it — I will not boast, Dismiss me. Tennyson, Princess, iv.

To waste time. See time. Wasted off, noting a stone of which the surfaces have been evened by the use of a pick or point. See wasting, 2. = Syn. 1. To ravage, pillage, plunder, strip. — 4. To dissipate, fritter away.

II. intrans. To be consumed or grow gradually less in bulk, substance, strength, value, or the like; wear or pine away; decay or diminish gradually; dwindle.

Man dieth, and wasteth away. Job xiv. 10

Shall I, wasting in despair,
Die because a woman's fair?
Wither, The Shepherd's Resolution.

I will not argue the matter. Time wastes too fast.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix. 8.

waste[2]†, n. An old spelling of waist.

waste[3] (wāst), v. t.; pret. and pp. wasted, ppr. wasting. [Cf. waster[2], a cudgel.] To cudgel. [Prov. Eng.]

waste-basket (wāst'bas'ket), n. A basket used to receive rejected papers, useless scraps of paper, and other waste material.

waste-board (wāst'bōrd), n. Same as washboard, 2.

waste-book (wāst'bůk), n. A day book. See bookkeeping.

waste-card (wāst'kärd), n. A machine for working up and carding the waste, fluff, etc., which collect on the floor of a factory. E. H. Knight.

waste-duster (wāst'dus'tėr), n. A machine for cleansing factory-waste. It consists of a series of beaters which rotate above a wire grating in which the waste is retained, while the dust and impurities fall through. E. H. Knight.

wasteful (wāst'fůl), a. [< waste[1] + -ful.] 1. Destructive; devastating; wasting.

His gush'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature
For ease to enter. . . . his wasteful entrance
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 3. 120.

See, with what heat these dogs of hell advance
To waste and havoc yonder world, which I
So fair and good created, and had still Kept in that state, had not the folly of man
Let in these wasteful furies. Milton, P. L., x. 620.

2. Producing or involving waste; occasioning serious loss or damage; ruinous.

With taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.
Shak., K. John, iv. 2. 10.

These days of high prices and wasteful taxation
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 277.

Worn
From wasteful living
Tennyson, Ancient Sage

3. Extravagant or lavish; profuse to excess; prodigal; squandering; as, a wasteful person.

How has kind Heaven adorned the happy land,
And scattered blessings with a wasteful hand!
Addison, Letter from Italy.

Four summers colored their golden light in leaves,
Four wasteful autumns flung them to the pale
O. W. Holmes, For the Commemoration Services, Cambridge, July 21, 1865.

4†. Uninhabited; desolate; waste.

In wildernesse and wastfull deserts strayd.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iii. 3.

= Syn. 2 and 3. Thriftless, unthrifty. — 3. Lavish, Profuse, etc. See extravagant.

wastefully (wāst'fůl-i), adv. In a wasteful manner; lavishly; prodigally.

Her lavish hand is wastefully profuse Dryden, Aurengzebe, iv. 1.

wastefulness (wāst'ful-nes), n. The state or character of being wasteful; lavishness; prodigality.

Those by their riot and wastefulness be hurtfull to a common-weale. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 178.

waste-gate (wāst'gāt), n. A gate for letting the water of a dam or pond pass off.

waste-good† (wāst'gůd), n. [< waste[1] + obj. good.] A prodigal; a spendthrift.

A young heyre, or cockney, that is his mothers darling, if hee haue playde the waste good at the Iunes of the Court, . . . falles in a quarrelling humor with his fortune, because she made him not king of the Indies.
Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 18.

wastel† (was'tel), n. [< ME. wastel, < OF. wastel, gastel, gasteau, a cake, bread, pastry, F. gâteau (Wall. wastiau) (Picard wastel = Pr. gastal), a cake, < MHG. wastel, a cake.] 1. A cake.

Thow hast no good grounde to gete the with a wastel,
But if it were with thi tonge or ellis with thi two hondes.
Piers Ploughman (B), v. 293.

2. In her., a bearing representing a round cake.

wastel-bread† (was'tel-bred), n. The finest quality of white bread; bread made of the finest flour.

Of smale houndes had she, that she fedde
With rosted flesh, or milk, and wastel-bread.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 147.

Mysie was a dark-eyed laughter-loving wench, with cherry-cheeks, and a skin as white as her father's finest bolted flour, out of which was made the Abbot's own wastel-bread. Scott, Monastery, xiii.

wastel-cake† (wās'tel-kāk), n. Same as wastel. Scott.

wasteless (wāst'les), a. [< waste[1] + -less.] That cannot be wasted, consumed, or exhausted; inexhaustible.

Those powers above, . . .
That from their wasteless treasures heap rewards.
May, The Heir, iv.

waste[n]† (was'ten), n. [< ME. wastine, wasteyn, < OF. wastine, guastine, waste, desert (cf. AS. westen = OS. wostun = OHG. wuosti, a desert, waste, wilderness): see waste[1].] A waste; a desert.

A gode man and rygt certeyn
Dwelled beyside that wastesyn.
MS Harl. 1701, f. 12. (Halliwell.)

She, of nought affrayd,
Through woods and wastnes wide him daily sought.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iii. 3.

wasteness (wāst'nes), n. The state of being waste or desolate; desolation.

That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness. Zeph. i. 15.

waste-pallet (wāst'pal'et), n. See pallet[2], 5.

waste-picker (wāst'pik'ėr), n. Same as rag-picker, 1.

waste-pipe (wāst'pīp), n. A pipe for conveying away waste water, etc.; an overflow-pipe. See waste-steam pipe, under waste[1], a.

waste-preventer (wāst'pré-vent'ėr), n. In plumbing, a device for controlling the supply and flow of a water-tank. It combines an outlet-valve and a ball-valve on the inlet-pipe a single lever operated by a chain so controlling both valves that no more water enters the tank than is drawn out.

waster[1] (was'tėr), n. [< ME. wastour, wastor, wastoure, wastowre, < OF. wastour, wastur, gasteor, gasteur, gastour, a waster, < waster, waste: see waste[1], v.] 1. One who or that which wastes, squanders, or consumes extravagantly or uselessly; a prodigal; a squanderer.

A chidestere or wastour of thy good.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 291.

He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster. Prov. xviii. 9.

He left a vast estate to his son, Sr Francis (I thinke ten thousand pounds per annum), he lived like a hog, but his sonne John was a great waster.
Aubrey, Lives (John Popham).

Ye will think I am turned waster, for I wear clean hose and shoon every day. Scott, Heart of Mid Lothian, xxviii.

2†. A lawless, thieving vagabond.

The statute of Edw. III (an. reg. 5, c. xiv.) specifies "divers manslaughters felonies, and robberies done by people that be called Roberdesmen, Wasteurs, and Draw-laccches." Note to Piers Plowman (C), i. 45.

3. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle which causes it to waste: otherwise called a thief. — 4. That which is wasted or spoiled: an article damaged or spoiled in course of making. Specifically — (a) In the industrial arts, a vessel or other object badly cast, badly fired, or in any way defective or useless, or fit only to be remelted.

Had I not taken these precautions, which some are apt to think too much trouble, I should have had many a waster. C. Ede, in Camplin's Mech. Engineering, p. 355.

(b) pl. Tin plates (sheet-iron tinned) deficient in weight, or otherwise inferior in quality, and which are sorted out from the "prime." They are used for various purposes which do not require the best quality of stock.

Some of the sheets thus thrown out [in tinning] are called menders or returns, and are sent back to the tin-house; others are called wasters, for which there is always a market at a reduction in price; the tinned iron called waster waste, and are used up for cheap or rust work.
W. H. Flower, Mod. of Tin, p. 106.

waster[1] (wās'tėr), v. t. [< waster[1], n.] To waste; squander. Gall. [Scotch.]

waster[2]† (wās'tėr), n. [Origin obscure; cf. waste[3], and dial. wastle, a twig.] 1. A wooden sword formerly used for practice by the common people.

As with wooden wasters men learn to play at the sheath, so practice in times of peace makes ready for the time of war. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 68.

2. Same as leister. [Scotch.]

This chase, in which the fish is pursued and struck with barbed spears, or a sort of long-shafted trident called a waster, is much practised at the mouth of the Esk, and in the other salmon rivers of Scotland.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxvi.

To play at wasters†, to practise fencing; fence with cudgels or with wooden or blunt swords.

Thou'rt a craven, I warrant thee; thou would'st be loth to play half a dozen venies at wasters with a good fellow for a broken head. Beau. and Fl., Philaster, iv. 3.

They that play at wasters exercise themselves by a few cudgels how to avoid an enemy's blows.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 278.

wastern†, n. [ME., var. of waste[n], after wildern.] A waste or desert place.

Fore wolves, and whilde aywnne, and wykkyde bestes,
Walkede in that wasternne, wathes to seche.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2324.

wastery, n. and a. See wastry.

wastethrift† (wāst'thrift), n. [< waste[1] + obj. thrift.] A spendthrift.

Thou art a wastethrift, and art run away from thy master that loved thee well.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, i. 4.

A wastethrift, a common surfeiter, and, to conclude, a beggar. Middleton, Trick to Catch the Old One, ii. 1.

waste-trap (wāst'trap), n. A trap so devised as to allow surplus water to escape without permitting air to pass up in the opposite direction. E. H. Knight.

wasteway (wāst'wā), n. A passage for waste water.

waste-weir (wāst'wēr), n. A cut made through the side of a canal, reservoir, etc., for carrying off surplus water.

waste-well (wāst'wel), n. See absorbing-well, under absorb.

wasting (wās'ting), n. [< ME. wastynge; verbal n. of waste[1], v.] 1. In med., atrophy. — 2. In stone-cutting, the process or operation of chipping off fragments from a block of stone with a pick or point, for the purpose of reducing the faces to an approximately plane surface. Stone so worked is said to be wasted off. Compare clouring.

wasting (wās'ting), p. a. 1. Laying waste; devastating; despoiling.

No time seems more likely for either than the time which followed the wasting expedition of Totilas which Prokopios records. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 345.

2. Gradually reducing the bodily plumpness and strength; enfeebling; emaciating: as, a wasting disease. Wasting palsy. Same as progressive muscular atrophy (which see, under progressive).

wastingly (wās'ting-li), adv. Lavishly; extravagantly.

Not to cause the trouble of making breviates by writing too rectons and wastingly. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

wastor†, wastour†, n. Middle English forms of waster[1].

wastrel (wās'trel), n. [Formerly also wastorel; < waste[1] + -er + -el (adj. termination as in gangrel, etc.), or < waster[1] + -el.] 1. Anything cast away as spoiled in the making, or bad; waste; refuse. — 2. Anything allowed to run to waste. Specifically (a) Waste land; a common. Carew, Survey of Cornwall, fol. 13. (b) A neglected child; a street Arab.

The veriest waifs and wastrels of society.
Huxley, Tech. Education.

3. A profligate. [Prov. Eng.]

wastry, wastery (wās'tri, wās'tėr-i), n. [Also wastrie; < waste[1] + -ry (see -ery).] Wastefulness; prodigality. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

wastry, wastery (wās'tri, wās'tėr-i), a. Wasteful; improvident. [Obsolete or provincial.]

The pope and his wastrye workers . . . were no fathers, but cruel robbers and destroyers.
Bp. Bale, Select Works (Parker Soc.), p. 128.

wasty (wās'ti), a. [< waste[1] + -y[1].] Resembling cotton-waste.

The wool becomes impoverished on account of the heat and dust, and is very tender, with a dry, wasty top.
U. S. Cons. Rep., No. 151, Class, p. 48.

wait (wāt), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of wot, ken, unit.

wait[2] (wāt), a. [A Scotch form of wet.] 1. Wet.—2. Addicted to drinking; droughty.

wait[3] (wot), n. [Early mod. E. watte; a corruption of Walt, abbr. of Walter. Cf. Watt and Watts, as surnames.] An old familiar name for a hare.

I wold my master were a watt
& my boke a wyld Catt,
& a brase of grehowndis in his toppe.
I wold be glade for to se that!
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 406.

Thus, once concluded, out the teasers run,
And in full cry and speed, till Wat's undone.
R. Fletcher's Epigrams, p. 130. (Nares.)

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch. . . .
By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 697.

wait[4], n. [Perhaps a var. of wight[1].] A fellow.

Ffor be my thryfte I dare sweryn at this seyl, ge xal fynde hym a strawnge watt!
Coventry Mysteries, p. 294.

wait[5], a. A dialectal form of wote for whole, a variant of hōl[1].

wait[6] (wot), adv. [Origin obscure; prob. for what.] Certainly; indeed. [Prov. Eng.]

watap, watapeh (wot'ap, wot'a-pe), n. [Amer. Ind.] The long slender roots of the white spruce, Picea alba, which are used by canoe-makers in northwestern North America for binding together the strips of birch-bark.

watch (woch), v. [< ME. waccke, weeche, < AS. wæcce, watch, watching, < wæccan, wake: see wake[1].] 1†. The state of being awake; wakefulness.

To lie in watch there and to think on him.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 43.

2. A keeping awake for the purpose of attending, guarding, or preserving; attendance without sleep; preservative or preventive vigilance; vigil.

Travellers always lie in the boat, and keep a watch to defend themselves against any attack.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 70.

We were told to keep good watch here all night, that there were troops of robbers on the east-side of the water who had lately plundered some boats.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 84.

3. A wake. See wake[1], n., 2.

Oon cresset . . . to be born biforn the Baillies of the seid cite [Worcester], in the Vigille of the natiuite of Seynt John Baptiste, at the comyn Waeche of the seid cite; and the wardeyns of the seid crafte, and alle the hole crafte, shallen wayte vppon the seid Baillies in the seid Vigill, at the seid Waeche, in thyr best arraye harneyd.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 408.

4. Close, constant observation; vigilant attention; careful, continued notice; supervision; vigilance; outlook: as, to be on the watch.

When I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth. Shak., M. of V., i. 1. 142.

There [the trout] lies at the watch for any fly or minnow that comes near to him.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 75.

Nor could she otherwise account for the judge's quiescent mood than by supposing him craftily on the watch, while Clifford developed these symptoms of a distracted mind. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

5. A person, or number of persons, whose duty it is to watch over the persons, property, or interests of others; a watchman, or body of watchmen; a sentinel; a sentry; guard.

Such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers.
Shak., Rich. II., v, 3. 5.

Home in a coach, round by the Wall, where we met so many stops by the Watches that it cost us much time and some trouble, and more money, to every Watch, to them to drink. Pepys, Diary, III. 419.

6. The period of time during which one person or body of persons watch or stand sentinel, or the time from one relief of sentinels to another; hence, a division of the night, when the precautionary setting of a watch is most generally necessary; period of time; hour. The Jews, like the Greeks and Romans, divided the night into military watches instead of hours, each watch representing the period for which each separate body of sentinels remained on duty. The proper Jewish reckoning recognized only three such watches: the first (lasting from sunset till about 10 P. M.), the second or middle watch (10 P. M. to 2 A. M.), and the third, or morning watch (from 2 A. M. till sunrise). After the establishment of the Roman power they were increased to four, which were named as first, second, etc., or by the terms even, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning, these terminating respectively at 9 P. M., midnight, 6 A. M., and 6 A. M.

7. Naut.: (a) The period of time occupied by each part of a ship's crew alternately while on duty. The period of time called a watch is four hours, the reckoning beginning at noon or midnight. Between 4 and 8 P. M. the time is divided into two short watches, or dog-watches, in order to prevent the constant recurrence of duty to the same portion of the crew during the same hours. Thus, the period from 12 to 4 P. M. is called the afternoon watch, from 4 to 6 the first dog-watch, from 6 to 8 the second dog-watch, from 8 to 12 the first night watch, from midnight to 4 A. M. the middle watch, from 4 to 8 the morning watch, and from 8 to 12 noon the forenoon watch. When this alternation of watches is kept up during the 24 hours, it is termed having watch and watch, in distinction from keeping all hands at work during one or more watches.

After 2. or 3. watches more we were in 24. fadoms
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 112.

(b) A certain part of the officers and crew of a vessel who together attend to working her for an allotted time. The crew of every vessel while at sea is generally divided into two parts: the starboard watch, which in the merchant service is the captain's watch, and is often commanded by the second mate; and the port or larboard watch, which in the merchant service is commanded by the chief mate. In the British and United States navies these watches are commanded by the lieutenants successively. The anchor-watch is a small watch composed of one or two men appointed to look after the ship while at anchor or in port.

8. Anything by which the progress of time is perceived and measured. (a) A candle marked out into sections, each of which required a certain time to burn.

Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 65.

(b) A small portable timepiece or timekeeper that may be worn on the person, operated by power stored in a coiled spring, and capable of keeping time when held in any position. Watches were invented at Nuremberg about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and for a long time the wearing of a watch was considered in some degree a mark or proof of gentility. Thus Malvolio remarks in anticipation of his great fortune:

I frown the while; and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my — some rich jewel. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 60.

The new contrivance of applying precious stones to watches I had the good fortune to see when Mr. Facio, the inventor, and an ingenious man, and Mr. Debaufre, the workman, presented their watches, to have the approbation of the Royal Society.
W. Derham (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 178).

A friend of mine had a watch given him when he was a boy, a "bull's eye," with a loose silver case that came off like an oyster-shell from its contents; you know them — the cases that you hang on your thumb, while the core, or the real watch, lies in your hand as naked as a peeled apple. O. W. Holmes, Professor, ii.

9. pl. A name of the trumpet-leaf, Sarracenia flava, probably alluding to the resemblance of the flowers to watches.—10. In pottery, a trial piece of clay so placed in a kiln that it can be readily withdrawn to enable the workmen to judge by its appearance of the heat of the fire and the condition of the ware remaining in the saggars.—11. In hawking, a company or flight, as of nightingales. Beat of a watch. See beat. Duplex watch, a watch having two sets of teeth upon the rim of its escapement-wheel. Officer of the watch. See watch officer. Paddy's watch. Same as paddy-whack, 3. Parish watch. See parish. The Black Watch, a semi-military organization in Edinburgh, Scotland, in the early part of the eighteenth century. From this a regiment of the British army was afterward formed, and the name was ultimately given to the 42d and 73d regiments, which are now the 1st and 2d Battalions of the Royal Highlanders. To muster the watch. See muster. To stand a watch. See stand. Watch and ward, the old custom of watching by night and by day in towns and cities. English writers up to the seventeenth century recognize a distinction between watch and ward, the former being used to signify a watching and guarding by night, and the latter a watching, guarding and protecting by day. Hence, when the terms were used in combination, especially in the phrase to keep watch and ward, they implied a continuous and uninterrupted watching and guarding, constant vigilance and protection by night and by day.

It was the strongest towne of walls, towers, Bulwarkes, watches and wardes that ever I saw in all my lyfe.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 16.

I saw at the towne of Braxmas al the artillerie brought together to ye gates of your house; I saw watch and warde kept round about your lodging.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 246.

watch (woch), v. [< ME. waccken, weechen, < AS. wæccan, watch, wake: see wake[1], v., and cf. watch, n.] I. intrans. 1. To be awake; be or continue without sleep; keep vigil.

But if necessitie compell you to watch longer then ordinary, then be sure to augment your sleepe the next morning. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 252.

As soon as I am dead,
Come all and watch one night about my hearse.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, ii. 1.

2. To be attentive, circumspect, or vigilant; be closely observant; notice carefully; give heed.

Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.
Mat. xxvi. 41.

Rooks, watching doubtfully as you pass in the distance, rise into the air if you stop.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 62.

3. To act as a watchman, guard, sentinel, or the like; keep watch.

The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard.
Shak., Othello, iii. 1. 28.

4. To look forward with expectation; be expectant; seek opportunity; wait.—5. To act as attendant or nurse on the sick by night; remain awake to give attendance, assistance, or the like: as, to watch with a patient in a fever.—6. To float on the surface of the water; said of a buoy. To watch over, to be cautiously observant of, inspect; superintend and guard from error and danger; keep guard over.

Watch over thyself, counsel thyself, judge thyself impartially. Jer. Taylor.

There is abundant cause to think that every town in which the Lord Jesus Christ is worshipped hath an angel to watch over it. C. Mather, Mag. Chris., Hist. Boston.

II. trans. 1. To look with close attention at or on; keep carefully and constantly in view or supervision; keep a sharp lookout on or for; observe, notice, or regard with vigilance and care; keep an eye upon.

Lie not a night from home, watch me like Argus.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 230.

They are singled out, and all opportunities watched against them. Bacon, Political Fables, i., Expl.

When Pitt entered Parliament, the whole political world was attentively watching the progress of an event which soon added great strength to the Opposition.
Macaulay, William Pitt.

2. To have in keeping; tend; guard; take care of.

Flaming ministers to watch and tend Their earthly charge. Milton, P. L., ix. 188.

Lord Brampton. Charges? For what?
Sable. First, Twenty Guineas to my Lady's Woman for notice of your Death (a Fee I've before now known the Widow herself go halfs in), but no matter for that. In the next place, Ten Pounds for watching you all your long Fit of Sickness last Winter. Steele, Grief A la Mode, ii. 1.

Paris watch'd the flocks in the groves of Ida. Broome.

3. To look for; wait for.

We will stand and watch your pleasure.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 240.

4†. To take or detect by lying in wait; surprise.

Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 107.

5. In falconry, to keep awake; keep from sleep, as a hawk, for the purpose of exhausting and taming it.

My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 23.

watch-bell† (woch'bel), n. 1. An alarm-bell.

They [Russian travelers] report that the Land of Muscalia reacheth from Bogbar to the north sea, and hath many Castles built of Stone four square, with Towers at the Corners, cover'd with glazed Tiles; and on the Gates Alarum Bells, or Watch Bells, twenty pound weight of Metal.
Milton, Hist. Muscovia, iii.

2. The bell which is struck every half-hour on board ship to mark the time. Now called ship's bell.

watch-bill (woch'bil), n. A list of the officers and crew of a ship, as divided into watches, together with the several stations to which the men respectively belong.

watch-birth† (woch'berth), n. [< watch, v., + obj. birth.] A midwife. [Rare.]

Th' eternall Watch-birth of thy sacred Wit.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Magnificence.

watch-box (woch'boks), n. A sentry-box.

watch-candle (woch'kan'dl), n. Same as watching-candle.

Were it not better for a man in a fair room to set up one great light, or branching candlestick of lights, than to go about with a small watch candle into every corner?
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, I. 46.

watchcase (woch'kās), n. 1. The outer case for a watch. Formerly it was often a hinged cover or box fitted closely over the watch proper, and having openings through which the dial appeared and the winding projected. In modern watches this feature is generally absent, and the watch-case is the metal cover, usually of gold or silver, which incloses the works.

We now never see watch-cases made of other materials than the precious metals, or imitations thereof; but those [when] of Queen Anne's beautiful cases were made of shagreen of various colours, or tortoise-shell inlaid or studded with gold.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 199.

2. Same as watch-pocket.—3†. A sentry-box. [Rare.]

O thou dull god [Sleep], why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch
A watch-case, or a common 'larum-bell?
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 26.

watchcase-cutter (woch'kās-kut'ėr), n. A machine for cutting hinge-recesses in watch-cases. E. H. Knight.

watch-clock (woch'klok), n. 1†. An alarm-clock.

Powrfull Need (Arts ancient Dame and Nurse)
The early watch-clock of the sleathfull sleeper.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Handy-craftes.

2. A timepiece used as a time-detector or time-reporter for a watchman. It is made in many forms. One kind is a small portable clock that must be carried by the watchman to different stations on his rounds. At each station a special key fastened to a chain must be used to make a mark on a paper dial inside the clock, thus making a record of the performance of his duty. Another form consists of a fixed clock, having a key that must be touched to make the record, a clock being placed at each station. Another and now more common form is a clock placed at a central station, and connected by wires with the place where the watchman makes his rounds, at each station the watchman touches a push-button to close the circuit and print a mark on a dial in the clock.

watch-dog (woch'dog), n. A dog kept to watch or guard premises and property.

'Tis sweet to hear the watch dog's honest bark Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home.
Byron, Don Juan, I. 123.

watcher (woch'ėr), n. One who or that which watches. Specifically — (a) One who sits up and continues awake; one who lies awake.

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers.
Shak., Macbeth, II. 2. 71.

(b) One who keeps awake for the purpose of guarding or attending upon something or some one; a nurse, watchman, sentry, or the like.

On the fronters . . . were set watchmen and watchers in dyuers maners.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. xlix.

A chair'd and wrinkled piece of womanhood
Sat watching like a watcher by the dead
Tennyson, Princess, v.

(c) One who observes as a watcher of the time.

Then felt I like some watcher of the skies,
When a new planet swims into his ken Keats, Sonnets, xi.

(d) A spy; one sent to watch an enemy. Jer. lv. 16.

watchet† (woch'et), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also watched; < ME. wachet, waget, wagett, cachet; prob. from an OF. form ult. connected with woad.] A light- or pale-blue color.

Celestro, azury, watchet, or skie colour. Celeste, heavenlie, celestiall. Also skie-colour or azure and watchet.
Florio

Yclad he was ful smal and properly
Al in a kirtel of a lyght waget
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 130.

[There are MS. variations cachet, waacit, and wachet, of which the last only is in print.]

Their watchet mantles fringed with silver rownd.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 40.

The greater shippes were towed downe with boates and oares, and the mariners, being all apparelled in watchet or skie coloured clothes, rowed a maine, and made way with diligence.
Hakluyt's Voyages, quoted in R. Eden (First Books on [America, ed. Arber, p. xxxviii.).

His habit is antique, the stuffe Watchet and allum.
Dekker, London's Tempe.

watch-fire (woch'fir), n. A fire maintained during the night as a signal, or for the use of a watching party, guard, sentinels, etc.

watchful (woch'ful), a. [< watch + -ful.] 1†. Wakeful; sleepless.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night? Shak., J. C., II. 1. 98.

2. Vigilant; careful; wary; cautious; observant; alert; on the watch: with of before the thing to be regulated or observed, and against before the thing to be avoided: as, to be watchful of one's behavior; to be watchful against the growth of vicious habits.

Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain.
Rev. iii. 2.

Watchful Servants to the Bagnio come,
They're ne'er admitted to the bathing room.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

Syn. 2. Watchful, Vigilant, Wakeful, attentive, heedful, circumspect, guarded. Watchful refers to the lack of disposition to sleep, especially at times when one would ordinarily have such a disposition; watchful and vigilant refer to the mind, will, or conduct; they are of about equal vigor; wakeful is the broader in its range of meaning.

watchfully (woch'ful-i), adv. In a watchful manner; vigilantly; heedfully; with careful observation of the approach of evil, or with attention to duty.

watchfulness (woch'ful-nes), n. The state or character of being watchful, in any sense.

watch-glass (woch'glas), n. 1. A sand-glass used to measure the time of a watch, as on shipboard: usually a half-hour glass. — 2. A thin concavo-convex piece of glass used for covering the dial of a watch. Those made in recent times for watches that have not a double case, or hunting case, are thicker, and have a peculiar flattened curve. Compare crystal, 2 (c).

watch-guard (woch'gard), n. A chain, ribbon, or cord fastened to a watch, and either passed around the neck or secured to some part of the clothing.

watch-gun (woch'gun), n. A gun fired at the changing of the watch, as in a fortress or garrison, or on board a man-of-war.

watch-header (woch'hed'ėr), n. The officer in charge of a watch.

The divisions of the crew are known as the starboard and larboard watches, commanded respectively by the first and second mates or the second and third mates, who are known as watch headers.
Fisheries of the U. S., V. II. 220.

watch-house (woch'hous), n. 1. A house in which a watch or guard is placed. — 2. A house where night-watchmen assemble previous to the hour at which they enter upon their respective beats, and where disturbers of the peace seized by them during the night are lodged and kept in custody till morning, when they are brought before a magistrate; a lockup.

At the Golden Ball and 2 Green Posts (There being a Hatch with Iron spikes at the door), near the Watch-House in Lambeth Marsh.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [I. 118.

watching (woch'ing), n. [Verbal n. of watch, v.] A keeping awake; a vigil.

In watchings often. 2 Cor. xi. 27.

Watchings of flowers. Same as vigils of flowers (which see, under vigil).

watching-candle (woch'ing-kan'dl), n. The candle used at the watching or waking of a corpse.

Why should I twine my arms to cables, sit up all night like a watching candle, and distil my brains through my eyelids? Academy of Compliments (1714).

watch-jewel (woch'jö'el), n. A jewel, usually a ruby, in which is drilled a hole for an arbor, used in the works of a watch, to lessen friction and wear.

watch-key (woch'kē), n. A small key with a square tube to fit the winding-arbor of a watch, serving to wind the watch by coiling the mainspring.

watch-light (woch'līt), n. A light kept burning at night, as for the use of a watcher in the sick-room.

There 's a star;
Morello 's gone, the watch-lights show the wall Browning, Andrea del Sarto.

watchmaker (woch'mā'kėr), n. One whose occupation is to make and repair watches. Watchmakers' cramp, a neurosis affecting watchmakers, in which, through irregular muscular action, it becomes impossible to hold in the eye socket the lens with which they examine their work. Occasionally also the fingers are affected in a manner similar to what is observed in writers' cramp. Watchmakers' drill. See drill.

watchmaking (woch'mā'king), n. The art or operation of making watches; the business or occupation of a watchmaker.

watchman (woch'man), n.; pl. watchmen (-men). [< ME. waechcheman; < watch + man.] A person set to keep watch; specifically, a sentinel; a guard; one who guards the streets of a city by night; also, one set to keep guard, as over a building in the night, to protect it from fire or thieves.

They went, and made the sepulcre sure with watche men, and sealed the stone.
Tyndale (1529), Mat. xxvii. 66.

Watchman, what of the night? Isa. xxi. 11.

Our watchmen from the towers, with longing eyes,
Expect his swift arrival Dryden, Spanish Friar, i. 1.

Who has not heard the Scowrer's Midnight Fame?
Who has not trembled at the Mohock's Name?
Was there a Watchman took his hourly Rounds Safe from their Blows or new invented Wounds?
Gay, Trivia, III. 327.

Watchman's clock. See *clock*².

watch-mark (woch'märk), n. A mark worn on the right or the left arm of a man in the naval service according as he is stationed in the starboard or the port watch.

watch-meeting (woch'mē'ting), n. A religious meeting or religious services held on the last night of the year, and terminated on the arrival of the new year. See watch-night.

watchment† (woch'ment), n. [< watch + -ment.] A watching; vigil; observation. [Rare.]

My watchments are now over, by my master's direction.
Richardson, Pamela, I. 171.

watch-night (woch'nit), n. The last night of the year, on which, in some churches, religious services are held till the advent of the new year.

watch-officer (woch'of'i-sėr), n. The officer in charge of the deck of a ship, who takes his turn with others in standing watches, during which time, subject to the authority of the commanding officer, he has charge of the ship. Also called officer of the watch.

watch-oil (woch'oil), n. A refined, very limpid and fluid lubricating-oil, used in oiling clocks and watches. Olive- or almond-oil after clarifying is much used for this purpose. Also clock-oil.

watch-paper (woch'pā'pėr), n. A small circle of paper, silk, muslin, or other material, inserted in the outer case of an old-fashioned watch, to prevent the metal from defacing the inner case. These papers were frequently cut with elaborate designs, or painted with miniatures or ciphers and devices. Those of textile fabrics were embroidered in silk, or with human hair. Commoner ones were printed with the head of some public character, or with some motto or sentiment.

watch-peel (woch'pēl), n. A watch-tower.

Watch peels, castles, and towers looked out upon us as we walked. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, i.

watch-pocket (woch'pok'et), n. A small pocket in a garment for carrying a watch on the person; also, a pocket, bag, etc., in or on the head-curtain of a bed for holding the watch at night.

watch-pole (woch'pōl), n. The pole or truncheon carried by a watchman.

I know a gentleman that has several wounds in the head by watch poles, and has been thrice run through the body to carry on a good jest. Steele, Spectator, No. 353.

watch-rate (woch'rat), n. A rate authorized to be levied in England for watching and lighting a parish or borough.

watchspring (woch'spring), n. The mainspring of a watch.

watch-stand (woch'stand), n. A contrivance for holding the watch when it is not worn on the person, enabling the dial to be seen. The form is often that of a small clock-case, and the stands of the eighteenth century were frequently very rich, both in material and in workmanship.

watch-tackle (woch'tak'l), n. Naut., a small tackle consisting of a double and single block with a fall. Also called handy billy.

By hauling every brace and bowline, and clapping weather-tackles upon all the clues and halyards we managed to hold our own. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 250.

watch-telescope (woch'tel'ē-skōp), n. See telescope.

watch-tower (woch'tou'ėr), n. A tower on which a sentinel is placed to watch for enemies, for the approach of danger, etc.

I stand continually upon the watch tower in the daytime. Isa. xxi. 8.

About a mile from the towne there is a very high and strong watch tower. Coryat, Crudities, I. 10.

watchword (woch'wėrd) n. [< ME. waeche-word; < watch + word.] 1. A word or short phrase to be communicated on challenge to the watch or sentinels in a camp; a password or signal by which friends can be known from enemies.

Wache wordes to wale, that weghis might know.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6056.

Hence — 2. Any preconcerted indication or a direction eagerly watched for, as a signal for action.

All have their ears upright, waiting when the watch-word shall come that they should all rise generally into rebellion. Spenser, State of Ireland.

3. A word used as a motto, as expressive of a principle or rule of action; a maxim, byword, or rallying-cry.

"Now" is the constant syllable ticking from the clock of time. "Now" is the watchword of the wise. "Now" is on the banner of the prudent. Parr.

His watchword is honour, his pay is renown.
Scott, Rokeby, v. 20.

4†. The call of a watchman or sentry as he goes his rounds.

Since when a watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls to testifie their vigilancy.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 10.

To set a watchword upon†, to make proverbial; turn into a byword.

S. Paule himself (who yet for the credit of Poets) alledgeth twice two Poets, . . . setteth a watch word upon Philosophy, indeede upon the abuse. So doeth Plato, upon the abuse, not upon Poetrie. Plato found fault that the Poet of his time filled the worlde with wrong opinions of the Gods. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

watchwork (woch'wėrk), n. The machinery of a watch: now usually in the plural.

wate, v. t. A form of *wait*¹. See *wait*¹.

water (wâ'ter), n. [< ME. water, watre, waeter, wæter, < AS. wæter = OS. watar = OFries. water, wetir = D. water = MLG. water = OHG. wazzar, MHG. wazzer, G. wasser, water; with a formative -r, akin to feel. vatn = Sw. vatten = Dan. vand = Goth. wato (pl. watnō), in which a different formative -n appears; cf. OBulg. Russ. voda, Lith. wandu, Gr. ὕδωρ (ἰδατ-, ὑδο-), Skt. udan, water; < Teut. √wat, Indo-Eur. √wad, be wet. Cf. wash, perhaps from the same root as water. See wet.]

1. A transparent, inodorous, tasteless fluid, H_2O. Water is a powerful refractor of light and an imperfect conductor of heat and electricity; it is very slightly compressible, its absolute diminution for a pressure of one atmosphere being only about one twenty-thousandth of its bulk. Although it is colorless in small quantities, it is blue like the atmosphere when viewed in mass. It assumes a solid form, that of ice or snow, at 32° F. (0° C.); and it takes the form of vapor or steam at 212° F. (100° C.), under a pressure of 29.9 inches (more exactly, 760 millimeters) of mercury, retaining that form at all higher temperatures. Under ordinary conditions, therefore, water possesses the liquid form only at temperatures lying between 32° and 212° F. The specific gravity of water is 1 at 39°.2 F. (4° C.), being the unit to which the specific gravities of all solids and liquids are referred: one cubic foot of water at 62° F. weighs about 1,000 ounces or 62.38 pounds. Water is 770 times heavier than atmospheric air at 32° F. (0° C.) and under a pressure of 760 millimeters. It has its greatest density at 39°.2 F. (4° C.), and in this respect it presents a singular exception to the general law of expansion by heat. If water at 39°.2 F. is cooled, it expands as it cools till reduced to 32°, when it solidifies; and if water at 39°.2 F. is heated, it expands as the temperature increases in accordance with the general law. Considered from a chemical point of view, water is a compound substance, consisting of hydrogen and oxygen, in the proportion of 2 volumes of the former gas to 1 volume of the latter; or by weight it is composed of 2 parts of hydrogen united with 16 parts of oxygen. It exhibits in itself neither acid nor basic properties. Water enters, as a liquid, into a peculiar kind of combination with the greater number of all known substances. Of all liquids water is the most powerful and general solvent, and on this important property its use depends. Without water the processes of animal and vegetable life would come to a stand. The globe is covered on about ¾ of its surface by the ocean water, to an average depth of very nearly 12,500 feet. (See ocean.) This water is, however, far from pure, since it holds in solution nearly 3½ per cent. of its weight of saline matter, about three fourths of which is common salt. The ocean water is not potable but pure water can be obtained from it by distillation, as is often done at sea; for which purpose, however, fuel and a somewhat cumbrous apparatus are required. Some towns on the South American coast have been supplied with water exclusively in this way, up to the time when works were completed for bringing it from the distant mountains. The chief source of supply for the water which falls upon the earth is the ocean, from whose surface it is raised by the heat of the sun in the form of vapor, ready to be condensed again and fall as rain or snow either on sea or land, in accordance with varying and complicated conditions of climate and topography. The precipitation of rain and snow upon different parts of the earth's surface varies greatly, both in its total amount and in its seasonal distribution. Some regions receive as much as 600 inches in a year; over other extensive areas the rainfall is so small that it is hardly possible to measure it. In some districts the rain is pretty equally distributed through the year; in others it is all, or nearly all, limited to one season, as winter or summer. These climatic conditions are matters of the utmost importance, as regards both the distribution and the welfare of the human race and of animal and vegetable life in general. The habitability and fertility of the earth depend in part on temperature and in part on the amount and character of the precipitation. In general, where there is no rainfall the region is either very sparsely or not at all inhabited, and vegetation is almost entirely wanting; of this character is a considerable part of northern Africa and central Asia, such regions are called deserts. Other regions, where there is some rainfall, but where the amount is small, are destitute of forests but support a more or less abundant growth of grasses. Such regions are, as a rule, thinly inhabited, and the population is pastoral and nomadic; of this character are large areas in central Asia, and in both North and South America. Regions of abundant or even of moderately large precipitation are generally forested, and can be successfully cultivated after the forests have been cut down. these, in general, are the densely inhabited parts of the world. Such are the essential facts and conditions of the distribution of population as connected with rainfall. But to these are many exceptions. Thus, the Nile flows for 2 600 miles through a rainless region, but has a somewhat dense population for a considerable distance along its banks, though only there, the river itself being the sole source of water-supply for the inhabitants of the valley. Some regions of very small rainfall are situated sufficiently near high mountain-ranges on which the precipitation is comparatively large, and from which water can be obtained in considerable quantity with a moderate expenditure of money. In this connection the fact that the precipitation at high altitudes is chiefly in the form of snow is a matter of great importance, as thereby the supply of water is made capable of lasting through, or nearly through, the summer, the snow melting gradually, while the precipitation in the form of rain would be carried away much more rapidly. Rain, if caught at a distance from human habitations and after it has been falling for some time, contains hardly a perceptible trace of foreign matter. Snow falling in the polar regions is also very nearly chemically pure. By distillation with suitable precautions, water may be obtained which will leave no trace of residue when evaporated in a platinum vessel, and which will also be free from gaseous contents. The water of springs and rivers always contains more or less mineral matter which it has dissolved out from the soil and rock with which it has been in contact upon the surface or underground. Next to rain-water, the purest natural water is that of mountain-lakes fed from melting snow, and resting on crystalline and impermeable rocks; and rivers in uninhabited regions, running over similar rocks, are also very nearly pure, sometimes leaving not more than two or three grains of foreign matter to the gallon when evaporated to dryness. Rivers, on the other hand, which run over calcareous and soft shaly and clayey rocks always contain a considerable amount of impurities, often fifteen to twenty grains to the gallon is not an uncommon amount under such conditions. Pure water, such as that of mountain-lakes and rivers running over crystalline rocks, is called soft; water containing more than eight or ten grains of mineral matter to the gallon is called hard. The foreign matter in soft water is partly organic and partly mineral; in the latter a little silica is always present, as well as salts of potash, soda, lime, and magnesia. The impurities of hard water are varied in character, but carbonate of lime generally predominates. The mineral impurities of water are not necessarily deleterious to health, even if present in somewhat large quantities. The contamination of water by organic matter (such as sewage, and the like) is a matter of great importance and often of great danger. Dead organic matter is rapidly oxidized by exposure to the air in flowing water, and ceases to be dangerous to health. The living organisms with which water is sometimes contaminated, in receiving the sewage of towns or in other ways, are sometimes the germs of deadly disease, and appear to possess a large amount of vitality, so that they can be conveyed for long distances without becoming disorganized, as is the case with dead organic matter. See water-supply.

Yit signes mow men see Ther water is, as the fertilitee
Of withi, reede, aller, yvy, or vyne,
That ther is water nygh is verrey signe.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 174.

As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country. Prov. xxv. 25.

Specifically — (a) Rain.

By sudden floods and fall of waters
Buckingham's army is dispersed and scatter'd.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 512.

(b) Mineral water. See mineral.

Mineral-Waters, . . . as the Sulphurous Waters at the Bath. Gideon Harvey, Vanities of Philosophy and Physick (ed. 1709), xvi.

Then houses drumly German water,
To mak himsel' look fair and fatter.
Burns, The Twa Dogs.

(c) pl. Waves, as of the sea; surges; a flood.

Therefore will not we fear, . . . though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though the waters thereof roar and be troubled. Ps. xlvi. 3.

Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea, . . .
And see the Children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore
Wordsworth, Ode, Immortality.

2. A limited body of water, as an ocean, a sea, or a lake; often, in provincial English and Scotch use, a river or lake: as, Derwent Water (lake); Gala Water (stream). In law the right or title to a body of water is regarded as an incident to the right to the land which it covers, and the term land includes a body of water thereon.

And many yeres he for the passion of Crist, the lay over the same water a tree, for a foote bryge, whereoff the holy Crosse was after wardes made
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 27

Having travelled in this Valley near four hours, we came to a large Water called the Lake.
Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 8.

The mosses, waters, slaps, and stiles
That lie between us and our hame.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

3. Any aqueous or liquid secretion, exudation, humor, etc., of an animal body, as tears.

For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me. Lam. i. 16.

The water stood in his eyes.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

(b) Sweat, perspiration.

The word water may stand for sudor; a horse is all on a water (in a lather); . . . we should say, lather.
Oliphant, New English, I. 466.

(c) Saliva; spittle.

For the sight of Peter's oysters brought the water to his mouth. W. S. Gilbert, Etiquette (d) Urine.

Well, I have cast thy water and I see Thy air fall'n to wit's extremest poverty,
Sure is consumption of the spritely part.
Marston, Satires, iv. 125.

(e) The aqueous or nitrous humor of the eye; eye-water. (f) The serous effusion of dropsy, in a blister, and the like: as, water on the brain. (g) pl. In obstet., the liquor amnii.

4. A distilled liquor, essence, extract, or the like. See strong water, under strong[1].

But this water
Hath a strange virtue in't, beyond his art;
It is a sacred relic part of that Most powerful juice with which Medea made Old Æson young. Massinger, Bashful Lover, v. 1

His wife afterwards did take me into my closet, and give me a cellar of cakes of her own distilling.
Pepys, Diary, April 1, 1668.

5. In phar., a solution of a volatile oil, or of a volatile substance like ammonia or camphor, in water. — 6. Transparency, as of water; the property of a precious stone in which its beauty chiefly consists, involving also its refracting power. In this sense the word is applied especially to diamonds, and is used loosely to express their relative excellence: as, a diamond of the first water: hence used figuratively to note the degree of excellence or fineness of any object of esteem: as genius of the purest water. See the phrase first water below.

An excellent lapidary set these stones, sure,
Do you mark their waters?
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 2.

7. The waterside; the shore of a sea, lake, stream, or the like, considered with or apart from its inhabitants; specifically, a watering-place; a seaside resort. [Provincial.]

Gar warn the water, braid and wide,
Jamie Telfer (Child's Ballads, VI. 110).

The water, in the mountainous districts of Scotland, is often used to express the banks of the river, which are the only inhabitable parts of the country. To raise the water, therefore, was to alarm those who lived along its side. Quoted in Child's Ballads, VI. 110, note.

The phrase "going to the waters" has been familiar to me for the last forty years as used by the peasantry in the counties of Huntingdon, Rutland, and Lincoln. By it is meant a seaside place, and not an inland watering-place, such as Malvern, Bath, Leamington, or Cheltenham. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII., 378.

8. In finance, additional shares created by watering stock. See water, v. t., 4.

By the much abused word "property" he referred, of course, to the fictitious capital, or "water," which the gas companies had added to their real capital.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 92.

Above water, afloat; hence, figuratively, out of embarrassment or trouble.

Being ask'd by some that were not ignorant in Sea Affairs how long he thought the Ship might be kept above Water, he said he could promise nothing, but that it could not be done above three Hours.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 277.

Aërated waters. See gerate. — Aix-la-Chapelle water, a mineral water obtained from various thermal springs at Aix-la-Chapelle in Rhenish Prussia, containing a large proportion of common salt, also other sodium salts and sulphur. — Aix-les-Bains water, from thermal springs of the same name in Savoy, contains chiefly sulphates and carbonates of sodium, magnesium, and calcium in small proportion, employed in the form of systematic bathing in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, skin-diseases, etc. — Allen water. See allen. — Apollinaris water, an agreeable sparkling water from Rhenish Prussia, containing a very minute proportion of mineral ingredients, used as a table-water. Bag of waters, in obstet., the bulging fetal membranes, filled with liquor amnii, which act as a hydraulic wedge to dilate the mouth of the womb. — Ballston Spa waters, from Ballston, New York, effervescent waters, containing a large amount of common salt with carbonates of calcium and magnesium. They possess tonic and cathartic properties. — Baryta-water. See baryta. Basic water. See basic. — Benediction of the waters, in the Gr. Ch., the solemn public ceremony of blessing the water in the phiale, the running waters, and the sea, observed annually with a procession and other rites on the feast of the Epiphany. See holy water, below. — Bethesda water, from Waukesha, Wisconsin, an effervescent water, containing but a small proportion of mineral ingredients: used chiefly in the treatment of urinary disorders and as a table-water. — Between wind and water. See wind. Bitter water, a purgative mineral water having a bitter taste owing to the presence of a large amount of sulphate of magnesium, or Epsom salts. Friedrichshall water is an example of a bitter water. Black water. Same as pyrosis. — Blue Lick water, a strong sulphur water, containing also a large amount of salt, obtained from the Blue Lick Springs, Kentucky. It possesses cathartic properties, and is used largely in the treatment of catarrhal troubles of the respiratory, digestive, and urinary tracts. Broken water. See broken. Buffalo lithia water, an alkaline sulphur water, containing some lithia, from Mecklenburg county, Virginia. It is diuretic and slightly laxative, and is employed in the treatment of lithemia, Bright's disease, and certain forms of dyspepsia. Burning water, alcohol. Compare fire water.

Take the beste wiyn that ge may fynde. . . . But first ge muste distille thin wiyn, tymes, and thanne haue ge good brennynge watir.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 4.

Canterbury water, water thickened with the blood of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered in 1170, and afterward canonized as a saint and martyr. See the quotation.

To satisfy these cravings, so as to hinder an uneasy feeling at the thought of tasting human blood, a tiny drop was mingled with a chalice full of water, and in this manner given to those who begged a sip. This was the far-famed "Canterbury water." Never had such a thing as drinking a martyr's blood been done before; never has it been done since. Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. i. 434.

Carbonated water, water charged with carbonic-acid gas — either natural spring water like seltzer and apollinaris, or distilled water artificially charged with the gas. — Carlsbad water, an alkaline sulphated water, heavily charged with carbonic acid, from various thermal springs in Carlsbad, Bohemia: employed extensively in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, urinary disorders, chronic diseases of the eye and ear, intestinal catarrh, and chronic constipation. Chow-chow water. See chow-chow. — Clysmic water, an agreeable sparkling table-water, containing chiefly calcium bicarbonate, from Waukesha, Wisconsin. It is used also as a diuretic in bladder troubles. — Cologne water. Same as eau de cologne. Crab Orchard water, a cathartic water, containing a rather large proportion of magnesium sulphate and a smaller amount of some other sulphates and carbonates, obtained from springs of the same name in Kentucky. Deep water or waters, water too deep for comfort or safety; hence, figuratively, embarrassment, trial or distress.

Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters. Ps. lxix. 14.

Once he had been very nearly in deep water because Mrs. Proudie had taken it in dudgeon that a certain young rector, who had been left a widower, had a very pretty governess for his children. Trollope.

False waters, in obstet., a fluid which occasionally collects between the amnion and the chorion. — First water, the highest degree of fineness in a diamond or other precious stone; hence, figuratively, the highest rank morally, socially, or otherwise. The expression first water, when applied to a diamond, denotes that it is free from all traces of color, blemish, flaw, or other imperfection, and that its brilliancy is perfect. Often used attributively.

One comfort, folk are beginning to take an interest in me. I see nobs of the first water looking with a fatherly eye into our affairs. C. Reade. (Dixon.)

Franz-Josef water, a bitter water, containing a small proportion of iron, obtained at Eured, Hungary. It is used as a cathartic, and also in the treatment of chronic rheumatism and catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and alimentary tracts. — Friedrichshall water, a "bitter water" from the village of this name in Germany. It is strongly aperient, containing a large proportion of sulphates and chlorids of magnesium and sodium. It is used as a cathartic and also in diseases of the heart and kidneys and in chronic bronchitis. — Frightened water. See frighten. — Giesshubler water, an agreeable sparkling alkaline water from Giesshubl-Puchstein, near Carlsbad in Bohemia, used as a table water, and also in cases of uric acid diathesis and of dyspeptic and other troubles referred thereto. Goulard water, an aqueous solution containing about 2½ per cent. of lead subacetate, the liquor plumbi subacetatis of the United States Pharmacopœia, used as a lotion in inflammation. Ground water, surface moisture, or the water retained by the porous surface soil. Ground water flows in accordance with the common law of hydrostatics, but its motion is impeded by friction. Compare ground air, under air. Hard water. See def. 1. Harrogate waters, chalybeate and sulphur waters from the watering place of this name in Yorkshire, England. They are aperient, and are used chiefly in the treatment of skin-diseases and of morbid conditions of the intestinal canal. — High water, the greatest elevation of the water at flood-tide, also, the time when such highest point in the flow is reached.

Gaffer was away in his boat, . . . he was not, according to his usual habits at night, to be counted on before next high water. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, I. 14.

High-water mark, the mark or limit of water at high tide, hence, figuratively, the highest limit attained or attainable: as, the high-water mark of prosperity. Sometimes erroneously written high water mark.

His [Wordsworth's] "Ode on Immortality" is the high-water mark which the intellect has reached in this age. Emerson, English Traits.

High-water shrub, a shrubby composite plant, Iva frutescens, a native of the United States along the sea coast from Massachusetts to Texas. Also called marsh elder.

Holy water, water used for ritual purification of persons and things, especially, water blessed by a Christian priest, and used to sprinkle upon persons or things or to sign one's self with at entering church. Holy or lustral water has been used in almost all religions in purification of persons and things, especially in preparation for worship, and also to drive away the powers of evil. Under the ancient Jewish law, the priests bathed their hands and feet in a laver before entering the tabernacle or approaching the altar (Ex. xxx. 17–21, xl. 30–32), and the "water of purification" (Num. viii. 7, xix. 9, etc.) presents another analogy to Christian usage. The use of holy water in the Christian church is very ancient. In the Roman Catholic Church holy water is prepared every Sunday by exorcism and benediction of salt, and exorcism and benediction of the water, after which the salt is cast in the water, and both again blessed together. In the Greek Church the use of a holy-water stoup (colymbion) at the entrance of a church is almost obsolete. Holy water is used in the houses, and is blessed on the first of the month in the plinde, and at the Epiphany there is a general blessing of water. See cut under stoup, 3. Holy-water clerk, sprinkler, stick. See holy. Homburg water, a chalybeate saline water from springs in Homburg near the Rhine, used in the treatment of dyspepsia and disorders of the liver, especially those that have been brought on by high living. — Hot Springs waters, calcic sulphur waters from a number of thermal springs in Hot Springs, Arkansas. They are largely employed in the treatment of syphilis, rheumatism, and chronic diseases of the skin and mucous membranes. House of water. See house. Hungary water, a preparation of spirits of rosemary, used, especially during the eighteenth century, as a lotion, a perfume, or an internal remedy. The name is said to have been given to it in allusion to a queen of Hungary who tested the efficacy of the water in bathing.

All those Ingredients mention'd are to be had at the Apothecaries, except the Queen of Hungarys Water, which is sold by Mich. Johnson Bookseller in Leichfield. The Happy Sinner (1691), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., IX. 115.

Hunyadi János water, a cathartic water, containing a large percentage of sodium and magnesium sulphates, obtained from Budapest in Hungary. Interdiction of fire and water. See interdiction. Jack in the water. See jack. — Javelle's water. See eau de Javelle, under eau. — Kissingen water, a mildly laxative water obtained from several springs in the town of this name in Bavaria. It is used in affections of the liver and alimentary canal, chronic from hills, and other catarrhal conditions. La Bourboule water, an arsenical water from La Bourboule, in Puy-de-Dome, France. It is used in the treatment of various skin diseases and in chronic malarial troubles. Lebanon Springs water, a mineral water, containing chiefly carbonates and sulphates, obtained from Lebanon Springs, New York. It is used principally in the treatment of diseases of the digestive and urinary tracts. — Like water, with the ready or abundant flow of water; hence, overflowingly, abundantly; freely: as, to spend money like water.

They came round about me daily like water; they compassed me about together. Ps. lxxviii. 17.

Lock of water. See lock. — Low water, low ebb.

Set not her Tongue
A going again,
Sh' as made more Noise than half a dozen Paper mills
London-Bridge at a low Water is Silence to her.
Etherege, Love in a Tub, i. 2.

Low-water alarm. See alarm. — Low-water indicator. See indicator. — Low-water mark, the mark or limit of water at low tide; in a figurative sense, the lowest or a very low point or degree. Sometimes erroneously written low water-mark.

I'm at low water mark myself — only one bob and a magpie, but, as far as it goes, I'll fork out and stump. Dickens, Oliver Twist.

Low-water slack, the time of slack water at the lowest stage of the tide, when the ebb has done and the flood has not yet made. Marienbad water, a mineral water from the spa of this name in Bohemia, not far from Carlsbad. The water is used largely in gout, hemorrhoids, obesity, and liver troubles occurring as a result of high living, and also for chronic bronchitis, neuralgia, and cystitis. — Meteoric waters, mineral waters, north water. See the adjectives. — Oil on troubled waters, figuratively, anything done or used to mollify, assuage, or allay: from the smoothing effect of the pouring of oil upon breaking waves, a common resource of modern seamen. The efficacy of oil for such use was known to the ancient Greeks and Romans (see "Notes and Queries," 9th ser., III. 252), and the literal practice no doubt preceded the figurative saying. — Orange-flower water, Same as orange water. — Oxygenated water. See oxygenate. Persicot-water. See persicot. Pilot's water. See pilot. — Poland Spring water, a water, very weak in mineral constituents, obtained from South Poland, Maine. It is employed chiefly as a table water and as a diuretic in the treatment of chronic disorders of the urinary tract. — Potash-water. See potash. Public, quick, quicksilver water. See the qualifying words. Red water, bloody urine; hematuria. — Richfield Springs water, a sulphur water from the village of the same name in New York State, used largely in the treatment of rheumatism, skin-diseases, and chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract. — Rockbridge Alum Springs water, a tonic water, with astringent taste, obtained in the place of the same name in Virginia. It is employed in the treatment of skin diseases and catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary tracts. Rosemary water. Same as Hungary water. Rubinat-Condal water, an aperient water, containing chiefly sodium sulphate, obtained from a spring in the Spanish Pyrenees. Saratoga waters, various mineral waters, some possessing tonic and others cathartic properties, obtained from Saratoga Springs, New York. They are used in the treatment of certain chronic skin-diseases, constipation, indigestion, and liver disorders, and in catarrhal conditions of the urinary and digestive tracts. Among the best known of the springs are the Congress, Hathorn, High Rock, Geyser, Pavilion, Seltzer, and Vichy. Sedative water. See sedative. Selters water, a highly prized medicinal mineral water found at Nieder-Selters, a village in the province of Hesse-Nassau in Prussia. It contains a considerable quantity of sodium chlorid (common salt), and much smaller quantities of sodium, calcium, and magnesium carbonates. Also called Seltzer water. — Sharon Springs water, a sulphur water from Sharon Springs, New York. It is largely used in the treatment of diseases of the skin, chronic catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and digestive tract, gout, and rheumatism. — Silicious, slack, strong water. See the adjectives. — Soden water, saline chalybeate water from Soden in Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used chiefly in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract and in the early stages of pulmonary consumption. Soft water. See def. 1. Sweet water. (a) Fresh as opposed to salt water. See sweet a., 8. (b) Glycerin. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 310. Thermal waters, hot springs. — To be in hot water. See hot. To break water. (a) To appear upon the surface of the water to blow, as a whale making its rising. (b) To float to the surface, as any sunken object. — To cast oil on troubled waters. See oil on troubled waters, above. To cast (a person's) water. See cast. To cast water into the Thames, to perform unnecessary or useless labor (possibly involving a play on the word Thames, suggesting tense, a stool).

It is to give him quoth I as much almes or meede
As cast water in Tems, or as good a deede
As it is to help a dogge over a stile.
J. Heywood, Proverbs (ed. Sharman), p. 60.

To hold water. See hold. — To make foul water. See foul. To make water. See make. To pour water on the hands. See hand. To take water. (a) To allow one's boat to fall into the wake of another boat, as in a race. Hence (b) to weaken in a contest; back out or back down. [Slang.] To throw cold water on. See cold. — To tread water. See tread. — Troubled waters, a commotion, trouble, discord. See oil on troubled waters, above. Under water, below the surface of the water. Vals water, sparkling alkaline water from Vals in southern France. It is used in dyspepsia, urinary disorders, affections of the liver, obesity, gout, and diseases of the skin. Vichy water. (a) An alkaline water, containing minute quantities of iron and arsenic, obtained from numerous thermal springs in Vichy, France, and also artificially prepared. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the intestinal and urinary tracts, gall-stones, lithemia, gout, and rheumatism. (b) A water of somewhat similar composition from the Vichy Spring in Saratoga. See Saratoga waters. — Water bewitched, water slightly flavored (as with liquor); any weak or greatly diluted decoction: figuratively, an insipid, tasteless compound.

Indeed, madam your ladyship is very sparing of your tea. I protest, the last I took was no more than water bewitched. Swift, Polite Conversation, i.

Water-check valve, in a steam engine, an automatic valve which regulates the water supply delivered by the feed-water pipe to the boiler. See check-valve. — Water cider. See cider. — Water damaged. Same as water bunched. Halliwell. — Water in one's shoes!, a source of discomfort or irritation to one.

They caressed his lordship very much as a new comer, whom they were glad of the honour to meet, and talked about a time to dine with him, all which (as they say) was water in his shoes. Roger North, Lord Guilford, i. 205. (Davies.)

Water-of-Ayr stone. See Ayr stone, under stone. — Water of Cotugnius, a fluid filling the space between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth of the ear, the perilymph, technically called liquor Cotunnii. — Water of crystallization. See crystallization. — Water of jealousy (literally, 'water of bitterness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water to be drunk as directed in Num. v. 11–31 by a woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness, the act of drinking it serving as a test of innocence or guilt. Water of life. (a) A liquid giving life or immortality to the drinker; specifically, in Biblical use, spiritual refreshment, strength, or salvation.

I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. Rev. xxi. 6.

(b) Whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic liquor: a translation of the Irish and Gaelic name of whisky, and of the French name of brandy (eau-de-vie). Compare aqua vitæ.

The shepherds . . . were collected together (not without a speech of the mountain-dew, or water of life) in a large shed. J. Wilson, Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life, p. 208.

Water of purification. See holy water. — Water of separation (literally, 'water of uncleanness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer burned with cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet, used to sprinkle upon unclean persons (Num. xix.). — Water on the brain. See brain. Water-steam thermometer. See thermometer. — Water venom-globulin, a poisonous principle extracted from serpent-venom. — White Sulphur Springs water, a strong sulphur water from the springs of the same name in Greenbrier county, West Virginia. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary systems, constipation, and various skin diseases. — White water. (a) Shoal water near the shore; breakers. (b) The foaming water in rapids or swiftly flowing shallows.

The continuous white water of the upper rapids raging round the curve of a steep red bank.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 681.

(c) Foam churned up by a whale. — Wiesbaden water, a saline water obtained from numerous thermal springs in Wiesbaden, Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used in the treatment of skin-diseases, gout, rheumatism, and neuralgia. — Wildungen water, a mineral water, containing carbonates of calcium and magnesium and a small percentage of sulphates, from Nieder Wildungen in Waldeck. It is employed chiefly in the treatment of diseases of the urinary tract. — Yellow Sulphur Springs water, a mineral water from springs of the same name in Virginia. It contains a large proportion of lime salts and sulphates, and is cathartic. (See also barley water, rice water, lead water, rice-water, etc.)

water (wa'ter), v. [< ME. wateren, weteren, watren, wattren, wattrenn, wettren, < AS. wæ-tran, water, = D. wateren, water, make water, = MHG. ne. zern, G. wassern, irrigate, water (cf. Icel. vatna = Sw. vattna = Dan. vande, water; from the noun]. I. trans. 1. To put water into or upon; moisten, dilute, sprinkle, or soak with water; specifically, to irrigate.

All the ground throughout the lande of Egipt is continually watred by the water which upon ye 25 day of August is turned into the cuttres round about.
E. Webbe, Travels (ed. Arber), p. 22.

Set fruit trees round, nor ever indulge thy sloth,
But water them, and urge their shady growth.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. To supply with water for drinking; feed with water: said of animals.

At times have I watered my steed
Wi the water o Weerie's well.
The Water o Weerie's Well (Child's Ballads, I. 190).

If the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool the custom is not destroyed though they do not use it for ten years.
Blackstone, Com., I., Int., III.

3. To produce by moistening and pressure upon (silk, or other fabric) a sort of pattern on which there is a changeable play of light. See watered silk, under watered.

These things [silk and cotton goods] are watered, which very much adds to their beauty; they are made also at Aleppo, but not in so great perfection.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 125.

4. To increase the nominal capital of a corporation by the issue of new shares without a corresponding increase of actual capital. Justification for such a transaction is usually sought by claiming that the property and franchises have increased in value, so that an increase of stock is necessary in order fairly to represent existing capital. [Commercial slang.]

The stock of some of the railways has been watered to an alarming extent by the issue of fictitious capital, existing only on paper, though ranking equally for dividend — when money for this is forthcoming. Usually, the paper stock has been sold to unwary purchasers.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 857.

To water one's plants!, to shed tears. [Old slang.]

Neither water thou thy plants, in that thou departest from thy pipes me, neither stand in a mammering whether it bee best to depart or not.
Euphues to Philautus, M. 4. (Nares.)

II. intrans. 1. To give out, emit, discharge, or secrete water.

If they suffer the dusts of bribes to be thrown into their sight, their eyes will water and twinkle, and fall at last to blind connivance. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 200.

his eyes would have watered with a true feeling over the sale of a widow's furniture.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, I. 12.

12. To gather saliva as a symptom of appetite: said of the mouth or teeth, and in figurative use noting vehement desire or craving.

In theyr mindes they conceaued a hope of a daintie banquet, And, espying their enemies a farre off, beganne to swallow theyr spettle as their mouthes watered for greedines of theyr pray.
Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 181).

"Oh, my little green gooseberry, my teeth waters at ye!
Farquhar, Love and a Bottle, v. 1.

The dog's mouth waters only at the sight of food, but the gourmand's mouth will also water at the thought of it.
J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 57.

3. To get or take in water: as, the ship put into port to water; specifically, to drink water.

We watered at the Canaries, we traded with the Salvages at Dominica. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 150.

Were I a poet, by Hippocrene I swear (which was a certain well where all the Muses watered), etc.
Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

A Mischance befel the Horse, which lamed him as he went a watering to the Seine.
Howell, Letters, I. i. 17.

water-adder (wâ'tėr-ad'ėr), n. An aquatic serpent like, or mistaken for, an adder. (a) The water-moccasin, a venomous snake. See moccasin[2] (with cut). [U. S.] (b) The commonest water-snake of the United States, Tropidonotus (oftener Nerodia) sipedon. This is a large, stout serpent, roughened with keeled scales, and somewhat spotted or blotched, like an adder, especially when young. It bites quite hard in self-defense when attacked, but is not poisonous. [U. S.]

waterage (wâ'tėr-āj), n. [< water + -age.] Money paid for transportation by water.

water-agrimony (wâ'tėr-ag'ri-mō-ni), n. An old name of the bur-marigold, Bidens tripartita or B. cernua.

water-aloe (wâ'tėr-al'ō), n. Same as water-soldier.

water-analysis (wâ'tėr-a-nal'i-sis), n. In chem., the analysis of waters, either to determine their potable quality, or fitness for use in boilers or otherwise in the arts.

water-anchor (wâ'tėr-ang'kor), n. A sail distended by spars and thrown overboard to hold a vessel's head to the wind and retard her drifting; a drag-anchor. Also called sea-anchor.

water-antelope (wa'tėr-an'tę-lōp), n. One of numerous different African antelopes, as of the genera Elotragus, Kobus, and some others, which frequent marshy or reedy places; a reed-buck; a water-buck. See cuts under nagor and nsu-nsu.

water-apple (wâ'tėr-ap'l), n. The custard-apple, Anona reticulata.

water-arum (wâ'tėr-ā'rum), n. See Calla, 1.

water-ash (wâ'tėr-ash), n. 1. A small tree, Fraxinus platycarpa, without special value, found in deep river-swamps from Virginia to Texas and in the West Indies. — 2. The black hoop- or ground-ash, Fraxinus sambucifolia, of wet grounds in the eastern half of North America. Its tough pliable dark brown wood is largely used for interior finish and cabinet-work, for making hoops and baskets, etc.

water-avens (wâ'tėr-av'enz), n. A plant, Geum rivale, found in wet meadows northward in both hemispheres. It grows some 2 feet high, and is noticeable for its nodding flowers (large for the genus), with purplish-orange petals, and, in fruit, for its feathery styles and persistent purple calyx. Also purple avens.

water-back (wâ'tėr-bak), n. 1. An iron chamber or reservoir or a combination of pipes, at the back of a cooking-range or other fireplace, to utilize the heat of the fire in providing a supply of hot water. — 2. In brewing, a cistern which holds the water used for mashing.

water-bag (wâ'tėr-bag), n. 1. The rejectum of the stomach of the camel and other Camelidæ, corresponding to the honeycomb tripe of ordinary ruminants. — 2. In her., a bearing representing a vessel for holding water, usually drawn as if a leather bucket. It differs from water-bouget, or bouget, in retaining the form of the actual vessel.

water-bailage† (wâ'tėr-bā'lāj), n. Bailage upon goods transported by water. See bailage.

Water baylage, a tax demanded upon all goods by the City, imported and exported.
Pepys, Diary, Jan. 20, 1668-9. (Davies.)

water-bailiff (wâ'tėr-bā'lif), n. 1. A custom-house officer in a port town whose duty is to search ships.

Out of patience with the whole tribe of custom-house extortioners, boatmen, tide-waiters, and water-bailiffs, that beset me on all sides, worse than a swarm of musquetoes, I proceeded a little too roughly to brush them away with my mittan.
Cumberland, West Indian, i. 5.

2. A former officer of the London corporation who saw to the observance of the statutes and by-laws applicable to the river Thames. — 3. See water-bailiff, under bailiff.

water-balance (wâ'tėr-bal'ans), n. An old form of water-raising apparatus, consisting of a series of troughs one above another, supported in a hanging frame, and oscillating like a pendulum. As the frame swings, the water dipped by the lowest trough runs into that next above, and in the return motion it is emptied in turn from that into the next above again, and so on.
E. H. Knight.

water-bar (wâ'tėr-bär), n. A ridge crossing a hill or mountain road, and leading aside water flowing down the road.

They . . . were descending with careful reining in and bearing back, the steep, long plunges for these mountain roads are like cataract beds, and travellers are like the falling water — where the only break and safety were the water bars, humping up across the way at frequent intervals.
Mrs. Whitney, Odd or Even? xiii.

water-barometer (wâ'tėr-bą-rom'e-tėr), n. A barometer in which water is substituted for mercury. See barometer.

If a long pipe, closed at one end only, were emptied of air, filled with water, the open end kept in water, and the pipe held upright, the water would rise in it nearly twenty-eight feet. In this way water barometers have been made.
Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 12.

water-barrel (wâ'tėr-bar'el), n. 1. A water-cask. — 2. In mining, a large wrought-iron barrel with a self-acting valve in the bottom, used in drawing water where there are no pumps. [South Staffordshire, Eng.]

water-barrow (wâ'ter-bar'o), n. A two-wheeled barrow carrying a tank, often swung on trunnions, used by gardeners and others; a water barrel.
E. H. Knight.

water-basil (wâ'tėr-baz'il), n. In gem-cutting, a uniform bevel cut around the top of a stone, after the grinding of the upper flat table.

water-bath (wa'tėr-bath), n. 1. A bath composed of water, in contradistinction to a vapor bath. — 2. In chem., a vessel containing water which is heated to a certain temperature, over which chemical preparations or solutions are placed in suitable vessels to be digested, evaporated, or dried at the given temperature. — 3. Same as bain-marie.

Water-baths of various forms (A, B, C) with a detachable ring (a) and cover (b), in one case holding different sizes of vessels (c, d, e).

water-battery (wa'tėr-bat'er-i), n. 1. In elect. See battery. — 2. In fort., a battery nearly on a level with the water.

water-beadle† (wa'tėr-bē'dl), n. A water-bailiff.

In the year 1700 one S. Smith, who is described as water beadle of St Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey, left a legacy to his nephew, Matthew Smith, of this parish.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 487.

water-bean (wa'tėr-ben), n. A plant of the genus Nelumbo.

water-bear (wâ'ter-bār), n. A bear animalcule. See Macrobiotidæ, Arctiscæ, and Tardigrada.

water-bearer (wâ'tėr-bār'ėr), n. [< ME. watyr berare = Sw. vattenbärare = Dan. vandbærer; < water + bearer.] 1. One who carries water; specifically, one whose business is the conveying of water from a spring, well, river, etc., to purchasers or consumers.

Yf there be neuer a wyse man, make a water bearer, a tinker, a cobler, . . . comptauller of the nayte.
Latimer, Sermon on the Plough.

2. [cap.] In astron., a sign of the zodiac. See Aquarius.

water-bearing (wâ'ter-bār'ing), n. A journal-box having in the lower part a groove communicating with a pipe through which water under heavy pressure is admitted beneath the journal, which it raises slightly from its bearings. As the journal revolves, the water flows in an exceedingly thin film or sheet between it and the bearings, forming a very efficient lubricant. See cut in next column. Also called pulser-bearing and hydraulic joint.

Water-bearing.

a, wheel; b, b, bearings for the shaft; c, c, hollow supports for bearings; d, d, pipes and branches through which water is forced into the hollow supports; e, e, slot through which the water passes into the bearings with sufficient force to support completely the weight of a and the shaft.

water-bed (wâ'ter-bed), n. A large india-rubber mattress filled with water, on which a very sick person, or one who is bedridden, is sometimes placed, to avoid the production of bed-sores. Also called hydrostatic bed.

water-beech (wâ'ter-bēch), n. 1. A small tree, the American hornbeam, Carpinus Caroliniana so named from its growing in wet ground, and from its resemblance, especially in its bark, to the beech. Also called blue-beech. — 2. Improperly, the sycamore, or American plane-tree, Platanus occidentalis, growing on low grounds, and having reddish wood like that of the beech.

water-beetle (wâ'tėr-bē'tl), n. A beetle which lives in the water. Such beetles belong mainly to the families Amphizoidæ, Haliplidæ, Dytiscidæ, and Gyrinidæ of the adephagous series, and the Hydrophilidæ of the clavicorn series. The first four are sometimes grouped under the name Hydradephaga, as distinguished from the Geadephaga, or ground-beetles and tiger-beetles. A few other beetles are to some extent aquatic; but the term is restricted to the species of the five families named. See these family names, and cuts under Dytiscus, Gyrinidæ, Hydrobius, Hydrophilidæ, and Hydrous. Compare water-bug.

water-bellows (wâ'tėr-bel'ōz), n. A form of blower used in gas-machines, and formerly to supply a blast for furnaces. It consists essentially of an inverted vessel suspended in water, on raising which in the water air is drawn in through an inlet valve, while on lowering the vessel the air is forced out again through another valve. Such vessels are usually placed in pairs, and are lowered and raised alternately. The device is also used for supplying air to the pipes of a pneumatic clock system. The central clock lifts the inverted tank, and, letting it fall once a minute, sends a puff of air through the pipes, and thus moves all the hands of the clocks connected with the system.

water-bells (wa'tėr-belz), n. The European white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphæa alba). Britten and Holland. [North. Eng.]

water-betony (wâ'tėr-bet'o-ni), n. See Scrophularia.

water-bird (wâ'tėr-bėrd), n. In ornith., an aquatic as distinguished from a terrestrial or aerial bird; in the plural, the grallatorial and natatorial or wading and swimming birds, collectively distinguished from land-birds. The term reflects an obsolete classification in which birds were divided into three main groups, called Aves aereæ, Aves terrestres, and Aves aquaticæ. These divisions are abolished, but the English names of two of them, land bird and water bird, continue in current use because of their convenience. Compare waterfowl, 2.

water-biscuit (wa'tėr-bis'kit), n. A biscuit or cracker made of flour and water.

water-blackbird (wâ'tėr-blak'bėrd), n. The water ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. See Cinclus and dipper, 5. [Ireland and Scotland.]

water-blast (wa'tėr-blast'), n. In mining, a method of ventilation, in which an apparatus is employed which is in the same in principle as the trompe of the Catalan forge. See trompe[2].

It [the water-blast] is not much employed nowadays, and gives only a low useful effect.
Callon, Lectures on Mining (trans.), II. 441.

water-blebs (wâ'tėr-blebz), n. Pemphigus.

water-blink (wâ'tėr-blingk), n. A spot of cloud hanging in arctic regions over open water, the presence of which it serves to indicate.

The water blink consists of dark clouds or spots on the horizon, and is formed by the ascending mists which gather in clouds and hang over pools of water. It is always the herald of advance, and is eagerly looked for.
Schley and Soley, Rescue of Greely, p. 180.

water-blinks (wa'ter-blingks), n. Same as blinking-chickweed.

water-blob (wâ'tėr-blob), n. A local name of the marsh marigold, Caltha palustris, of the white water lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphæa alba), and of the yellow water-lily, Nymphæa (Nuphar) lutea. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-blue (wâ'tėr-blö), n. A coal-tar color used in dyeing, and similar to soluble blue. It is principally used for dyeing cotton.

water-board (wâ'tėr-bōrd), n. A board set up on the edge of a boat to keep off spray, etc.

water-boat (wâ'ter-bōt), n. A boat carrying water in bulk for the supply of ships.

water-boatman (wâ'tėr-bōt'man), n. 1. The boat-fly or boat-insect, an aquatic bug of the family Notonectidæ: so called because these insects move in the water like a boat propelled by oars. They are more fully called back-swimming water boatmen, and also back swimmers, because they row themselves about on their backs with their long feathered oar-like legs. Some species are very common in ponds and brooks in the United States, and are often put in aquariums to exhibit their silvery colors and curious actions. N. undulata is a characteristic example.

Back-swimming Water-boatman (Notonecta undulata, dorsal view, three times natural size

2. An aquatic bug of the family Corisidæ. All the North American species belong to the genus Corixa, as C. undulata.

water-borne (wâ'tėr-bôrn), a. Borne or conveyed by water; carried in a boat or vessel; floated.

Thus merchandise might be waterborne from the channel to the Mediterranean.
Motley, Hist. Netherlands, IV. 147.

The stone of which it [bridge from the Strand to the opposite shore of the Thames] was constructed, being water borne, had to pay this tax.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, IV. 394.

Water-borne goods, goods carried on shipboard.

water-bottle (wâ'tėr-bot'l), n. A bottle made of glass, skin, rubber, or other material, and designed for holding water.

water-bouget (wâ'tėr-bō jet), n. In her., same as bouget, 2.

water-bound (wâ'tėr-bound), a. Impeded, hindered, or hemmed in by water, as in case of a flood, heavy rains, etc.

While water bound, it [a foraging party] was attacked by guerrillas.
New York Tribune, April 30, 1862.

water-box (wâ'tėr boks), n. A bottom or side of a furnace consisting of a compartment of iron kept filled with water. It serves to prevent the burning out of the iron.

water-brain (wâ'ter bran), n. Gid or staggers of sheep, caused by the brain-worm.

water-brain fever. Meningitis; acute hydrocephalus.

water-brash (wâ'tėr-brash), n. Same as pyrosis.

water-braxy (wâ'tėr-brak'si), n. A disease of sheep in which there is hemorrhage into the peritoneal cavity. See braxy.

water-break (wâ'tėr-brak), n. A wavelet or ripple. [Rare.]

Many a silvery water break
Above the golden gravel.
Tennyson, The Brook.

water-breather (wâ'tėr-bre'ᵺėr), n. Any branchiate which breathes water by means of gills.

water-bridge (wa'tėr brij), n. A fire-bridge which also forms part of the water space of a boiler. If dependent from the boiler, it is called a hanging bridge; if it has flue-space above and below, it is a midfeather. Also called water-table.

water-brose (wâ'tėr-broz), n. Brose made of meal and water only. [Scotch.]

I'll sit down o'er my scanty meal,
Be't water brose or musiin kail,
Wi' cheerfu' face.
Burns, To James Smith.

water-buck (wâ'tėr buk), n. A water antelope, especially a kob, as Kobus ellipsiprymnus, which abounds in some African lowlands, as in Nyassa-land. Another water-buck is Cervicapra redunca. See kob, and cuts under sasin and nagor.

Among the ruminants is the dangerous buffalo (Bubalus caffer) the never to be sufficiently admired giraffe, the gnu, the pallah, the waterbuck (Cobus).
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 472.

water-buckler (wâ'tėr buk'lėr), n. Same as water-shield.

water-budget (wa'tėr-buj ot), n. In her., same as bouget, 2. Also called dosser.

water-buffalo (wâ'ter-buf'a-lo), n. See water-ox.

water-bug (wa'ter bug), n. 1. Any true bug of the heteropterous section Hydrocorisæ or Cryptocerata, including those which live beneath the surface of the water, and belong to the families Corisidæ, Notonectidæ, Nepidæ, Belostomidæ, and Naucoridæ. See these words, and cuts under Belostoma and Ranatra.—2. Any one of certain true bugs of the heteropterous section Amphicorisæ, including those which live mainly on the surface of the water, and which belong to the families Hydrobatidæ, Veliidæ, Limnobatidæ, Saldidæ, and Hydrometridæ. See these words.—3. The croton-bug or German cockroach, Blatta (Phyllodromia) germanica: so called from its preference for water-pipes and moist places in houses. See cuts under croton-bug and Blattidæ.

Water bug (Limnobates linearis), about three times natural size.

Giant water-bug, any member of the Belostomidæ.

water-butt (wâ'tėr-but), n. 1. A large open-headed cask, usually set up on end in an outhouse or close to a dwelling, serving as a reservoir for rain- or pipe-water.—2. A water-beetle, as Dytiscus marginatus and related species.

water-cabbage (wâ'tėr-kab'āj), n. The American white water lily, Castalia (Nymphæa) odorata.

water-calamint (wâ'tėr-kal'a-mint), n. The corn mint, Mentha arvensis.

water-caltrop (wâ'tėr-kal'trop), n. 1. The water-nut, Trapa.—2. A book-name of the pondweeds Potamogeton densus and P. crispus.

water-can (wâ'tėr kan), n. The yellow water-lily, Nymphæa (Nuphar) lutea, or the European white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphæa alba); so named from the shape of the seed-vessel. [Prov. Eng.]

water-cancer, water-canker (wâ'tėr-kan'sėr, -kang'kėr), n. Gangrenous stomatitis, or noma. See noma.

water-cap (wa'tėr-kap), n. 1. A form of cylindrical diaphragm of copper in the time-fuse of a shell, intended to prevent the fuse from being extinguished by water in ricochet firing.—2. A bird of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ, the species and genera of which are numerous. Also water-chat. See cut under Fluvicola.

water-carpet (wâ'tėr-kär'pet), n. 1. A British geometrid moth, Cidaria suffumata.—2. An American golden-saxifrage, Chrysosplenium Americanum, which spreads on the surface of springs and streams. Wood, Class-book of Bot.

water-carriage (wâ'tėr-kar āj), n. 1. Transportation or conveyance by water.

In the important matter of water carriage the farmer in the Canadian Far West has unrivalled advantages.
W. F. Rae, Newfoundland to Manitoba, xiii.

2. The conducting or conveying of water from place to place.

In the water carriage system each house has its own network of drain-pipes, soil-pipes and waste-pipes, which lead from the basins, sinks, closets, and gullies within and about the house to the common sewer.
Encyc. Brit., XXI. 714.

3. Means of conveyance by water, collectively; vessels; boats. [Rare.]

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in boats made of earthenware.
Arbuthnot.

water-carrier (wâ'tėr-kar'i-ėr), n. One who or that which carries water; specifically, an arrangement of wires or the like on which a bucket of water, raised from a well, etc., may be conveyed wherever required, as to a house.—Water-carriers' paralysis, paralysis of the musculo-spiral nerve.

water-cart (wâ'tėr-kart), n. A cart carrying water for sale or for watering streets, gardens, etc. For the latter purpose the cart bears a large cask or tank containing water, which, by means of a tube or tubes perforated with holes, is sprinkled on roads and streets to prevent dust from rising, or in gardens to water plants.

water-cask (wâ'tėr-kâsk), n. A strong light cask used for transporting drinking-water, especially on sea going ships. Compare water-tank and breaker.

water-casterer (wâ'tėr-kās'tėr), n. A physician who professed to discover the diseases of his patients by "casting" or examining their urine; commonly, a quack.

Wates much in physicke and her water-caster.
John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

water-cat (wâ'tėr-kat), n. The nair, or Oriental otter, Lutra nair, translating a Mahratta name.

water-cavy (wâ'tėr-kā'vi), n. The capibara.

water-celery (wâ'tėr-sel'e-ri), n. 1. The cursed crowfoot, Ranunculus sceleratus, of temperate Europe, Asia, and North America. It has a stout, hollow stem a foot or two high, the lower leaves stalked and three-lobed, the petals small, and the carpels very numerous. The juice is very acrid, and is used by beggars to produce sores; but the plant is in some places eaten after boiling.

2. See Vallisneria.

water-cell (wâ'tėr-sel), n. 1. One of several diverticula of the paunch of the camel, serving to store up water. See water-bag, 1.

These, the so-called water-cells, serve to strain off from the contents of the paunch, and to retain in store, a considerable quantity of water.
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 388.

2. A voltaic cell in which the liquid is pure water.

water-centiped (wâ'tėr-sen'ti-ped), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-charger (wâ'tėr-chär'jėr), n. A device for filling the water-passages of a pump, so that it may act promptly when started.

water-chat (wâ'tėr-chat), n. 1. A bird of the family Henicuridæ.—2. A South American tyrant-flycatcher of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ, of which there are many genera and species; a water-cap. See cut under Fluvicola.

water-check (wâ'tėr-chek), n. A check-valve for regulating a supply of water, as in the Gifford injector. E. H. Knight.

water-chestnut (wâ'tėr-ches'nut), n. See Trapa.

water-chevrotain (wâ'tėr-shev'rō-tān), n. An aquatic African traguline, Hyomoschus aquaticus, belonging to the family Tragulidæ, and thus related to the kanchil and napu.

water-chicken (wa'ter-chik'en), n. The common gallinule, Gallinula galeata. Ralph and Bagg, 1886. [Oneida county, New York.]

water-chickweed (wâ'tėr-chik'wēd), n. 1. A small, smooth, and green tufted herb, Montia fontana, found throughout Europe, in northern Asia, from arctic America down the west coast to California, and in the Andes to their southern extremity. Also blinking-chickweed (which see).—2. A name for Callitriche verna and Stellaria (Malachium) aquatica.

water-chinkapin (wâ'tėr-ching'ka-pin), n. The American nelumbo, Nelumbo lutea, or primarily its edible nut-like seed: so named from the resemblance of the seeds to chinkapins. They are borne immersed in pits in the large top-shaped receptacle. Also wankapin, yonco-pin.

water-cicada (wâ'ter si-kā'dą), n. A water-boatman.

water-clam (wâ'ter-klam), n. A bivalve of the family Spondylidæ; a thorn-oyster. See cut under Spondylus.

water-clock (wâ'tėr-klok), n. A clepsydra.

A clepsydra or waterclock, which played upon Flutes the hours of the night at a time when they could not be seen on the index.
Dr. Burney, Hist. Music, I. 512.

water-closet (wâ'tėr-kloz'et), n. A privy having some contrivance for carrying off the discharges through a waste-pipe below by the agency of water.

water-cock (wâ'tėr-kok), n. The kora, Gallicrex cristata, a large dark gallinule of India, Ceylon, Java, and islands eastward, horned with a red caruncle on top of the head.

water-colly (wâ'tėr-kol'i), n. The water-ousel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Prov. Eng.]

water-color (wâ'tėr-kul'or), n. 1. Painting, especially artistic painting, with pigments for which water and not oil is used as a solvent.—2. A pigment adapted or prepared for painting in this method.

Some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents; . . .
And never yet did insurrection want
Such water colours to impaint his cause.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 80.

Water-colours are sold in four forms, in cakes, pastilles, pans, and tubes.
Hamerton, Graphic Arts, xxii.

3. A painting executed by this method, or with pigments of this kind.

The Art Galleries opened every year, and, besides the National Gallery, there were the Society of British Artists, the Exhibition of Water Colours, and the British Institution in Pall Mall.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 126.

Also used attributively in all senses.

water-colored (wâ'tėr-kul'ord), a. Of the color of water; like water. [Rare.]

The other [sort of cherry], which hangs on the branch like grapes, is water colored within, of a flattish shape, and greedily devoured by the small birds.
Beverley, Virginia, iv. § 22.

water-coloring (wâ'tėr-kul'ọr-ing), n. The use of water-colors, or work executed in water-colors or pigments of similar nature. [Trade use.]

The Dutch and rose pinks are sometimes used, but they cannot be relied upon in water-colouring.
Paper-hanger, p. 76.

water-colorist (wâ'tėr-kul'ọr-ist), n. One who paints in water-colors.

water-comparator (wâ'tėr-kom'pạ-rā-tọr), n. An apparatus for comparing thermometers with a standard, consisting essentially of a reservoir containing water, with means for obtaining different temperatures and for maintaining the whole mass at the same temperature during a series of observations.

water-cooler (wâ'tėr-kö'lėr), n. Any device for cooling water; especially, a vessel with non-conducting walls in which water for drinking is placed with ice. Such coolers are fitted with a faucet in the lower part, for drawing off the water. The effect of other coolers is due to evaporation through their porous walls. See alla, 3.

Water-cooler.
a, outer shell; b, iron containing filling; c, inner shell.

water-core (wâ'tėr-kōr), n. 1. In founding, a hollow core placed inside the mold, within which a current of cold water can be made to pass to absorb the heat and hasten the cooling of the casting: used especially to cool the bore of cast guns.—2. In some forms of car-axle, a quantity of water in a hermetically closed cavity, intended to take up heat from the journals.—3. A blemish, common in some varieties of the apple, in which the flesh about the core assumes a watery, translucent appearance.

watercourse (wâ'tėr-kōrs), n. 1. A stream of water; a river or brook.

The woods climb up boldly along the hillsides, over shadowing every little dingle and watercourse.
Gerkie, Geol. Sketches, iii

2. A channel or canal made for the conveyance of water, or serving for conveyance by water.

Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters. Job xxxviii. 25

Scouring the water courses through the cities,
A fine peripharsis of a kennel-raker
Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, iii. 1.

3. In law, a stream of water, usually flowing in a definite channel having a bed and sides or banks, and usually discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. Bigelow. The condition of being occasionally dry does not deprive it of the character of a watercourse; but occasional flows of water caused by unusual rains, or melting of snow, and following a channel which is usually dry, do not constitute a watercourse. The owner of a watercourse has, within certain limits, a right to have it flow substantially unimpaired by the owners above and below. A grant of a watercourse may mean a grant of (1) the easement or the right to the running of water; (2) the channel which contains the water, the pipe, or drain; or (3) the land over which the water flows. George Jessel, Master of the Rolls water-cow (wâ'tėr-kou), n. The common domestic Indian buffalo, Bos bubalus or Bubalus buffelus: the water-buffalo: so called by English residents in translating a Chinese name, from the habit it has of seeking the water to escape the annoyance of insects. It is not a distinct species. The same habit is strongly marked in the African or Cape buffalo, B. cafer, and may be observed of domestic cattle anywhere. See cuts under buffalo.

water-cracker (wâ'tėr-krak'ėr), n. 1. A water-biscuit.—2. A Prince Rupert's drop. See detonating bulb, under detonating.

A water cracker, as they [Prince Rupert's drops] are called in the factory Sci. Amer., N. S., LVI. 161.

water-craft (wâ'tėr-kraft), n. Vessels and boats plying on water.

water-crake (wâ'tėr-krāk'), n. 1. The common spotted crake of Europe, Porzana maruetta distinguished from the land-crake, Crex pratensis.—2. The water-rail, Rallus aquaticus, Montagu.—3†. The water-ouzel: a misnomer. Willughby; Ray. [Local, Eng.]

water-crane (wâ'tėr-krān), n. 1. An apparatus for supplying water from an elevated tank, as to the tender of a locomotive.—2. A crane operated by hydraulic power.

water-cress (wâ'tėr-kres), n. [< ME. water-kresse, watyrcressr, waterkirs; < water + cress.] A creeping herb of springs and streams, Nasturtium officinale, from antiquity used as a spring salad, and now very widely cultivated. See cress and Nasturtium (with cut). The name is extended to the genus—N. palustre, a woody species, being called marsh or yellow water-cress, or marsh-cress.

water-crow (wâ'tėr-krō), n. 1. The common European coot, Fulica atra: from its blackish plumage. [Local, Eng.]—2. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.]—3. The darter, snake-bird, or water-turkey, Plotus anhinga. [Southern U. S.]

water-crowfoot (wâ'tėr-krō'fụt), n. The name of several aquatic species of Ranunculus, primarily R. aquatilis, the common white water-crowfoot, a plant found through the north temperate zone and in Australia. The yellow water-crowfoot is R. multifidus.

watercup (wâ'tėr-kup), n. 1. The pennywort, Hydrocotyle: by translation of the genus name.—2. The trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flava.

water-cure (wâ'tėr-kur), n. Hydrotherapy or balneotherapy: a system of medical treatment by means of water in any form or mode of application.

water-deck (wâ'tėr-dek), n. A painted piece of canvas used for covering the saddle and bridle, girths, etc., of a dragoon's horse. [Eng.]

water-deer (wâ'tėr-dēr), n. 1. A small Chinese musk-deer, Hydropotes inermis, of somewhat aquatic habits. It resembles the ordinary musk-deer in general, being of small size, hornless in both sexes, and Chinese Water-deer (Hydropotes inermis).

with protrusive upper canines in the male; but some technical characters cause it to fall in another genus.

2. The African water-chevrotain. This is a tragulod, quite different from the foregoing.

water-deerlet (wa'tėr-dēr'let), n. The African water-chevrotain.

water-devil (wâ'tėr-dev'l), n. 1. The larva or grub of various aquatic insects, as of the genus Hydrophilus. H. piceus is a coleopterous British species.—2. The dobson or hellgrammite. See Corydalus, and cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-dock (wâ'tėr-dok), n. A tall dock, Rumex Hydrolapathum, of temperate Europe and Asia. Also called horse- or water-sorrel. R. aquaticus also appears under this name. The great or American water-dock is R. Britannica (R. orbiculatus).

water-doctor (wâ'tėr-dok'tọr), n. 1. A hydropathist. [Colloq.]—2. One of a former school of medical practitioners the members of which pretended that all diseases could be diagnosticated by simple inspection of the urine.

water-dog (wâ'tėr-dog), n. 1. A dog accustomed to or delighting in the water, or trained to go into the water in pursuit of game, as a water-spaniel.—2. One of various kinds of large salamanders, a mud-puppy. See axolotl, Menopoma, and cut under hellbender. Also water-puppy.—3. A small, irregular, floating cloud in a rainy season, supposed to indicate rain. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Water dogs . . . dark clouds that seem to travel through the air by themselves and indicate a storm. Halliwell makes them identical with mares tails, but they are distinct things in survey language.
G. J. Gomme, Survey Provincialisms (Eng. Dial. Soc.)

4. A sailor, especially an old sailor; a salt; one thoroughly accustomed to life in and on the water. [Colloq.]

The Sandwich Islanders are complete water-dogs, and therefore very good in boating.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 96.

water-dragon (wâ'tėr-drag'on), n. An old name of the water arum, Calla palustris, also assigned to Caltha palustris, perhaps by confusion of the Latin names. Britten and Holland.

water-drain (wâ'tėr-drān), n. A drain or channel through which water may run.

water-drainage (wâ'tėr-drā'nāj), n. The draining off of water.

water-dressing (wâ'tėr-dres'ing), n. The constant application of water to a wound, by immersion, irrigation, or compresses.

water-drink (wâ'tėr-dringk), n. [< ME. water-drinch; < water + drink.] A drink of water.

Alla ill thu drunnke waterdrinnch.
Orrmulum (ed. White), l. 14483.

water-drinker (wâ'tėr-dring'kėr), n. [< ME. water drynkare; < water + drinker.] 1. A drinker of water.

Water drinkare Aquolabus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

2. An advocate of abstinence from intoxicating liquors: a prohibitionist. [Colloq.]

water-drip (wâ'tėr-drip), n. A pan or receptacle to receive the waste water from a water-cooler. Car Builder's Dict.

water-drop (wâ'tėr-drop), n. A drop of water; specifically, a tear.

Let not women's weapons water-drops Stain my man's cheeks! Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 280.

water-dropper (wa'tėr-drop'ėr), n. A contrivance devised by Sir William Thomson, and used particularly in the measurement of the electrical potential of the atmosphere. It consists of an insulated metallic cylinder containing water, with a projecting nozle, from which the water is allowed to drop freely. Each drop carries with it a small charge, and finally the spout and connecting rod gain the potential of the air, this may then be measured by a quadrant electrometer.

water-dropwort (wâ'tėr-drop'wėrt), n. The umbelliferous plant Œnanthe pimpinuloides, or any plant of that genus. The hemlock water-dropwort is the highly poisonous Œ. crocata.

water-dust (wâ'tėr-dust), n. A collective name for the extremely minute droplets or particles of water which compose clouds and haze. [Rare.]

water-eagle (wâ'tėr-ē'gl), n. The fish-hawk or osprey. [Rare.]

watered (wâ'tėrd), a. Marked with or exhibiting waved lines or bands bearing some resemblance to those which might be produced by the action of water. Also waved. Watered silk, silk upon which a wave-like and changeable pattern has been produced by moistening and pressure. The name is sometimes restricted to material of which the pattern is confined to parallel lines, as distinguished from moire antique. See moire and moiré.

water-elder (wâ'tėr-el'dėr), n. The guelder-rose, Viburnum Opulus.

water-elephant (wâ'tėr-el'ẹ-fant), n. The hippopotamus or river-horse.

water-elevator (wa'tėr-el'ẹ-vā-tọr), n. 1. Any device for raising buckets in wells, or for lifting water to a higher level for purposes of irrigation, etc.—2. A lift or elevator in which the operating force is the weight or pressure of water; a hydraulic elevator.

water-elm (wâ'tėr elm), n. The common white elm, Ulmus Americana.

water-engine (wâ'tėr-en'jin), n. An engine to raise water; also, an engine propelled by water.

waterer (wâ'tėr-ėr), n. 1. One who waters, in any sense of the word: as, a stock waterer.

Neither the planter nor the waterer have any power to make it [religion] take root and grow in your hearts.
Locke, Paraphrase on 1 Cor. iii 7.

2. That with which one waters; a vessel, utensil, or other contrivance for sprinkling water on plants, watering animals, etc.

water-eringo (wâ'tėr-ẹ ring'gō), n. A plant, Eryngium yuccæfolium (E. aquaticum), otherwise called button-snakeroot. See Eryngium.

water-ermine (wâ'tėr-ėr'min), n. A British tiger-moth, Spilosoma urticæ, chiefly white and yellow marked with black. [Eng.]

water-extractor (wâ'tėr eks-trak'tọr), n. In dyeing, a rotatory apparatus for freeing dyed goods from water by the action of centrifugal force.

waterfall (wâ'tėr fâl), n. [= D. waterval = Gr. wasserfall (cf. Sw. vattenfall, Dan. vandfald); as water + fall.] 1. A steep fall or flow of water from a height; a cascade; a cataract.

Down shower the gamboiling waterfalls
Tennyson, Sea Fairies.

2. A neck-tie or scarf with long drooping ends. [Colloq.]

He was suddenly confronted in the walk by Benjamin, the Jew money lender, smoking a cigar, and dressed in a gaudy figured satin waistcoat and waterfall of the same material. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. iii.

3. A chignon. [Colloq.]

The brown silk net which she had supposed thoroughly trustworthy had given way all at once into a great hole under the waterfall, and the soft hair would fret itself through and threaten to stray audibly.
Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, iii.

water-farming (wa'tėr-fär'ming), n. The cultivation of plants growing in water.

A few miles away the native lotus grows luxuriantly, a relic, it is believed, of Indian water farming.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 808.

water-feather, water-featherfoil (wâ'tėr-feтн'ėr, -feтн''ėr-foil), n. The featherfoil or water-violet Hottonia, especially the British species H. palustris: so named from its finely dissected submersed leaves.

water-fennel (wâ'tėr-fen'el), n. One of the water-dropworts, Œnanthe Phellandrium.

water-fern (wa'ter-fėrn), n. 1. A fern of the genus Osmunda; specifically, O. regalis.—2. A plant of the order Marsileaceæ.

water-fight (wa'tėr-fīt), n. A naval battle. [Rare.]

Cæsar . . . awaits at anchor the coming of his wind-float, mean while with his legatts and tribuns consulting and giving order to fitt all things for what might happen in such a various and floating water-fight as was to be expected. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

water-figwort (wâ'tėr-fig''wėrt), n. The common European figwort, Scrophularia nodosa.

water-filter (wâ'tėr-fil'tėr), n. An appliance for filtering water; a filter. Water-filter nut. Same as clearing nut.

water-finder (wa'tėr fin'der), n. One who practises rhabdomancy, or uses the divining-rod to discover water; a rhabdomist.

water-fire (wâ'tėr fīr), n. [Tr. of a Tamil name.] A low weed, Bergia ammannoides of the Elatinaceæ, found in rice fields and marshy grounds in the tropical Old World. The name alludes to a supposed aeridity.

water-flag (wa'ter flag), n. The yellow flag, Iris Pseudacorus. Also called yellow iris and flower-de-luce.

water-flannel (wâ'tėr flan'el), n. A felt-like substance composed of the matted filaments of some conferva or similar alga which multiplies in submerged meadows, and is deposited by the retiring waters.

water-flaxseed (wa'ter flaks'sed), n. The larger duckweed, Lemna polyrhiza, so called from the shape and minute size of the fronds.

water-flea (wâ'tėr-flē), n. One of numerous small or minute crustaceans which skip about in the water like fleas, as Daphnia pulex, any branchiopod. See Daphnoidæ, Cladocera, Cyclops.

water-float (wa'tėr-flōt), n. A float placed in a boiler, cistern, etc., to control a valve.

water-flood (wâ'tėr flud), n. [< ME. water flod, < AS. wæterflod, as water + flood.] A flood of water; an inundation.

Let not the water-flood overflow me. Ps. lxix. 15.

In the moneth of May, namely on the 3d day, came downe great water floods, by reason of sodaine showres of haile and raine. Stow, Annals, p. 768.

water-flounder (wa'tėr floun'der), n. The sand-flounder. [Local, U. S.]

waterflow (wa'tėr-flō), n. A flow or current of water; the amount of water flowing.

The work concludes with articles on the cost of hydraulic power, and upon meters for measuring waterflow. Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 247.

water-flowing (wâ'tėr-flō ing), a. Flowing like water; streaming. [Rare.]

My mercy dried their water-flowing tears. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 8. 43.

water-fly (wa'tėr flī), n. 1. Some winged aquatic insect; specifically, a member of the family Perlidæ; a stone-fly.—2. A source of petty annoyance; an insignificant but troublesome person or thing. [Rare.]

How the poor world is pestered with such water-flies, diminutives of nature! Shak., T. and C., v. 1. 35.

water-foot (wâ'tėr-fut), n. One of the ambulacral pedicels of an echinoderm; a tube foot.

water-fowl (wâ'tėr-foul), n. [< ME. water foul; < water + fowl.] 1. Same as water-birds.—2. In a restricted sense, swimming birds, especially those which, as the Anseres, are used for food or for any reason engage the attention of sportsmen.

water-fox (wa'tėr foks), n. The carp, Cyprinus carpio: so called from its supposed cunning. I. Walton. Compare water-sheep.

water-frame (wâ'tėr fram), n. The original spinning frame invented by Arkwright, which was driven by water-power (whence the name). Otherwise called throstle and throstle-frame. See cut in next column.

water-fright (wa'ter frīt), n. Hydrophobia.

water-fringe (wa'ter-frinj), n. See Limnanthemum.

water-furrow (wa'ter fur'o), n. [< ME. water-forwe, waterfowe, < water + furrow.] In agri., a deep furrow made for conducting water from ground and keeping it dry; an open drain.

Waterfowwe, in londe. Rigus, sulcus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

Arkwright's Water-frame.

water-furrow (wâ'tėr-fur'o), v. t. [< water-furrow, n.] To plow or open water-furrows in; drain by means of water-furrows.

Seed husbandly sowen, water furrow thy ground,
That rain when it cometh may run away round.
Tusser, October's Husbandry, st. 7.

water-gage (wa'tėr-gāj), n. 1. Any device for indicating the height of water in a reservoir, tank, boiler, or other vessel. The most common form is a glass tube placed on the front of a boiler, and connected at the top with a pipe opening into the steam-space above the water and below with a pipe opening into the water in the boiler. The water and steam fill the tube and indicate the height of the water in the boiler. See gage-cock. Also called water-indicator.

Water-gage.

a, upper pipe connecting with steam-space of boiler; b, lower pipe connecting with water-space; c, glass water-bar.

2. A wall or bank to restrain or hold back water.

water-gall (wâ'tėr-gâl), n. [Also dial. water-geal, water-gull; = G. wasser-galle, a cavity in the earth made by a torrent, a bog, quagmire, < wasser, water, + galle, seen also in G. regen-galle, an imperfect rainbow, end or fragment of a rainbow, an oxeye, water gall, weather gall, appar. in orig. like feel. galle, a defect, flaw, hence a barren spot: see *gall*².] 1. A cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water. Imp. Dict.—2. An appearance in the sky regarded as presaging the approach of rain; a rainbow-colored spot; an imperfectly formed or a secondary rainbow. Also called weather-gall.

And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky:
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1588.

The bright reason is but a low, obscure, and imperfect shadow thereof, as the water-rail is of the rain-bow.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 50.

I am told a second rainbow above the first is called in the Isle of Wight a water-gall.
Halliwell (under water-dogs).

water-gangt (wâ'tėr-gang), n. A trench or course for conveying a stream of water; a mill-race. Jamieson. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

water-gap (wa'ter gap), n. See gap, 2.

water-gas (wâ'tėr-gas), n. A gas, non-luminous in its pure form, derived in part from the decomposition of steam. The apparatus for making it consists of a furnace for anthracite coal or other fuel, connected at the top with a tower filled with loose brick and called a regenerator. The products of combustion pass through the regenerator and raise it to a white heat. Steam is then admitted below the furnace, and, passing upward through the fire and through the regenerator, is decomposed. While the steam is passing the furnace, either coal is fed to dust or crude naphtha is allowed to fall through the ascending steam on the fire. Complicated chemical reactions take place, the result being the formation of quantities of fixed gas. There are also other numerous gases closely allied to this. By one process the non-luminous gas is afterward enriched by the addition of a heavy oil, as petroleum or naphtha. Water-gas is commonly thus treated and used as an illuminating gas; but it is also used, in its non-luminous form, as a heating gas for cooking and other purposes.

water-gate (wâ'tėr-gāt), n. [ME. watergate; < water + *gate*¹.] 1. A gateway through which water passes, or a gate by which it may be excluded or confined; a flood-gate.

Fro heven, oute of the watergatis,
The revny storme felle down algatis.
Gower, Conf. Amant., iii.

2. A gate by which access is gained to a river, fountain, well, or other body or supply of water.

And at the fountain gate . . . they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water gate eastward. Neh. xii. 37.

As they reached the water-gate, the rain had ceased for a time, and a gleam of sunlight shone upon the river, and rested on the Queen's barge as it approached.
J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, iv.

3. A water-plug or valve. E. H. Knight.

water-gavel (wâ'tėr-gav'el), n. In Eng. law, a rent paid for fishing or any other benefit derived from a river.

water-germander (wâ'ter-jėr-man'dėr), n. A plant, Teucrium Scordium.

water-gilder (wâ'tėr-gil'dėr), n. One who practises the art of water-gilding.

water-gilding (wâ'tėr-gil'ding), n. Same as wash-gilding.

water-gillyflower (wâ'tėr-jil'i-flou-ėr), n. The water-violet, Hottonia palustris.

water-gladiole (wâ'tėr-glad'i-ōl), n. See flowering rush (under *rush*¹).

water-glass (wâ'tėr-glâs), n. 1. A water-clock or clepsydra.

Full time of defence measured by the water-glass.
Grote, Hist. Greece, ii. 72.

2. An instrument for making observations beneath the surface of water, consisting of a tube with a glass bottom; a water-telescope.

With a water glass over the side, you look down on the bright array of fishes, whose every movement you can note. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 180.

3. Same as soluble glass (which see, under glass).

Water-glass painting may be explained . . . very briefly. It is simply water-colour on dry plaster, fixed afterwards with a solution of flint applied to it in spray as the solution of gum lac is applied to a charcoal drawing.
Hamerton, Graphic Arts, p. 236.

water-glue (wa'ter-glō), n. Waterproof glue.

The strings [of bows] being made of verie good hempe, with a kinde of waterglewe to resist wet and moysture.
Sir J. Smyth, quoted in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 54.

water-god (wa'tėr god), n. In myth., a deity that presides over the waters, or over some particular body, stream, or fountain of water.

water-grampus (wa'ter gram'pus), n. Same as grampus, 4.

water-grass (wa'tėr-gras), n. 1. The manna-grass, Glyceria fluitans. [Fishermen's name.]—2. A very succulent grass, Paspalum laxe. [Southern U. S.]—3. The water-cress, Nasturtium officinale. [Ireland.]—4 Species of Equisetum.—5. The velvet-grass, Holcus. [Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-gruel (wâ'ter-grō'el), n. Gruel made of water and meal, flour, etc., and eaten without milk; thin or weak gruel.

I could eat water-gruel with thee a month for this jest, my dear togue. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1.

Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel
Upon the Strength of Water Gruel?
Prior, Alma, iii.

water-guard (wa'ter-gard), n. A river or harbor police; customs officers detailed to watch ships in order to prevent smuggling or other violations of law.

water-gull (wa'tėr-gul), n. A dialectal form of water-gall.

water-gum (wâ'tėr-gum), n. A small tree of New South Wales, Tristania neriifolia, the timber of which is close-grained and elastic, and valuable for boat-building.

water-gut (wâ'tėr-gut), n. An alga of the genus Ulva, natural order Ulvaceæ. The most general form, U. enteromorpha, var. intestinalis, occurs in fresh as well as salt water, U. enteromorpha, var. compressa, being the more common on tidal rocks. When floating in the water these plants very much resemble the intestines of an animal (whence the name).

water-hairgrass (wa'tėr hâr grâs), n. A grass, Catabrosa aquatica, growing in shallow water, widely in the north temperate zone, having a panicle with many half-whorls of slender branches. Also water-whorlgrass.

water-hammer (wa'tėr-ham'ėr), n. 1. The concussion of a moving volume of water in a pipe or passage, caused by sudden stoppage of flow, as by the abrupt closing of a faucet.—2. The noise, resembling a blow of a hammer, caused by the presence of water in a steam-pipe when live steam is passed through it.—3. A philosophical toy consisting of a hermetically sealed tube from which the air has been exhausted and which contains some water. It is so called because the water strikes against the tube with a noise similar to that of a hammer, there being no air to impede its motion.

4. A metal hammer heated in a flame or in boiling water. Tapping the skin with this hammer for a water-hare (wâ'tėr-hâr), n. 1. The water-rabbit. See cut under swamp-hare.—2. The spotted cavy, or paca, Cœlogenys paca.

[illegible] will call a blister. It is used as a common irritant or a mild cautery.

water-haze (wâ'tėr-hāz), n. Haze composed of water-particles, as distinguished from haze consisting mainly of particles of dust and organic matter. See haze[1].

water-heater (wâ'tėr-hē'tėr), n. A heating-apparatus which performs its functions by the agency of hot water.

water-hemlock (wa'tėr-hem'lok), n. 1. See Cicuta.—2. The hemlock water-dropwort, Œnanthe crocata, otherwise called dead-tongue, also O. Phellandrium, distinguished as fine-leafed water-hemlock.

water-hemp (wâ'tėr-hemp), n. 1. See hemp.—2. The hemp-agrimony, Eupatorium cannabinum.

water-hen (wâ'tėr-hen), n. Some aquatic bird likened to a hen. (a) The moor hen or gallinule of Great Britain, Gallinula chloropus. (b) The American coot, Fulica americana (Massachusetts). (c) An Australian bird of the rail family and genus Tribonyx. See cut under Tribonyx, and compare water-cock. Spotted water-hen. Same as spotted rail. See rail[4]. [Local, Eng.]

water-hickory (wâ'tėr-hik'o-ri), n. Same as bitter pecan (which see, under pecan).

water-hoarhound (wâ'tėr-hor'hound), n. A plant of the genus Lycopus, chiefly L. Europæus.

water-hog (wa'tėr-hog), n. 1. The African river-hog, Potamochœrus penicillatus. See cut under Potamochœrus.—2. The South American capibara, Hydrochœrus capibara. Also called tailless hippopotamus and short-nosed tapir.

water-hole (wâ'tėr hōl), n. A hole or hollow where water collects. In Australia, a small natural or artificial reservoir, in South Africa, a natural pool, or water-pool. This word is chiefly used in Australia, where it means a small pond or pool of water, and especially such as are filled during the rainy season and dry up when that ceases, or soon after.

In the dry weather, as the small lagoons and water holes scattered all over the country [Australia] get low and dried up, large numbers of . . . wild ducks congregate on the big lagoon in front of Mount Spencer station. H. E. Hutton, Advance Australia, p. 88.

We have been drafting close here up at the one-eyed waterhole. Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head-Station, p. 84.

waterhole (wâ'tėr-hōl), v. t.; pret. and pp. waterholed, ppr. waterholing. [< water-hole, n.] In coffee-cultivation. See the quotation.

A third operation is called "trenching," or waterholing. The trenches are made across the slope, and . . . the holes are left open to act as catch-drains, and as receptacles for wash, weeds, prunings, and other vegetable matters. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 698.

water-horse (wâ'tėr-hôrs), n. Same as horse-pile.

water-horsetail (wâ'tėr-hôrs-tāl), n. A plant of the genus Hippuris.

water-house (wâ'tėr-hous), n. A house or dwelling upon the water; a ship.

The thing he commanded is to see Dover's dreadful cliff; passing, in a poor water-house, the dangers of the merciless channel 'twixt that and Calais, five long hours' sail, with three poor weeks' victuals.

Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, I. 1.

water-hyssop (wâ'tėr-his'op), n. See Herpestes.

water-ice (wâ'tėr-īs), n. A preparation of water and sugar, flavored and frozen; a sherbet.

water-inch (wâ'tėr-inch), n. In hydraul. a measure of water equal to the quantity discharged in 24 hours through a circular opening of 1 inch diameter leading from a reservoir, under the least pressure—that is, when the water is only so high as just to cover the orifice. This quantity is very nearly 500 cubic feet.

water-indicator (wâ'tėr-in'di-kā-tor), n. A device for indicating the weight of water in a boiler or a tank, or for giving an alarm by permitting steam to escape, sounding a whistle, etc., when the water falls below a certain level, a water-gage.

wateriness (wâ'tėr-i-nes), n. The state of being watery. Arbuthnot.

watering (wâ'tėr-ing), n. [< late ME. watringe, watringe (= MLG. wateringe = MHG. wazzerunge, G. wässerung); verbal n. of water, v.] 1. The act of one who waters, in any sense.

Doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

Luke xiii. 15.

The clouds are for the watering of the earth.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 164.

Specifically—2. The art or process of giving to the surface of anything a wave-like or veined appearance of somewhat ornamental effect; also, the marking so produced. Compare water, v. 4, 5, and watered silk (under watered).—3. A watering-place: as, "the watering of Seint Thomas" (better known as St. Thomas a Waterings). Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 823.—4. In flax-manuf., same as retting, 1.—Watering of the mouth, an abundant secretion of saliva excited, through a reflex nervous influence, by the suggestion, smell, or sight of appetizing food.

watering-call (wa'tėr-ing-kâl), n. Milit., a call or sound of a trumpet on which cavalry assemble to water their horses.

watering-can (wâ'tėr-ing-kan), n. Same as watering-pot.

watering-cart (wâ'ter-ing kärt), n. 1. A barrel or cistern mounted on wheels, used for watering plants. Various special forms are made, as one for watering plants in drills, the water escaping through perforated pipes set at the proper distances apart.

2. A large tank, of whatever form, mounted on a wagon body, used for watering streets.

watering-house (wâ'tėr-ing-hous), n. A house or tavern where water is obtained for cab-horses, etc. Compare waterman, 2.

Carriages . . . roll swiftly by; watermen, . . . who have been shouting and rushing about for the last two hours, retire to their watering-houses, to solace the inselves with the creature-comforts of pipes and purl.

Dickens, Sketches, Scenes ii.

watering-place (wâ'tėr-ing-plās), n. [< ME. watryng place; < watering + place.] 1. A place where water may be obtained, as for drinking, for watering cattle, or for supplying ships.

Watryng Place, where beestys hab watyrynd. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

The force will have to trust to known watering-places where there are wells.

Col. Farquhar, in E. Saltorius's In the Soudan, p. 58.

2. Especially, a place of resort for a particular kind of water, as mineral water; a well, spring, town, etc., famous for its waters; in later use, a bathing place; a seaside resort; loosely, any summer resort.

The discovery of a saline spring . . . suggested to a too constructive brain the possibility of turning Treby Magna into a fashionable watering place.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, iii.

The form watering-place was naturally extended to inclose places resorted to for sea-bathing and sometimes, as of Scarborough, the visitors could rather have the benefit of the spa or the salt water, that famous watering-place having both of these attractions.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 85.

watering-pot (wâ'tėr-ing-pot), n. 1. A vessel, usually somewhat tall can, most often of cylindrical section, sometimes oval, with a long spout springing from near the base, used for watering plants and for other similar purposes, as sprinkling sidewalks. The spout is generally fitted with a rose, often movable for distributing the water in a number of streams. It is usually made of tin plate or galvanized sheet iron, and is intended to be managed by hand. Also called water-can.

2. In conch., any species of the genus Aspergillum, as A. vaginiferum. These are the shells of the family Gastrochænidæ (or Tubicolidæ) not the animals, to the tender, and of late more hard substances. The valves proper are very small in comparison with the elongated tube with which they are soldered. The species named has this tube cylindrical and clubbed or knobbed at both ends, very near and closed by a perforated plate, the whole formation suggesting the sprinkler of a watering-pot. It inhabits the Red Sea; another species of Aspergillum are found in Pacific waters. Also called watering-pot shell.

Watering-pot shell (Aspergillum vaginiferum).

watering-trough (wâ'tėr-ing trof), n. A trough in which water is provided for domestic animals.

water-injector (wâ'tėr-in-jek'tor), n. See injector.

waterish (wâ'tėr-ish), a. [Formerly also watrish, < ME. waterish*, < AS. waterse* as water + -ish[1].] 1. Abounding in or containing water; sprinkled moistened, or diluted with water; watery; aqueous.

Fly sweet wine, sour wine, any waterish liquor, as to all means. Cut sweet wine, and you know that all things freeze, and icy wind rather break than bend.

Ascham, To Sadoleto (1564), p. 216.

Is all the duke of waterish Burgundy
Can buy this unpriced precious maid from me.

Shak., Lear, i. 1. 261.

2. Consisting mainly of water; hence, thin; weak; poor.

Such nice and waterish diet. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 15.

3. Juicy; succulent. [Rare.]

The Summer
Invited my then ranging eye to look on Large fields of ripen'd corn, presenting trifles
Of waterish pettie dainties.

Decker and Ford, Sun's Darling, iv.

4. Pertaining to water, or having something of its characters; insipid: as, a waterish color or feel.

Some [flowers] of a sad or darke greene, some watrish, plunkie (by-gray), grassie hoarie, and lacke coloured.

Tobacco, or Conspectus, p. 103.

Of waterish taste, the flesh not firme like English beefe.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 386.

waterishness (wa'tėr-ish-nes), n. The state or character of being waterish.

Waterishness, which is like the corrosity of an blood.

Flower.

water-jacket (wa'tėr-jak'et), n. A casing containing water placed about something to keep it cool, or otherwise regulate its temperature. Compare water mantle and water box.

water-joint (wa'tėr joint), n. A joint through which water will not leak, as in the framework of a water-gate, the junction of two water pipes, the gates of canal locks, etc.

water-junket (wa'tėr jung'ket), n. The common sandpiper of Great Britain, Pengoides hypoleucus.

water-kelpie (wâ'tėr-kel'pi), n. A spirit or demon supposed to dwell in water. See kelpie.

The bonny grey mare did sweat for fear,
For she heard the water-kelpy roaring.

Annan Water (Child's Ballads, II. 189).

water-kindt (wâ'tėr-kind), n. [< ME. water-kinde; < water + kind.] Water; the elements of water.

Latin foe sayyth thatt Ennon Bitaenetihh waterrikinda Oreandinan (ed. White), l. 19887.

water-lade (wâ'tėr lād), n. A channel or trench for conducting water; a drain; a gutter.

The chanels were not shouned . . . for riverets and brookes to passe away: but the water lades stopped up either through negligence or depopulation.

Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 741. (Davies.)

water-laid (wa'tėr lād), a. Noting three ropes laid into one: same as cable-laid.

Waterlander (wa'tėr-lan-dėr), n. [< D. Waterland, a district in North Holland, + -er[1].] One of the liberal wing of the Mennonites of the Netherlands. Beginning with less strict views of excommunication than those of the conservative wing, they gradually moved in the direction of still greater liberality, exchanged the name of Mennonites for Doopsgezinden (Baptist persuasion), refused to condemn any one for opinion, which the Bible did not expressly pronounce essential to salvation, coöperated with William the Silent, and even accepted civil office. The division between them and their opponents gradually disappeared, and the two wings are now united in Holland on substantially the liberal basis of the Waterlanders. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 69.

Waterlandian (wa'tėr-lan'di-an), n. [< Waterland (see Waterlander) + -ian.] Same as Waterlander.

water-language (wa'tėr lang'gwāj), n. Jocose abuse; chaff. [Rare.]

Twas all water language at those times and no exceptions were to be taken. Amherst, Terræ Filius, No. 1.

water-laverock (wâ'tėr lav'ėr-ok), n. Same as sandy laverock (which see, under laverock).

water-leader[1] (wa'tėr lē'dėr), n. [< ME. waterleder (cf. D. waterleiding = G. wasserleitung = Sw. vattenledning = Dan. vandledning, aqueduct); < water + leader[1].] A water carrier.

The cokes and water lederes. York Plays, p. 307.

waterleaf (wa'tėr-lef), n. 1. Any plant of the genus Hydrophyllum (which see). 2. Paper in the first stage of manufacture, after it has been pressed between the felts: a technical use.

The structure of the waterleaf may be regarded as an intermediate between that of vegetable fibers in every direction.

Ure Dict., III. 514.

water-leecht (wa'tėr-lēch), n. [< ME. waterleche, waterelleche, < water + leche.] Same as horse-leech.

Waterleche, two ben dogges ait tele. Bring on, bring on. Wright Pop. Treat., 18.

water-leg (wâ'tėr leg), n. In steam-boilers, a vertical water space connecting other water-spaces, and crossing a flue-space, by which its combustion is baffled.

water-lemon (wa'tėr-lem'on), n. A species of passion-flower, Passiflora laurifolia, native in the West Indies and in tropical South America, and cultivated there and in other warm countries; also, and popularly, its fruit. The latter is lemon-colored and is from the size of a peach, having a soft skin and a very juicy pulp of a pleasant subacid flavor. The vine has the leaves entire, the flowers white with red [illegible] the crown circled with white streaks. P. quadrangularis, the sweet calabash, with a smaller fruit of similar flavor, is sometimes included under the name. The West Indian water-lemon is P. foetida, otherwise called (West Indian lime-in-a-mist, bearing a delicate fruit of the size of a small cherry, but having ill-smelling leaves.

water-lens (wâ'tėr-lenz), n. A simple kind of lens, formed by a few drops of water placed in a small brass coll with blackened sides, and having a glass bottom. The upper surface of the water is more or less curved according to the diameter of the tube, and sometimes the convexity (and hence the magnifying power) can be raised by a screw at the side.

water-lentil (wâ'tėr-len'til), n. See lentil.

waterless (wâ'tėr-les), a. [< ME. waterles, waterlees, < AS. waterlēas, without water; as water + -less.] Lacking water; unsupplied or unmoistened with water, or a fish, out of water.

A monk whan he is recheless
Is likned til a fish that is waterless.
Chaucer, tien Prol. to C. T., l. 180.

Frankincense, for which of old they went Through plain and desert waterless, and faced
The lion haunted woods that edged the waste.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 97.

water-lettuce (wâ'tėr let'is), n. See Pistia.

water-level (wâ'tėr lev'el), n. 1. The surface of the water in any vessel or reservoir, natural or artificial, in which water is standing, as in a well, canal, pond, lake, etc.; also, the plane of saturation beneath the surface of the ground, or the plane below which the soil or rock remains saturated with water under the ordinary conditions of rainfall, etc.

But in strata occupying such a position, as well as in the gravel, all wells must be sunk by digging, and not bored, to the natural water level, there being no superincumbent impermeable stratum to keep down the water at a level below that to which it would naturally have a tendency to rise.
Prestwich, Water Bearing Strata of London, p. 9.

2. A leveling instrument in which water is employed instead of mercury or spirit of wine. It consists of a tin tube, about 3 feet long, bent at right angles at each end, with a small short tube soldered on it at its center, by the aid of which it can be fixed upon some kind of a support or tripod. In the bent ends of the long tube are inserted two small glass vials with the bottoms cut off. Enough water is then poured in to about half fill the bottle when the instrument is level. By sighting across the surface of the water a level-line is got. The extreme cheapness and portability of this level make it serviceable sometimes, although it gives but a rough approximation to accuracy as compared with the best kind of spirit level.

water-lily (wâ'tėr-lil'i), n. [< ME. water-lili, watyr-lyly; < water + lily.] 1. A plant of the genus Castalia (Nymphæa), which contains about 25 species distributed nearly throughout the world, but most freely in the northern hemisphere and the tropics. They are aquatic plants with a perennial rootstock, orbicular floating leaves, and large flowers, single on long scapes rising on the surface of the water. The flowers have numerous petals of a delicate texture, forming when expanded nearly a hemisphere white, blue, red, or yellow. Several white water lilies are the most familiar. The common European species is C. speciosa (N. alba), with leaves 6 or 8 and flowers 3 or 4 inches in diameter. The ordinary American species is C. (N.) odorata, with very sweet scented flowers often 5½ inches wide, and leaves 6 to 9 inches broad, varying in color to pinkish or even bright pink-red, especially at Barnstable, Massachusetts. In the interior United States is found C. (N.) tuberosa with considerably larger leaves and flowers, scentless or slightly apple scented, and always white; the rootstock bearing numerous self-detaching tubers. The golden water lily, C. (N.) flava, of Florida, which long escaped the notice of botanists, is a locally abundant species of moderate dimensions, with yellow flowers. C. mystica (N. Lotus), the sacred Egyptian water lily, with white, pink, or red flowers, and C. scutifolia (N. cærulea), the blue water lily, also of Egypt, are named among the lotuses. C. (N.) Thermalis is a rare species occurring in warm springs in Hungary, and called Hungarian lotus. The Australian water lily, C. (N.) gigantea, has the leaves in the larger specimens 18 inches broad; the flowers a foot broad with over 200 stamens, the petals blue, purple, pink, or rarely white. Another general name of the water-lilies is water nymph. See Nymphæa.

2. The pond lily, or yellow water-lily, Nymphæa (Nuphar) lutea. See pond-lily. 3. In general, any plant of the order Nymphæaceæ, the water-lily family. See the phrases below. Blue water-lily. See def. 1. Dwarf water-lily. Same as sacred water lily. Egyptian water-lily. See def. 1. Fringed water-lily. See Limnanthemum. New Zealand water-lily. See Ranunculus. Prickly water lily. Euryale ferox, which has the calyx and the under side of the leaves spiny. It is cultivated in India and China for its edible farinaceous seeds. See Euryale, 2. Royal water-lily. See Victoria regia. See Victoria, 2. Sweet-scented water-lily. Castalia odorata. See def. 1. Victoria water-lily. See Victoria, 2. White water-lily. See def. 1. Yellow water lily. See def. 2.

water-lime (wâ'tėr-līm), n. Hydraulic lime. See hydraulic. Water-lime group, in geol., a group of strata of Upper Silurian age overlying the Onondaga Salt group, and forming the lower section of the Lower Helderberg group, according to the nomenclature of the New York Geological Survey. This group is of great importance, especially in Ulster county, New York, as furnishing a considerable part of the hydraulic cement manufactured in the United States. It abounds in fossils to which the name Coelentalite has been given, and hence is known also as the Coelentalite group. See cement, 2, and cement-stone.

water-line (wâ'tėr-līn), n. 1. The line in which water at its surface verges or borders upon anything; specifically, in ship-building, one of the horizontal lines supposed to be described by the surface of the water on the sides of a ship, and exhibited at certain depths upon the sheer-draft. The most important of these lines are the light water-line, which marks the depression of the ship's body in the water when she is light or unladen, and the load water-line, which marks her depression in the water when laden.

2. Same as water-level, 1.

The principal deposits are much more valuable where they are now worked . . . than they will be below water line.
New York Tribune, Nov. 7, 1879.

3. A semi-transparent line or mark formed in paper during its manufacture; a water-mark. See water-mark, 3.

It is supposed . . . that the waterlines are perpendicular in folio, octavo, and decimo-octavo books, and horizontal in quarto and duodecimo.
De Morgan, Arithmetical Books, xiii.

water-lined (wâ'tėr-līnd), a. Marked with water-lines: as, Irish linen water-lined paper.

water-liverwort (wâ'tėr-liv''ėr-wėrt), n. The water-crowfoot, Ranunculus aquatilis.

water-lizard (wâ'tėr-liz'ard), n. 1. An aquatic amphibian with four legs and a tail, as a mud-puppy, water-dog, or hellbender. See triton, newt, and cuts under hellbender, Menobranchus, axolotl, and newt. [U. S.] — 2. A water-monitor or varan. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-lobelia (wâ'tėr-lo-bē'liä), n. See Lobelia, 1.

water-lock (wâ'tėr lok), n. Same as *lock*1, 8. Blount, Glossographia, 1670.

water-locust (wâ'tėr lō'kust), n. A small species of honey-locust, Gleditschia monosperma, found in the southern United States, especially westward, in the bottom-lands, where it occupies large areas. The wood is of a rich dark-brown color, heavy, hard, and susceptible of polish. Also called swamp-locust.

water-logged (wâ'tėr-logd), a. [< water + logged*, of uncertain origin. In a view commonly accepted, logged, lit. 'rendered log-like,' i. e. heavy or clumsy in consequence of being filled with water; < *log*1 + *-ed*2. In another view, logged is lit. 'laid' or 'placed,' after Sw. vatten-lagge, lay in water, soak. Other explanations have been proposed; but none accurately applies to water-logged, except by assuming some confusion of the second element. In present use the word is undoubtedly associated with *log*1.] Saturated or filled with water: applied specifically to a ship when by leaking and receiving a great quantity of water into her hold she has become so heavy as to be nearly or altogether unmanageable, though still keeping afloat.

In the course of the summer I had discovered a raft of pitch pine logs with the bark on . . . Though completely waterlogged and almost as heavy as lead, they not only burned long, but made a very hot fire.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 288.

The next day the Bon Homme Richard, quite waterlogged, sank, with all the wounded on board.
N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 537.

water-lot (wâ'tėr-lot), n. A lot of ground which is under water; specifically, one of a regular system of city lots which are partly or wholly covered by the water of a bay, lake, or river, and may be filled in and converted into made ground for the erection of buildings, docks, etc.

Yesterday he said, I bought a water-lot, that topsail-schooner lies at anchor there.
J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 244.

water-lotus (wâ'tėr-lō'tus), n. The nelumbo. See lotus, 1.

water-lung (wâ'tėr-lung), n. One of the respiratory trees or ramifications of the cloaca of holothurians. They are present in most of the order Dendrochirotæ, and have an excretory or depurative function in the continual passage of water through them.

water-lute (wâ'tėr-lūt), n. Any form of air-tight joint formed by the agency of water; a water-seal or air trap.

water-main (wâ'tėr mān), n. In water-works, any one of the principal pipes or conduits running under streets, to which the lateral service-pipes for supply of houses on either side of the street are connected.

water-maize (wâ'tėr-māz), n. See maize.

waterman (wâ'tėr-man), n.; pl. watermen (-men). [< water + man (= D. waterman = G. wassermann).] 1. A boatman; a ferryman; a man who manages water-craft; one who plies for hire on rivers, etc.

It does not become your gravity . . . to have offered this outrage on a waterman, . . . much less on a man in his civil coat.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, iii. 2.

My great grandfather was but a waterman, looking one way and rowing another.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

2. One who carries or distributes water; specifically, a person who waits at a cab-stand for the purpose of supplying the horses with water, calling the cabmen when they are absent, etc. [Eng.]

Waterman's Knot.

Waterman's knot (naut.), a form of knot used to bend a rope about a post or bollard.

watermanship (wâ'tėr-man-ship), n. The functions, art, or skill of a waterman or oarsman; oarsmanship.

All the rowing interest of each society makes sport for itself and amusement for spectators on the banks with forms of watermanship which are lighter and more pleasant.
The Atlantic, LXVII. 792.

water-mantle (wâ'tėr-man'tl), n. [Tr. of G. wassermantel.] The water-jacket, or layer of water, which incloses the space in which the cultures are placed in the incubator for bacteriological investigations, and to which heat is applied, and into which is dipped the regulator that serves to keep the temperature constant. [Rare.]

Between the room . . . and the water-mantle . . . a schlossing's membrane regulator . . . is extended.
Hueppe, Bacteriological Investigations (trans.), p. 189.

water-maple (wâ'tėr-mā'pl), n. Same as red maple (which see, under *maple*1).

water-marigold (wâ'tėr-mar'i-gōld), n. An American aquatic, Bidens Beckii, of which most of the leaves are submerged and very finely dissected.

water-mark (wâ'tėr-mark), n. 1. The mark, line, or limit of the rise or height of water, as in a well, a river, the sea, etc.; a water-line; especially, a tide mark.

The last tide had risen considerably above the usual water mark.
Scott, Antiquary, vii.

2. A faintly marked letter, figure, or design in the fabric of paper, that denotes its size or its manufacturer, usually barely noticeable except when the sheet is held against strong light. It is made in the process of manufacture by the pressure of wires on the moist pulp. The water-marks used by the earlier paper makers have given names to several of the present standard sizes of paper, as pot, foolscap, crown, elephant, and post, the last being so called from the device of a postman's horn as water mark.

water-mark (wâ'tėr-mark), v. t. 1. To mark or stamp with water-lines: as, to water-mark paper; a water marked page. — 2. To mark, inscribe, or embody in water-lines.

They are without the final refinement of the recurring title water marked in the lower margins of the page.
The Century, XXXIX. 94.

water-meadow (wâ'tėr-med'ō), n. A meadow capable of being kept in a state of fertility by being overflowed with water at certain seasons from some adjoining stream.

The fire-flies flitted over the water-meadows outside.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 690.

water-measure (wâ'tėr-mezh'ūr), n. A unit of measure used on board ships, five pecks according to a statute of Henry VII. It was regarded as a bushel, and was similarly subdivided. A statute of 1701 declares that a water measure is round, and 18½ inches in diameter within the hoop, and 8 inches deep, and ordains that apples and pears shall be sold by this measure heaped.

water-measurer (wâ'tėr-mezh'ūr-ėr), n. Any water-bug of the heteropterous family Hydrometridæ.

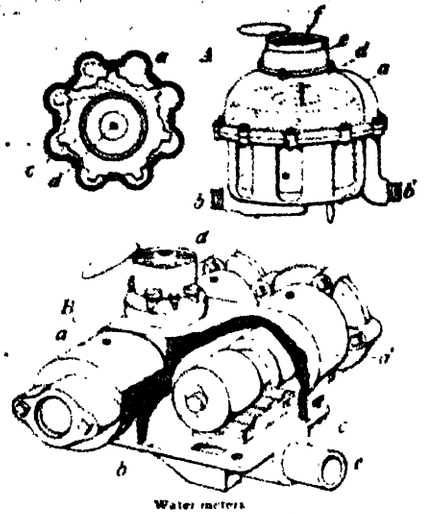
watermelon (wâ'tėr-mel'on), n. A plant, Citrullus vulgaris (frequently named Cucumis Citrullus), or its fruit. The plant, supposed to be of Asiatic origin, is a slender trailing vine, requiring a warm soil. The fruit (a pepo) is of a spherical or usually elongated form, 1½ or 2 feet long, smooth and green, or sometimes variegated on the outside, containing within a red-colored or sometimes yellowish pulp, pleasantly flavored and absorbing in a refreshing sweetish watery juice. The watermelon is largely cultivated in Egypt, India, China, Japan, America, southern France, and elsewhere.

Their watermelons were much more large, and, of several kinds, distinguished by the color of their meat and seed . . . They are excellently good, and very pleasant to the taste, as also to the eye, having the rind of a lively green color, streaked and watered, the meat of a carnation, and the seed black and shining while it lies in the melon.
Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 12.

water-meter (wâ'tėr-mē'tėr), n. 1. An instrument that measures the quantity of water that passes through it, as a gas-meter measures gas. There are various contrivances for this purpose. See cuts on following page. — 2. An instrument for determining the amount



Water meters

A, case; b, b, inlet and outlet; c, hard rubber rotating piston; d, gyrating spindle which drives the registering mechanism e, by means of a connecting rod shown at f; g, dial.

B, a, case, composed of two cylinders not integral; b, one of the two plungers; c, valve actuated by f, controlling the flow into and out of the cylinder a; d, a similar valve to e, controls the flow into and out of a', and in this way the plunger in each cylinder governs the flow into and out of the other. The plungers are hollow, and have very nearly the specific gravity of water. Their reciprocations, through a connection not shown, drive the registering mechanism g. The inlet and outlet is opposite the letter c.

of water evaporated in a given time, as from a steam-boiler.

water-milfoil (wâ'tėr-mil'foil), n. See milfoil.

water-mill (wâ'tėr-mil), n. A mill whose machinery is driven by water.

> There are in this Citie 200. Schooles, 200. Innes, 400. water-milles, 600. water-Conduits, 700. Temples and Oratories water-mint (wâ'tėr-mint), n. The bergamot-mint, Mentha aquatica, an herb of wet places in Europe and Asiatic Russia, naturalized in other localities, growing sparingly in the eastern United States. It affords a perfumers' oil. The water-mint or brook-mint of early usage was M. sylvestris. See mint[2].
> Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 47.

> Those which perfume the air most delightfully not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three; that is, burnet, wild thyme, and water mints.
> Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887), p. 444.

water-mite (wâ'tėr-mīt), n. Any mite of the family Hydrachnidæ; a water-tick. See Hydrachnidæ, and cut under Hydrachna. Also called water-spider.

water-moccasin (wâ'tėr-mok'a-sin), n. A water-adder; a name applied with little discrimination in the United States to several species of aquatic snakes; properly, the venomous Toxicophis or Ancistrodon piscivorus, with which the harmless Tropidonotus (or Nerodia) sipedon is sometimes confounded. See water-snake, and cut under moccasin.

water-mole (wâ'tėr-mōl), n. 1. A desman; a member of the genus Myogale. See cut under desman.—2. The duck-mole, or duck-billed platypus, Ornithorhynchus paradoxus. See cut under duckbill.

water-monitor (wâ'tėr-mon'i-tor), n. A large water-lizard of the family Monitoridæ or Varanidæ; any aquatic monitor, or varan. One of the best-known is the Indian kalaraggya, or two-handed monitor Monitor or Varanus salvator attaining a length of 5 or 6 feet. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-monkey (wâ'tėr-mung'ki), n. A globular vessel with a straight upright neck, commonly of earthenware, used in tropical countries for holding water.

water-moss (wâ'tėr-môs), n. A moss of the genus Fontinalis (which see).

water-moth (wâ'tėr-môth), n. A caddis-fly: so called from its aquatic habits and resemblance to a moth. See cut under caddis-worm.

> Every good disciple of Walton and lover of the "gentle art" knows the value of the caddice fly or water moth as bait.
> Riley, 5th Mo. Ent. Rep., p. 16.

water-motor (wâ'tėr-mō'tor), n. Any water-wheel or turbine; in a narrower and the more common sense, any form of small motor using water under pressure, and serving to drive light machinery, such as printing-presses and sewing-machines. Such motors are made in the form of overshot wheels inclosed in a casing, reciprocating pistons in cylinders, and rotary engines. Another form is a small turbine designed to be fitted to a common house supply-pipe. Small engines with oscillating cylinders are also a, case supported on legs; b, gate valve for regulating flow; c, buckets or floats attached to the outer margin of a disk keyed to the shaft of the hand wheel e. The buckets play in an annular enlargement x of the case as they receive the impact of the stream flowing through c. The water is discharged at d.

Water motor

used. Another form, employing the pressure of a large body of water to raise a smaller quantity is called a water pressure pump, but is essentially a water motor used as a pump.

water-mouse (wâ'tėr-mous), n. An Australian murine rodent of the genus Hydromys and subfamily Hydromyinæ. See cut under beaver-rat. White bellied water-mouse. See white-bellied. Yellow-bellied water-mouse. See yellow-bellied.

water-murrain (wâ'tėr-mur'an), n. A disease among cattle.

water-net (wa'tėr-net), n. See Hydrodictyon.

water newt (wâ'tėr-nut), n. An aquatic newt; a triton. See cuts under newt and axolotl.

water-nixy (wâ'tėr-nik'si), n. [After G. wassernixe, < water + nix[1].] A water-sprite; an elf inhabiting the water.

> The shallowness of a waternixe's soul may have a charm until she becomes distinct.
> George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxix.

water-nut (wâ'tėr-nut), n. The large edible seed of plants of the genus Trapa, or the plant itself; also called Singhara nut. See cut under Trapa.

water-nymph (wâ'tėr-nimf), n. 1. A Naiad. 2. A plant of the genus Naias.—3. The water-lily, Castalia (Nymphæa).

water-oak (wâ'tėr-ok), n. 1. In bot., an oak, Quercus aquatica, of the southern United States, most common and best developed along streams in the eastern Gulf States. Its wood is heavy, hard, and coarse-grained, and does not appear to be used except for fuel. Also called duck, possum-, or punk oak.—2. Same as pin-oak.

water-oats (wâ'tėr-ōts), n. pl. See Indian rice (a), under rice[1].

water-opossum (wâ'tėr-o-pos'um), n. The South American yapok. See cut under yapok.

water-ordeal (wâ'tėr-ôr'de-al), n. See ordeal, 1.

water-organ (wâ'tėr-ôr'gan), n. See hydraulic organ, under organ.

water-ouzel (wa'tėr-ö'zl), n. See ouzel.

water-oven (wâ'tėr-uv'n), n. In chem., an oven surrounded on all sides but the front or top with a chamber of boiling water or steam, used for drying chemical preparations, etc.

water-ox (wâ'tėr-oks), n.; pl. water-oxen (-oks'n). The water cow.

> Water-oxen turned up their noses at us.
> Lovell's Living Age, CLXI. 88.

water-padda (wâ'tėr-pad'a), n. A South African toad, Breviceps gibbosus.

water-pang (wâ'tėr-pang), n. Pyrosis.

water-parsley (wâ'tėr-pärs'li), n. 1. One of several water-loving umbelliferous plants. [Eng.]—2. See Richardsonia.

water-parsnip (wâ'tėr-pärs'nip), n. A plant of the genus Sium, especially S. latifolium. See cut under skirret.

water-parting (wâ'tėr-pär'ting), n. Same as watershed.

> The high land which forms the divisional line between two contiguous river basins is called the water-parting. Instead of water-parting some writers employ the term watershed.
> Huxley, Physiography, p. 15.

water-partridge (wâ'tėr-pär'trij), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida, C. Trumbull, 1848. See cut under Erismatura. [Patuxent river, Maryland.]

water-passage (wâ'tėr-pas'āj), n. A passage for water; specifically, the urethra.

water-pennywort (wâ'tėr-pen'i-wėrt), n. Same as marsh-pennywort.

water-pepper (wâ'tėr-pep'ėr), n. 1. The smartweed, Polygonum Hydropiper. The mild water-pepper is P. hydropiperoides.—2. Same as watercress, 1.

water-persicaria (wâ'tėr-pėr-si-kâ'ri-ą), n. See persicaria.

water-pewit (wâ'tėr-pē'wit), n. See pewit (c) and Sagerus.

water-pheasant (wâ'tėr-fez'ant), n. 1. The Chinese pheasa, Hydrophasianus chirurgus. See cut under Hydrophasianus.—2. The pintail or a congeneric duck, having a long tail. See pheasant-duck (b), and cut under Dafila.—3. The goosander, Mergus merganser; also, the hooded merganser, Lophodytes cucullatus.

waterphone (wa'tėr-fōn), n. [Irreg. < water + Gr. φωνή, voice, sound, simulating telephone.] An instrument for observing the flow of water in pipes and the detection of leaks, when the pipes are laid underground or in other inaccessible places. A common form consists of a metallic diaphragm arranged in an ear trumpet after a manner analogous to a telephone receiver and having a slender rod of steel connected with the diaphragm in such a way as not to touch the trumpet. In use the free end of the rod is placed upon the pipe to be examined, and the ear, placed at the trumpet, is thus enabled to hear distinctly sounds that, without this device, would be entirely inaudible.

water-piet (wâ'tėr-pī et), n. The water-ouzel or dipper, Cinclus aquaticus. Also water-pyet. See cut under dipper. Montagu. [Prov. Eng.]

water-pig (wâ'tėr-pig), n. 1. A porpoise.—2. The capybara (which see, with cut).—3. A fish, the gouramy.

water-pillar (wâ'tėr-pil'ār), n. 1†. A water-spout.—2. On a railroad, an upright pipe with a swinging hollow arm or gooseneck, placed beside the track for supplying water to locomotives; a water-crane.

water-pimpernel (wâ'tėr-pim'pėr-nel), n. See pimpernel.

water-pine (wâ'tėr-pīn), n. See pinel.

water-pipe (wâ'tėr-pīp), n. [< ME. water-pipe; < water + pipe.] 1. A pipe for conveying water. Wright, Vocabulary.

> Single I grew, like some green plant, whose root > Creeps to the garden water-pipe beneath, > Feeding the flower. Tennyson, Enid Woman.

2. A waterspout. [Archaic.]

> One deep calleth another, because of the noise of the water-pipes. Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. xlii. 8.

water-pipit (wâ'tėr-pip it), n. One of several species of Anthus which are common in various parts of Europe, especially that usually called A. aquaticus, also A. spinoletta, and more correctly A. spipoletta. See Anthus and pipit.

waterpitt, n. [ME. waterpit, < AS waterpyt; as water + pit[1].] A pit of water. Destruction of Troy, l. 401.

water-pitcher (wa'tėr-pich'ėr), n. 1. A pitcher for holding water.—2. A plant of the order Sarraceniaceæ, including the common pitcher plant or sidesaddle flower. See cut under pitcher plant.

water-plane (wâ'tėr-plān), n. In ship-building, a plane passing through a vessel when afloat, on a level with the surface of the water. When the vessel has her stores and equipments only on board, such a plane is a light water plane, when she is loaded, it is a load water-plane. Compare water line.

water-plant (wa'tėr-plant), n. A plant which grows in water; an aquatic plant.

water-plantain (wa'tėr-plan'tan), n. A plant of the genus Alisma, chiefly A. Plantago, the common or great water-plantain, growing in shallow water throughout the temperate northern hemisphere, reappearing in Australia. Its leaves in form and arrangement suggest those of the common plantain, but are not ribbed. The flowers are small and white petaled, borne in an open panicle a foot or two long. A smaller species is A. ranunculoides, a floating species, A. natans, both are European.

water-plate (wa'tėr-plāt), n. A plate having a double bottom or a lining of different material, with a space left in which hot water can be put, to keep articles of food warm.

> This kind of dish (mentioned above) all requires to be served up hot or sent off in water plates, that your friend may have it almost as warm as yourself.
> Lond. Distant Correspondents.

water-platter (wa'tėr-plat'ėr), n. The royal water-lily, Victoria regia, so named with reference to its broad floating leaves with upturned margin.

water-plow (wa'tėr-plou), n. A machine formerly used for taking mud, etc., out of rivers. Halliwell.

water-poise (wa'tėr-poiz), n. A hydrometer, or instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of different liquids.

water-pore (wâ'tėr-pōr), n. 1. In zoöl., the pore or orifice by which a water-tube of any water-vascular system opens to the exterior.—2. In bot., an aperture or pore in the epidermis of certain plants, through which water is frequently expressed. It resembles an ordinary stoma, but has no guardian-cells, and is situated directly over the extremities of the fibers of the framework. These apertures are of various size and form.

water-post (wâ'tėr-pōst), n. A post (often a lamp-post) to which a pressure-gage is affixed, the gage being connected with the main and supply branches of a water-pipe, and serving to indicate the water-pressure in some part of a system of water-supply.

water-pot (wâ'tėr-pot), n. [< ME. water-pot, water-pott, watir-pot; < water + *pot*1.] 1. Any pot or vessel for holding, conveying, or distributing water.

Therefor the woman lefte the watir pott and went into the citie. Wyclif, John iv. 28

2. Same as watering pot, 1.

To use his eyes for garden water pots,
Ay, and laying autumn's dust. Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 200

3. A chamber-pot.

water-pouket, n. [< water + pouke, a pimple or blister, a little pouch or poke holding water; cf. *poke*2, pouch.] Same as vesicle, 1 (b).

water-power (wâ'tėr pou'ėr), n. The power of water employed, or capable of being employed, as a prime mover in machinery; hence, a fall or descent in a stream capable of being utilized for mechanical purposes.

The water-power to which a riparian owner is entitled consists of the fall in the stream where it is in its natural state, as it passes through his land, or along the boundaries of it. Or, in other words, it consists of the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land and the surface where it leaves it.

Gibson, C. J., 3 Rawle (Penn.), p. 80

Absorbent-strata water-power. See absorbent.

water-pox (wâ'tėr-poks), n. Varicella or chicken-pox.

water-press (wa'tėr pres), n. Same as hydrostatic or hydraulic press. See hydraulic. E. H. Knight.

water-prism (wâ'tėr prizm), n. In a canal or river, the body of water at any part of its course as determined by the cross-section at that part, regarded as a cross section of a prism.

The Yazoo river, by measurements, returned 139,000 cubic feet per second at the date of highest water at Vicksburg (June 27) to the water prism.

Gov. Report on Mississippi River, 1861 (rep. 1876), p. 80 water-privilege (wa'tėr priv'i-lej), n. 1. The right to use water; especially, the right to use running water to turn machinery. See water-power. —2. A stream or body of water capable of being utilized in driving machinery. [U. S.]

waterproof (wa'tėr-prof), a. and n. [Also water-proof; < water + proof, a.] I. a. Impervious to water, or nearly so. Waterproof glue. See glue.

II. n. 1. Any material which repels water; especially, a light woolen cloth made for the purpose, and subjected to some waterproofing application.—2. A garment of some material that repels water, made either of waterproof (1), or of mackintosh or a similar material made with india-rubber.

"There is going to be rain, Sheila," her father said, smelling the moisture in the keen air. "Will you not your waterproof?" W. Black, Princess of Thule, xxvi

Just as we reached it the mist turned to heavy rain. This is the depressing side of sight-seeing in Scotland; you must take your holidays in waterproofs.

Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 916

waterproof (wa'tėr prof), v. t. [< waterproof, a.] To render impervious to water, as cloth, leather, etc.

Thirty yards of waterproofed and polished fly-line of braided silk. The Century, XXVI. 478 waterproofer (wâ'tėr prō'fėr), n. One who renders materials waterproof.

Waterproofers and lamp-black makers. Lancet, 1880, I. 120.

waterproofing (wâ'tėr-prō'fing), n. [Verbal n. of waterproof, v.] 1. The process or method of rendering impervious to water, as clothing, boots and shoes, and fishing-lines.

The final combination of dubbing, whitening, waterproofing, etc., it is claimed, gives the leather a superior finish. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 225.

2. The material with which a substance is made waterproof, as caoutchouc, a varnish, or an oil.

As umbrellas were not used by men, as being too effeminate, and india rubber or waterproofing was only to be discovered more than a century later, men in Anne's reign had to put their trust in good broadcloth cloaks.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 9

water-propeller (wâ'tėr-pro-pel'ėr), n. A rotary pump. E. H. Knight.

water-pump (wâ'tėr-pump), n. A pump for water: used humorously of the eyes.

"Thank you, Dobbin," he said, rubbing his eyes with his knuckles . . . The water-pumps were at work again, and I am not sure that the soft-hearted Captain's eyes did not also twinkle. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxiv.

water-puppy (wâ'tėr-pup'i), n. Same as water-dog, 2.

water-purpie (wâ'tėr-pėr'pi), n. [< water + purpie, a Sc. corruption of purple.] A species of Veronica, V. Beccabunga, found in moist places; brook-lime. [Scotch.]

Cresses or water purpie, and a bit alt-cake, can serve the Master for breakfast as well as Caleb.

Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xviii.

water-purslane (wâ'tėr-pėrs'lān), n. See purslane.

water-pyet, n. See water-piet.

water-quake (wa'tėr-kwāk), n. A violent disturbance of water. [Rare.]

Wattle smote . . . doth sometimes in Calmes and faire weather sodainly rise tempestuously, as it were, into violent water quakes, to the danger of the poore fishermen.

Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 500. (Davies.)

water-qualm (wâ'tėr-kwām), n. Pyrosis.

water-quenched (wâ'tėr-kwencht), a. Cooled by immersion in water: a term frequently used in speaking of tempering steel and similar operations.

water-quintain (wâ'tėr-kwin'tān), n. The sport of tilting at the quintain by a person standing in a boat, which was rowed rapidly past. If the tilter was not sufficiently alert, the return of the quintain threw him into the water.

water-rabbit (wâ'tėr-rab'it), n. The swamp-hare of the lower Mississippi valley, Lepus aquaticus. See cut under swamp-hare.

water-radish (wa'tėr-rad'ish), n. A tall water-cress, Nasturtium amphibium, of wet places in the northern Old World. Other species of Nasturtium are also so named. Also radish.

water-rail (wa'tėr-rāl), n. 1. The common rail of Europe, Rallus aquaticus, as distinguished from land rail, Crex pratensis; any species of Rallus.—2. The European gallinule, Gallinula chloropus, the water-hen or moor-hen. [Local, Eng.]

water-ram (wâ'tėr ram), n. A machine for raising water; same as hydraulic ram (which see, under hydraulic).

water-ranny (wâ'tėr ran'i), n. 1. The short-tailed field-mouse. Halliwell.—2. Properly, the water-shrew.

water-rat (wâ'tėr rat), n. One of several different rodents, of aquatic habits, belonging to the family Muridæ. (a) In Europe, the water vole, a comparatively large blackish species, Arvicola amphibius, which lives in the banks of streams or lakes. See cut under vole. (b) In America, the musquash or muskrat, Fiber zibethicus. See cut under muskrat. (c) In Australia and Tasmania, a water mouse, any species of the genus Hydromys, as H. chrysogaster or H. leucogaster, also called beaver-rat. See cut under beaver rat.

Water-rat (Arvicola amphibius).

water-rate (wâ'tėr-rāt'), n. A rate or tax for the supply of water. Also water-rent.

water-rattler (wa'tėr-rat'lėr), n. The diamond rattlesnake, Crotalus adamanteus, often found in moist places. Also water-rattle. [Local, U. S.]

water-reed (wa'tėr red), n. A grass of the genus Arundo.

water-rent (wâ'tėr-rent), n. Same as water-rate.

water-ret (wâ'tėr ret'), v. t. Same as water-rot.

water-retting (wa'tėr-ret'ing), n. See retting, 1. Encyc. Brit., IX. 294.

water-rice (wâ'tėr-ris), n. The Indian rice, Zizania aquatica. See rice, and cut under Zizania.

water robin (wa'tėr rob'in), n. An Asiatic flycatcher, Xanthopygia Cahanensis. See *robin*1, 3, and cut under Xanthopygia.

water-rocket (wâ'tėr-rok'et), n. 1. A plant of the genus Nasturtium; water-cress.—2. A kind of firework designed to be discharged in the water.

water-room (wâ'tėr-rōm), n. The space in a steam-boiler occupied by water, as distinct from the steam-room, or the space which contains steam.

water-rose (wâ'tėr-rōz), n. The water-lily.

water-rot (wa'tėr-rot), v. t. To cause to rot by steeping in water, as in some of the mechanical trades. Also water-ret.

water-route (wâ'tėr-rōt), n. A stream or other tract of water used as a route of travel.

The competition of parallel railroad lines or water-routes. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 688.

water-rug† (wa'ter-rug), n. [< water + *rug*2, equiv. here to *shock*3, shough.] A kind of dog.

Hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves are clept All by the name of dogs. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 94.

water-sail (wâ'tėr-sāl), n. A small sail occasionally set under a lower studdingsail.

water-salamander (wa'tėr-sal'a-man-dėr), n. A water newt.

water-sallow (wâ'tėr-sal'ō), n. [< water + *sallow*2.] Same as water-willow, 1.

water-sapphire (wâ'tėr-saf'ir), n. A precious stone of an intense blue color and transparent, found in small rolled masses in Ceylon. It is a variety of iolite.

waterscape (wa'tėr-skāp), n. [< water + -scape, as in landscape.] A water- or sea-view as distinguished from a landscape; a seascape. [Rare.]

water-scorpion (wâ'ter-skôr'pi-on), n. A large aquatic and carnivorous bug of the family Nepidæ. See Nepa.

water-screw (wâ'tėr-skrō), n. A water-elevator consisting of an application of the Archimedean screw. It has spiral vanes set on an inclined axis revolving within a cylindrical casing whose lower end is in the water.

water-seal (wa'ter-sel), n. A body of water interposed as a bar to the passage or escape of gas. A common way of forming a water-seal is to insert the open mouth of a pipe or vessel designed to hold the gas below the surface of water in another vessel to a depth at which the hydraulic pressure opposing the escape of the gas is equal to or greater than the pneumatic pressure of the gas. Another method is to form a bend downward in a pipe and fill the bent part with water. Compare *trap*1, 4.

water-sengreen (wa'ter sen'grēn), n. See sengreen.

water-serpent (wa'ter sėr'pent), n. Same as sea serpent, 2.

watershed (wa'ter-shed), n. [< water + *shed*1.] The edge of a river-basin (see area); the line separating the waters flowing into two different rivers or river-basins. Thus, the crest of the Sierra Nevada of California forms the watershed between the rivers flowing into the Pacific and those which lose themselves in the Great Basin. Sometimes called the water-parting, and in the United States more frequently and popularly the divide. Thus the "Continental Divide" is the line which makes the separation of the waters flowing into the Pacific from those finding their way to the Gulf of Mexico.

Midway, at the outpost of advancing day! . . .
The water-shed of Time, from which the streams
Of Yesterday and To-morrow take their way!

Longfellow, The Two Rivers, i.

The summit of the pass is called the divide or water-shed. In this last word the "shed" has not the present meaning, but an obsolescent one of "part" or "divide" (Gen. Schaden). Skeat says: "The old sense 'to part' is nearly obsolete, except in water-shed, the ridge which parts river-systems. . . . The water-shed of any river-basin lends its 'area of catchment,' as the hydraulic engineers call it." J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 141.

water-sheep† (wa'tėr-shep), n. The roach, a fish: so called in antithesis to water-fox (the carp). See cut under roach. I. Walton.

water-shell (wa'ter-shel), n. In ordnance, a shell, invented by M. Abel, consisting of an ordinary shell with a centrally placed cylinder of guncotton, having the space between this cylinder and the walls of the shell filled with water. The shell is hermetically sealed to retain the water.

water-shield (wa'tėr sheld), n. A plant of either of the genera Cabomba and Brasenia, which form the suborder Cabombeæ, of the Nymphæaceæ: so called as consisting of aquatics with peltate leaves. Brasenia peltata, with floating oval leaves 1 to 4 inches across and small dull-purple flowers, is found in North America, Asia, Africa, and Australia. Also water-buckler.

water-shoot (wa'tėr-shōt), n. [< water + shoot, prob. confused also with chute.] 1. A pipe or trough for discharging water from a building.—2†. A shoot from the root of a tree.

water-shrew (wa'tėr-shrō), n. An oar-footed aquatic shrew. In Europe the best-known species is Crossopus fodiens. The corresponding American species is Neosorex palustris. See second cut under shrew.

water-shut† (wâ'tėr-shut), n. That which stops the passage of water.

Who all the morne
Sad from the quarry with his pick-axe torne
A large well-squared stone, which he would cut
To serve his stile, or for some water-shut.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals. (Nares.)

waterside (wâ'tėr-sid), n. The brink of water; the bank or margin of a river, stream, or lake; the sea-shore: sometimes used attributively.

Come, Master Brisk, I will bring you to the water-side, perhaps to Wapping, and there I'll leave you.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1.

Water-side insects are well described, particularly the ephemeridæ, The Academy, April 25, 1891, p. 392.

water-silvering (wâ'tėr-sil'vėr-ing), n. A process of silvering analogous to water-gilding.

water-sink (wâ'tėr-singk), n. See pot-hole.

water-skin (wâ'tėr-skin), n. A vessel or bag of skin used for the storage or transportation of water.

We had water, it is true, from the Nile, but we never thought we could have too much, as long as there was room in our water-skins to hold more.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 177.

water-skipper (wâ'tėr-skip'ėr), n. One of the slender long-legged water-bugs of the genus Hygrotrechus; any water-strider.

water-sky (wâ'tėr-ski), n. A peculiar reflection in the sky, common in arctic regions, indicating the presence of open water beneath.

Some circumstances which he reports seem to point to the existence of a north water all the year round; and the frequent water-skies, fogs, &c., that we have seen to the southwest during the winter go to confirm the fact.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., I. 236.

water-slater (wâ'tėr-slā'tėr), n. Any aquatic isopod or slater of the genus Asellus.

water-smartweed (wâ'tėr-smärt'wēd), n. See smartweed.

water-smoke (wâ'tėr-smōk), n. Water evaporating in the visible form of fog or mist: a phenomenon that occurs when the temperature of water-surfaces is above the dew-point of the air, and the air is already saturated with moisture. Water-smoke is frequently observed over rivers or other bodies of water after a sudden fall of temperature, when, in popular language, it is said "the river steams," and in damp weather over water covered surfaces which are much warmer than the air, and is also seen frequently in arctic regions.

We had not been able to get the dogs out when the big moon appeared above the water smoke.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., II. 72.

water-snail (wâ'tėr-snāl), n. 1. An aquatic pulmonate gastropod; a pond-snail, as a limnæid, or one of many similar snails. See cuts under Limnæa and Limnæidæ. — 2. The Archimedean screw. [Rare.]

water-snake (wâ'tėr-snāk), n. A snake which frequents the water: variously applied.

In the Friendly Islands the water snake was much respected. Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilisation, p. 170.

Especially (a) Any one of the venomous sea snakes. See Hydrophidæ and sea serpent, 2, with cuts there referred to. (b) The Indian Fordonia vittata, or any member of the family Hydrophidæ. (c) A wart-snake, any member of the Acrochordidæ, as species of Acrochordus and Chersydrus. See cut under wart-snake. (d) The common ringed snake of Europe, Tropidonotus natrix. See cuts under snake and Tropidonotus. (e) In the United States, one of several harmless aquatic colubrines, as the species of Nerodia (or Tropidonotus) and Regina, as N. sipedon and R. leberis. In the West several species of garter snakes (Eutænia) are thoroughly aquatic, and would come locally under this name. See water-adder and water moccasin.

water-soak (wâ'tėr-sōk), v. t. To soak or fill the interstices of with water.

water-socks (wâ'tėr-soks), n. pl. The white water-lily, Castalia speciosa. Britten and Holland.

water-sodden (wâ'tėr-sod'n), a. [< water + sodden, pp. of seethe.] Soaked and softened in water; water-soaked. Tennyson.

water-soldier (wâ'tėr-sōl'jėr), n. The water-sungreen, Stratiotes aloides. Also called water-aloe.

water-sorrel (wâ'tėr-sor'el), n. Same as water-dock.

water-souchy (wâ'tėr-sou'chi), n. Fish boiled and served in its own liquor. See souchi, v. t.

water-space (wâ'tėr-spās), n. That part of a steam-boiler which lies below the steam-space, and is designed to hold the water to be evaporated.

water-spaniel (wâ'tėr-span'yel), n. The name given to two varieties of the dog called spaniel, namely, the large water-spaniel and the small water-spaniel. See spaniel, 1.

water-sparrow (wâ'tėr-spar'ō), n. 1. The reed-bunting or reed-sparrow, Emberiza schœniclus. [Prov. Eng.] — 2. A reed- or sedge-warbler of the genus Acrocephalus, as A. streperus or A. phragmitis. [Prov. Eng.]

water-speedwell (wâ'tėr-spēd'wel), n. See speedwell.

water-spider (wâ'tėr-spī'dėr), n. 1. A spider of the family Drassidæ, Argyroneta aquatica, which makes a bag of silk on water-plants, and lives in it under water as in a diving-bell, the opening being below, so that the air cannot escape. It is filled by the spider, which brings down bubbles of air one at a time. See diving-spider, and cut under Argyroneta. — 2. Any one of certain spiders of the lycosid genus Dolomedes, as D. tenebrosus, D. urinator, or D. sexpunctatus, which build nests of leaves and twigs on overhanging rushes, just at the surface of the water in shallow streams; a raft-spider. The spiders construct their cocoons and live in these nests. They run rapidly over and dive beneath the surface of the water, where they can remain for some time.

3. A water mite or water-tick. — 4. A bug of the genus Hydrometra; a water-measurer. Encyc. Dict.

water-spike (wâ'tėr-spīk), n. A plant of the genus Potamogeton, which consists of aquatics with small greenish or reddish flowers in spikes or heads; pondweed.

water-spinner (wâ'tėr-spin'ėr), n. A water-spider; especially, the diving spider.

waterspout (wâ'tėr-spout), n. 1. A pipe, nozle, or orifice from which water is spouted.

The manner in which he gazed at the shops, stumbled into the gutters, ran against the porters, and stood under the waterspouts, marked him out as an excellent subject for the operations of swindlers and banterers.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., iii.

Every dozen or fifteen miles is a station . . . two or three sheds, and a water spout and woodpile.
S. Bowles, Our New West, p. 50.

2. A spout, jet, or column of water; specifically, a whirlwind over a body of water, producing the appearance of a solid column of water extending from the surface to the clouds. In reality, however, the phenomenon that is seen is the cloud brought down to the earth's surface by the rapid gyratory motion of a vertical whirl, and it consists simply of fine moist surrounding a central axis of rarefaction. At first the cloud has the form of a tapering funnel; then, descending to near the water's surface, it draws up the water for a distance into its vortex, and imparts to it its whirling motion. The spout is then complete, and appears as an isolated column connecting sea and cloud, light in color near the center, but dark along the sides. Like other whirlwinds the waterspout has a progressive as well as a rotary motion, its axis sometimes being inclined forward in the direction of advance. After continuing a short time, generally less than twenty minutes, the column is disunited, the lower part descending as rain while the upper part is drawn back into the cloud. The height of the spout depends upon the hygrometric state of the air; in general it is between 800 and 2,000 feet. It is common for a number of waterspouts to be seen simultaneously or successively, and this is to be expected for a series of separate and independent gyrations are likely to arise when the air is in a state of instability, such as is required for the development of these whirlwinds. This is especially the case in tropical and equatorial regions, where waterspouts are most frequent.

Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts.
Ps. xlii. 7.

water-sprite (wâ'tėr-sprīt), n. A sprite or spirit inhabiting the water.

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist!
And still it neared and neared:
As if it dodged a water sprite,
It plunged and tacked and veered.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

water-stairs (wâ'tėr stārz), n. pl. Stairs leading down to water, as on the banks of the Thames, where boats are taken for ferriage, etc.

He has but a tender weake body but was always very temperate . . . made him damnable drunke at some set-house, where, at the water stayres, he fell downe and had a great fall. Aubrey, Lives (Edmund Waller).

water-standing (wâ'tėr-stan'ding), a. Wet with water; perpetually filled with tears. [Rare.]

An orphan's water standing eye.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 6. 40.

water-star (wâ'tėr-stär), n. Same as star fruit.

water-stargrass (wâ'tėr-stär'gras), n. An aquatic herb, Heteranthera (Schollera) graminea, with grass-like leaves and yellow starry flowers.

water-starwort (wâ'tėr-stär'wėrt), n. See Callitriche and star-grass.

waterstead (wâ'tėr-sted), n. The bed of a river. Admiral Smyth.

water-stream (wâ'tėr-strēm), n. [< ME. water-strem, < AS. water-streám; as water + stream.] A stream of water; a river.

Vort all all swa se waterstreames . . . fleotheth forth . . . toward te sæ. Orosius (ed. White), i. 1. 1.

water-strider (wâ'tėr-strī'dėr), n. Any aquatic heteropterous insect of the family Hydrobatidæ; a water-skipper: so called from their long, slender, straddling legs and aquatic habits.

The water striders prefer quiet waters, upon which they rest, or over which they skim rapidly.
Comstock, Introd. Entom. (1888), p. 193.

water-supply (wâ'tėr-su-plī'), n. The obtaining of water for and its distribution to a town or city, as far as possible in sufficient quantity and of satisfactory quality; also, the amount of water thus provided and distributed. Water-supply, as this term is generally used, differs from irrigation in that the latter has to do with providing and distributing water for agricultural purposes — that is, it is an attempt to make up for a deficiency of, or for irregularity in, the natural rainfall. Water-supply, on the other hand, is the providing of water for domestic and manufacturing uses in sufficient quantity, and under favorable conditions, not only as to purity, but also as to pressure, so that it may be available without the necessity of carrying it by hand to the upper stories of houses or manufactories, and as to storage, so that large quantities can be used within a short period of time, as when needed for extinguishing extensive conflagrations in cities. The question of water-supply is one which has to do, and to a most important extent, with the health, comfort, and material well-being of all localities, even where there is only a moderately dense aggregation of population, and the larger and denser such aggregation the more important this question becomes. The natural source of water supply is the rain, and this is one of great importance in regions of considerable rainfall and of thinly aggregated population, the water being caught on the roofs of the houses or barns and conveyed to cisterns where it is stored for use as wanted, and from which it has to be pumped. Almost everywhere in regions of considerable precipitation water can be had by digging shallow wells in the surface detritus, and this is an extremely common mode of supply in agricultural districts, the advantage being that the expense of digging a well is much less than that of providing storage in cisterns, while the disadvantage is that well-water is ordinarily not so pure as rain-water (and this is emphatically the case in limestone districts). Besides, it is almost impossible to provide cisterns large enough to hold the amount of rain-water required during periods of abnormally long drought, such as occasionally occur even in regions of considerable average rainfall. These sources of supply — namely, rain caught as it falls and water from shallow wells — are entirely unsuited to the conditions in towns of even moderate size. The rainfall in cities is contaminated with soot and gases thrown out from the many chimneys of houses and manufacturing establishments; neither is it large enough in quantity, nor can it be stored satisfactorily without incurring an expense far greater than would be that of providing a supply in some other way. Rivers would seem to be the natural source of supply for cities situated upon them, and there are few very large cities through which a river does not run; but rivers are the natural and almost necessary sewers of the cities drained by them, and the water, thus polluted, is not only often disagreeable to the taste, but is always a possible source of danger to health. It is true that some cities of moderate size situated on very large rivers do use their water, as, for instance, St. Louis on the Mississippi, but, in general, if a river is used, the water must be taken from a point high enough up-stream to avoid the risk of contamination from the sewage of the towns situated on or near its banks, as is done in London, which is largely supplied by water from the Thames drawn from a point far above the city. The most satisfactory source of water-supply for a city is a mountain lake not too far distant, where the geological and other conditions are such as to insure a high degree of purity in the water. This is emphatically the case with regard to Glasgow, which is supplied from Loch Katrine. Much often a water satisfactory in quality and abundant in quantity can be obtained by creating one or more artificial lakes at the head of a suitably situated river by the construction of dams, these are sometimes of great height, holding back bodies of water miles in length. Of this character is the water-supply of Liverpool, of New York, of Boston, and of many other important cities. Regions underlain by thick masses of permeable rocks — as, for instance, the New Red Sandstone and Chalk districts of England — are not infrequently supplied with water by means of wells bored to considerable depths and of large dimensions, from which the water sometimes rises to the surface, but more often has to be pumped. Many large towns in the manufacturing districts of England were formerly almost exclusively and are still to some extent supplied in this way; but wherever it has been found possible to obtain water in some better way this system has been abandoned, either quality or quantity being unsatisfactory. Considerable water is procured in England from deep wells in the Chalk, and this method of supply is of some importance in London. Where the conditions are such that pure water cannot be had artificial purification is sometimes resorted to, but this is always expensive and often unsatisfactory. An abundant supply of soft water, taken from some source known to be free from the possibility of contamination by sewage or otherwise, is one of the greatest of blessings, and this result has been attained in various cities, but not without large expenditure and no small amount of engineering skill. The distribution of water was once a matter of considerable difficulty, the wooden pipes first employed being subject to rot and leakage. In modern times the use of cast iron for the mains is most common, while the service pipes are usually of lead or galvanized iron, but sometimes of bronze or brass.

water-swallow (wâ'tėr-swol'ō), n. The water-wagtail. Halliwell.

water-system (wâ'tėr-sis'tem), n. In zoöl., the water vascular system.

water-tabby (wâ'tėr-tab'i), n. Tabby having a watered surface.

water-table (wâ'tėr-tā'bl), n. 1. In arch., a string-course, molding, or other projecting member so placed as to throw off water from the wall of a building.

It should not be forgotten what a noble foundation there was for the chapell, wch did runne from the College along the street as far as the Blew Boare Inn; wch was about 7 foot or more high, and adorned with a very rich Gothique water table.
Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Wolsey).

2. A small embankment made across a road, especially on a hill, to carry off the water. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] —3. Same as water-bridge.

water tank (wa'tėr tangk), n. A tank, cistern, or other receiver for holding water.

The sanitizing bath, plate holders, water tanks, etc., all adjusted Silver Sunbeam, p. 178.

water-tap (wa'tėr-tap), n. A tap or cock by which water may be drawn from any supply.

water-target (wa'tėr tar get), n. The water-shield, Brasenia peltata.

water-tath (wâ'tėr tath), n. A species of coarse grass growing in wet grounds, and supposed to be injurious to sheep. [Prov. Eng.]

water-telescope (wa'tėr tel'e-skop), n. See telescope.

water-thermometer (wa'tėr-thėr mom'e-tėr), n. An instrument, in which water is substituted for mercury, for exhibiting the precise degree of temperature at which water attains its maximum density. This is at 39.2° F. or 4° C., and from that point downward to the freezing point, 32° F. or 0° C., it expands, and it also expands from the same point upward to the boiling point, 212° F. or 100° C. See water.

water-thief (wa'tėr-thef), n. 1. A pirate. [Rare.]

Water thieves and land thieves, I mean pirates
Shak., M. of V., I. 3. 24.

2. A slender cylindrical tin can, 9 or 10 inches long and from 1½ to 2 inches thick, furnished with a bail, used to draw water from a cask through the bung hole; a bung bucket: so called because it is sometimes used by sailors to steal water when on short allowance.

water-thistle (wâ'tėr-this l), n. The marsh-thistle, Cnicus palustris, of the northern Old World. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-thrush (wâ'tėr thrush), n. 1. A bird of the genus Seiurus, as S. noveboracensis or S. motacilla, common in the United States, and belonging to the American warblers, or Mniotiltidæ. S. noveboracensis is more fully called New York water-thrush, and S. motacilla the large-billed or Louisiana water-thrush. The name may have originally contrasted with wood-thrush, but this bird belongs to a different family. The nearest relative of these water-thrushes is a woodland species of the same genus, S. aurocapillus, the golden-crowned thrush (figured under oven-bird), from which the two species named above differ markedly in inhabiting watery tangles and brakes. Also called water-wagtail. See cut under Seiurus.

2. Any bird of the family Pittidæ, an Old World ant-thrush. See cut under Pitta. —3. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.] —4. Same as water-wagtail, 1. [Local, Eng.]

water-thyme (wa'tėr-tim), n. See thyme.

water-tick (wa'tėr-tik), n. A water-spider of the genus Hydrometra.

water-tiger (wa'tėr ti'gėr), n. The larva of any water beetle of the family Dytiscidæ. See cut under decapodiform.

The larvæ are called water-tigers, being long, cylindrical, with large flattened heads, armed with scissor-like jaws with which they seize other insects, or snip off the tails of tadpoles while they are even known to attack young fishes, sucking their blood.
A. S. Packard, Guide to the Study of Insects, p. 135.

water-tight (wâ'tėr-tit), a. [= G. wasserdicht; as water + *tight*¹.] So tight as to resist the passage of water; impenetrable by water. Water-tight compartment. See compartment, and compare cut under deck.

water-tightness (wâ'tėr-tit nes), n. The property of being water tight. The Engineer, LXIX. 148.

water-torch (wâ'tėr-tôrch), n. The reed-mace or cattail, Typha latifolia: said to be so named from its fruiting spike being soaked in oil and lighted as a torch. Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants.

water-tower (wâ'tėr-tou'ėr), n. Same as standpipe, 2.

When the flames are blazing through the upper windows of a tall building . . . the value of what is called a water-tower is apparent. Scribner's Mag. IX. 56.

water-treader (wâ'tėr-tred'ėr), n. One who or that which treads water; hence, by poetical license, a ship.

When the water-treader far away
Had left the land, then plotted they the day
Of my long servitude. Chapman, Odyssey, xiv. 477.

water-tree (wâ'tėr-trē), n. See Tetracera.—Red water-tree, the sassy-bark. See Erythrophlæum.

water-trefoil (wâ'tėr-trē'foil), n. Same as buck-bean.

water-trunk (wâ'tėr-trungk), n. A cistern of planks lined with lead to hold water. Simmonds.

water-tube (wâ'tėr-tūb), n. 1. A pipe for rain-water.—2. One of a set of tubes which open upon the exterior of various invertebrates, and into which water may enter. They are supposed to have an excretory or a depuratory office analogous to that of kidneys. See water-pore, 1, water-vascular, and compare water-lung.—Water-tube boiler, a form of boiler in which the water circulates through pipes, and the flame wraps about them.

water-tupelo (wâ'tėr-tū'pe-lō), n. A form (Nyssa aquatica) of the black-gum or pepperidge, Nyssa sylvatica, having the base of the trunk greatly enlarged or swollen, found in ponds and swamps in the southern United States.

water-turkey (wâ'tėr-tėr'ki), n. 1. The anhinga or snake-bird, Plotus anhinga. See darter, 3 (b) (1), and cut under anhinga. [Southern U. S.]—2. The wood-ibis, Tantalus loculator: more fully called Colorado water-turkey. See wood-ibis, and cut under Tantalus. [Southwestern U. S.]

water-twist (wa'tėr-twist), n. The trade-name for cotton yarn spun on a water-frame. See water-frame.

water-twyer (wa'tėr-twī'ėr), n. In metal., a furnace blast-pipe or twyer kept cool (to prevent the burning of the nozle) by means of a stream of water constantly passing through a pipe carried around or beside it.

water-vacuole (wa'tėr-vak u-ōl), n. One of the temporary vacuoles of many protozoans, consisting of a globule of water taken in with a particle of food. The circulation of these food-vacuoles or temporary stomachs represents a water-vascular system of the most primitive kind. See water-vascular.

water-varnish (wa'tėr-vär nish), n. A varnish made by using water as a solvent.—Lac water-varnish. See *lac*².

water-vascular (wâ'tėr-vas kū-lär), a. In biol., pertaining to or providing for circulation of water in the body of an animal. The water-vascular system is seen in its utmost simplicity in infusoria, and in various degrees of complexity in higher invertebrates. In trematode worms, for example, water lungs and water tubes belong to the water-vascular system. See also cuts under Balanoglossus, Proctucha, Rhabdocœla, and Rotifera.

Water-vascular system of a trematode (Leptodiscus medusa, Leuckart).
a, terminal water-pore; b, lateral; c, minute vessels; d, lateral chalices; e, the cell of left side shaded; f, g, lobes of left trunk.

water vine (wa'tėr-vin), n. 1. A plant of the genus Phyllocyene.—2. A climbing shrub, Dolichandra Unguis-cati, of the Bignoniaceæ, found in tropical America. [West Indies.]

water-violet (wâ'tėr-vī'o-let), n. (a) A plant of the genus Hottonia, primarily H. palustris: so called from the likeness of its flowers to those of the stock-gillyflower, once called violet. Britten and Holland. See featherfoil. (b) Sometimes, same as lance-leafed violet (which see, under violet).

water-viper (wa'tėr-vī'pėr), n. See viper.

water-vole (wa'tėr-vol), n. The common water-rat or vole of Europe, Arvicola amphibius. See cut under water-rat.

The saddle-back dive of a water-vole.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

water-wagtail (wâ'tėr-wag'tal), n. 1. A wagtail most properly so called; any species of Motacilla in a strict sense, as distinguished from Budytes. In England the name commonly specifies the pied wagtail, Motacilla lugubris. See cut under wagtail.—2. Same as water-thrush, 1.—Gray water-wagtail, yellow water-wagtail, same as gray wagtail (which see, under wagtail).

waterway (wâ'tėr-wā), n. [< ME. water-weg, < AS. wæterweg, as water + *way*¹.] 1. A channel or passage of water; a water-route; specifically, that part of a river, arm of the sea, or the like through which vessels enter or depart; the fairway.

Though the Thames was already a waterway by which London could communicate with the heart of England, no town save Oxford has as yet arisen along its course.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 419.

2. In ship-building, a name given to the thick planks at the outside of the deck, worked over the ends of the beams, and fitting against the inside of the top-timbers, to which, as well as to the ends of the beams, they are bolted, thus forming an important binding. Their inner edge is hollowed out to form a channel for water to run off the deck. In iron vessels the waterway assumes many different forms. See cut under beam, 2 (g).

The spencers we bent on very carefully, . . . and, making tackles fast to the clews, bowsed them down to the waterways. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 288.

The Waterway, as its name would suggest, is a portion of the hull so situated that, in addition to its other functions, it forms a channel for carrying water to the scuppers on each side of the ship. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 208.

water-weak† (wâ'tėr-wēk), a. Weak as water; very feeble or weak.

It marrie now, anone with woe I weepe,
If lustie now, forthwith am water-weak.
Davies, Muse's Sacrifice, p. 10. (Davies.)

water-weed (wâ'tėr-wēd), n. 1. Any wild aquatic plant without special use or beauty.

The willful water-weeds held me thrall.
S. Lanier, The Century, XXVII. 818.

2. Specifically, the choke-pondweed or water-thyme, Elodea Canadensis (Anacharis Alsinastrum), of the Hydrocharideæ. See pondweed and Babington's-curse.

water-weevil (wâ'tėr-wē'vil), n. A snout-beetle, Lissorhoptrus simplex, which occurs in great numbers in the Georgia and South Carolina rice-fields, the adult feeding on the leaves of the rice, and the larvæ feeding on the roots under water.

Water-weevil (Lissorhoptrus simplex), eight times natural size.

This beetle has gained its common name of water-weevil from the fact that it is found only when the fields are overflowed.
L. O. Howard, U. S. Agricultural Report, 1881-2, p. 131.

water-wheel (wa'ter-hwēl), n. In hydraul.: (a) A wheel moved by water, and employed to turn machinery. There are four principal kinds of water-wheels: the undershot wheel, the undershot wheel, the breast wheel, and the turbine. (b) A wheel for raising water in large quantities, as the Persian wheel. See wheel, 1. (c) The paddle-wheel of a steamer.—Bottom-discharge water-wheel. See bottom.—Lift water-wheel. (a) An undershot wheel. (b) A water-wheel the gudgeons and bearings of which may be raised or lowered to adapt the wheel to various heights of water-supply. E. H. Knight.—Radial-piston water-wheel, a form of breast wheel having movable floats which extend radially outward to the breasting on the water-side of the wheel to receive the pressure of the water during its descent, and are drawn inward as they rise on the opposite side of the wheel.—Water-wheel gate, a water-gate for controlling the quantity of water admitted to a wheel, according to the power required. See cut under scroll.—Water-wheel governor, a mechanism employed to produce uniformity of motion in a water-wheel.

water-white (wâ'tėr-hwīt), a. Perfectly transparent, as water; limpid and colorless. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 646.

water-whorlgrass (wâ'tėr-hwėrl'grâs), n. Same as water-hairgrass.

water-willow (wâ'tėr-wil'ō), n. 1. A European willow, sometimes named Salix aquatica, forming a variety of the common sallow, S. Caprea, or if distinct, S. cinerea.—2. An American acanthaceous plant, Dianthera Americana, an herb 3 feet high, of willow-like aspect, growing in water, having purplish flowers in axillary pedunculed spikes.

water-wing (wâ'tėr-wing), n. A sail erected on the bank of a river adjoining a bridge, to secure the foundations from the action of the current.

waterwitch (wâ'tėr-wich), n. 1. A witch who dwells in the water; a water-nixy.—2. A person who pretends to have the power of discovering subterranean springs by means of a divining-rod. Bartlett, Americanisms, p. 741.—3. One of several water-birds noted for their quickness in diving, as a kind of duck, the buffle-headed duck, Clangula or Bucephala albeola, and especially various species of grebe and of didappers, as the horned grebe, Podicipes cornutus.

sup or the pied-billed dabchick, Podilymbus podiceps. See cuts under bugle, grebe, and Tachybaptes.—4. The stormy petrel, or Mother Carey's chicken. See cut under petrel.

water-withe (wâ'tèr-with), n. A species of vine, Vitis Caribæa, which grows in the West Indies in parched districts. It is so full of clear sap or water that a piece of the stem two or three yards long is said to afford a plentiful draught.

water-wood (wâ'tèr-wụ̈d), n. A large rubiaceous tree, Chimarrhis cymosa, of river-banks in the West Indies.

waterwork (wâ'tèr-wėrk), n. 1. A structure, contrivance, or engine for conducting, distributing, or otherwise disposing of water: now commonly in the plural. Specifically—(a) An edifice with machinery constructed in London in 1594–5 for forcing up and conveying the water of the Thames to various parts of the city.

> Titus, the brave and valorous young gallant,
> Three years together in the town hath been,
> Yet my Lord Chancellor's tomb he hath not seen,
> Nor the new waterwork.
> Sir J. Davies (?), Epigrams (1608), vi., In Titum.

> Mem. Shall serve the whole city with preservative
> Weekly; each house his dose, and, at the rate—
> Sur. As he that built the waterwork doth with water.
> B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

(b) [In plural form, as sing. or pl.] The aggregate of constructions and appliances for the collection, preservation, and distribution of water for domestic purposes, for the working of machinery, or otherwise for the use of a community. (c) An appliance through which water is spouted out in jets, sprays, or showers; a fountain; a hydraulic toy.

> Some [gardens] are beautified with basons of water in open pavilions, or with fountains and little water works, in which, and their pleasant summer houses, their chief beauty consists. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 125.

(c) pl. Same as tear-pump. [Humorous slang.]

> Sneaking little brute, . . . clapping on the waterworks just in the hardest place.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 5.

2†. A marine scene or pageant.

> The first scene is a water worke presented by Oceanus, king of the sea.
> Dekker, London's Tempe (Works, ed. Pearson, IV. 118).

[In the following quotation the word is used punningly, with reference to the freezing over of the Thames during the winter of 1607–8.

> Coun. Make me so much beholding to you as to receive from you the right picture of all these your water works. . . .
> Cot. The Thames began to put on his "freeze coat" which he yet wears, about the week before Christmas; and hath kept it on till now this latter end of January.
> The Great Frost (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 83).]

3†. Painting with water or something soluble in water as a vehicle.—4. Hence, a textile fabric, as canvas, painted in this manner, and used instead of tapestry to decorate apartments.

> The king for himself had a house of timber, . . . and for his other lodgings he had great and goodlie tents of blew water worke, garnished with yellow and white.
> Holinshed, Chronicle, III. 819.

> For thy walls a pretty slight drollery, . . . or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries.
> Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 158.

water-worker (wâ'ter-wėr'kėr), n. One whose work has to do with water; in provincial English use, a maker of meadow-drains and wet ditches. Halliwell.

water-worm (wâ'tèr-wėrm), n. A water annelid, as a naidid.

water-worn (wâ'tèr-wôrn), a. Worn by the action of water; especially, smoothed by the force or action of running water, or water in motion: as, water-worn pebbles.

waterwort (wâ'tèr-wėrt), n. 1. A plant of the genus Elatine, or more broadly of the order Elatinaceæ, primarily E. Hydropiper of the Old World.—2. The plant Philydrum lanuginosum, or (Lindley) any plant of the order Philydraceæ.

water-wraith (wâ'tèr-rath), n. A supposed water-spirit, whose appearance prognosticates death or woe to the person seeing it.

> By this the storm grew loud apace;
> The water-wraith was shrieking.
> Campbell, Lord Ullin's Daughter.

watery (wâ'tėr-i), a. [< ME. watery, wateri, wolry, wairi, < AS. wæterig (= D. waterig = MHG. wezzeric, wazzerig, G. wässerig), < water, water: see water.] 1. Abounding in, moist with, or containing water; discharging water; wet; dripping; watered; specifically, of the eyes, tearful or running.

> "After sharpe shoures," quod Pees, "moste shene is the sonne;
> Is no weder warmer than after watery clouden."
> Piers Plowman (B), xviii. 416.

> This lady
> Walks discontented, with her watery eyes
> Bent on the earth.
> Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, i. 1.

2. Consisting of water.

> The queen o' the sky,
> Whose watery arch and messenger am I [Iris].
> Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 71.

> Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
> Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
> Her watery labyrinth. Milton, P. L., ii. 584.

3. Resembling water; suggestive of water. (a) Thin, as a liquid, of slight consistency.

> Nowe this vynes, whose taketh kepe,
> Not wattery but thicke humours wepe.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 104.

Hence—(b) Weak; vapid; insipid.

> The heorte, thet was wateri, smeechles, and ne uelede no saunr of God. Ancren Riwle, p. 370.

> Slight Sir Robert with his watery smile.
> Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

(c) Liquid; soft, and more or less transparent; pale.

> The chasm in which the sun has sunk is shut, . . .
> And over it a space of watery blue,
> Which the keen evening star is shining through.
> Shelley, Evening.

> Slant watery lights, from parting clouds, aspace
> Travel along the precipice's base.
> Wordsworth, Evening Walk.

(d) Insipid and soft or flabby, as a fish or its flesh.

4. Pertaining to, connected with, or affecting water; specifically used of the moon, as governing the tide.

> Whiles winter frets the seas, and wat'ry Orion
> Surrey, Æneid, iv. 67.

> All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
> That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,
> May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!
> Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2. 60.

> The watery god
> Rell'd from a silver urn his crystal flood.
> Dryden.

5†. Watering in desire, as the mouth; eager.

> What will it be,
> When that the watery palate tastes indeed
> Love's thrice-repured nectar?
> Shak., T. and C., iii. 2. 22.

6. In her.: (a) Bounded by, or ornamented by, wavy lines: a rare epithet used in blazoning funeral monument bearings. (b) Same as undé. [Rare.] The watery star†. See star. Watery fusion. See aqueous fusion, under fusion. Watery itch, scabies attended with the formation of vesicles.

water-yam (wâ'tèr yam), n. The latticeleaf; either of the plants Aponogeton (Ouvirandra) fenestralis and A. (O.) Bernieriana: so called from its aquatic growth and farinaceous rootstock. See latticeleaf and Ouvirandra.

water-yarrow (wâ'tèr-yar'o), n. The water violet, Hottonia palustris: so called from its leaves being finely divided like those of yarrow. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

watht, n. [< Icel. vath = Sw. vad, a ford: see wade, n.] A ford. Halliwell.

wathe†, n. [< ME. wathe (also, after Icel., wath, wayth), < AS. wath, wæth, hunting, game, = OHG. weida, MHG. G. weid, pasture, meadow, = Icel. veidhr, hunting, fishing. Cf. gain.] 1. The pursuit of game; hunting.

> "Ye, wo," quoth wudlond, "cotha the king, "and walkes on nyes wathe,
> For I can tethe the herd, with hounde and with horne."
> Anturs of Arthur (ed. Robson), xxiv.

2. Game; prey.

> Bi fore alle the folk on the flette, freoker he bedder > Vrech his wynsom to fech hym bytoute . . .
> "Ye, I wis," quoth that other wyze, "here is wayth fayre of
> That I se; this semeth ze in seasun of wynter."
> Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1381.

> God send you som wathe!
> Now ar thise fowles flone into ever contre.
> Towneley Mysteries, p. 73.

wathe†, n. [< ME. wathe, wothe, < Icel. vathi, danger, injury.] Peril; harm; danger.

> Trwe love true restore,
> Thy me dyen [me] may dryde no wathe.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2455.

> He shwe amidit the wathe, out of wothe paste.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10096.

wathely†, adv. [ME., < wathe[2] + -ly[2].] Dangerously; severely.

> Ector done was to dethe, & his day past,
> Ac illes wroȝte full wothely ar were of his liffe.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8827.

> Wroghte wayes fele wyde, were aunade longe tyme,
> And wondes alle wathely, that in the ways mowe be.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 4160.

Watling street. [< ME. Watlinge-strete, < AS. Wætlinga stræt, lit. the Watlings' street; Wætlinga, gen. pl. of Wætling, a descendant of Wætla (< Wæt, a man's name, + -ing[1]); stræt, a road, street.] 1. A celebrated Roman road leading from London (and possibly from Dover) northwestward across Britain. Hence—2†. The Milky Way, the ordinary name of which implies that it is a road.

> So yonder, lo, the Galaxye,
> The which men clepe the Milky Weye,
> For hit ys white; and somme, parfeye,
> Callen hyt Watlynge strete.
> Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 989.

watt (wot), n. [So called from the Scottish engineer and inventor James Watt (1736–1819).] The practical unit of electrical activity or power. The watt is equal to 10[7] ergs per second, or the same number of absolute c. g. s. units of electrical activity; or it is the rate of working in a circuit when the E. M. F. is one volt and the current one ampere. One horse-power is equal to 746 watts.

watte†, n. See watt[3].

Watteau back. In dressmaking, an arrangement of the back of a woman's dress in which broad folds or plaits hang from the neck to the bottom of the skirt without interruption; by extension, any loose back to a dress, not girded at the waist. See cut under sack.

Watteau bodice. A bodice of a woman's dress having a square opening at the neck, and presenting some resemblance to the costumes in the paintings by the artist Watteau (beginning of the eighteenth century).

Watteau mantle. See mantle.

wattle (wot'l), n. [Also dial. waddle; < ME. watel, < AS. watel, watul, a hurdle, in pl. twigs, thatching, tiles; cf. Bav. wadel, twigs, fir-branches, Swiss wedele, a bundle of twigs; perhaps akin to withy, weed[1]. Cf. wallet.] 1. A framework made of interwoven rods or twigs; a hurdle. See hurdle.

> The walls are wattles, and the covering leaves.
> Scott, The Poacher.

> They are gallant hares, and the scent lies thick right across another meadow, . . . and then over a good wattle with a ditch on the other side.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 7.

2. A rod; a wand; a switch; a twig.

> A Wattle, rod, vibex.
> Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 88.

> Nae whip nor spur, but just a wattle
> O' saugh or hazel.
> Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

3†. A basket; a bag or wallet. Piers Plowman (C), xi. 209.—4. In ornith., a fleshy lobe hanging from the front of the head; specifically, such a lobe of the domestic hen, or a like formation of any bird. Wattles most properly so called are paired, as in the hen, but may be single, as the dewlap of the turkey. They are very various in size, shape, and color, but are usually pendent, and of some bright tint, as red, yellow, or blue. They occur in several different orders of birds, and among species whose near relatives are destitute of such appendages. Similar lobes or flaps on the auriculars are sometimes called ear wattles, though more properly ear lobes. See wattle bird, wattle-eyed, phrase under wattled and cuts under Gallus and Tiaperra.

> The combs or wattles [of young game cocks] are to be cut as soon as they appear, and the cock chickens are to be separated as soon as they begin to peck each other.
> J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 202.

5. A flap of skin forming a sort of dewlap on each side of the neck of some domestic swine.

> A Wattle of a hog, uenus.
> Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 88.

> Gottrons, Waddles, or wattles, the two little and long excrescences which hang just like it either side of the throat of some hogs. Colgrave, 1611.

6. In ichth., a fleshy excrescence about the mouth; a barbel.

> The Barbel is so called, says Gesner, by reason of his beard or wattles at his mouth, which are under his nose or chaps. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 108.

7. One of various Australian and Tasmanian acacias, valued to some extent for their wood and for their gum, but more for their bark, which is rich in tannin. For tanbark the most important species are Acacia decurrens, or of it is distinct from this, as argued to be the case, A. mollissima, the common black wattle, also called green or feathered wattle and A. pycnantha, the broad-leaved or golden wattle. The silver wattle, A. dealbata, closely allied to the black wattle is distinguished by the salmon color of its young foliage and is a taller tree of moister ground. Its bark is inferior, but is considerably used for tighter leathers. Other species yielding tan bark are A. saligna (A. longifolia), the blackwood or lightwood, A. Melanoxylon, the native hickory (A. in persona), A. penninervis, etc. Several wattles yield a gum resembling gum arabic, some what exported for use in cotton printing as an adhesive, etc. The principal sources of this product are the black wattle, the broad-leaved wattle, and A. homalophylla.

8. In her., a wattle or dewlap used in a bearing. Compare wattled. African wattle, a South African tree, Acacia Natalitia. Alpine wattle, Acacia pravissima, a shrub or small tree of the Victorian Alps. Black wattle, feathered wattle, golden wattle, green wattle. See def. 7. Prickly wattle, Acacia juniperina, an evergreen shrub of Australia and Tasmania. Raspberry-jam wattle. Same as raspberry-jam tree. Ravannah wattle, two West Indian verbenaceous trees, Citharexylum quadrangulare and C. cinereum. Silver wattle. See def. 7. Soap-pod wattle. Same as soapnut, 2. Varnish-wattle, the Australian Acacia vernicifua. Wallaby wattle, an Australian shrub, Acacia vigens Wattle and daub, a rough mode of building huts, cottages, etc., of interwoven twigs plastered with mud or clay: often used attributively: as, wattle and-daub construction. Also wattle and dab.

Melbourne in those days was a struggling village, where the fathers of the settlement were content with slab shanties, or wattle and daub huts.

Quoted in Contemporary Rev., LIII. 8

wattle (wot'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. wattled, ppr. wattling. [Early mod. E. also wattle; < ME. watelen, wattlen; < wattle, n.] 1. To bind, wall, fence, or otherwise fit with wattles.

And ther with Grace by gan to make a good foundement,
And watelede hit and wallyde hit with hus pe yes and hus passion. Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 322

Smoke was seen to arise within a shed yt was joyned to ye end of yr storehouse, which was wattled up with bowes. Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 117

2. To form by interweaving twigs or branches: as, to wattle a fence.

The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled cotes. Milton, Comus, l. 341

And round them still the wattled hurdle hung. M. Arnold, Rabbi's Dead, ii.

3. To interweave; interlace; form into basket-work or network.

A night of Clouds muffled their brows about,
Their wattled locks gusht all in rivers out.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Works, I. 2

The roof was a thatch composed of white birch twigs, sweet-flag, and straw wattled together.
S. Judd, Margaret, I. 3.

4. To switch; beat. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wattle-bark (wot'l bärk), n. A bark used for tanning, obtained from several species of Acacia growing in Australia. See wattle, 7.

wattle-bird (wot'l-bėrd), n. 1. The Australian wattled or warty-faced honey-eater, Anthochæra carunculata: formerly also called wattled bee-eater and wattled crow by Latham, and pied pendeloque by Dandin. Among its former New Latin names are Merops or Coracias carunculatus, Creadion carunculatum, and Corvus paradoxus. It inhabits Australia, and has ear wattles about half an inch long. In a related species of Tasmania, A. inauris, the wattles are more than an inch long. The plumage is variegated with gray, brown, and white. Several other meliphagine birds are also wattled.

Wattle-bird (Anthochæra carunculata)

2. A wattle-crow, Glaucopis cinerea, the cinereous wattle bird of Latham.—3. A wattle-turkey.

wattle-crow (wot'l-krō), n. Any bird of the group Glaucopinæ or Callaturinæ, a wattled tree-crow; originally and specifically, the cinereous wattle-bird, Glaucopis cinerea, of the South Island of New Zealand. The wattles are rich orange, blue at the base; the bill and feet are black, the eyes are dark brown; the plumage is slate-gray, black on the face and tip of the tail; the length of the male is 16½ inches, of the female 15 inches; the sexes are alike in color. A second species, G. wilsoni, of the North Island, has blue wattles.

Wattle-crow (Glaucopis cinerea) wattled (wot'ld), a. [< wattle + *-ed*².] Having a wattle or wattles, as a bird; specifically, in her., noting a cock's head and the like, when the wattles are of a different tincture from the rest: generally used in the expression wattled and combed. Also jewlapped, jelloped, and barbed.

The wattled cocks strut to and fro.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

Wattled bee-eater. Same as wattle-bird, 1. Latham. Wattled bird of paradise, Paradigalla carunculata of New Guinea. This has two pairs of wattles, one on each side of the forehead, of a yellowish-green color, and another at the base of the mandible on each side, of a blue and orange color. The male is 11 inches long, and mostly of a velvety-black color with various iridescence. Wattled creeper of Latham, Ptilotis carunculata, a meliphagine bird of the Samoan, Friendly, and Fiji islands, chiefly of olivaceous, yellowish, and grayish coloration. See Ptilotis. Wattled crow. (a) Any wattle-crow. (b) Same as wattle-bird, 1. Latham. Wattled honey-eater. Same as wattle bird, 1. — Wattled plover, any spur-winged plover of the genus Lobivanellus, as L. lobatus, having the face beset with fleshy lobes and wattles. The species named has these formations highly developed, a small hind toe, and no crest; the plumage is chiefly white, varied with black on the head, neck, wings, and tail. See the case of wattles and spurs explained under spur-winged. Wattled starel of Latham, Creadion carunculatum, a corvine bird of New Zealand, 8 or 9 inches long, chiefly of a chestnut color, the head and tail black, the wings black and chestnut, the wattles yellow or vermilion. Wattled tree-crow, a wattle-crow.

Wattled Plover (Lobivanellus lobatus).

wattle-faced (wot'l fast), a. Lantern-jawed; thin-faced.

Thou wattle-faced sing'd pig.
Middleton (and another), Mayor of Queenborough, III. 3.

wattle-gum (wot'l-gum), n. An Australian gum. See gum arabic, under *gum*².

wattle-jaws (wot'l-jâz), n. pl. Long, lanky jaws; lantern-jaws. Halliwell.

wattle-tree (wot'l-trē), n. Same as wattle, 7.

The golden blossoms of the wattle-trees mark the period [spring] everywhere in Australia.
Contemporary Rev., LII. 407.

wattle-turkey (wot'l-tėr'ki), n. The brush-turkey, Talegallus lathami. See cut under Talegallus.

wattlework (wot'l-wėrk), n. A wattled fabric or structure; wickerwork.

A nest of wattle-work formed of silver wire.
N. & Q., 5th Ser., VIII. 483.

The huts were probably more generally made of wattle work, like those of the Swiss lakes.
Dawkins, Early Man in Britain, p. 271.

wattling (wot'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wattle, v.] A construction made by interweaving twigs, osiers, or flat and elastic material of any sort, with stakes or rods as a substructure.

The houses . . . have [are] 2 or 3 partitions on the ground floor, made with a wattling of canes or sticks.
Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688.

wattmeter (wot'mē'tėr), n. [< watt + *meter*².] An instrument for measuring in watts the rate of working or the activity in an electric circuit.

Electrodynamic wattmeter, a wattmeter or electrodynamometer the indications of which depend on the mutual forces between two coils through one of which a current flows proportional in strength to the electromotive force while through the other there flows either the whole or a definite fraction of the whole current in the circuit. Electrostatic wattmeter, an electrometer arranged so that its indications depend on the product of the electrostatic difference of potential between the poles of the electric generator and the electrostatic difference of potential between the ends of a known conductive resistance in the circuit through which the current is flowing.

waubeen (wâ-bēn'), n. Any South American characinoid fish of the subfamily Erythrininæ. See cut under Erythrinus.

wauble, v. A dialectal (Scotch) form of *wabble*¹.

wauch, waugh² (wâch), a. A Scotch form of *wallow*³.

waucht, waught (wâcht), n. [Also quaich, quaigh, etc. (see quaigh); < Ir. Gael. cuach, a cup, bowl, milking-pail; cf. W. cwch, a round concavity, hive, crown of a hat, boat. Cf. quaff.] A large draught of any liquid. [Scotch.]

She drank it a' up at a waught,
Left na ae drap ahin'.
King Henry (Child's Ballads, I. 180).

wauff, a. See *waff*³.

waugh¹, v. t. A variant of *waff*¹ for *vane*¹.

waugh², a. See wauch.

waught, n. See waucht.

waukrife, a. See wakerife.

waul, wawl (wâl), v. i. [Freq. of *waw*⁴; cf. caterwaul, caterwaw.] To cry as a cat; squall.

The helpless infant, coming wauling and crying into the world. Scott.

waule, n. See *wall*⁸.

waur (wâr), a. A Scotch form of *war*² for worse.

waure, n. A dialectal variant of *ware*³.

wau-wau, n. Same as wow-wow. H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 70.

wave¹ (wāv), v.; pret. and pp. waved, ppr. waving. [< ME. waven, < AS. wafian, wave, fluctuate (rare), also waver in mind, wonder (cf. AS. wæfre, wavering, restless, wæfer-syn, wavering vision, spectacle); cf. Icel. vafa*, indicated in the freq. vafra, vafla, waver, in vafi, doubt, vafi, hesitation, also in tafa, vōfa, mod. vofa, swing, vibrate, waver, = MHG. waben, wave, = Bav. waben, waver, totter; cf. MHG. freq. waberen, wabelen, webelen, fluctuate, waver. The orig. verb is rare in early use, but the freq. forms represented by waver and wabble are common: see *waver*¹, *wabble*¹. The word has been more or less confused with *ware*², weare.] I. intrans. 1. To move up and down or to and fro; undulate; fluctuate; bend or sway back and forth; flutter.

The disc arcours saw thame cumande
With baneris to the vynd waland.
Barbour, Bruce (E. E. T. S.), ix. 245.

I weare, as the see dothe, Je vague or je vndoye. . . .
After a storme the see weareth. Palsgrave, p. 772.

Beneath, stern Neptune shakes the solid ground;
The forests wave, the mountains nod around.
Pope, Iliad, xx. 73.

2. To have an undulating form or direction; curve alternately in opposite directions.

To curl their waving hairs. Pope, R. of the L., II. 97.

Thrice-happy he that may caress
The tingle-tt's waving balm.
Tennyson, Talking Oak.

3. To give a signal by a gesture of movement up and down or to and fro.

A bloody arm it is, . . . and now
It waves unto us! B. Jonson, Catiline, I. 1.

She waved to me with her hand.
Tennyson, Maud, ix.

4†. To waver in mind; vacillate.

They wave in and out, no way sufficiently grounded, no way resolved what to think, speak, or write.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 43.

II. trans. 1. To move to and fro; cause to shake, rock, or sway; brandish.

The Childe of Elle hee fought soe well,
As his weapon he waved amaine.
The Child of Elle (Child's Ballads, III. 280).

All the company fell singing an Hebrew hymn in a barbarous tone, waving themselves to and fro.
Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 16, 1645.

And July's eve, with balmy breath,
Waved the blue-bells on Newark heath.
Scott, L. of L. M., vi., Epil.

Specifically—2. To offer as a wave-offering. See wave-offering.

He shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you. Lev. xxiii. 11.

3. To shape or dispose in undulations; cause to wind in and out, as a line in curves, or a surface in ridges and furrows.

Horns whelk'd and waved like the enridged sea.
Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 71.

This mud [caused by a land-slide] disported itself very much like lava flowing down inclined slopes, the terminations being scalloped, and the surface waved by small ridges like ropy lava. Science, VI. 87.

4. To decorate with a waving or winding pattern. [Rare.]

He give him th' armes which late I conquer'd in Asteropeus; forg'd of brass, and wav'd about with tin;
'Twill be a present worthy him.
Chapman, Iliad, xxiii. 4[illegible]

5. To signal by a wave of the hand, or of a flag, a handkerchief, or the like; direct by a waving gesture or other movement, as in beckoning.

We mistrusted some knavery, and, being waved by them to come a shoare, yet we would not.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. ii. 32.

Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 61.

6. To express, as a command, direction, farewell, etc., by a waving movement or gesture.

Perchance the maiden smiled to see
Yon parting lingerer wave adieu.
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 5.

I retained my station when he waved to me to go, and announced, "I can not think of leaving you, sir."
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

7. To water, as silk. See water, v. t., 3.

The waved water chamelot was from the beginning esteemed the richest and bravest wearing.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, viii. 48.

wave[1] (wāv), n. [< ME. wave, wawe; < wave, v. The word wave in its most common sense has taken the place, in literary use, of the diff. noun wase, wase, a wave. The form wave could not, however, change into ware: see ware[1]. The noun wave, as well as the verb, has been confused with wave[1].] 1. A disturbance of the surface of a body in the form of a ridge and trough, propagated by forces tending to restore the surface to its figure of equilibrium, the particles not advancing with the wave.

No ship yit karf the seawes grene and blewe.
Chaucer, Former Age, l. 21.

When you do dance, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do Nothing but that. Shak. W. T., iv. 4. 141.

2. Water; a stream; the sea. [Poetical.]

The laughing tides that lave
These Edens of the eastern wave.
Byron, The Giaour.

3. A form assumed by parts of a body which are out of equilibrium, such that as fast as the particles return they are replaced by others moving into neighboring positions of stress, so that the whole disturbance is continually propagated into new parts of the body while preserving more or less perfectly the same shape and other characters. In a somewhat wider sense the word is applied in cases where there is no progression through the body; thus, the shape of a vibrating piano string may be called a wave. But in its narrowest and most proper sense it is restricted to an advancing elevation or depression of the surface of a body. An advancing elevation is called a positive wave, a depression a negative wave. Waves on the surfaces of liquids are distinguished into four orders. A wave of the first order, also called a wave of translation, leaves the particles, after its passage, shifted in the line of its motion. It is also called a solitary wave, because a single impulse produces but one elevation or depression, which has no definite length, but extends over the whole surface. The negative wave of this sort shortly breaks; it is only the positive wave, which leaves the particles in advance of their initial positions, which can be propagated far. This wave is also called Scott Russell's great wave, because it was first discovered by that engineer in 1834, and because, owing to its form, it cannot be seen unless it is very high. The velocity of such a wave is equal to $\sqrt{gh}$, h being g is the acceleration of gravity, h the depth of the liquid in repose, and k the height of the crest of the wave above the plane of repose. This wave flies down of itself in a canal of uniform depth, independently of friction, and when it passes into shallow water it breaks as soon as h is no greater than k. A canal-boat produces such a wave, and consequently can be propelled at the rate of speed of the wave far more economically than at any other. Waves of the second order, called oscillatory waves, observation shows that each particle describes at a uniform rate of motion a circle in a vertical plane, but according to theory other orbits are possible. The particle at the crest of the wave is at the highest part of its path, that in the trough at the lowest. As long as the momentum of the particles is kept up, wave must succeed wave. If the water has a flow opposite to the direction of propagation of the waves and equal to it in velocity, it is plain that each particle will describe a prolate cycloid, and this is consequently the form of the waves. Waves thus brought to a stand still by the flow of the water are called standing waves (See fig. 1.) They are often seen in rapidly running water.

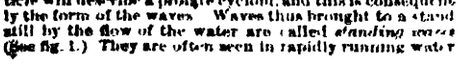

Fig. 1. Standing waves in a torrent.

If the motion of the liquid is irrotational, theory shows that the waves cannot be cycloidal. But in regard to this whole subject neither theory nor observation can be trusted implicitly to give the truth of nature. The velocity of propagation of oscillatory waves, at least in deep water, is represented by the expression $\sqrt{(g\lambda/2\pi)}$, where λ is the length of the wave from crest to crest. But the velocity of propagation of a group of waves is much slower. Oscillatory waves break on a shelving shore when their height is about equal to the depth of the water, and from each one, as it breaks, a wave of the first order is produced. (See fig. 2.) Waves of the third order, called ripples, are distinguished from those of the second order in the fact that the shorter they are the more rapidly they move. While an oscillatory wave 32 inches long will advance 8 feet per second, and one of 8 inches long only 1 foot per second, a ripple a quarter of an inch long will move 1 foot per second, a ripple an eighth of an inch long will move 1¼ feet per second, and so on. The reason is that the force of restoration of the particles is here not chiefly gravity, but the surface-tension of the liquid. Ripples very rapidly die out. Waves of the fourth order are sound-waves. They are propagated in water at the rate of about 4,500 yards per second — that is, at a much greater speed than that of sound in air. In the case of sound propagated in the air, the waves are formed by the alternate forward and back motion of the air-particles in the direction in which the sound is being propagated; the waves are consequently waves of condensation and rarefaction, having in the free air a spherical form. The amplitude of vibration or excursion of each particle is very small, but the wave length is large — for the middle C of the keyboard about 4½ feet. A sound-wave travels in air at about 1,100 feet per second. (See further under sound[3].) In the case of radiant energy (heat and light) propagated through the ether the ether-particles vibrate transversely to the line of propagation; here the wave length is very small — for violet light, about 0.000,016 of an inch, for red about twice this length, while the dark heat waves, though much longer, are still very minute (see spectrum). A light-wave (or more generally, an ether-wave) travels in space about 185,000 miles per second. Hertz has shown recently (1887) that by a very rapid oscillating electrical discharge, as between two knobs, a disturbance is produced in the surrounding ether which is propagated as electric waves with a velocity like that of light. These electric waves in Hertz's experiments were found to have a wave length of upward of one meter. They are reflected from the surface of a conductor, but are transmitted by a non-conductor, as pitch, and may be brought to a focus, they may be made to interfere, then forming nodal points, and by passage through a grating of parallel wires they may be polarized. These electric waves are hence in all essential respects like light-waves, but differ in their relatively enormous length and the corresponding slowness of the oscillations. These experiments of Hertz form a most important confirmation of the electromagnetic theory of light proposed by Maxwell (see light).

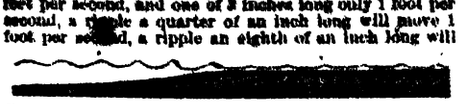

Fig. 2. Oscillatory waves rolling in and breaking upon the shore, and giving rise to a series of waves of translation.

That which in waves of fluid is rest is in waves of sound silence, and in waves of light darkness.
Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 220.

The reason why one end of the coloured band [spectrum] . . . is red and the other blue is that in light as in sound we have a system of disturbances or waves, we have long waves and short waves, and what the low notes are to music the red rays are to light.
J. N. Lockyer Spect. Anal., p. 34.

4. One of a series of curves in a waving line, or of ridges in a furrowed surface; an undulation; a swell.

A winning wave (deserving note)
In the tempestuous petticoat Herrick, Dell, bt in Disorder.

The ears are furnished with feather to the same extent, with a slight wave, but no curl.
Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 107.

5. Figuratively, a flood, influx, or rush of anything, marked by unusual volume, extent, uprising, etc., and thus contrasted with preceding and following periods of the opposite character; something that swells like a sea-wave at recurring intervals; often, a period of intensity, activity, or important results: as, a wave of religious enthusiasm; a wave of prosperity.

A light wind blew from the gates of the sun,
And waves of shadow went over the wheat.
Tennyson, The Poet's Song.

An emotional wave once roused tends to continue for a certain length of time.
A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 32.

Specifically — 6. In meteor., a progressive oscillation of atmospheric pressure or temperature, or an advancing movement of large extent in which these are considerably above or below the normal: as, an air-wave, barometric wave, cold wave, warm wave, etc. The term barometric wave is often restricted to those changes in atmospheric pressure which are not connected with cyclonic disturbances nor with the regular diurnal variation, but which include progressive oscillations of a varied character and origin ranging from those of a short wave length, which occupy but a fraction of a minute in their passage, to those which cover thousands of miles and occupy several days in their development and subsidence. The remarkable air waves generated by the eruption of Krakatoa are shown by barographic traces to have had an initial velocity of 700 miles an hour, and to have traveled round the earth not less than seven times.

7. A waved or wavy line of color or texture; an undulation; specifically, the undulating line or streak of luster on cloth watered and calendered. — 8. A waving; a gesture, or a signal given by waving.

With clear rustling wave
The scented pines of Switzerland
Stand dark round thy green grave.
M. Arnold, Stanzas in Memory of the Author of Obermann.

A magnificent old teddy mixer . . . answered my question by a wave of one hand.
O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 53.

9. A book-name of certain geometrid moths. Thus, Acidalia rubricata is the tawny wave; A. ossitiginata is Greening's wave; Venusia cambrica is the Welsh wave, etc. — Barometric wave. See def. 6. — Cold wave, a progressive movement of an area of relatively low temperature. It is preceded by an area of low pressure, and is, in the United States directly associated with the northwesterly winds which follow a cyclonic depression and accompany the advance of an area of high barometer. The cold wave is, in the United States, in most cases an outpour of cold dry air from the barren plains of British America, where the air is cooled during the long nights of winter to a very low temperature. In Texas and the Gulf of Mexico the cold wave is termed a norther. The approach of cold waves is made a subject of forecast by the United States Weather Bureau. (See under signal.) A decided fall of temperature of less extent, such as frequently occurs in other than winter months, is termed a cool wave. [U. S.]

When the fall of temperature in twenty-four hours is twenty degrees or more, and covers an area of at least fifty thousand square miles, and the temperature in any part of the area goes as low as 40°, it is called a cold wave.
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XL. 463.

Dicrotic wave. See dicrotic. — Hot wave, warm wave, a progressive movement, generally eastward, of an area of relatively high temperature, but without so definite a boundary and character as distinguish a cold wave. The general conditions of a warm wave, or heated term, in summer are pressure decreasing to the northward, southerly winds, fair or hazy weather, with practically unbroken insolation, and, in some cases, such an amount of vapor in the air as to diminish the usual nocturnal radiation. [U. S.] — Length of a wave, or wave-length, the distance between any two particles which are in the same phase. — Period of a wave, the time between the passage of successive crests, or between successive extreme displacements of a particle in the same manner. — Prediorotic wave. See prediorotic. — Smoky wave. See smoky. — Storm-wave. (a) A sea-wave raised at the center of a cyclonic storm by the low atmospheric pressure and the force of the winds. It advances with the progressive motion of the storm, and has all the properties of a true wave. When augmented by a heavy fall of rain, and blown by strong winds upon a low shore, the storm wave causes disastrous inundations. The thickly populated low lands at the head of the Bay of Bengal have been the scene of frequent storm-floods, occasioning enormous losses of life and property. (b) In general, on sea-coasts, the increased wave-motion accompanying storms. — Subangled wave, a British geometrid moth, Acidalia strigilaria. — Tidal wave. See tidal. — Type of a wave. See type. — Warm wave. See hot wave, above. — Wave of contraction, in physiol., visible muscular contraction as propagated from a point where the muscle itself is stimulated. — Wave of stimulation, in physiol., the motor influence of a nerve, supposed to be transmitted by molecular undulation.

I shall always speak of muscle-fibres as conveying a visible wave of contraction, and of nerve fibres as conveying an invisible, or molecular, wave of stimulation.
G. J. Romanes, Jelly Fish, etc., p. 28.

Wave of translation. See def. 3. (See also brain-wave, pulse wave.) — Syn. 1. Wave, Billow, Surge, Breaker, Surf, Swell, Ripple. Wave is the general word. A billow is a great wave and rolling wave. Surge is only a somewhat stronger word for billow. A breaker is a wave breaking or about to break upon the shore or upon rocks. Surf is the collective name for breakers as, to bathe in the surf; it is sometimes popularly used for the foam at the edge or crest of the breaker. Swell is the name for the fact of the rising (and falling) of water, especially after the wind has subsided, or for the water that so rises (and falls), or for any particular and occasional disturbance of water by such rising (and falling): as, the boat was swamped by the swell from the steamer. Ripple is the name for the smallest kind of wave.

The high watery walls came rolling in, and at their highest tumbled into surf. . . . Some white-headed billows thundered on. . . . The breakers rose, and, looking over one another, hove one another down, and rolled in, in interminable lines. . . . The sea . . . carried men, spars, . . . into the boiling surge.
Dickens, David Copperfield, lv.

This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon.
Tennyson, Lotos-Eaters.

Across the boundless east we drove,
Where those long swells of breaker sweep
The nutmeg rocks and isles of clove.
Tennyson, The Voyage.

As the shadows of sun-gilt ripples
On the golden bed of a brook.
Lowell, The Changeling.

Malay Creese with wavy blade.

wave[2]†, v. A former spelling of waive.

wave[3]†. An obsolete preterit of weave[1].

wave-action (wāv'ak'shon), n. See action.

wave-breast (wāv'brest), n. A breast offered as a wave-offering (which see).

waved (wāvd), a. [wave[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Having a waving outline or appearance. See wave[1], v. t. Specifically (a) In zool., marked with waves; wavy in color or texture; undulated. (b) In entom., sinuate or undulate, as a margin, shadow, undulated. (c) In arms, shaped in waves or undulations, as the edges of certain swords and daggers. Heavy swords of the middle ages were sometimes shaped in this way, apparently with the object of breaking plates of armor the more readily. In the Malay creese, however, the object is probably to make a more dangerous wound.

2. Same as watered: noting silk, forged steel, etc.—3. In bot., undate.—4. In her., same as undé.—Waved sandpiper. See sandpiper.—Waved sword, in her., a flamboyant sword used as a bearing.—Waved wheel. See wheel.

wave-front (wāv'frunt), n. The continuous line or surface including all the particles in the same phase. It is a spherical surface for sound, and for light in an isotropic medium.

wave-goose (wāv'gös), n. The brant- or brent-goose, Bernicla brenta. [Durham, Eng.]

wave-length (wāv'length), n. The distance between the crests of two adjacent waves, or between the lowest parts of the depressions on each side of a wave; more generally, the distance between any particle of the disturbed medium and the next which is in the same phase with it. See wave[1], 3.

The wave-length of a ray of light in any given substance is consequently obtained by dividing the wave length in air by the index of refraction of the substance itself.
Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 245.

No difference but that of wave length is recognized between waves of radiant heat and of radiant light.
Sci. Amer. Supp., p. 8801.

waveless (wāv'les), a. [< wave[1] + -less.] Free from waves; undisturbed; unagitated; still.

Smoother than this waveless spring
Peele, David and Bethsabe.

The mist that sleeps on a waveless sea.
Hogg, Kilmeny.

Unmoved the bannered blazonry hung waveless as a pall.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 51.

wavelet (wāv'let), n. [< wave[1] + -let.] A small wave; a ripple.

Like the vague sightings of a wind at even
That wakes the wavelets of the slumbering sea.
Shelley, Queen Mab, viii.

The head, with its thin wavelets of brown hair, indents the little pillow.
George Eliot, Amos Barton, ii.

wave-line (wāv'lin), n. 1. The outline of a wave; specifically, in physics, the path of a wave of light, sound, etc., or the graphic representation of such a path.—2. Naut., the general outline of the surface of sea-waves: specifically used attributively to note a method of ship-building devised by J. Scott Russell, in which the lines of the hull of a vessel are adapted scientifically to the lines of the waves, and are nearly or quite cycloidal.—3. One of the series of lines or furrows produced by the sea-waves upon a sandy beach.

wavellite (wā'vel-īt), n. [Named after William Wavell, an English medical practitioner (died 1829), by whom it was discovered.] A hydrous phosphate of aluminium, commonly found in radiated hemispherical or globular crystalline concretions from a very small size to 1 inch in diameter, and of a white to yellow green or brown color. See cut under radiate.

wave-loaf (wāv'lōf), n. A loaf for a wave-offering.

Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two tenth deals.
Lev. xxiii. 17.

wave-molding (wāv'mōl-ding), n. In arch., a molding of undulating outline, resembling more or less closely a succession of waves; particularly, a molding of Greek origin, much used in Renaissance and modern architecture, having the character of a series of breaking waves, much conventionalized.

wave-motion (wāv'mō-shon), n. Motion in curves alternately concave and convex like that of the waves of the sea; undulatory motion. See wave[1], 3.

While ether waves are in course of traversing the ether, there is neither heat, light, nor chemical decomposition, merely wave-motion, and transference of energy by wave-motion.
A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, p. 454.

The essential characteristic of wave motion is that a disturbance of some kind is handed on from one portion of a solid or fluid mass to another.
P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XIV. 403.

wave-offering (wāv'of-er-ing), n. In the ancient Jewish law, an offering presented with a horizontal movement of the hands forward and backward and toward the right and left, whereas the heave-offering was elevated and lowered.

wave-path (wāv'pāth), n. The line along which any point in any wave is propagated. [Rare.]

The radial lines along which an earthquake may be propagated from the centrum are called wave paths.
J. Milne, Earthquakes, p. 5.

waver[1] (wā'vėr), v. [< ME. waveren, wagueren, vacillate, < AS. as if wæfrian* (cf. wæfre, wavering, wandering, restless: said of flame and fire, the mind or spirit, etc.) = MHG. waberen, G. dial. waberen, waver, totter, move to and fro, = Icel. vafra, hover about', = Norw. vavra, flap about; also, with var. suffix, MHG. wabelen, webelen, fluctuate, waver, = Icel. vafla, hover about (see wabble[1]); freq. of the verb represented by wave[1], q. v.] I. intrans. 1. To move up and down or to and fro; wave; float; flutter; be tossed or rocked about; sway.

All in wer for to walt, wayuerende he sote,
But he held hym on horse, hourt o lofte.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8299.

For an Outlawe, this is the Lawe,
That Men hym take and binde,
Without pytee, hanged to bee,
And waver with the Wynde.
The Nut-Brown Maid, quoted by Prior (Poems, ed. 1766, I. 147).

The wind in his raiment wavered.
William Morris, Sigurd, ii.

2. To quiver; flicker; glimmer; glance.

As when a sunbeam wavers warm
Within the dark and dimpled beck.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

3. To falter; fail; reel; totter.

Keep my wits, Heaven! I feel 'em wavering;
Oh God, my head!
Fletcher, Pilgrim, iii. 3.

How many wavering steps can we retrace in our past lives!
Channing, Perfect Life, p. 74.

Like the day of doom it seemed to her wavering senses.
Longfellow, Evangeline, i. 5.

4. To be undetermined or irresolute; fluctuate; vacillate.

Therefore be sure, and waver not of God's love and favour towards you in Christ.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 132.

He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.
Jas. i. 6.

I expect you should solicit me as much as if I were wavering at the Grate of a Monastery, with one Foot over the Threshold.
Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

Syn. 1 and 4. Vacillate. See fluctuate. 4. Hesitate, etc. See scruple.

II.† trans. 1. To cause to wave or move to and fro; set in waving motion; brandish.

Item, if the Admirall shall happen to hull in the night, then to make a wauering light ouer his other light, wauering the light vpon a pole.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 147.

2. To demur or scruple about; hesitate at; shirk.

The inconstant Barons wavering every hour
The fierce encounter of this boist'rous tide
That easily might her livelihood devour.
Drayton, Barons' Wars, i. 34.

waver[2] (wā'vėr), n. [< waver[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which waves; specifically, in printing, an inking-roller; an apparatus which distributes ink on the table or on other rollers, but not on the form of types: so called from its vibratory movement.

As the carriage returns, this strip of ink is distributed on the inking table by rollers placed diagonally across the machine. The diagonal position gives them a waving motion; hence they are called wavers.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 708.

waver[3] (wā'vėr), n. [Perhaps < wave[1] + -er[1] (?).] A sapling or timbering left standing in a fallen wood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

As you pass along, prune and trim up all the young wavers.
Evelyn, Sylva, III. i. 7.

waver-dragon (wā'vėr-drag'on), n. [< waver for wivern + dragon.] In her., the wivern.

waverer (wā'vėr-ėr), n. [< waver[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which wavers or fluctuates; especially, a person who vacillates or is undecided in mind.

Come, young waverer, come, go with me.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 3. 89.

This prospect of converting vote a was a dangerous distraction to Mr. Brooke, his impression that waverers were likely to be allured by wavering statements . . . gave Will Ladislaw much trouble.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, ii.

waveringly (wā'vėr-ing-li), a. In a wavering, vacillating, or irresolute manner.

Like not waueringly about you, haue no distrust, be not afeyd.
C. Udall, On 1 Pet. v.

waveringness (wā'vėr-ing-nes), n. The character or state of a waverer; vacillation.

The waveringness of our cupidities turneth the minde into a dimnesse answerable to itself.
M. Montayne, Devoute Essays, Pref.

waver-roller (wā'vėr-rō'lėr), n. In printing, a roller made to vibrate in a diagonal direction on the inking table of a printing-machine for the purpose of distributing the ink.

wavery (wā'vėr-i), a. [< waver[1] + -y[1].] Wavering; unsteady, shaky; faltering.

Old letters closely covered with a wavery writing.
Miss Thackeray, Book of Sibyls, p. 1.

He's . . . wavery . . . his love changes like the seasons.
Christian Union, July 22, 188 .

wave-shell (wāv'shel), n. In earthquake-shocks, one of the waves of alternate compression and expansion, having theoretically the form of concentric shells, which are propagated in all directions through the solid materials of the earth's crust from the seismic focus to the earth's surface.
Encyc. Brit., VII. 610.

waveson (wāv'son), n. [Appar. irreg. < wave[1], waive, + -son, after the analogy of flotson, jetson, jettison, otherwise flotsam, jetsam.] A name given to goods which after a shipwreck appear floating on the sea.

wave-surface (wāv'sėr'fās), n. A surface whose equation in rectangular coördinates is

$$x^2/(1-A^2r^2)+y^2/(1-B^2r^2)+z^2/(1-C^2r^2)=0.$$

If upon every central section of a quadric surface be erected a perpendicular at the center, and points be taken on this perpendicular at distances from the center equal to the axes of the section, then the locus of these points will be the wave surface. It is frequently called Fresnel's wave-surface, to distinguish it from Huygens's wave-surface, which is simply an ellipsoid—the latter being the form of the wave front of a uniaxial crystal, the former that of a biaxial crystal.—Malus's wave-surface [discovered by E. L. Malus (1775–1812) in 1810], a surface of the wave-front of light emanating from a point but undergoing reflections and refractions at different surfaces.

wave-trap (wāv'trap), n. In hydraulic engin., a widening inward of the spaces between piers, to afford space to permit waves rolling in between the piers to lose force by spreading themselves.

wave-worn (wāv'worn), a. Worn by the waves.

The shore that o'er his wave worn basis bow'd.
Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 120.

wavey, wavy[2] (wā'vi), n.; pl. waveys, wavies (-viz). [From Amer. Ind. name wawa.] A goose of the genus Chen; a snow-goose.

Shooting Wavies on the little lakes with which this region [the Red River country] is dotted is said to be a favorite amusement of the sportsmen.
Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 192.

Blue wavey, the blue-winged goose, Chen cærulescens.—Horned wavey, the smallest snow-goose, Chen (Exanthemopa) rossi, which has at times the base of the bill studded with tubercles. It is exactly like the snow-goose in plumage, but no larger than a mallard, and inhabits arctic America, coming southward in migration. It was recognizably described under its present name by Hearne, but lost sight of for nearly a century, till brought again to notice, in 1861, by J. Cassin.—White wavey, the snow-goose. See cut under Chen.

Horned Wavey (Chen rossi).

wavily (wā'vi-li), adv. In a wavy manner, form, or direction.

Mr. Rappit, the hair-dresser, with his well anointed coronal locks twirled wavily upward.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, I. 9.

waviness (wā'vi-nes), n. The state or quality of being wavy or undulating.

waving-frame (wā'ving-frām), n. In printing, a frame which carries inking-rollers.

The frame which supports the inking-rollers, called the waving-frame, is attached by hinges to the general framework of the machine; the edge of the stereotype-plate extender is indented, and rubs against the waving-frame, causing it to vibrate to and fro, and consequently to carry the inking rollers with it, so as to give them an unceasing traverse motion.
Ure, Dict., III. 655.

wavy[1] (wā'vi), a. [< wave[1] + -y[1].] 1. Abounding in waves.

This said she div'd into the wavy seas.
Chapman, Odyssey, iv. 569.

2. Undulating in movement or shape; waving: as, wavy hair.

Let her glad Vallies smile with wavy Corn.
Prior, Carmen Seculare (1700), st. 23.

The wavy swell of the soughing reeds.
Tennyson, Dying Swan.

3. In bot., undulating on the border or on the surface. See cut under repand.—4. In her., same as undé.—5. In entom., presenting a series of horizontal curves: noting marks or margins. It is distinct from waved; but the two epithets are somewhat loosely used, and are sometimes interchanged.—6. In zoöl., undulating: sinuous: waved; having waved markings.—Barry wavy. See barry[4].—Sword wavy. See sword.—Wavy respiration. Same as interrupted respiration (which see, under respiration).

wavy[2], a. See waavy.

wavy-barred (wā'vi-bärd), a. Crossed with waving lines; undulated: as, the wavy-barred sable, a British moth. See sable, n., 7.

wave[1], n. [< ME. wawe, wage, waghe, waugh, a wave, < AS. wæg = OS. wag = OFries. weg, wei = MD. waeghe = MLG. wage = OHG. wâg (> F. vague), MHG. wâc, G. woge = Goth. wêgs, a wave; < AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry, move: see weigh, way[1], and cf. war[2].] A wave.

For, whiles they fly that Gulfes devouring jawes,
They on this rock are rent, and sunck in helples wawes.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 4.

waw[4], v. t. [< ME. wawen, wagien, < AS. wagian, stir, move, = OHG. wagen, move, = Goth. wagjan, move; a secondary form of AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry: see weigh, and cf. waw[1].] To stir; move; wave.

What wenten ye out in to desert for to se? a reed wawid with the wynd? Wyclif, Luke vii. 24.

waw[2], n. [< ME. wawe, wagh, wah, wahe, wowe, wough, wouh, < AS. wag, wah = OFries. wach = MD. weeghe = Icel. veggr = Sw. vägg = Dan. væg, a wall.] A wall. Piers Plowman (B), iii. 61.

waw[4] (wâ), v. i. [< ME. wawen, imitative; cf. waul, wawl.] To cry as a cat; waul.

wawah (wä'wä), n. Same as wow-wow. Encyc. Brit., IV. 57.

wawet, interj. and n. A Middle English form of woe.

wawl, v. i. See waul.

wawliet, a. An obsolete form of waly[1].

wawproos (wâ'prōs), n. [Amer. Ind.] The American varying hare, Lepus americanus.

waw-waw (wâ'wâ), n. [W. Ind.] See Rajania.

wawy† (wâ'i), a. [< waw[1] + -y[1].] Abounding in waves; wavy.

I saw come over the wawy flood.
The Isle of Ladies, l. 697.

wax[1] (waks), v. i. [< ME. waxen, wexen (pret. wex, wexe, wox, wax, wexe, waxe, pl. waxen, woxen, pp. waxen, wexen, woxen), < AS. weaxan (pret. weóx, pp. geweaxen) = OS. wahsan = OFries. waxa = D. wassen = OHG. wahsan, MHG. wahsen, G. wachsen = Icel. vaxa = Sw. vaxa = Dan. voxe = Goth. wahsjan (pret. wohs, pp. wahsans), grow, increase, wax; = Gr. αὐξάνειν, wax, Skt. √uksh, wax, grow; appar. an extension of the root seen in L. augere, increase, AS. eácan, increase: see eke, and augment, auction, etc. Hence ult. wax[2], n., waxel.] 1. To grow; increase in size; become larger or greater: as, the moon waxes and wanes.

So is pryde waxen
In religioun and in alle the cowme amonge riche and pore,
That prevere have no power the pestilence to lette.
Piers Plowman (B), x. 75.

Sothli the child wax, and was coumfortid, ful of wysdom; and the grace of God was in him. Wyclif, Luke ii. 40.

The childe he kepte and norisshed till it was fo ire well waxen, and that he myght ride after to court.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 278.

A waxing moon, that soon would wane.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 649.

Thou shalt wax and he shall dwindle.
Tennyson, Boadicea.

2. To pass from one state to another; become; grow: as, to wax strong; to wax old.

And every man that ought hath in his coffre,
Lat him appere and waxe a philosofre.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 284.

Now charity is waxen cold none helpeth the scholar nor yet the poor. Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

First he wax pale and then wax red.
Scott, Thomas the Rhymer, iii.

The commander of Fort Casimir, when he found his martial spirit waxing too hot within him, would sally forth into the fields and lay about him most lustily with his sabre. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 315.

Waxing kernels, enlarged lymph-nodes sometimes found in the groin in children: so called because supposed to be associated with growth.

wax[1] (waks), n. [< ME. wax, weax (= MHG. wahs, increment, increase; also in comp., MD. wasdom = G. wachsthum, growth); from the verb.] 1†. Growth; increase; prosperity.

Ful nobly wele the slunegef and do;
Abonte hym gret weax, fair store, and gret light.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 653.

2. A wood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wax[2] (waks), n. [< ME. wax, wex, < AS. weax = OS. wahs = OFries. wax = D. was = OHG. MHG. wahs, G. wachs = Icel. vax = Sw. vax = Dan. vox, wax; cf. OBulg. voskŭ = Bohem. vosk = Pol. wosk = Russ. voskŭ = Hung. vasok = Lith. waszkas, wax (perhaps < Teut.). Some compare L. viscum, mistletoe, bird-lime: see viscum.] 1. A thick, sticky substance secreted by bees, and used to build their cells; the material of honeycomb; beeswax. In its natural state it is of a dull-yellow color, and smells of honey. Its consistency varies with the temperature; it is ordinarily a pliable solid, readily melted. When purified and bleached, it becomes translucent white, is less tenacious, without taste or smell, and of a specific gravity a little less than that of water. It softens at 80° F., becoming extremely plastic, and retaining any form in which it may be molded, like clay or putty, and melts at 158° F. In chemical composition, wax consists of variable proportions of three substances, called myrecin, cerolein, and cerotic acid. Wax is used for many purposes, both in its natural state and variously prepared. As bleached, and also then variously tinted, it is made into wax candles, which give a peculiarly soft light. In pharmacy it enters into the composition of various plasters, ointments, and cerates, as a vehicle for the active ingredients, and to confer upon the preparation a desired consistency. It has varied uses in the plastic arts, especially in the making of anatomical models, artificial flowers and fruits, casts and impressions of various kinds, etc.

This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wex.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 676.

I'll work her as I go, I know she's wax.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, ii. 2.

The Effigies of his late Majesty King William III. of Glorious Memory is curiously done in Wax to the Life, Richly Dress'd in Coronation Robes.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 288.

2. One of various substances and products resembling beeswax in appearance, consistency, plasticity, and the like, or used for like purposes. (a) The substance worked up from the pollen of flowers by the hind legs of bees, and used to feed their larvæ; bee bread, formerly supposed to be beeswax. (b) The substance secreted by various coccids or wax-scales, especially such as has commercial value. (See wax insect, 1.) (c) The product of some other homopterous insects. (See wax insect, 2.) This is more or less stringy and flocculent, and approaches in character the froth or spume of the spittle-insects, but in some cases is usable like beeswax. (d) The secretion of the sebaceous glands of the outer ear: cerumen, ear wax. (e) A vegetable product which may be regarded as a concrete fixed oil, the principal varieties being Chinese wax, cow tree wax, carnauba wax, and Japan wax. It may be obtained from the pollen of many flowers, and it forms a part of the green feculæ of many plants, particularly of the cabbage. It appears as a varnish upon the fruit or the upper surface of the leaves of many trees, as the wax palm and wax myrtle. Also called vegetable wax. See cut under Morica. See also wax tree, and compounds below. (f) A mineral product, one of certain fossil hydrocarbons which occur in small quantities generally in the Carboniferous formation: called more fully mineral wax. The most familiarly known variety is ozocerite. (g) A substance used for sealing. See sealing wax.

Quomodo. He will never trust his land in wax and parchment, as many gentlemen have done before him.
Tory. A by-blow for me.
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, iv. 1.

A letter! hum! a suspicious circumstance to be sure! What, and the seal a true-lover's knot now ha? or an heart transfixed with darts; or possibly the wax bore the industrious impression of a thimble.
Colman, Jealous Wife, i.

(h) A thick resinous substance, consisting of pitch, resin, and tallow, used by shoemakers for rubbing their thread. 3. A thick syrup produced by boiling down the sap of the sugar-maple tree, cooling on ice, etc. [Local, U. S.]—4. Dung of cattle. [Western U. S.]—5. In coal mining, puddled clay, used for dams and stoppings. - Brazil wax, same as carnauba wax. - Butler of wax. See butter[1]. - Carnauba wax, a secretion of the young leaves of the carnauba palm, Copernicia cerifera, of Brazil, which is used in making candles and is exported in large quantities. - Chinese or China wax, a hard white wax, the product of a scale insect. See pela and wax insect, 1 (e). - Earwax. See def. 2 (d) and cerumen. - Grafting-wax, a mixture made of resin, beeswax, and linseed-oil, for coating the ligatures made in a tree in grafting. - Ibota wax, a product in Japan of the shrub Ligustrum Ibota. - Japan wax, a wax obtained in Japan from the drupes of the wax-tree, Rhus succedanea, by crushing, steaming, and pressing. It is used chiefly for candles, and largely exported. The fruit of the Japanese tree, Rhus vernicifera, yields a still better wax. - Mineral wax. See def. 2 (f). - Nose of wax. See nose. - Paraffin wax, a white substance resembling wax, obtained chiefly from the distillation of petroleum, but also produced in the distillation of coal, wood, and other substances. It is a neutral, easily fusible substance, unaltered by acids or alkalis, and hence has a wide range of use in the arts. - Vegetable wax, any wax of vegetable origin. See def. 2 (e). The name more directly and specifically is cerin wax. - Wax dam, a dam of puddled clay. - Wax doll. See wax doll. - Wax impression, milit. mining, a copy in wax of part of the mouth, taken as a step for the purpose of fitting the plate for artificial teeth. - Wax opal, a variety of common opal having a waxy lustre like beeswax. - Wax wall, a dam of puddled clay. [Staffordshire coal field, Eng.] - White wax, (a) Bleached beeswax. (b) Chinese wax, or pela. (c) also bonbon or bottle wax, myrtle wax, vegetable wax, vegetable tallow, etc., the product of the berries of the bayberry, Myrica cerifera. See bayberry, 2, and myrtle, 3. - Yellow wax, beeswax.

wax[2] (waks), v. t. [< ME. waxen, wexen; < wax[2], n.] 1. trans. To treat with wax; smear or rub with wax; make waxy; as, to wax a thread; to wax the floor or a piece of furniture.

Tho took I and wexede my lyne in maner of a pyye tables to-weyye distynctly the prikkes of my compas.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, I. § 40.

He held a waxed string in one hand which he drew through the other hand incessantly as he spoke, just as a shoemaker performs the motion of waxing his thread.
O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 687.

Waxed end, in shoemaking, a thread the end of which has been stiffened by the use of shoemakers' wax, so as to pass easily through the holes made by the awl; also, a waxed thread terminating in a bristle, for the same purpose. Also reduced to wax-end. Waxed paper. See paper.

II. intrans. To plaster with clay. [Leicestershire coal-field, Eng.]

wax[3] (waks), n. [Appar. < wax[2], v., taken in sense of 'rub,' hence 'beat, thrash.'] A rage; a passion. [Colloq.]

She 's in a terrible wax, but she 'll be all right by the time he comes back from his holidays.
H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, v.

wax-berry (waks'ber'i), n. The bayberry, Myrica cerifera.

waxbill (waks'bil), n. One of numerous small Old World birds of the family Procnidæ and subfamily Spermestinæ, whose bills have a certain waxen appearance, due to the translucency of the horny covering, which may be white, pink, red, etc. The name appears to have attached more particularly to the members of the genus Estrelda in a broad sense, but is of extensive and varied application. The Java sparrow is a good example. (See cut under sparrow.) The original waxbill, first so named by Edwards in 1751, the waxbill grosbeak of Latham (1783), Loxia astrild of Linnæus, and now Estrelda astrilda, or Estrelda astrild, or Estrilda astrilda (for the name thus wavers in spelling), is a South African bird, ranging as far as Matabeleland on the east and Damaraland on the west coast. It has also been introduced in various places, Waxbill (Estrelda astrilda).

and is a well known cage bird. It is scarcely over 4 inches long, the wing and tail each about 1½ inches, the bill is bright red; the eyes and feet are brown. The general aspect is that of a brown bird, but this ground-color is brilliantly varied with several other colors. The vent is black, and there is a crimson streak on each side of the head. The blue breasted waxbill (E. cyanogastra), the orange-cheeked (E. melpoda), the red-bellied (E. rubriventris), the grenadier (Uraeginthus granatinus), and various others are among the small exotic birds which form the dealer's stock of amadavats, sengalls, blood-finches, strawberry-finches, paddy birds, and the like.

wax-bush (waks'bush), n. Same as wax-weed.

wax-chandler (waks'chand'ler), n. A maker or seller of wax candles. [Eng.]

wax-cloth (waks'klôth'), n. A popular name for floor-cloth. [Eng.]

wax-cluster (waks'klus'tėr), n. A shrub, Gaultheria hispida, found in the mountains of Australia and Tasmania. It grows 2 or 3 feet high or more, and is conspicuous for its abundant and beautiful white waxy berry like fruit.

wax-doll (waks'dol'), n. 1. A child's doll of which the head and bust are made of beeswax combined with other ingredients to give it hardness.—2. pl. The common fumitory, Fumaria officinalis: so called from the texture and color of its white or flesh-colored flowers. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

waxen[1] (wak'sn), a. [< ME. waxen, < AS. weaxen, made of wax (< weax, wax: see wax[2].)] 1. Made of wax; covered with wax: as, a waxen tablet.

She is fair, and so is Celia that I love
That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd;
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 4. 201.

I beheld through a pretty crystall glasse in the light of a waxen candle. Cogan, Cruelties, I. 48.

2. Resembling wax, soft as wax; waxy.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1240.

3. Easily effaced, as if written in wax. [Rare.]

A waxen epitaph. Shak., Hen. V., i. 3. 233.

4. In zoöl. and bot. Being or consisting of wax: as, the waxen cells of honeycomb. (b) Like wax; waxy. (c) Like wax in apparent texture or consistency. Compare wax-bill. (d) Waxy in color, or of a dull-yellowish color, like raw beeswax. (e) Waxed; having wax-like appendages: as, the waxen chatterer (the Bohemian waxwing).

waxen[2†] (wak'sn). An obsolete or archaic past participle of wax[1].

waxen[3] (wak'sn). Archaic present indicative plural of wax[1].

wax-end (waks'end'), n. Same as waxed end (which see, under wax[2]).

waxer (wak'ser), n. 1. One who smears or treats anything with wax, as in waxing floors or preparing waxed leather. – 2. In a sewing-machine, an attachment for applying a film of wax to the thread as it passes from the spool to the needle: used only on machines for sewing leather and heavy fabrics.

waxflower (waks'flou'er), n. 1. See Clusia. – 2. See Stephanotis. – 3. Same as wax-plant.

wax-gourd (waks'gord), n. The white gourd, Benincasa cerifera (B. hispida). See benincasa.

waxiness (wak'si-nes), n. A waxy appearance or character.

waxing (wak'sing), n. [< ME. waxinge, verbal n. of wax[2], v.] 1. The coating of thread with wax previous to sewing. – 2. A method of blacking, dressing, and polishing leather, to give it a finish. – 3. In calico printing, the process of stopping out colors.

wax-insect (waks'in'sekt), n. 1. One of various coccids or bark lice which secrete wax; a wax-scale. Nearly all the Coccidæ secrete a kind of wax, but that of but few is abundant enough to be of commercial value. Specifically (a) The Chinese way insect, Ericerus pela (formerly Coccus sinensis or C. pela) related to the cochineal bug. It furnishes most of the white wax of commerce, specified as Chinese wax and pela. This insect, a native of China, occurs upon plants of the genera Rhus, Ligustrum, Hibiscus, Celastrus, etc. The wax is said to be mainly secreted by the male. It is gathered from the plants on which it is deposited, melted and clarified, and made into a very high class of candles used in China. It has been imported in England for the same purpose, but is too expensive for general use. (b) Any member of the genus Ceroplastes. The females secrete much wax, usually deposited on the body in regular plates. C. cerriferus is an Indian wax scale, C. myricæ (an old Linnean species) is found at the Cape of Good Hope, C. floridanus is a wax-scale of Florida, C. corresponderiensis is the barnacle scale. (c) A scale of the genus Ceroccus, as C. quercus, which secretes large masses of bright yellow wax upon the twigs of various oaks, as Quercus undulata, Q. agrifolia, and Q. oblongifolia, in Arizona and California. 2. One of various insects of the family Fulgoridæ, and of one of the genera Phenax, Lystra, and Flata. In the case of the species of Lystra the wax is secreted in long white strings from the end of the abdomen. This wax is said to be used in the manufacture of candles in the East Indies and China.

wax-light (waks'lit), n. [= D. waslicht = G. wachslicht (cf. Icel. vaxljos, Sw. vaxljus, Dan. voxlys); as wax[2] + light[1].] A candle, taper, or night-light made of wax.

> The only alternative would have been wax lights at half a crown a pound. T. A. Trollope, What I Remember.

wax-modeling (waks'mod'el-ing), n. The art or process of forming figures, reliefs, ornaments, etc., in wax. See ceroplastic.

wax-moth (waks'môth), n. A bee-moth; any member of the family Galleridæ. See Galleria, and cut under bee moth.

wax-myrtle (waks'mér'tl), n. The bayberry, Myrica cerifera: so named from its wax-bearing nuts and shining myrtle-like leaves. Sometimes candleberry and tallow shrub. See Myrica (with cut). The wax myrtle of California is chiefly M. Californica, a close erect evergreen shrub, or a tree even 30 feet high.

wax-painting (waks'pān'ting), n. Encaustic painting. See encaustic.

wax-palm (waks'pām), n. See Ceroxylon and Copernicia.

wax-paper (waks'pā'per), n. A kind of paper prepared by spreading over its surface a coating made of white wax, turpentine, and spermaceti.

wax-pine (waks'pin), n. The general name for the species of Agathis (Dan maara), coniferous trees producing a large amount of resin.

wax-pink (waks'pingk), n. A name for garden species of Portulaca: so called from their wax-like leaves and showy flowers.

wax-plant (waks'plant), n. See Hoya.

wax-pocket (waks'pok et), n. In entom., one of several small openings between the ventral segments of the abdomen of a bee, from which thin plates of wax exude.

wax-polish (waks'pol ish), n. See polish[1].

wax-red (waks'red'), a. Of a bright red color, resembling that of sealing-wax.

> Set thy seal manual on my wax-red lips.
> Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 516.

wax-scale (waks'skāl), n. A scale-insect which secretes wax. See scale-insect, 1.

wax-scot† (waks'skot), n. A tax or money payment made by parishioners to supply the church with wax candles.

wax-tree (waks'trē), n. One of several trees, of different localities, the source of some kind of vegetable or insect wax. (a) The Japan wax-tree, specifically Rhus succedanea, a small tree originally from the Loochoo Islands, now extensively planted in Japan, especially on the borders of fields, for its small clustered berries, which yield by expression an excellent candle-wax. The lacquer-tree, Rhus vernicifera, yields a still better wax. (b) In China, one of several trees yielding the pe'la, or white wax (see wax[2]), which incrusts their twigs as the result of the puncture of an insect. One of the most important is a species of privet, Ligustrum lucidum; another is an ash, Fraxinus Chinensis. Ligustrum Ibota appears to furnish a variety of the same product. (c) A plant of the genus Vernia, which consists of trees and shrubs abounding in a yellow resinous juice. This is collected from some South American species, particularly V. Guianensis, and from its qualities is sometimes called American gamboge. (d) The Colombian varnish-tree, Elæagia utilis. (e) The wax-myrtle, Myrica cerifera. [Rare.]

> A fragrant shrub, called the Anemone by the Indians, had attracted the attention of the government. It is the wax tree, or candle berry (Myrica cerifera), of which the wax is used for making candles.
> Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, I. 520.

wax-weed (waks'wēd), n. An American herb, Cuphea viscosissima, sometimes designated as clammy cuphea. It is a branching plant with purple stems covered with extremely viscid hairs, the petals of the small flowers are also purple. The full name is blue wax-weed.

waxwing (waks'wing), n. An oscine passerine bird of the genus Ampelis (or Bombycilla), family Ampelidæ: so called because the secondary quills of the wings, and sometimes other feathers of the wings or tail, are tipped with small red horny appendages resembling sealing-wax. There are three species – the Bohemian waxwing or chatterer, A. garrulus, of the northern hemisphere generally, breeding in high latitudes, and migrating southward irregularly, sometimes in flocks of vast extent; the red winged Japanese waxwing A. phœnicoptera; and the smaller Carolina waxwing, cedar waxwing, cedar bird, cedar-lark, cherry bird, etc., of North America, A. cedrorum, the pine chatterer of Latham, 1785. The sealing wax tips are the enlarged, hardened, and peculiarly modified prolongation of the shaft of the feather, composed of central and peripheral substances differing in the shape of the pigment cells, which contain abundance of red and yellow coloring matter. Their use is unknown.

Bohemian Waxwing (Ampelis garrulus).

waxwork (waks'wėrk), n. 1. Work in wax; especially, figures or ornaments made of wax; in ordinary usage, figures, as of real persons, usually of life-size, and more or less of deceptive resemblance, the heads, hands, etc., being in wax, and the rest of the figure so set up and clothed as to increase the imitative effect.

> On Wednesday last Mrs Goldsmith, the famous Woman for Warwick, brought to Westminster Abbey the Effigies of that celebrated Beauty the late Duchess of Richmond, which is said to be the richest Figure that ever was set up in King Henry's Chapel.
> Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 283.

2. pl. A place where a collection of such figures is exhibited. – 3. The climbing bittersweet, Celastrus scandens: so named on account of the waxy scarlet aril of the fruit. See Celastrus and staff-tree. Also called Roxbury waxwork.

waxworker (waks'wer'kėr), n. 1. One who works in wax; a maker of waxwork. – 2. A bee which makes wax.

wax-worm (waks'wėrm), n. The larva of the wax-moth.

waxy[1] (wak'si), a. [< wax[2] + -y[1].] 1. Resembling wax or putty in appearance, softness, plasticity, adhesiveness, or other properties; waxen; hence, pliable; yielding; impressionable.

> The [illegible] after many part of you may receive some impression from this discourse, let us close all with an application. Hammond, Works, III. 626.

Specifically – 2. Noting certain complexions. (a) Pallid or blanched; of a translucent pallor, as in bloodlessness. (b) Of a dull, pasty, whitish color, sometimes inclining to the yellowishness of raw beeswax. This is a complexion almost diagnostic of the so-called scrofulous or cancerous diathesis, and of persons in whom the opium habit is confirmed and of long standing.

3. Made of wax; abounding in wax; waxed: as, a waxy dressing for leather. – Waxy degeneration. (a) Same as lardaceous disease (which see, under lardaceous). (b) A change of parts of the muscular fibrils into a peculiar hyaline substance, which differs from lardaceous, it occurs in certain cases of typhoid fever, meningitis, and other acute febrile disorders. – Waxy liver, kidney, spleen, etc., a liver, kidney, spleen, etc., which has undergone waxy degeneration.

waxy[2] (wak'si), a. [< wax[3] + -y[1].] Angry; wrathy; irate. [Slang.]

> It would cheer him up more than anything if I could make him a little waxy with me.
> Dickens, Bleak House, xxiv.

way[1] (wā), n. [Early mod. E. also waye, waie; < ME. way, wai, wey, wei, weye, weie, wæi, < AS. weg = OS. weg = OFries. wei = MD. wegh, D. weg = MLG. LG. weg = OHG. MHG. wec, G. weg = Icel. vegr = Sw. väg = Dan. vej = Goth. wigs, a way, road, = L. via, OL. veia, orig. veha* = Lith. veza, track of a cart, = Skt. vaha, a road, way; from the verb represented by AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry, = L. vehere, carry, = Skt. √vah, carry: see weigh[1]. From the same verb are alt. E. waint and wagon, etc., and, from the L., vehicle, etc. For the E. words from L. via, see via[1]. Hence away (reduced to way[2]), and wayward, etc.] 1. The track or path by passing over or along which some place has been or may be reached; a course leading from one place to another; a road; a street; a passage, channel, or route; a line of march, progression, or motion: as, the way to market or to school; a broad or a narrow way.

> Men seyn that the Wicanes ben Weyes of Helle.
> Mandeville, Travels, p. 55.
>
> A grene way thou schalt fynde,
> That geth as euene as he may to paradys the on ende;
> Ther bigonde thi Modur and b h
> Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

> The worst ways that ever I travelled in all my life in the Sommer were those betwixt Chomberte and Aiguebelle.
> Coryat, Crudities, I. 83.

> I fear I shall never find the way to church, because the bells hang so far.
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1.
>
> The road to resolution lies by doubt,
> The next way home's the farthest way about.
> Quarles, Emblems, iv., Epig. 2.

> I hope our way does not lie over any of these [hills], for I dread a precipice. Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 228.
>
> If prince or peer cross Darrell's way,
> He'll heard him in his pride.
> Scott, Rokeby, v. 27.

2. A passage along some particular path or course; progress; journey; transit; coming or going.

> The Lord . . . will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way. Gen. xxiv. 40.
>
> Shut the doors against his way.
> Shak., C. of E., iv. 3. 92.

> The next day we again set sail, and made the best of our way till we were forced, by contrary winds, into St. Remo, a very pretty town in the Genoese dominions.
> Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), I. 359.

> The ship (barring accidents) will touch at no other port on her way out. W. Collins, Moonstone, vi. 3.

3. Length of space; distance: as, the church is but a little way from here. In this sense, in colloquial use, often erroneously ways.

> Thy servant will go a little way over Jordan.
> 2 Sam. xix. 36.

> I here first saw the hills a considerable way off to the east, no hills appearing that way from the parts about Damascus. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 138.
>
> I charge thee ride before,
> Ever a good way on before. Tennyson, Geraint.

4. Direction as of motion or position: as, he comes this way.

> Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea, . . .
> Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea.
> Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 5.

> The Kingdome of Congo is about 600. miles diameter any way. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 49.
>
> Three Goddesses for this contend;
> See, now they descend,
> And this Way they bend.
> Congreve, Judgment of Paris.

> O friend! I hear some step of hostile feet,
> Moving this way, or hast'ning to the fleet.
> Pope, Iliad, x. 406.

> No two windows look one way
> O'er the small sea-water thread
> Below them. Browning, In a Gondola.

5. Path or course in life.

> The way of transgressors is hard. Prov. xiii. 15.

6. Pursuit; calling; line of business. [Colloq.]

Men of his way should be most liberal.
Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 3. 61.

Thinking that this would prove a busy day in the justicing way, I am come, Sir Jacob, to lend you a hand.
Foote, Mayor of Garratt, i. 1.

Is not Gus Hoskins, my brother-in-law, partner with his excellent father in the leather way?
Thackeray, Great Hoggarty Diamond, xiii.

7. Respect; point or particular: with in expressed or understood.

You wrong me every way. Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 55.

The office of a man
That 's truly valiant is considerable,
Three ways the first is in respect of matter.
B. Jonson, New Inn, iv. 3.

Thus far, and many other ways were his Counsels and preparations before hand with us, either to a civil War, if it should happ'n, or to subdue us without a Warr.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, x.

8. Condition; state: as, he has recovered a little, but is still in a very bad way. [Colloq.]

When ever you see a thorough Libertine, you may almost swear he is in a rising way, and that the Poet intends to make him a great Man.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 211.

You must tell him to keep up his spirits; everybody almost is in the same way.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, i. 1.

9. Course of action or procedure; means by which anything is to be reached, attained, or accomplished; scheme; device; plan; course.

Of Taxations, properly so called, there were never fewer in any King's Reign; but of Ways to draw Money from the subject, never more. Baker, Chronicles, p. 60.

By noble ways we conquest will prepare;
First offer peace, and, that refused, make war.
Dryden, Indian Emperor, i. 1.

10. Method or manner of proceeding; mode; style; fashion; wise: as, the right or the wrong way of doing something.

God hath so many times and ways spoken to men.
Hooker.

I will one way or other make you amends.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 1. 89.

One would imagine the Ethiopians either had two alphabets, or that they had two ways of writing most things.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 227.

This answerer had, in a way not to be pardoned, drawn his pen against a certain great man then alive.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, Apol.

Thou say'st an undisputed thing
In such a solemn way.
O. W. Holmes, To an Insect.

'Tis not so much the gallant who woos,
As the gallant a way of wooing!
W. S. Gilbert, Way of Wooing

Way* in this sense is equivalent to wise, and in certain colloquial phrases is confused with it, appearing in the apparent plural ways, which really represents wise: as, no ways, lengthways, endways, etc.

To him [God] we can not exhibit overmuch praise, nor belye him any wayes, unlesse it be in abasing his excellencie by scarsitie of praise.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 22.

He could no way stir. Bacon, Physical Fables, ii.

Hee at that time could be no way esteem'd the Father of his Countrey, but the destroyer.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xxi.

Simon Glendinning . . . bit the dust, no way disparaging in his death that ancient race from which he claimed his descent. Scott, Monastery, ii.

11. Regular or usual method or manner, as in acting or speaking; habitual or peculiar mode or manner of doing or saying things: as, that is only his way; an odd way he has; women's ways.

We call it only pretty Fanny's way.
Parnell, Elegy to an Old Beauty.

It is my way to write down all the good things I have heard in the last conversation, to furnish my paper.
Steele, Tatler, No. 45.

Before I departed, the good priest ask'd me my name, that they might pray in the church for my good journey, which is only a way they have of desiring charity.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 138.

He was imperious sometimes still; but I did not mind that; I saw it was his way.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xv.

All her little womanly ways, budding out of her like blossoms on a young fruit-tree.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, ix.

12. Resolved plan or mode of action or conduct; a course insisted upon as one's own.

If I had my way
He had mewed in flames at home. B. Jonson.

Man has his will — but woman has her way!
O. W. Holmes, A Prologue

If Lord Durham had had his way, the Ballot would at that time [1833] have been included in the programme of the Government. J. McCarthy, Hist. Own Times, I. 54.

13. Circuit or range of action or observation.

The general officers and the public ministers that fell in my way were generally subject to the gout.
Sir W. Temple.

14. Progress; advancement.

Socialism in any systematic or definite form, as a scheme for superseding the institution of Capital, had not in my opinion made any serious way.
Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 730.

15. Naut., progress or motion through the water; headway: as, a vessel is under way when she begins to move, she gathers way when her rate of sailing increases, and loses way when it diminishes.

Towards night it grew very calm and a great fog, so as our ships made no way.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 8.

Soundings are usually taken from the vessel, and while there is some way on.
Sir C. W. Thomson, Depths of the Sea, p. 300.

A ship, so long as she can keep way on her, and can steer, need not fear an enemy's ram.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LXIII. 386.

16. pl. In mach., etc., the line or course along which anything worked on is caused to move. See cut under shaper. (a) The timbers on which a ship is launched: as, a new ship on the ways. See cut under launching-way. (b) Slids on which weights, barrels, etc., are moved up or down, as on an inclined plane. A furlong way, See furlong. A lion in the way. See lion. Appian Way. See Appian. A way of necessity, a way which the law allows for passage to and from land not otherwise accessible. It arises only over one of two parcels of land of both of which the grantor was the owner when he conveyed the other; and it arises in favor of the parcel conveyed when this is wholly surrounded by what had been the grantor's other land, or partly by this and partly by that of a stranger. By all ways, in all respects; in every way.

My lady gat me al hooly
The noble gift of her mercy,
Saving her worship, by alle weyes.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 1271

By the way See by!. By way of, for the purpose of, to serve as. See also by!.

The Kyng of that Contree, ones every zeer, zeve the love to pore men to goon in to the Lake, to gadre hem preeyous Stones and Perles, be weye of Almesse for the love of God, that made Adam Mandeville, Travels, p. 199.

That this gift of perpetual youth should pass from men to serpents seems added by way of ornament
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

By way of being, doing, etc., in the condition of being, doing, etc.; so as to be do, etc. [Eng.] Come your ways. See come. Committee of Ways and Means. (a) In the British Parliament, a committee of the whole house which considers the ways and means of raising the supplies. (b) One of the most important of the standing committees of the United States House of Representatives, to it are referred bills relating to the raising of the revenue. Common way. See common. Covered way. See covert. Direct way around, dry way, Dunstable way. See the adjectives. High way. See highway. In a small way. See small. In the family way. See family. In the way. (a) Along the road, on the way, as one proceeds

And as we wenten thus in the weye wordyng; togyderes, Thanne seye we a Samaritan sittende on a mule,
Rydynge ful rapely the rigt weye we zeden
Piers Plowman (B), xvii. 47

The next morning, going to Cumæ through a very pleasant path by the Mare Mortuum and the Elysian Fields, we saw in our way a great many ruins of sepulchres and other ancient edifices Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), I. 452.

(b) Obstructed, prevent

When . . . a master or lady calls a servant by name, if that servant be not in the way, none of you are to answer.
Swift, Advice to Servants (General Directions).

(c) In such a position or of such a nature as to obstruct, impede, or hinder: as, a meddler is always in the way; there are difficulties in the way.

I never seemed in his way; he did not take fits of chilling hauteur when he met me unexpectedly, the encounter seemed welcome — he had always a word and sometimes a smile for me. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xv.

In the way of. (a) So as to meet or fall in with, in a favorable position for doing or getting: as, I can put you in the way of a profitable investment. (b) In the matter or business of: as, in regards, in respect of

What my tongue can do
I the way of* flattery. Shak., Cor., iii. 2. 127.

Mean way!. See *mean*³. Milky Way. See Galaxy, 1. Once in a way See once!. On the way, in going or traveling along; hence, in progress or advance toward completion or accomplishment.

My lord, I met him on the way.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 20.

Out of the way. (a) Out of the road or path, so as not to obstruct or hinder

Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of my people.
Isa. lvii. 14.

(b) At a distance from; clear of: as, to keep out of the way of a carriage

The engrossers . . . and such as were then amongst the Arabs . . . made use of circuit to keep us as far as possible out of their way. Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 74.

(c) Not in the proper course; in such a position or condition as to miss one's object; away from the mark; aside; astray; hence, improper; wrong.

We are quite out of the way when we think that things contain within themselves the qualities that appear to us in them. Locke.

He that knows but a little of them [matters of speculation or practice], and is very confident of his own strength, is more out of the way of true knowledge than if he knew nothing at all. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. v.

(d) Not in its proper place, or where it can be found or met with; hence, mislaid, hidden, or lost.

Is 't lost? is 't gone? speak, is it out o' the way?
Shak., Othello, iii. 4. 80.

(e) Out of the beaten track; not in the usual, ordinary, or regular course; hence, extraordinary; remarkable: as, her accomplishments are nothing out of the way: often used attributively. Compare to put one's self out of the way, below.

This seemed to us then to be a place out of the way, where we might lye safe for a while.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 330.

It is probable they formerly had some staple commodity here, and that they bestowed great expences on their public games, in order to make people resort to a place which was so much out of the way.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 71.

Permanent way, in civil engin., a finished roadbed and track, including switches, crossings, bridges, viaducts, etc., as distinguished from a temporary way, such as is used in construction, in removing the soil of cuttings, etc. Private way, a right which one or more persons, as distinguished from the public generally, have of passing to and from across land of another. It may exist by grant, by long usage, or by proceedings sanctioned by law in some states, to acquire a necessary access and egress on making compensation. Right of way. (a) A right to pass and repass over real property of another. (b) The right to pass over a path or way, to the temporary exclusion of others: as, an express-train has the right of way as against a freight train. (c) The strip of land of which a railway company acquires either the ownership or the use for the laying of its tracks. Second covered way, in fort., the way beyond the second ditch. The Way, in the New Testament, the Christian religion or church, Christianity. The phrase is rendered in the authorized version (except once) "this way" or "that way"; in the revised version (except Acts xxii 4, where it has the demonstrative "this"), "the Way." Acts ix. 2; xix. 9, 23; xxii. 4; xxiv. 14, 22. To break a way. See break. To clear the way. See clear. To devour the way. See devour. To gather way. See gather. To give way, to grant passage; allow to pass; hence, to yield: generally with to.

Open your gates and give the victors way.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 324.

They happen'd to meet on a long narrow bridge,
And neither of them would give way.
Robin Hood and Little John (Child's Ballads, V. 217).

We give too much way to our passions.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 329.

Suetonius, though else a worthie man, overpraised of his Victorie, gave too much way to his anger against the Britans. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course also to give way to the time.
Swift.

To go one's way or ways. See go. To go the way of all the earth, to die. 1 Ki. ii. 2. To go the way of nature. See nature. To have one's way. See def. 12. To keep way!, to keep pace.

When there be not stonds [stops] and restiveness in a man's nature, . . . the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon, Fortune (ed. 1887).

To labor on the way. See labor!. To lead the way, to be the first or most forward in a march, progress, or the like; act the part of a leader, guide, etc

He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 170.

To lie in the or one's way. See *lie*¹. — To look both ways for Sunday, to squint [Colloq.] To look nine ways. See nine. — To lose way. See lose. — To make one's way. See make! To make the best of one's way. See best. To make way. (a) To give room for passing; give place, stand aside to permit another to pass.

Ther was no romayn emperour ne knyght but he made hym way. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 605.

Make way* there for the princess.
Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 4. 91.

The petty squadrons which had till now harassed the coast of Britain made way for boats larger than had fallen on any country in the west
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 54.

(b) To open a path through obstacles, overcome resistance, hindrance, or difficulties

With this little arm and this good sword,
I have made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 263.

(c) To advance; move forward

We, seeing them prepare to assault us, left our Oares and made way with our sayle to meet (and take) them
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 181.

To pave the way. See pave. To put one's self out of the way, to give one's self trouble.

Don't put yourself out of the way, on our accounts.
Dickens, Oliver Twist, xxxi.

To take one's way (a) To set out, go

They hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,
Through Eden took their solitary way
Milton, P. L., xii. 649.

(b) To follow one's own plan, opinion, inclination, or fancy

Doctor, your services for this time is ended;
Take your own way Shak., Cymbeline, i. 5. 33.

Under way, in progress; in motion: said of a vessel that has weighed her anchor or has left her moorings and is making progress through the water; hence, generally, making progress; having started: often erroneously writ-tan under weigh. Walsingham way†. Same as Milky Way. See Galaxy, 1.

The commonalty believed the Galaxias, or (what is called in the sky) Milky Way, was appointed by Providence to point out the particular place and residence of the Virgin, beyond all other places, and was, on that account, generally in that age called Walsingham Way, and I have heard old people of this country so to call and distinguish it some years past.

Blomefield, Hist. Norfolk, ix. (in Rock's Church of our Fathers, III. 287, note

Way of the cross. (a) A series of stations or representations, as in relief or painting, of the successive acts or stages of Christ's progress to Calvary, arranged around the interior of a church or on the way to a cross or shrine. (b) A series of devotions used at these stations. Way of the Kami. See kami. Way of the rounds, in fort, a space left for passage between a rampart and the wall of a fortified town. Ways and means. (a) Means and methods of accomplishing some end; resources, facilities.

Then eyther prynce sought the weyes & meanes howe eyther of theym myght dyscontent other.

Fabyan, Chron., an. 1455.

(b) Specifically, in legislation, means for raising money; methods of procuring funds or supplies for the support of the government. See committee of ways and means, above.

Wet way. See wet. Syn. 1. Way, Road, Street, Passage, Pass, Path, Track, Trail, Thoroughfare, Highway, Channel, Route. Way is the generic word for a place to pass; a road is a public way broad enough and good enough for vehicles; a street is a main road in a village, town, or city, as contrasted with a lane or alley; passage suggests an avenue or narrower way through, as for foot passengers; a pass is a way through where the difficulties to be surmounted are on an imposing scale: as, to find or open a new pass through the Andes; a path is a way for passing on foot; a track is a path or road as yet but little worn or used: as, a cart-track through the woods. See def. of trail, 9 and 10. Method, Mode, etc. See manner.

way[1]† (wā), v. [< way[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To go in, along, or through; traverse.

And now it is plaintife owere in desert, in bound not wayed (or not haunted). Wyclif, Deut. xix. 13.

2. To put in the way; teach to go in the way; break or train to the road: said of horses.

He . . . is like a horse that is not well waged, he starts at every bird that flies out of a hedge.

Selden, Table Talk, p. 39.

II. intrans. To go one's way; wayfare; journey.

On a time, as they toge the way'd
Spenser, F. Q., IV. ii. 12.

way[2] (wā), adv. [< ME. way, wey; by apheresis from away.] Same as away: now only colloquial or vulgar, and commonly printed with an apostrophe: as, go 'way! way back.

Do wey your handes. Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 101.

way[3]†, v. An old spelling of weigh[1].

wayaka (wā-yä'kä), n. [Polynesian.] See yam-bean.

way-baggage (wā'bag'āj), n. The baggage or effects of a way passenger on a railroad or in a stage-coach. [U. S.]

way-barley† (wā'bär-li), n. The wall barley or mouse barley, Hordeum murinum. Also way-bent, way bennet.

way-beaten (wā'bē'tn), a. Way worn; tired.

The way-beaten couple, master and man, set them down.
Jarvis, tr. of Don Quixote, II. iv. 7. (Davies.)

way-bennett, way-bent† (wā'ben-et, -bent), n. See way-barley.

way-bill (wā'bil), n. A list of the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land.

"It's so on the way-bill," replied the guard. Dickens.

way-bit (wā'bit), n. [Also wa-rabbit, now wa-rebbit; < way[1] + bit[2].] A little bit; a buttock. [North Eng. and Scotch.]

Ours [i. e., on rollers] have but eight [buttons], unless it be in Wales, where they are allowed better Measure, or in the North Parts, where there is a Wa-bit to every Mile.
Howell, Letters, iv. 8.

I have heard him prefer divers, and very serious, to me before himself, who came short a mile and a way-bit.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 50. (Davies.)

wayboard (wā'bord), n. In mining, a bed of tenacious clay formed by the decomposition of the foadstone. Also written waugh board. [Derbyshire, Eng.]

waybread (wā'bred), n. [Also waybroad; < ME. wegbrede, wegbrade, < AS. wegbrade (= MLG. wegebrede, wegebrade, LG. wegebree = Olfri. wegabreita, Mfri. wegebrete, G. wegebreit = Sw. vägbreda = Dan. vejbred), plantain; appar. so called as spreading along roads, < weg, way, road, + bradan, spread, < brad, broad; see bread[2].] The common plantain, Plantago major. See cut under pluriflorous.

waybung (wā'bung), n. [Native name.] An Australian corvine bird, Corcorax melanorhamphus, a sort of chough, noted for the singular actions of the male in pairing-time. It is 16 in. long, sooty-black with a slight purplish gloss, and has a large white alar speculum formed by the inner webs of the primaries; the bill and feet are black, the eyes scarlet. The female is similar, but a little smaller. This bird is the Australian type or representative of the Asiatic desert-choughs (see Podoces), and of the European Alpine and common red-legged choughs.

way-door† (wā'dor), n. A street-door.

He must needs his posts with blood embrue,
And on his way door fix the horned head.
Bp. Holl, Satires, III. iv. 7.

wayfare (wā'fār), v. i. [< ME. wayfaren, orig. in ppr. wayfarand, < AS. wegfarende (= Icel. vegfarandi = Sw. vägfarande = Dan. vejfarende), < weg, way, + farende, ppr. of faran, go: see way[1] and fare[1]. Cf. wayfare, n.] To journey; travel, especially on foot: now only in the present participle or the verbal noun.

Went on Lacedæmon, as he way fared, came unto a place where there dwelt an old friend of his.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 380.

Farewell honest Antony! — Pleasant be your wayfaring, prosperous your return!
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 416.

wayfarer (wā'fār-ėr), n. [< ME. wegfarere, a wayfarer; < way[1] + farer.] One who wayfares, journeys, or travels; a traveler, especially one who travels on foot; a passenger. R. Carew.

The peasant is recommended [1362] to give to the needy wayfarer in preference to the beggar.
Edwin Turner, Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 54.

The wayfarer, at noon reposing,
Shall bless its shadow on the grass.
Lowell, On Planting a Tree at Inveraray.

wayfaring (wā'fār-ing), p. a. [Early mod. E. also wafaring; < ME. wayferande, also weyrende, wayrernde, wayfaring, < AS. wegfarende (= Icel. vegfarandi, etc.), also wegferend, wayfaring: see wayfare.] Journeying; traveling, especially on foot.

The wayferande fi kez, on fote & on hors.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 79.

Moreover, for the refreshing of wayfaring men, let ordained cups of yron or brasse to be fastened by such . . . are wells and fountains as did runne by the waie side. Ot wayfaring-tree (wā'fār-ing-trē), n. A much-branched European shrub of large size, Viburnum Lantana, with dense cymes of small white flowers. The foliage and young shoots are thickly covered with soft mealy down (hence sometimes mealy-tree). The name was invented by Gerard, with reference to its abundance along road. Also triplex. The American wayfaring tree is the hobble bush, Viburnum lantanoides.

way-gate (wā'gāt), n. The tail-race of a mill.

waygoing (wā'gō'ing), a. Going away; departing; of, pertaining to, or belonging to one who goes away: as, waygoing baggage. — Way-going crop. See away going crop, under away-going.

waygoose (wā'gös), n. [A corruption of waygoose for wase goose.] Same as wayzgoose.

way-grass (wā'gras), n. The knot-grass, Polygonum aviculare. [Prov. Eng.]

wayket, waykent. Old forms of weak, weaken.

waylawayt, interj. See wellaway.

waylay (wā'lā' or wā'lā), v. t.; pret. and pp. waylaid, ppr. waylaying. [< way[1] + lay[1]; a peculiar formation, expressing a notion not derivable from way + lay taken in their proper sense, and prob. due to confusion with lay wait, lie in wait.] 1. To lie in wait for in the way, in order to lay hold of for some purpose; particularly, to lie in wait for with the view of accosting, seizing, assaulting, robbing, or slaying; take in ambush: as, to waylay a traveler.

I will waylay thy going home, where I'll be the chance to kill thee. . . . Out! Blest me like a rogue and a villain.
Shak., T. N., iii. 4. 176.

But my Lord St. Albans and the Queen and Ambassador Montagu did waylay them at their lodgings, till the difference was made up, to my Lord's honour.
Pepys, Diary, I. 153.

To him [one who wrote a poem on the death of James II.] was waylaid and so lustfully beaten that he died from its effects.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 64.

On quitting the house, I was waylaid by Mrs. Fitz-Adam, who had another complaint to make.
Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, xiv.

I noticed the time when men used to waylay Fanny Single-ton in the cloak room. Lawrence, Guy Livingstone, p. xxv.

2. To beset with ambushes or ambuscades; ambuscade. [Rare.]

How think st thou — Is our path way laid?
Or hath thy scout my trust betrayed?
Scott, Rokeby, ii. 13.

waylayer (wā'lā'ėr or wā'lā'ėr), n. One who waylays; one who lies in wait for another.

Where are there are rich way-farers there also are sly and subtle waylayers.
Lucian, Imag. Conv., Asinius Pollio and Lichius Cal us, i.

way-leavet (wā'lēv), n. Right of way.

Another thing that is remarkable is their wayleaves, for, when men have pieces of ground between the colliery and the river, they sell leave to lead coals over their ground. Roger North, Lord Guilford, I. 265. (Davies.)

wayless (wā'les), a. [< way[1] + -less.] Having no way or path; pathless; trackless.

As though the peopled towns had way-less deserts been.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 184.

way-maker (wā'mā'kėr), n. One who makes a way; a pioneer; a pathfinder.

Those famous way-makers to the . . . restitution of the evangelical truth. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 10.

way-mark (wā'mark), n. A finger-post, guide-post, milestone, or the like.

She was so liable to fits of absence that she was likely enough to let her way-marks pass unnoticed.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, vi. 13.

waymentt, waymentingt. See waiment, waimenting.

wayne[1]†, n. An obsolete spelling of wain[1].
Spenser, F. Q., I. v. 41.

way-passenger (wā'pas'en-jėr), n. A passenger taken up or set down by the way — that is, at a way-station or at some place intermediate between the principal stopping-places or stations.

way-post (wā'pōst), n. A finger-post; a guide-post.

You have more roads than a way-post.
Colman, The Spleen, i. (Davies.)

An old way-post show'd
Where the Lavington road
Branched off to the left from the one to Devizes.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 172.

way-shaft (wā'shaft), n. In steam-engines, the rocking-shaft for working the slide-valve from the eccentric.

wayside (wā'sīd), n. and a. [< way[1] + side[1]. Earlier way's side: see way[1].] I. n. The side of the way; the border or edge of the road or highway.

They are enbuschede one blonkkes, with baners displayede,
One bechene wode appone the waue sydes.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1713.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the wayside; growing, lying, situated, or found on, by, or near the side of the way: as, wayside flowers; a wayside spring.

Little clusters of such vehicles were gathered round the stable yard or parting-place of every way-side tavern.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xlii.

The windows of the wayside inn
Gleamed red with the light through the leaves.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

And earth, which seemed to the fathers meant
But as a pilgrim's wayside tent.
Whittier, The Preacher.

way-sliding (wā'slī ding), n. Sliding from the right way; deviation. [Rare.]

Though I will neither exalt myself nor pull down others, I wish every man and woman in this land had kept the true testimony, and the middle and straight path, as it were, on the ridge of a hill, where wind and water shears, avoiding right hand snares and extremes, and left hand way-sidings.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xviii.

way-station (wā'stā shon), n. A station intermediate between principal stations on a railroad. [U. S.]

waytt v. and n. An obsolete spelling of wait.

waytht, n. See wathe[1].

way-thistle (wā'this l), n. See thistle.

way-thorn (wā'thôrn), n. See thorn.

way train (wā'trān), n. A train which stops at all or most of the stations on the line over which it passes; an accommodation train. [U. S.]

wayward (wā'ward), a. [< ME. weyward, wewarde, by apheresis from awayward, adj., < awayward, awewarde, adv.: see awayward, and cf. froward.] 1. Full of caprices or whims; froward; perverse.

Bot gif thin eige be wewarde, al thi body shal be derkful.
Wyclif, Mat. vi. 23.

You know my father 's wayward, and his humour
Must not receive a check.
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, i. 2.

In vain, to soothe his wayward fate,
The cloister oped her purifying gate.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 6.

2. Irregular; vacillating; unsteady, undulating or fluctuating: as, the wayward flight of certain birds.

Send its rough wayward roots in all directions.
Smithson, Useful Book for Farmers, p. 32. (Encyc. Dict.)

Syn. Wayward, Wilful, Contrary, Untoward, headstrong, intractable, unruly. The italicized words tend toward the same meaning by different ways. Wayward, by derivation, applies to one who turns away from what he is desired or expected to be or to do; but, from its seeming derivation, it has come to apply more often to one who turns toward ways that suit himself, whether or not they happen to be what others desire. Wilful suggests that the person is full of self-will, which asserts itself against those whose wishes ought to be deferred to or whose commands should be obeyed. Contrary and untoward express the same idea, the one in a positive, the other in a negative form. Contrary is an energetic word, expressing the idea that one takes, or is disposed to take, the course exactly opposite to that which he is expected or desired to take. Contrariness, when ingrained, becomes perverseness: as, a contrary disposition; a contrary fellow. This use of contrary is by many considered colloquial, but has the recommendation of figurative force. Contrary and untoward view the person as one to be managed; untoward views the person also as the object of mental or moral discipline: this perhaps through its use in Acts ii. 40. An untoward person is not responsive to persuasion, advice, influence, or requests; untoward circumstances are similarly such as do not help us in our plans. All these words imply that the only consistency in the person's conduct is in his self-willed independence of others' wishes or opposition to them, but untoward implies it least. See perverse.

way-warden (wā'wâr'dn), n. A keeper or surveyor of roads.

Woodcutter. Had'st best repent and mend thy ways.
Peasant. The way-warden may do that, I wear out no ways, I go across country.
Kingsley, Saint's Tragedy, ii. 6.

waywardly (wā'ward-li), adv. In a wayward manner; frowardly; perversely.

waywardness (wā'ward-nes), n. [< ME. weiwardnesse, perverseness; < wayward + -ness.] The character of being wayward; frowardness; perverseness.

The unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them. Shak., Lear, i. 1. 302.

waywise (wā'wiz), a. [< way[1] + wise[1]. Cf. way-witty; see also wayviser.] Expert in finding or keeping the way; knowing the way or route. Ash.

waywiser (wā'wī'zėr), n. [= D. wegwijzer, a guide, = G. wegweiser, a way-mark, guide, = Sw. vägvisare = Dan. vejviser, a guide, a directory; as way[1] + wiser*, shower, indicator, < wise[3], point out, show, + -er[1].] An instrument for measuring the distance which a wheel rolls over a road; an odometer or perambulator.

I went to see Colonel Blount, who showed me the application of the way wiser to a coach, exactly measuring the miles, and showing them by an index as we went on. It had three circles, one pointing to the number of rods, another to the miles, by 10 to 1000, with all the subdivisions of quarters. Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 6, 1657.

way-wittyt, a. [ME. weiwitti; < way[1] + witty. Cf. waywise.] Same as waywise.

waywode, waywodeship. Same as vaivode, vaivodeship.

wayworn (wā'worn), a. Wearied or worn by or in traveling.

A way-worn traveller. Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 2.

waywort (wā'wėrt), n. The pimpernel, Anagallis arvensis. [Prov. Eng.]

wayz-goose†, n. [An erroneous spelling of wast-goose*, < wast[1] + goose.] 1. A stubble-goose; hence, a fat goose — that is, one ready to kill in harvest time. — 2. An entertainment given by an apprentice to his fellow-workmen, of which the goose was the crowning dish; hence, in recent times, a printers' annual dinner, the funds for which are collected by stewards regularly appointed by "the chapel."

we (we), pron.; pl. of I[2]. [Early mod. E. also wee; < ME. we, < AS. wē = OS. wī = OFries. wī = D. wij = OHG. MHG. G. wir = Icel. vēr, vær = Sw. Dan. vi = Goth. weis, < Teut. wiz*, wis*, with appar. nom. suffix -s, prob. = Skt. vayam, we. The L. and Gr. forms are different; L. nos, pl. (including dual), = Gr. νώ, dual, Gr. ἡμεῖς, we, appar. belonging to the stem of ego, etc., me (see me[1]). In AS. wē had a dual, wit, which disappeared in the earliest ME. period. See I[2], me[1], our, and us.] I and another or others; I and he or she, or I and they: a personal pronoun, taking the possessive our or ours (see our[1]) and the objective (dative or accusative) us.

Go we now on goddes halue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2803.

How greenlie day with us! O, tell me, Hubert.
Shak., K. John, v. 3. 1.

On the left hand left we two little Islands.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 8.

It may be that the gulfs will wash us down,
It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,
And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.
Tennyson, Ulysses.

We is sometimes, like they, vaguely used for society, people in general, the world, etc.; but when the speaker or writer uses we he identifies himself more or less directly with the statement; when he uses they he implies no such identification. Both pronouns thus used may be translated by the French on and the German man: as, we (or they) say, French on dit, German man sagt.

Yet seen too oft, familiar with her [vice's] face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 220.

The instances in which our feelings urge us to agree with ourselves are of hourly recurrence.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 196.

Many tongues have a double first person plural, one inclusive and one exclusive of the person or persons addressed: one we which means 'I and my party,' as opposed to you; and one that means 'my party and yours,' as opposed to all third persons.
Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 219.

We is frequently used by individuals, as editors and authors, when alluding to themselves, in order to avoid the appearance of egotism which it is assumed would result from the frequent use of the pronoun I. The plural style is used also by kings and other potentates, and is said to have been first used in his edicts by King John of England, according to others, by Richard I. The French and German sovereigns followed the example about the beginning of the thirteenth century.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,
To hold your slaughtering hands.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 86.

We and us are sometimes misused for each other.

To poor we
Thine cumity 's most capital.
Shak., Cor., v. 3. 103.

Nay, no compliment; . . . Shall 's to dinner, gentlemen?
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

Our bodies themselves, are they simply ours, or are they not?
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 301.

We-uns (literally, we ones), we or us. [Dialectal, southern U. S.]

"Grind some fur we uns ter-morrer?" asked Ab. "I'll grind yer bones, if ye'll send 'em down," said Amos.
M. N. Murfree, Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains, ix.

weabit, v. See way-bit.

weak (wēk), a. [< ME. weik, weyk, waik, wayk, a northern form (< Icel. veikr, veikr) taking the place of the southern form woke, woc, wake, wac, < AS. wāc, wāc, pliant, weak, easily bent, = OS. wēk = D. week = MLG. wēk, LG. week = OHG. weih, MHG. G. weich = Icel. veikr, veikr, rarely vikr = Sw. vek = Dan. veg, pliant, weak; from the verb appearing in AS. wācan (pret. wōc, pp. wācen) = OS. wikan = OFries. wika, weika = D. wijken = OHG. wīhhan, MHG. wīchen, G. weichen, give way, yield, = Icel. víkja (pret. veik, pp. vikinn) = Sw. vika = Dan. vige, turn, turn aside, veer; cf. Gr. ἴσσειν (for ϝικ-σειν*), yield, give way, = L. √ vic in vicare (for vicclare*), shun, avoid, vix*, vices, change. To the same root are referred wack[1], waker.] 1. Bending under pressure, weight, or force; pliant or pliable; yielding; lacking stiffness or firmness: as, the weak stem of a plant.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they formed as marble will;
The weak oppressed [impressed], the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1242.

2. Lacking strength; not strong. Specifically (a) Breaking down under force or stress; liable to fail, fail, or collapse under strain, incapable of long resistance or endurance; frail, fragile, or resistless: as, a weak vessel, bridge, rope, etc.; a weak fortress.

How weak the barrier of mere Nature proves, Oppos'd against the pleasures Nature loves!
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 160.

The gate,
How parted from a weak and scolding hinge!
Tennyson, The Brook.

(b) Deficient in bodily strength, vigor, or robustness; feeble, either constitutionally or from age, disease, etc.; infirm; of the organs of the body, their action or functioning: as, a weak stomach, weak eyes.

Min wlite [face] is wan,
A man hi-te nee,
Mine dagis aren al gon.
Rel. Antiq., I. 185.

I have, God wood, a large feeld to ere,
And wayke been the oxen in my plough.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 29.

A poor, infirm, weak, and despised old man.
Shak., Lear, iii. 2. 20.

(c) Lacking moral strength or firmness; liable to waver or succumb when urged or tempted; deficient in steady principle or in force of character.

Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations.
Rom. xiv. 1.

Superior and unmoved, here only weak
Against the charm of beauty's powerful glance.
Milton, P. L., viii. 532.

If weak Women went astray,
Their Stars were more in Fault than they.
Prior, Hans Carvel.

(d) Lacking mental power, ability, or balance; simple, silly; foolish.

It is privately whispered that King Henry was of a weak Capacity and easily abused.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 180.

The tradition is that the water was conveyed from this pillar to the top of the famous temple, on which the people are so weak as to imagine there was a garden.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 107.

(e) Unequal to a particular need or emergency; ineffectual or inefficacious, inadequate or unsatisfactory; incapable; impotent.

My succour is weak.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 3. 27.

How vain is Reason, Eloquence how weak!
If Pope must tell what Harcourt cannot speak.
Pope, On the Hon. S. Harcourt.

One equal temper of heroic hearts,
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will
To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.
Tennyson, Ulysses.

(f) Incapable of support, not to be sustained or maintained; unsupported by truth, reason or justice: as, a weak claim, assertion, argument, etc.

A case so weak and feeble hath been much persisted in.
Hooker.

I know not what to say, my title's weak.
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., i. 1. 134.

(g) Deficient in force of utterance or sound, having little volume, loudness, or sonorousness; low; feeble; small.

A voice, not softe, weake piping, womanishe.
Ascham, The Schoolemaster, p. 39.

(h) Not abundantly or sufficiently impregnated with the essential, required, or usual ingredients or with stimulating or nourishing substances or properties, not of the usual strength: as, weak tea; weak broth; a weak infusion; weak punch.

Sip this weak wine
From the thin green glass flask.
Browning, Englishman in Italy.

(i) Deficient in pith, pregnancy, or point; lacking in vigor of expression: as, a weak sentence, a weak style.

There are to whom my satire seems too bold . . .
The lines are weak, another's pleased to say.
Pope, Instr. of Hor., II. i. 6.

(j) Resulting from or indicating lack of judgment, discernment, or firmness, arising from want of moral courage, of self-denial, or of determination; injudicious: as, a weak compliance; a weak surrender.

If evil thence ensue
She first his weak indulgence will accuse.
Milton, P. L., ix. 1186.

(k) Slight; inconsiderable, trifling. [Rare.]

Mine own weak merits. Shak., Othello, iii. 3, 187.

(l) In gram., inflected — (1) as a verb, by regular syllabic addition instead of by change of the radical vowel; (2) as a noun or an adjective, with less full or original difference of case and number forms, opposed to strong (which see). (m) Poorly supplied; deficient: as, a hand weak in trumps. (n) Tending downward in price: as, a weak market; corn was weak. The weaker sex. See sex. The weaker vessel. See vessel. Weak accent, beat, or pulse, in music, a comparatively unemphatic rhythmical unit, opposed to a heavy or strong accent, etc. See rhythm. — Weak election. See election. Weak side, weak point, that side, aspect or feature of a person's character or disposition in which he is most easily influenced or affected.

Guard thy heart
On this weak side where most our nature falls.
Addison, Cato, i. 1.

Weak verb. See def. VII.

weak† (wēk), v. [< ME. weyken, waiken, waken, wakien, wakien, < AS. wācian, become weak, languish, vacillate (= MD. wecken, become soft, D. wekken, soak, = OHG. wechan, MHG. G. weichen, become weak), wācan, make weak, weaken, soften, afflict, < wāc, weak: see weak, a.] I. trans. 1. To make weak; weaken.

It is hey tyme; he drawyt fast home ward, and is ryte lowe browt, and sore weyked and feblyd.
Paston Letters, I. 444.

We must toyle to make our doctrine good,
Which will empair the flesh and weak the knee.
Dr. H. More, Psychozoia, ii. 80.

2. To soften.

As grace groweth nat til gumie wil gynne reyne,
And wake thoughtes wenden fro hertes.
Piers Plowman (C), xv. 26.

II. intrans. To become weak. Chaucer.

weak-built (wēk'bilt), a. Ill founded. [Rare.]

Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak built hopes persuade him to abstaining.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 130.

weaken (wē'kn), v. [< weak + -en[1].] I. intrans. To become weak or weaker; as, he weakens from day to day.

Some what to waken [var. wauken] yan the peyne
Ey lengthe of pleynte. Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1344.

His notion weakens his discernings
Are lethargied. Shak., Lear, i. 4. 248.

II. trans. To make weak or weaker; lessen or reduce the strength, power, ability, influence, or quality of: as, to weaken the body or the mind; to weaken a solution or infusion by dilution; to weaken the force of an argument.

So strong a Corrosive is Grief of Mind, when it meets with a Body weakened to fear with Sickness.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 60.

In all these things hath the Kingdome bin of late weakn'd.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

A languor came Upon him, gentle sickness, gradually
Weakening the man, till he could do no more.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

weakener (wē'knėr), n. One who or that which weakens.

* Fastings and mortifications, . . . rightly managed, are huge helps to piety, [and] great weakners of sin.
South, Sermons, VI. ii.

weak-eyed (wēk'īd), a. Having weak eyes or weak sight. Collins.

weakfish (wēk'fish), n. A scisenoid fish of the genus Cynoscion (formerly Otolithus), as the squeteague: so called because it has a tender mouth, and cannot pull hard when hooked. The common weakfish or squeteague is C. regalis (see cut under Cynoscion), the white weakfish, C. nothus, the spotted weakfish C. nebulosus. All three are excellent food fishes; they inhabit the Atlantic coast of the United States, and in southerly regions are misnamed trout or sea-trout.

weak-handed (wēk'han"ded), a. Having weak hands; hence, powerless; dispirited.

I will come upon him while he is weary and weak handed. 2 Sam. xvii. 2.

weak-headed (wēk'hed"ed), a. Having a weak head or intellect.

weak-hearted (wēk'här"ted), a. Having little courage; dispirited.

I am able now, methinks,
Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,
To endure more miseries and greater far
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 2. 380.

weak-hinged (wēk'hinjd), a. Ill-balanced; ill-founded. [Rare.]

Not able to produce more accusation
Than your own weak-hinged fancy.
Shak., W. T., ii. 3. 149.

weak-kneed (wēk'ned), a. Having weak knees; hence, weak, especially as regards will or determination: as, a weak-kneed policy or effort.

weakling (wēk'ling), n. and a. [< weak + -ling[1].] I. n. A feeble creature.

Weakling, Warwick takes his gift again
Shak., 3 Henry VI., v. 1. 37.

"Jane is not such a weakling as you would make her," he would say, "she can bear a mountain blast, or a shower, or a few flakes of snow, as well as any of us."
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxxiv.

II. a. Feeble; weak.

This weakling cry of children.
Harper's Mag., LXXXVI. 570.

weakly (wēk'li), a. [< ME. weikly* (cf. Icel. veiklugr), earlier woecle, waecle, weakly, < AS. wæcle, weak, vain, mean, vile, < wæc, weak: see weak and -ly[1].] Weak; feeble; not robust: as, a weakly woman; a man of weakly constitution.

Those that are weakly, as Hypochondriacks and Hysterics.
Gideon Harvey, Vanities of Phil. and Physick (ed. 1702), vi.

When I came at the gate that is at the head of the way, the Lord of that place did entertain me freely; neither objected he against my weakly looks.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

weakly (wēk'li), adv. [< ME. waeliche, woecliche, < AS. wæclice, weakly, meanly, vilely, < wæcle, weak: see weakly.] In a weak manner; in any sense of the word weak.

If a shoemaker should have no shoes in his shop, but only work as he is bespoken, he should be weakly customed.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 240.

weak-minded (wēk'mīn'ded), a. Of a weak mind; of feeble intellect; also, indicating weakness of mind.

The Duke of York . . . prevailed for a time and fruitlessly endeavoured to bind a weak minded king by pledges.
J. Gairdner, Richard III., i.

If he should go abroad, his mother might think he had some weak minded view of joining Julia Dallow, and trying, with however little hope, to win her back.
H. James, Tragic Muse, xxxv.

weak-mindedness (wēk'mīn'ded-nes), n. The state or character of being weak-minded; irresolution; indecision.

In homicidal maniacal cases there may be melancholy or weak-mindedness from the outset and no maniacal excitement. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 440.

weakness (wēk'nes), n. [< ME. weikenes, weykenesse; cf. AS. wæcnys, weakness, < wæc, weak: see weak and -ness.] The state or character of being weak, in any sense; also, a weak point.

Syn weak-nes of women may not welle stryve
Ne hate no might towardes men ministries to feed.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5327.

I think it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
Shak., J. C., v. 3. 76.

Weakness is a negative term, and imports the absence of strength. It is, besides, a relative term, and accordingly imports the absence of such a quantity of strength as makes the thing possessed by the person in question less than that of some person to be compared to it.
Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, vi. 8, note.

It is one of the problems of a democracy to be satisfied with the second best if it appear to answer the purpose tolerably well and to be cheaper . . . as it never is in the long run. Lowell, Harvard Anniversary, 1886.

weak-sighted (wēk'sī'ted), a. Having weak sight. I. Tucker.

weak-spirited (wēk'spir'i-ted), a. Having a weak or timorous spirit; pusillanimous. Scott.

weaky (wē'ki), a. [< weak + -y[1].] Moist; watery. [Prov. Eng.]

weal[1] (wēl), n. [< ME. wele, weole, < AS. wela, weala, weola, weal, wealth, prosperity (= OS. wela = OHG. wela, wola, MHG. wole, G. wol, wohl = Sw. väl = Dan. vel, weal, welfare), < wel, well: see well[2]. Cf. wealth.] 1. Wealth; riches; hence, prosperity; success; happiness; well-being; the state of being well or prosperous: as, come weal or woe.

I wot he is he that can no wele endure.
Chaucer, Envoy of Chaucer to Bukton, l. 27.

And of this wele folk frewe that moche wele and moche woo have we suffred to-gedere.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 555.

In our olde vulgare, profite is called weale.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, I. 1.

I sing the happy Rusticks weal,
Whose handsom house seems as a Common-weal.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 3.

Glad I submit, whoe'er, or young or old,
Ought, more conducive to our weal, unfold.
Pope, Iliad, xiv. 110.

2†. The state: properly in the phrases common weal, public weal, general weal, meaning primarily 'the common or public welfare,' but used (the first now as a compound word) to designate the state (in which weal used alone is an abbreviation of commonweal).

A publike weale is a body lyuyng, compaste or made of sondry astates and degrees of men, which he is disposed by the ordre of equitie, and gouerned by the rule and moderation of reason. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, I. 1.

The charters that you bear
I' the body of the weal. Shak., Cor., II. 3. 189.

The public, general, or common weal, the interest, well-being or prosperity of the community, state, or society.

weal†, v. t. [< weal[1], n.] To promote the weal or welfare of. Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 3.

weal[2] (wēl), n. and v. Same as wale[1].

weal-†, n. Same as weal[2].

weal[4] (wēl), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To be in woe or want. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

weal-balanced, a. An original misprint, in the following passage, of well-balanced, corrected by some editors, but retained by some, and absurdly explained as "balanced with regard to the common weal or good."

By cold gradation and well balanced form
We shall proceed with Angelo.
Shak., M. for M., iv. 3. 104.

Weald (weld), n. [< late ME. weeld, appar. an irreg. form of wild (formerly pron. wild), early mod. E. welde, wylde, found in same sense, confused by later writers with ME. wald, wold, wold, < AS. weald, a forest: see wold[1]. The proper E. form of AS. weald is wold (parallel with bold, fold, hold, sold, told, etc.). The mod. spelling weald represents the earlier weeld, and has nothing to do with AS. weald, unless it is due to Verstegan, who affected the "restitution" of old forms.] 1. The name given in England to an oval-shaped area, bounded by a line topographically well marked by an escarpment of the Chalk, which begins at Folkestone Hill, near the Straits of Dover, and passes through the counties of Kent, Surrey, Hants, and Sussex, meeting the sea again at Beachy Head. It embraces the southwestern part of Kent, the southern part of Surrey, the north and northeastern half of Sussex, and a small part of the eastern side of Hampshire. These are the limits of the area now known to geologists as the Weald; but, according to the English Geological Survey, it is probable that the area anciently designated by that name was somewhat smaller than this, having been bounded by the escarpment of the Lower Greensand, which is approximately concentric with that of the Chalk, but inside and distant from five to ten miles from it. This latter escarpment is, however, in places rather ill-defined, so that there the boundary of the ancient Weald was doubtful. The geology of the Weald is extremely interesting, hence the name has become very familiar. The formations covering the Weald proper are known as the Wealden (which see). The Weald was originally partly covered with forests and partly destitute of them.

The Historie of this Hogheard, presenteth to my minde an opinion, that some men maynteine touching this Weald which is that it was a great while together in manner nothing els but a desart, and waste Wildernesse, not planted with Townes, or peopled with men, as the outsides of the shyre were, but stored and stuffed with heards of Deere, and droues of Hogs only. Which conceit though happily it may seem to many but a Paradoxe, yet in mine owne fantasie, it wanteth not the feete of sound reason to stand upon.
Lambarde, A Perambulation of Kent (1596), p. 211.

We know that the Weald proper, or that part of the country below the Lower Greensand escarpment, was the last cultivated. Even as late as Elizabeth's time swine are said to have run wild here.
Topley, Geol. of the Weald, p. 398.

2. [l. c.] Any open country. [Rare, [illegible] ly in poetry.]

But she to Almesbury
Fled all night long by glimmering waste and [illegible]
Tennyson, Guinevere.

Wealden (wēl'dn), a. and n. [Irreg. < Weald + -en[2].] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Weald.

II. n. In geol., the name of a formation extensively developed in the Weald of England (see Weald), and interesting from its position and organic remains. Its geological age is Lower Cretaceous. The deposits of the Wealden, which have a total thickness of 1,800 feet, precisely resemble those of a modern delta, and the organic remains include land plants, fresh-water shells, and a few estuarine or marine forms as also dinosaurs, plesiosaurs, and pterodactyls. The Wealden is separated into two divisions: the Weald Clay, at the top, about 1,000 feet thick, and the Hastings Sand group beneath, which is subdivided, in descending order, as follows: Tunbridge Wells Sand, 120 to 190 feet thick; Wadhurst Clay, 120 to 180 feet; and Ashdown Sand, 400 to 600 feet. The Wealden is overlain conformably by the Lower Greensand.

wealdish† (wēl'dish), a. [< Weald, the Weald, + -ish[1].] Of or belonging to a weald, especially [cap.] to the Weald of Kent, Surrey, and Sussex.

The Wealdish men. Fuller, Worthies, Kent, II. 111.

wealful† (wēl'ful), a. [< ME. welful, weoleful, < weal[1] + -ful.] Successful; prosperous; happy; joyous; felicitous.

For thow ne wost what is the ende of thinges, forthy douteth thow that felones and wykked men ben myhty and welful. Chaucer, Boethius, I. prose 6.

To tell the jerks with joy that joy do bring
Is both a wealeful and a wofull thing.
Davies, Holy Roode, p. 13. (Davies.

wealfulness† (wēl'fūl-nes), n. [< ME. welefulnesse; < wealful + -ness.] Prosperity; success; happiness.

In his opinioun of felicite, that I clepe welefulnesse.
Chaucer, Boethius, I. prose 3.

weal-public† (wēl'pub"lik), n. The state; the commonwealth; the body politic; the public weal: properly two words, like body politic.

If you can find in your heart so to appoint and dispose yourself that you may apply your wit and diligence to the profit of the weal public.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

What is all this, either here or there, to the temporal regiment of Melyadus, whether it be Popular, Princely or Monarchal?
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

weals-man† (wēlz'man), n. [< weal's, poss. of weal[1], + man.] A statesman.

Meeting two such wealsmen as you are I cannot call you I perceive of the drink you give me touch my palate adverse to it. I make a crooked face at it.
Shak., Cor., II. 1. 59.

wealth (welth), n. [< ME. welthe, woolthe = MD. welde, D. welde = MLG. welde, LG. weelde = OHG. welida, welthai, wealth; as well[2] + -th[1]. Cf. health, dearth, etc.] 1†. Weal; prosperity; well-being; happiness; joy.

For I am fallen into helle
From paradys and welthe.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4137.

I schall go to my fadir that I come froo,
And dwelle with hym wynly in welthe all-way.
York Plays, p. 265.

Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth [but each his neighbour's good, R. V.]. 1 Cor. x. 24.

Grant her in health and wealth long to live.
Book of Common Prayer (Eng.), Prayer for the Queen.

2. Riches; valuable material possessions; that which serves, or the aggregate of those things which serve, a useful or desired purpose, and cannot be acquired without a sacrifice of labor, capital, or time; especially, large possessions; abundance of worldly estate; affluence; opulence.

It shall then be given out that I'm a gentlewoman of such a birth, such a wealth, have had such a breeding, and so forth. Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 2.

Get place and wealth — if possible, with grace;
If not, by any means, get wealth and place.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. i. 103.

Wealth in all commercial states, is found to accumulate.
Goldsmith, Vicar, xiv.

Things for which nothing could be obtained in exchange, however useful or necessary they may be, are not wealth in the sense in which the term is used in Political Economy. J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., Prelim. Rem.

Senior, again, has admirably defined wealth, or objects possessing value, as "those things, and those things only, which are transferable, are limited in supply, and are directly or indirectly productive of pleasure or preventive of pain." Jevons, The Theory of Polit. Econ., p. 175.

3. Affluence; profusion; abundance.

Again the feast, the speech, the glee,
The shade of passing thought, the wealth
Of words and wit.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, Conclusion.

Active wealth. See active capital, under active. =Syn. 2. Affluence, Riches, etc. See opulence.

wealthful (welth'ful), a. [< wealth + -ful.] Full of wealth or happiness; prosperous. Sir T. More.

wealthfully† (welth'ful-i), adv. In prosperity or happiness; prosperously.

To lead thy life wealthfully.
Vives, Instruction of a Christian Woman, ii. 2.

wealthily (wel'thi-li), adv. In a wealthy manner; in the midst of wealth; richly.

I come to wive it wealthily in Padua;
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 2. 75.

wealthiness (wel'thi-nes), n. [Early mod. E. welthinesse; < wealthy + -ness.] The state of being wealthy; wealth.

The Footefer vp of shoting is Labour, companion of vertue, the mayntayner of honestie, the encreaser of health and welthinesse. Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. Arber), p. 52.

It is a more sound wealthinesse for a man to esteeme him selfe wise than to presume to be of great wealth; for with wisdom they obtaine to haue, but with hauing they come to lose themselues.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 191.

wealthy (wel'thi), a. [Early mod. E. welthy, welthie; < wealth + *-y*1.] 1. Having wealth; rich; having large possessions; opulent; affluent.

Married to a wealthy widow,
Shak., T. of the S., iv. 2. 37.

2. Rich in any sense, as in beauty, ornament, endowments, etc.; enriched.

Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.
Ps. lxvi. 12.

Her dowry wealthy. Shak., T. of the S., iv. 5. 65.

'Twas a tough Task, believe it, thus to tame
A wild and wealthy Language, and to frame Grammatic Tolls to curb her, ah that she Now speaks by Rules, and sings by Prosody.
Howell, Letters, I. v. 26.

Revealings deep and clear are thine
Of wealthy smiles. Tennyson, Madeline

3. Well-fed; in good condition. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] = Syn. 1. Moneyed, well off, well to do.

weamt, n. An obsolete form of wem.

wean (wēn), v. t. [Formerly also wean; < ME. wenen, < AS. wenian (ge-wenian, accustom, also wean, á-wenian, wean) = D. wennen, accustom (ge-wennen, accustom, inure, af-wennen, wean), = OHG. wenjan, wennen, wenen, MHG. wenen, accustom (OHG. MHG. ge-wenen, G. ge-wohnen, accustom, OHG. int-wennan, MHG. entwenen, G. entwöhnen, disaccustom, wean), = Icel. venja = Sw. vänja = Dan. vænne = Goth. wanjan, accustom; connected with OHG. giwona, MHG. gewone = Icel. vani = Sw. vana = Dan. vane, custom, from an adj. seen in OHG. garo, MHG. gewon, G. gewohn* (in gewohnheit, custom), gewohnt = Icel. vanr = Sw. van, vand = Dan. vant, accustomed; connected with *wone*1, wont, q. v.] 1. To accustom (a child or young animal) to nourishment or food other than its mother's milk; disaccustom to the mother's breast: as, to wean a child.

And the child grew, and was weaned. Gen. xxi. 8.

For the widowes and Orphans, for the sucking and weaned Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 108.

2. To detach or alienate, as the affections, from any object of desire; reconcile to the want or loss of something; disengage from any habit, former pursuit, or enjoyment: as, to wean the heart from temporal enjoyments.

Riper years will wean him from such toys.
Marlowe, Edward II. i. 4.

I will restore to thee
The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.
Shak., Tit. And., i. 1. 211.

Could I, by any practice, wean the boy
From one vain course of study he affects.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1.

My Father would willingly have weaned me from my fondness of my too indulgent Grandmother, intending to have me placed at Eaton. Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 21, 1632.

Weaning brash. See *brash*2.

wean (wēn), n. [< wean, v.] 1. An infant; a weanling. [Prov. Eng.]

What gars this din of mirk and balefull harme,
Where every weane is all betaint with bloud?
Greene, James IV. i. 3.

2. A child; a boy or girl of tender age. [Scotch.]

weanel†, weanell† (wē'nel), n. [< wean + dim. -el.] A weanling; an animal newly weaned.

A Lambe, or a Kidde, or a weanell wast
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

weanling (wēn'ling), n. and a. [< wean + *-ling*1.] I. n. A child or young animal newly weaned.

As a weanling from the mother, I will bewail my woeful state.
J. Careless, in Bradford's Works (Parker Soc.), II. 357.

II. a. Recently weaned.

As silting as the canker to the rose,
Or taint-worm to the weanling herds.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 46.

weapon (wep'on), n. [< ME. wepen, weppen, wapen, wopen, < AS. wǽpen, wǽpn, a weapon, shield, sword, = OS. wapan, sword, = OFries. wǽpn, wǽpen, wepn = D. wapen = MLG. LG. wapen = OHG. waffan, wafan, MHG. wappen, wafen, G. waffen, weapon (cf. G. wappen, scutcheon, coat of arms, < D. or LG.), = Icel. vápn = Sw. vapen = Dan. vaaben = Goth. pl. wêpna, weapon.] 1. Any instrument of offense; anything used, or designed to be used, in attacking an enemy, as a sword, a dagger, a club, a rifle, or a cannon.

Ector faght in the filid falle of his Enmys.
Polexenas, a pert Duke, that the prince met,
He dang to the dethe with his derfe weppon
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7740.

Before they durst
Embrace, they were by several servants search'd,
As doubting concealed weapons.
Fletcher (and others), Bloody Brother, i. 1.

Hence—2. Any object, particular, or instrumentality that may be of service in a contest or struggle, or in resisting adverse circumstances, whether for offense or defense; anything that may figuratively be classed among arms.

The weapons of our warfare are not carnal. 2 Cor. x. 4.

All his mind is bent to holiness; . . .
His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 3. 61.

3. In zool., any part or organ of the body which is or may be used as a means of attack or defense, as horns, hoofs, claws, spurs, stings, spines, teeth, electric organs, etc.; an arm or armature. = Syn. 1. See *arm*2.

weapon† (wep'on), v. t. [< ME. wepnen, weapon, arm with weapons, < AS. wapnian = OFries. wepna = OHG. waffenen (cf. G. ge-waffnet, bewaffnet, armed with weapons), = Icel. vápna = Sw. vapna = Dan. væbne, arm; from the noun.] To arm with weapons.

weaponed (wep'ond), a. [< ME. weppynd, wapned, < AS. wǽpned, pp. of wǽpnian, arm with weapons; see weapon, v.] Armed for offense; furnished with offensive arms.

Take on of thi wyght gemen
Well weppynd be thei alde.
Robin Hood and the Monk (Child's Ballads V. 2).

Be not afraid, though you do see me weaponed.
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 266.

They . . . appointed three only, as weaponed, to enter into the lists. R. Poole (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 530).

weaponless (wep'on-les), a. [< ME. wepenles, < AS. wǽpenleas (= D. wapenloos = MLG. wapenlos = G. waffenlos = Icel. vápnlauss = Sw. vapenlös = Dan. vaabenløs), < wǽpen, weapon, + -leas = E. -less.] Unarmed; having no weapon.

Some High way Theef, o' my conscience that forgot to be weaponless. Brome, Jovial Crew, iii.

weaponry (wep'on-ri), n. [< weapon + -ry (see -ery).] Weapons in general. [Rare.]

weapon salve (wep'on-sav), n. A salve which was supposed to cure a wound by being applied to the weapon that made it. According to Sir Kenelm Digby, the salve produces sympathy between the wound and the weapon. He cites several instances to prove that "as the sword is treated the wound inflicted by it feels." Thus if the instrument is kept wet, the wound will feel cool, if held to the fire, it will feel hot," etc. This superstition is referred to in the following lines:

She has ta'en the broken lance,
And washed it from the clotted gore,
And salved the splinter o'er and o'er.
Scott, L. of L. M., iii. 23.

weapon-smith (wep'on-smith), n. One who makes weapons of war; an armorer. [Rare.]

It is unavoidable that the first mechanics . . . beyond the heroical weapon smith on the one hand, and on the other the poor professors of such rude arts as the homestead can not do without . . . should be those who have no land.
J. M. Kemble, Saxons in England, ii. 7.

wear1 (wār), v.; pret. wore, pp. worn, ppr. wearing. [< ME. weren, weren (pret. werede, pp. wered), < AS. werian (pret. werede, pp. wered), wear, = OHG. werjan, werjen, clothe, = Icel. verja, clothe, wrap, inclose, mount, also lay out, spend, = Goth. wasjan (pl. wasidu), clothe (the Goth. form showing interchange of r and s: see rhotacism), < √ vas, clothe, in L. vestis, clothing, vestire, clothe, Gr. ἕσθος, clothing: see vest. The pret. wore (formerly also ware), with the pp. worn, is due to conformity with orig. strong preterits like bore < bear, swore < swear, tore < tear, etc. (pp. born, sworn, torn, etc.), the ME. pret being weak, wered, mod. E. wearied*.]

1, trans. 1. To carry or bear on the body as a covering or an appendage for warmth, decency, ornament, or other use; put or have on: as, to wear fine clothes; to wear diamonds.

"I were nought worthy," quod Haukyn, "to were any clothes,
Ne noyther sherte ne shone sane for shame ones,
To kenne my carcigne." Piers Plowman (B), xiv. 331.

Many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 359.

Thy Muse is a hagler, and wearse clothes upon best-be-trust. Dekker, Humorous Poet (Works, ed. Pearson, I. 246).

On her head a coul of gold she weare.
A Praise of Mistress Eyre (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 193).

From that time forth he [Canute] never would wear a Crown. Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

2. To use, affect, or be in the habit of using in one's costume or adornment: as, to wear green.

She wears her trains very long, as the great ladies do in Europe. O. W. Holmes, Professor, vii.

3. To consume by frequent or habitual use; deteriorate or waste by wear; use up: as, boots well worn.

Continual Harvest wears the fruitful field.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

But the object that most drew my attention, in the mysterious package, was a certain affair of fine red cloth, much worn and faded.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 34.

4. To waste or impair by rubbing or attrition; lessen or diminish by continuous action upon; consume; waste; destroy by degrees.

When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 2. 194.

The youth with broomy stumps learn to trace
The kennel's edge, where wheels had worn the place.
Swift, Description of Morning.

Hence—5. To exhaust; weary; fatigue.

Since you have made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs
Shak., All's Well, v. 1. 4.

Thus were they plagued,
And worn with famine long. Milton, P. L., x. 578.

6. To cause or produce by constant percussion or attrition; form by continual rubbing: as, a constant current of water will wear a channel in stone.

Much attrition has worn every sentence into a bullet.
Emerson, English Traits, p. 118.

7. To efface; obliterate.

Sort thy heart to patience,
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 4. 69.

8. To have or exhibit an appearance of; bear; carry; exhibit; show.

Sent did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord than mine eyes for you.
Shak., T. of A., ii. 488.

I wore the Christian cause upon my sword,
Against his enemies.
Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 1.

Thus both with Lamentations fill'd the Place,
Till Sorrow seem'd to wear one common Face.
Congreve, Iliad.

And my wife wears her benedictory look whenever she turns towards those young people.
Thackeray, Philip, xxvii.

9. To disaccustom to one thing and accustom to another; bring gradually; lead: often with in or into before the new thing or state.

Trials wear us into a liking of what possibly in the first essay displeased us. Locke.

A man who has any relish for fine writing . . . receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him. Besides that he naturally wears himself into the same manner of speaking and thinking. Addison, Spectator No. 405.

10. Naut., to bring (a vessel) on another tack by turning her with her head away from the wind; veer. Also ware.

At three bells in the first watch the Death Ship had been wore to bring her starboard tacks aboard.
W. C. Russell, Death Ship, xxvii.

11†. To lay out; expend; spend; waste; squander. Compare *ware*2.

I saye there bendeges ar welll waird.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), l. 320.

I have wared all my money in cowhides at Coleshill Market.
Heywood, 1 Edw. IV. (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, I. 48).

To wear away, to impair, diminish, or destroy by gradual attrition or imperceptible action.

Time and patience wear away pain and grief
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 681.

To wear off, to remove or diminish by attrition or use; as, to wear off the stiffness of new shoes. — To wear one's heart upon one's sleeve. See heart. — To wear out. (a) To wear till useless, render useless by wearing or using: as, to wear out a coat or a book. (b) To waste or destroy by degrees; consume tediously: as, to wear out life in idle projects.

Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 8.

Tears, sighs, and groans you shall wear out your days with. Fletcher, Wife for a Month, v. 3.

Hence (c) To obliterate; efface:

Men that are bred in blood have no way left 'em,
No bath, no purge no time to wear it out
Or wash it off, but penitence and prayer.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iv. 2.

Who have almost worn out all the impressions of the work of the Law written in their hearts.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. ii.

(d) To harass, tire completely, fatigue; exhaust, waste or consume the strength of.

Stunn'd and worn out with endless Chat
Prior, Alma, iii.

"Here," said I to an old soldier with one hand, who had been campaign'd, and worn out to death in the service, "here's a couple of sous for thee."
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, Montriul.

To wear the breeches. See breeches. To wear the willow. See willow, 1. To wear yellow hose or stockings†. See yellow.

II. intrans. 1†. To be in fashion; be in common or recognized use.

Like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which wear not now.
Shak., All's Well, i. 1. 172.

2†. To become fit or suitable by use; become accustomed. [Rare.]

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself: so wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband' heart.
Shak., T. N., ii. 4. 31.

3. To last or hold out in course of use or the lapse of time; generally with well or ill.

The flattery with which he began, in telling me how well I wore, was not discreet cold. Steele, Tatler, No. 208.

4. To undergo gradual impairment or diminution through use, attrition, or lapse of time; waste or diminish gradually; become obliterated: often with away, off, or out.

Thou wilt surely wear away. Ex. xviii. 18.

Though marble wear with raining
Shak., Lucrece, l. 590.

The suffering plough share or the flint may wear.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, i. 1.

Love, like some Stains, will wear out of it self.
Etherege, She Would if She Could, v. 1.

If passion causes a present terror, yet it soon wears off.
Locke.

They showed him all manner of furniture which their Lord had provided for pilgrims, as sword, shield, helmet, breast plate, all prayer, and shoes that would not wear out.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

5. To pass or be spent; become gradually consumed or exhausted.

Away, I say, time wears. Shak., M. W. of W., v. 1. 8.

The day wears,
And those that have been offering early prayers
Are now returning homeward.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iv. 1.

The day wears away, if you think good, let us prepare to be going. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

6. To move or advance slowly; make gradual progress: as, the winter wore on.

Never morning wore
To evening but some heart did break.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, vi.

As time wore on and the offices were filled, the throng of eager aspirants diminished and faded away.
The Century, XLI. 43.

7. To become; grow. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

The Spaniards began to waxe weary, for winter drew on.
Berners.

8. Naut., to come round with the head away from the wind: said of a ship.

The helm was hard up the after yards shaking, and the ship in the act of wearing.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 372.

To wear on or upon†, to bear on; wear.

Therfore I made my visitacioun,
And wered upon my gay scarlet gytes.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 559.

wear[1] (wãr), n. [< wear[1], v.] 1. The act of wearing or using, or the state of being worn or used, as garments, ornaments, etc.; use: as, a garment not for every day wear.

They have a great manufacture of coarse woollen cloth in and about Salonica, which is exported to all parts of Turky for the wear of common people.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 134.

He had transferred all the contents of his every day pockets to those actually in wear.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 9.

2. Stuff or material for articles of wear; material for garments, etc.

Nor. What's in that pack there?
First Sail. 'Tis English cloth.
Nor. That's a good wear indeed.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 1.

3. An article or articles worn, or intended or fit to be worn; style of dress, adornment, or the like; hence, fashion; vogue.

Pom. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.
Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear.
Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 78.

Dispatcheth his lacquey to the chamber early to know what her colours are for the day, with purpose to apply his wear that day accordingly.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2.

The general wear for all sorts of people is a small Turban.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 139.

4. Use; usage received in course of being worn or used; the impairment or diminution in bulk, value, efficiency, etc., which results from use, friction, time, or the like.

This rag of scarlet cloth — for time, and wear, and a sad rheumy moth had reduced it to little other than a rag — on careful examination, seemed the shape of a letter.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 35.

A fibre capable of such a strain and wear as that is used only in the making of heroic natures. Lowell, Garfield.

He might have seen the wear
Of thirty summers.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 330.

Wear and tear, the loss by wearing, the waste, diminution, decay, or injury which anything sustains by ordinary use: as, the wear and tear of machinery; the wear and tear of furniture.

wear[2†] (wer), v. t. [< ME. weren, werien, werien (pret. werede), < AS. werian, guard, defend, protect, = OS. werian, hinder, = OHG. werjan, weren, hinder, obstruct, protect, defend, MHG. wern, werjen, G. wehren, guard, protect, = Icel. verja = Sw. värja = Dan. værge, defend, = Goth. warjan, guard, protect; from the root of ware[1], wary[1], and so ult. connected with ward[1] and guard.] 1. To guard; watch, as a gate, etc., so that it is not entered; defend.

Fadir, that may do no dere
Goddis commaundement to fulfyll,
For fra all wathes he will us were.
Whar-so we wende to wirke his wille.
York Plays, p. 61.

I set him to wear the fore door wi' the speh while I kept the back door wi' the lance.
Border Minstrelsy, I. 208. (Jamieson.)

2. To ward off; prevent from approaching or entering: as, to wear the wolf from the sheep. — 3. To conduct or guide with care or caution, as into a fold or place of safety. [Scotch.]

Will ye gae to the ewe-buchts, Marion,
And wear in the sheep wi' me?
Old Song, in Ramsay's Tea Table Miscellany.

wear[3], n. See weir.

wearable (wãr'a-bl), a. and n. [< wear[1] + -able.] I. a. Capable of being worn; fit for wear, as a garment or a textile fabric.

Respecting the hereafter of the wearable fabrics, the furniture, and the walls, we can assert thus much, that they are all in process of decay.
H. Spencer, First Principles, § 97.

II. n. A garment; a piece of wearing-apparel.

The Celt . . . moved off with Mrs. Dutton's wearables, and deposited the trunk containing them safely in the boat. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xli.

Let a woman ask me to give her an edible or a wearable, . . . I can, at least, meet or stand the demand.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xviii.

weare (wer), n. [A spelling of ware[3], weir.] In her., a bearing representing a screen or fence made of wattled twigs, or the like, and upright stakes. It is generally represented in fesse.

wearer (wãr'er), n. [< wear[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who wears, bears, or carries on the body, or as an appendage to the body: as, the wearer of a cloak, a sword, or a crown.

By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shave't to-day.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 7.

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers fled
And flutter'd into rags. Milton, P. L., iii. 480.

2. That which wears, wastes, or consumes: as, the waves are the patient wearers of the rocks.

wearable (wer'i-a-bl), a. [< weary[1] + -able.] Capable of becoming wearied or fatigued. Quarterly Rev. [Rare.]

wearied (wer'id), p. a. Tired; fatigued; exhausted with exertion.

The Samoeds know these unknowne deserts and can tell where the mosse groweth wherewith they refresh their wearied beere. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 430.

weariful (wer'i-ful), a. [< weary[1] + -ful.] An unnecessary extension of weary[1]; perhaps suggested by wearisome.] Full of weariness; causing weariness; wearisome; tiresome; tedious. [Rare.]

I was reading "Polexandre," the wearifullest of books, I think; and I heard nothing but the rats and the mice.
A. E. Barr, Friend Olivia, ii.

wearifully (wer'i-ful-i), adv. In a wearisome manner; wearisomely. [Rare.]

The long night passed slowly and wearifully.
W. Black, In Far Lochaber, xxiii.

weariless (wer'i-les), a. [< weary + -less.] Incessant; unwearying; unwearied: as, weariless wings. Hogg. [Rare.]

Beaten and packed
With the flashing flails of wearyless seas.
Lowell, Appledore, iii.

wearily (wer'i-li), adv. In a weary manner; like one fatigued.

You look wearily. Shak., Tempest, iii. 1. 83.

weariness (wer'i-nes), n. [< ME. werynes, werinesse, werynesse, werinasse, < AS. wérignes, wérignes, wérignes, weariness, < wérig, weary: see weary and -ness.] 1. The state of being weary or tired; that lassitude or exhaustion of strength which is induced by labor, or lack of sleep or rest; fatigue.

After his launcing and his beynesse,
For his travell and his grete werynes,
He felle a slepe. Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 160.

We come to a certayne stone upon ye which our blessyd Lady was wont to rest her werynes when she most devoutly visyted the sayd holy place (after ye ascension of our Lord).
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 33.

Weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth Finds the down pillow hard.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 6. 32.

With wearinesse and wine oppress'd.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xii. 763.

2. Mental depression proceeding from monotonous continuance; tedium; ennui; languor.

Till one could yield for weariness.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

3. A feeling of dissatisfaction or vexation with something or with its continuance.

A man would die, though he were neither valiant nor miserable only upon a weariness to do the same thing so oft over and over. Bacon, Death (ed. 1887).

The Thirteenth King was Osred, whose Wife Cuthburga, out of a loathing Weariness of Wedlock, sued out a Divorce from her Husband, and built a Nunnery at Wimburn in Dorsetshire, where in a Religious Habit she ended her life. Baker, Chronicles, p. 6.

Syn. 1. Lassitude, etc. See fatigue.

wearing (war'ing), n. [< ME. werynge, werunge; verbal n. of wear[1], v.] 1. The act of one who wears. — 2. That which one wears; clothes; garments.

Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu.
Shak., Othello, iv. 3. 46.

3. The act of wearing away or passing.

Now again in a half month's wearing goes Sigrid into the wild. William Morris, Sigurd, i.

wearing (war'ing), p. a. Wasting; consuming; exhausting; tiring: as, wearing suspense or grief.

wearing-apparel (wãr'ing-a-par'el), n. Garments worn, or made for wearing; dress in general.

wear-iron (war'ī'ėrn), n. A friction-guard, consisting of a plate of iron or steel, set on the surface or edge of a softer material to prevent abrasion, as on the edge of the body of a wagon to prevent the forward wheels from wearing, grinding, or scraping the body in turning. Also wear-plate.

wearish[†] (wer'ish), a. [Also weerish, werish, weesh, origin uncertain; some confusion with weary[1], and perhaps with waterish, appears to exist.] 1. Insipid; tasteless; weak; washy.

Weesshe, as meate is that is nat well tastye — . . . mal sauoi.
Palsgrave, p. 328.

As weesshe and as vnsauery as lactes.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 118. (Davies.)

2. Withered; wizen; shrunk.

A wretched wearish life. Spenser, F. Q., IV. v. 34.

A wearish hand,
A bloodless lip. Ford, Love's Sacrifice, v. 1.

A little, wearish old man, very melancholy by nature.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 2.

wearishness[†], n. Insipidity. Udall. (Davies.)

wearisome (wer'i-sum), a. [< weary[1] + -some.] Causing weariness; tiresome; tedious; irksome; monotonous: as, a wearisome march; a wearisome day's work.

Alas, the way is wearisome and long!
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 7. 8.

God had delivered their souls of the wearisome burdens of sin and vanity. Penn, Rise and Progress of Quakers, ii.

Few portions of Spanish literature show anything more stiff and wearisome than the long declamations and discussions in this dull fiction. Ticknor, Span. Lit., III. 68.

Syn. Wearisome, Fatiguing, Tiresome, Tedious, Irksome, prolix, humdrum, prosy, dull. Wearisome and fatiguing are essentially the same in meaning and strength; they are equally appropriate whether the person acts or is acted upon: as, the old man was so deaf that it was equally [illegible] or fatigue) to speak and to be spoken to. Irksome is more often used where one is acted upon; in strength it is the same as wearisome. Tedious is stronger than wearisome, and suggests the need of constant effort of the will to do or to endure; the weariness may be physical or mental: as, a tedious task; a tedious headache; tedious garrulity. Tedious suggests commonly that one is acted upon; irksome suggests that one acts or is called upon to act, and implies also a peculiar reluctance. In Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 56, is an example of the rarer use of irksome to express a wearied shrinking from being acted upon: "How irksome is this music to my heart!" See fatigue, n., and tired, v. t.

wearisomely (wēr'i-sum-li), adv. In a wearisome manner; tediously: so as to cause weariness.

Pope's epigrammatic cast of thought led him to spend his skill on bringing to a nicer adjustment the balance of the couplet, in which he succeeded only too wearisomely well. Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 166.

wearisomeness (wēr'i-sum-nes), n. The quality or state of being wearisome; tiresomeness; tediousness: as, the wearisomeness of waiting long and anxiously.

That the wearisomeness of the Sea may bee refreshed in this pleasing part of the Countrie.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 6.

Continual plodding and wearisomeness.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

It would be difficult to realize the wearisomeness which reigned in the Conclave during so protracted a period.
J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, xxx.

wear-plate (wār'plāt), n. Same as wear-iron.

weary[1] (wēr'i), a. [< ME. wery, weri, < AS. wērig = OS. wērig (in comp.), weary, = OHG. wōrag, wuarag, drunken. Cf. AS. wōrian, wander, travel, roll, < wor*, prob. a moor or wet place (> ME. war: "wery so water in worr," "dull as water in pool"), in comp. wor-hana, a moor-cock; cf. AS. wos, also wæs, mire, wet, ooze: see wase[2], wosse, ooze.] 1. Tired; exhausted by toil or exertion; having the endurance or patience worn out by continuous striving.

There here is the place where that oure Lord rested him, whan he was wery for beryinge of the Cros.
Maundeville, Travels, p. 80.

Eatern fewyalay to Suza to Diuel, and the I rest me, for I was wore, and my hors also, for the gretl labor that I had the same morning in passing over the cvyll and grevous mounte Scire.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 3.

Let us not be weary in well doing. Gal. vi. 9.

When they will they work, and sleep when they are weary.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 14.

I see you are weary, and therefore I will presently wait on you to your chamber.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 23.

The stag hounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretched upon the rushy floor.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 2.

2. Impatient of or discontented with the continuance of something painful, exacting, irksome, or distasteful, and willing to be done with it; having ceased to feel pleasure (in something):

In the exercise and study of the mind they be never weary.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Weary of the world, away she flies,
And yokes her silver doves.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1189.

I think she is weary of your tyranny,
And therefore goes.
Fletcher, Pilgrim, ii. 1.

He is weary of the old wooden houses, the mud and dust, the dead level of site and sentiment, the chill east wind, and the chilliest of social atmospheres.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 11.

3. Causing fatigue; tiresome; irksome: as, a weary journey; a weary life.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 133.

Their dusty palfreys and array
Showed they had marched a weary way.
Scott, Marmion, i. 8.

Most weary seem'd the sea, weary the oar,
Weary the wandering fields of barren foam.
Tennyson, Lotos Eaters.

4. Feeble; sickly; puny. Forby; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.] = Syn. Disgusted, wearisome. See weary[1], v.

weary[1] (wēr'i), v.; pret. and pp. wearied, ppr. wearying. [< ME. werien, < AS. wērigan, gewērigan, weary, fatigue, < wērig, weary: see weary[1], a.] I. trans. 1. To make weary; reduce or exhaust the physical strength or endurance of; fatigue; tire: as, to weary one's self with striving.

The people shall weary themselves for very vanity.
Hab. ii. 13.

They in the practice of their religion wearied chiefly their knees and hands, we especially our ears and tongues.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

2. To exhaust the endurance, patience, or resistance of, as by persistence or importunity.

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 94.

I have even wearied heaven with prayers.
Ford, 'Tis Pity, i. 3.

Watchful I'll guard thee, and with Midnight Pray'r Weary the Gods to keep thee in their Care.
Prior, Henry and Emma.

To weary out. (a) To exhaust or subdue by something fatiguing or irksome.

Like an Egyptian Tyrant, some Thou wearyest out in building but a Tomb.
Cowley, The Mistress, Thraldom.

She surceased not, day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd and wearied out.
Milton, S. A., l. 466.

(b) To pass wearily. [Rare.]

The land of Italy
There will I wale, and weary out my dayes in wo.
The Merchant's Farewhile (Child's Ballads, IV. 329).

= Syn. 1. Fatigue, Jade, etc. See tire[1].

II. intrans. 1. To become weary, tired, or fatigued.

She was nae ton miles frae the town,
When she began to weary.
Lizie Baillie (Child's Ballads, IV. 74).

2. To become impatient or surfeited, as with the continuance of something that is monotonous, irksome, or distasteful.

Sing the simple passage o'er and o'er
For all an April morning, till the ear
Wearies to hear it.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. To long; languish: with for before the object.

The pair took home schoolboy meals in paper-bags, consisting upon buns and canned meats, and wearying for the taste of a hot broiled steak. The Century, XXXVII. 775.

weary[2] (wēr'i), n. [< weary*[2], v., var. of wary[2], curse: see wary[2].] A curse: used now only in the phrases Weary fa' you! Weary on you! and the like. Scott. [Scotch.]

weasand (wē'zand), n. [Also weazand, and formerly weasand, we.and, also dial. wezen, wizen, wizz.n, and wosen; < ME. wesand, wesande, wasande, wesaunt, < AS. wāsend, also wasend (> E. dial. wosen) = OFries. wasende, wasande, weasand, windpipe, = OHG. wesant, MHG. wesant (E. Müller), weasand; cf. G. dial. (Bav.) wasel, wasl, wadung, the gullet of ruminating animals. The word (AS. wasend) has the form of a present participle, and some have attempted to connect it with wheeze; this involves the assumption that the rare AS. verb hwēsan (pret. hwēow), wheeze, = Icel. hvæsa, hiss, = Dan. hvæse, hiss, whence wheeze (not found in OHG., etc.), gave rise to a noun hwesend*, varying to hwæsend*, hwæsand*, meaning 'the wheezing thing,' that this name was applied to all windpipes (most of which never wheeze), and that subsequently the initial consonant in hw- fell away, a phenomenon wholly unknown in other AS. words in hw-, and not recognized even in mod. English except in dialectal use.] The windpipe; the pipe or tube through which air passes to and from the lungs in respiration; the trachea. See trachea and larynx.

Should I have named him? Nay, they should as soon have this weasand of mine.
Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI. 1549.

Had his weasand been a little wider
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

Give me a razor there, that I may scrape his weasand, that the lunatics may not hinder me when I come to cut it.
Dryden, The Mock Astrologer, v. 1.

You may have a pot of porter, or two; but neither wine nor spirits shall wet your wizen this night, Tickler.
Noctes Ambrosianæ, Feb., 1832.

wease-allan (wēz'al'an), n. See weese-allen.

weasel (we'zl), n. [Formerly also weazel, wezel; < ME. wesel, wesele, wesle, wezele, < AS. wesle = D. wesel, wezel (dim. wezelke, wezeltje) = OHG. wisala, MHG. wisel, wisele, G. wiesel = Icel. visla (in comp. hreysi-visla) = Sw. vesla, vessla = Dan. vesel, a weasel; origin uncertain.] 1. A small carnivorous digitigrade mammal of the restricted genus Putorius, of the family Mustelidæ, related to the stoat or ermine, ferret, and polecat of the same genus, and less intimately to the marten or sable of the genus Mustela of the same family. The species to which the name is most frequently or especially applied is P. vulgaris, the common weasel of Europe and of most of the cold and temperate parts of the northern hemisphere, distinguished by the comparative length and extreme slenderness of the body, and very small size, being only some 6 or 8 inches long, with a tail of 2 inches in length, or less; the color is reddish-brown above, and white below; the tail is of the same color as the body, and not tipped with black. In northerly regions it turns white in winter, like the ermine. It feeds on rats, mice, moles, shrews, small birds and their eggs, and insects; and, though itself classed as vermin by gamekeepers, it is often serviceable as a destroyer of vermin in ricks, barns, and granaries. Its small size and lithe, sinuous body enabling it to penetrate almost everywhere. Its cunning and wariness are proverbial in the expression to catch a weasel asleep – that is, to do an extremely difficult thing by strategy, finesse, or unexpected action. Other species of Putorius, properly called weasels, inhabit most parts of the world, and the name has loosely attached to various animals of different families, some of which applications are noted in phrases below.

Common Weasel (Putorius vulgaris).

Fair was this yonge wyf, and therwithal
As any wezele hir body gent and smal.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 48.

A weasel tame have sum men ther that crepe, Hem forto take.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 109.

I can suck melancholy out of a song as a weasel sucks eggs.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 5. 13.

2†. The weasel-coot. — 3. A lean, mean, sneaking, greedy fellow.

The weasel Scot
Comes scathing and so sticks her princely eggs.
Sir J. Hen. V., i. 2. 170.

Four-toed weasel, the African genik or surieate, a viverrine, formerly Rhyzæna tetradactyla. See cut under surieate. Malacca weasel. Same as rasse. See cut under Viverrinæ. Mexican weasel. Same as hidrajon (which see with cut). Pouched weasel. See pouched, and cut under Phascogale.

weasel-cat (we'zl kat), n. The linsang, Prionodon gracilis. See cut under delundung.

weasel-coot (we'zl kōt), n. The so-called red-headed smew. This is the female or young male of Mergellus albellus (the adult male of which is figured under smew). The implication of the term weasel appears to be the muzzeline or foxy color of the head. An old name of this or a similar merganser was Mergus mustelinus, and one used by Sir T. Browne was Mustela merganser. The same adjective with the same meaning occurs in Turdus mustelinus, the present name of the wood-thrush of the United States and in several other specific designations of animals, as in Lepidemur mustelinus, the weasel-lemur. Compare weasel.

weasel-duck (we'zl-duk), n. Same as weasel-coot.

weasel-faced (we'zl-fast), a. Having a thin, sharp face like a weasel's. Steele.

weasel-fish (we'zl-fish), n. The three-bearded rockling, or whistle-fish. See whistle-fish.

weasel-lemur (we'zl-lē'mėr), n. A small lemur, Lepidemur mustelinus.

weaselling†, n. [Also weazelling; < weasel + -ling[1].] A kind of rockling, probably the five-bearded, Motella mustela.

weaselmonger† (we'zl-mung'gėr), n. A rat-catcher; one who hunts rats, etc., with weasels.

This weaselmonger, who is no better than a cat to a house, or a ferret in a conygar [rabbit-burrow].
Peele, Speeches to Queen Elizabeth at Theobalds, ii.

weasel-snout (we'zl-snout), n. The yellow dead-nettle, Lamium Galeobdolon so called from the shape of the corolla. See Galeobdolon.

weasel-spider (we'zl-spī'dėr), n. A book-name of any arachnidan of the family Galeodidæ. See cut under Solpugida.

weaser (wē'zėr), n. [Cf. weasel-coot.] The American merganser or sheldrake, Mergus americanus. J. P. Giraud, 1844; G. Trumbull, 1888. Also wheaser and weezer. [Long Island.]

weasiness† (wē'zi-nes), n. The state or condition of being weasy. Jage.

weasy† (wē'zi), a. [Appar. for wazy*, a dial. var. of woozy, an earlier form of oozy (like worse, woon, for oozy).] Gluttonous; sensual. Jage.

weather (weтн'ėr), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also wether; with alteration of orig. d to th (as also in father, mother, prob. under Scand. influence; cf. Icel. veðr). < ME. weder, wedhr, < AS. weder, weather, wind, = OS. wedar, weder = OFries. weder = D. weder, contracted weer = OHG. wetar, MHG. wetr, G. wetter (cf. also G. gewitter, a storm) = Icel. veðr = Sw. väder, wind, air, weather, = Dan. vejr, weather, wind, air (not found in Goth.). Cf. OBulg. vedro, good weather, vedrŭ, bright, clear; cf. also OBulg. vietrŭ, air, wind; akin to wind, from the root of Goth. waian, Skt. √ vā, blow: see *wind*².] I. n. 1†. Wind; storm; tempest.

Now welcome somer, with thy sunne softe,
That hast this wintres weders overshake.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 680.

Are the wynde was in the sayle,
Ovyr lond a they flet withowtyn fayle,
The wethur then forth gan sweps.
Le Bone Florence (Kitson's Metr. Rom., III.).

What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud
My thoughts presage! Dryden, Æneid, v. 10.

2†. Cold and wet.

Seynge this byshop with his company syttyng in the weder, desyred hym to his howse. Fabyan, Chron., lxxxiii.

And, if two Boots keep out the Weather,
What need you have two Hides of Leather?
Prior, Alma, iii.

3†. A light rain; a shower. Wyclif, Deut. xxxii. 2.—4. The state of the air or atmosphere with respect to its cloudiness, humidity, motions, pressure, temperature, electrical condition, or any other meteorological phenomena; the atmospheric conditions prevailing at any moment over any region of the earth: as, warm or cold weather; wet or dry weather; calm or stormy weather; fair or foul weather; cloudy or hazy weather. The investigation of the various causes which determine the state of the atmosphere and produce the changes which are incessantly taking place in its condition forms the subject of meteorology. The average condition of the weather for a considerable period constitutes climate, and the statistical compilation of meteorological observations forms the basis of climatology.

Men may see the Wales when it is fayr Wedre and cleer. Mandeville, Travels, p. 101.

A Lorde, what the wedir is cobbe!
The fellest freese that ever I felyd.
York Plays, p. 114.

Thay . . . wolde ride in the colde of the morwnynge that was faire and stille and a softe weder, and thei were yonge and tender to suffre grete travayle.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 191.

Gentlewoman, the weather's hot; whither walk you?
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 1.

Horrible weather again to day, snowing and raining all day. Sydney Smith, To Mrs. Sydney Smith.

5. Specifically, in weather maps and -reports, the condition of the sky as to cloudiness and the occurrence of precipitation.—6. Change of the state of the atmosphere; meteorological change; hence, figuratively, vicissitude; change of fortune or condition.

It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle . . . not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient noble family which hath stood against the waves and weather of time! Bacon, Nobility.

But my Substantial Love
Of a more firm and perfect Nature is,
No Weather can it move.
Cowley, The Mistress, Coldness.

7. The inclination or obliquity of the sails of a windmill to the plane of revolution. Angle of weather. See *angle*¹. Clerk of the weather. See clerk. Merry weather†. See merry. Soft weather (a) A thaw. [New Eng.] (b) An enervating atmosphere. —To make fair weather†, to conciliate or flatter, as by fair words and shows of friendship.

I must make fair weather yet awhile,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., v. 1. 30.

To make good or bad weather (naut.). See make. Under the weather, indisposed, ill; ailing; a condition caused or influenced by the state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Since I went to Washington and until within ten days, I have been quite under the weather and I have had to neglect everything. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 19.

Weather Bureau, a bureau of the Department of Agriculture, having charge of the forecasting of weather, the issue of storm, cold wave, frost, and flood warnings, the gaging and reporting of rivers, the maintenance of seacoast telegraph lines, the collection and transmission of marine intelligence for the benefit of commerce and navigation, the taking of meteorological observations for establishing the climatic conditions of the United States, and the distribution of meteorological information for the benefit of agriculture and commerce. From 1871 to 1891 these duties were performed by the signal service of the army.

II. a. Naut., toward the wind; windward: opposed to lee: as, weather bow, weather beam; weather rigging. Weather anchor, the anchor, lying to windward, by which a ship rides when moored. Weather helm, quarter, tide. See the nouns.

weather (weтн'ėr), v. [< ME. wederen, < AS. wederian, weðrian, expose to the air, indicate the weather; cf. AS. ā-dwinan = Sw. vädra, expose to the air, air, scent, smell, snuff the air, = Dan. vejre, air, scent; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To air; expose to the air, dry or otherwise affect by exposure to the open air. [Rare.]

I fear me this land is not yet ripe to be ploughed (as the saying is, it lacketh weathering).
Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

And then he pearcheth on some branch thereby,
To weather him, and his moyst wings to dry.
Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 134.

All barleys that have been weathered in the field, or have got snow-burnt or musty in the stack, should be rigidly rejected. Ure, Dict., III. 135.

Hawks are weathered by being placed unhooded in the open air. This term is applied to passage hawks which are not sufficiently reclaimed to be left out by themselves unhooded on blocks—they are weathered by being put out for an hour or two under the falconer's eye.
Encyc. Brit., IX. 7.

2. To affect injuriously by the action of weather; in geol., to discolor or disintegrate: as, the atmospheric agencies that weather rocks. —3. In tile-manuf., to expose (the clay) to a hot sun or to frost, in order to open the pores and separate the particles, that it may readily absorb water and be easily worked.—4. To slope (a surface), that it may shed water.—5. Naut.: (a) To sail to windward of: as, to weather a point or cape.

We weathered Palo Pare on the 25th, and stood in for the main. Cook, First Voyage, iii. 13.

(b) To bear up against and come safely through: said of a ship in a storm, as also of a mariner; hence, used in the same sense with reference to storms on land.

Here's to the pilot that weathered the storm. Canning.

Among these hills, from first to last,
We've weathered many a furious blast.
Wordsworth, The Waggoner, ii.

I weathered some wintry snow-storms.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 275.

To sell the boat—and yet he loved her well;
How many a rough sea had he weather'd in her!
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

6. Figuratively, to bear up against and overcome, as trouble or danger; come out of, as a trial, without permanent damage or loss.

You will weather the difficulties yet. F. W. Robertson.

The vitality and self-direction of the semi-Greek municipalities of the East in large measure weathered Roman rule, as did also the Greek speech and partially Hellenized life of Asia, Syria, and Egypt. W. Wilson, State, § 1143.

To weather a point, to gain an advantage or accomplish a purpose against opposition. To weather out, to hold out against to the end.

When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us.
Addison, Cato, iii. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To suffer a change, such as discoloration or more or less complete disintegration, in consequence of exposure to the weather or atmosphere. See weathering, 2.

The lowest bed is a sandstone with ferruginous veins, it weathers into an extraordinary honey-combed mass.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, II. 426.

The granite commenced to weather, and weathered merrily on in spite of all technical and scientific commissions. Science, VII. 70.

2. To resist or bear exposure to the weather.

For outside work boiled oil is used, because it weathers better than raw oil. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 430.

weather-beaten (weтн'ėr-bē'tn), a. [< weather + beaten. In some of its uses perhaps a perverted spelling of weather-bitten, q. v.] Beaten or marred by the weather; seasoned or hardened by exposure to all kinds of weather: as, a weather-beaten sailor.

She enjoyes sure peace for evermore,
As weather-beat a ship arryv'd on happie shore.
Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 2.

Summer being ended, all things stand in appearance with a weather-beaten face.
W. Wood, New England's Memorial, p. 35.

The weather-beat veteran of the scout.
J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxiv.

weather-bitt (weтн'ėr-bit), v. t. To take an extra turn of (a cable) about the bitts or the end of the windlass in bad weather.

weather-bitten (weтн'ėr-bit'n), a. [= Sw. väder-bitten = Norw. veder-bitten = Dan. vejrbidt, weather bitten; as weather + bitten. Cf. Norw. vederslitten, weather-slit, weather-worn. Cf. weather-beaten.] Worn, marred, or defaced by exposure to the weather.

The old shepherd . . . stands by, like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings' reigns. Shak., W. T., v. 2. 60.

weather-blown (weтн'ėr-blōn), a. Weather-beaten; weather-stained. Chapman, Iliad, ii. 532.

weather-board (weтн'ėr-bord), n. [= Icel. vetrborth, the windward side; as weather + board.] 1. Naut.: (a) That side of a ship which is toward the wind; the windward side. (b) A piece of plank placed in a ship's port when she is laid upon ordinary, inclined so as to turn off rain without preventing the circulation of air.—2. A board used in weather-boarding.

weather-board (weтн'ėr-bord), v. t. [< weather-board, n.] To nail boards upon, as a roof or wall, lapping one over another, so as to turn off rain, snow, etc.

It was a building of four rooms, constructed of hewn logs and weather-boarded at the joints.
The Century, XXXVIII. 668.

weather-boarding (weтн'ėr-bōr'ding), n. 1. A facing of thin boards, having usually a feather-edge, and nailed lapping one over another, used as an outside covering for the walls of a wooden building. They are practically the same as clapboards, but are distinguished from those by being larger and wider.—2. The finish or woodwork at the base of a clapboarded wall.—3. The whole exterior covering of a wall or roof, whether of weather-boards, clapboards, or shingles.—Weather-boarding clamp, gage, saw, etc., special forms of clamp, gage, saw, etc., used in applying or cutting out weather-boarding.

weather-bound (weтн'ėr-bound), a. Delayed by bad weather.

weather-box (weтн'ėr-boks), n. A form of hygroscope, in the shape of a toy-house, which roughly indicates weather changes by the appearance or retirement of toy images. In a common form a man advances from his porch in wet and a woman in dry weather—the movement being produced by the varying torsion of a hygroscopic string by which the images are attached. Also called weather-house.

The elder and younger son of the house of Crawley were, like the gentleman and lady in the weather box, never at home together. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, x.

weather-breeder (weтн'ėr-brē'dėr), n. A fine serene day which precedes and prepares a storm.

"It's a beautiful day," said Whittaker . . . "Yes, nice day, growled Adams, "but a weather breeder."
E. Eggleston, Roxy, xiii.

weather-cast (weтн'ėr-kast), n. A forecast of the weather. [Rare.]

Admiral FitzRoy, in 1860, was enabled, aided by the electric telegraph, to inaugurate a system of storm-warnings and weather-casts.
R. Strachan, in Modern Meteorology, p. 84.

weather-caster (weтн'ėr-kas'tėr), n. One who computes the weather for almanacs. Halliwell.

weather-cloth (weтн'ėr-klôth), n. Naut.: (a) A covering of painted canvas for hammocks, boats, etc. (b) A tarpaulin placed in the weather rigging to make a shelter for officers and men on watch.

weathercock (weтн'ėr-kok), n. [< ME. wedercok, wedycok, weddycok, wedercoc, so called because the figure of a cock, as an emblem of vigilance, has from a very early time been a favorite form for vanes; cf. D. weerhaan = Sw. väderhane = Dan. vejrhane, a weathercock, etc. (D. haan, etc., a cock).] 1. A vane or weather-vane; a pointing device, set on the top of a spire or other elevation, and turning with the wind, thus showing its direction. See cut under vane.

O! yet unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weather-cock on a steeple!
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 1. 142.

They are Men whose Conditions are subject to more Revolutions than a Weather Cock, or the Uncertain Mind of a Fantastical Woman. Ward, London Spy.

His head . . . looked like a weather-cock, perched upon his spindle neck to tell which way the wind blew.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 420.

2. Figuratively, any thing or person that is easily and frequently turned or swayed; a fickle or inconstant person.

What pretty weathercocks these women are!
Randolph, Amyntas, i. 1.

The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's, that weather-cock of state.
Dryden, Conquest of Granada, I., iii. 1.

weathercock (weтн'ėr-kok), v. t. [< weather-cock, n.] To serve as a weathercock to or on. [Rare.]

Whose blazing wyvern weathercock'd the spire.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

weather-contact (weтн'ėr-kon'takt), n. In telg., leakage to neighboring wires or to earth, due to wet insulators.

weather-cross (weтн'ėr-krôs), n. In telegraph- and telephone-lines, a leakage from one line to another, caused by poor insulation, and brought about by wet or stormy weather.

weather-dog (weтн'ėr-dog), n. A fragmentary rainbow, popularly believed, especially in Cornwall, to be an indication of rain. [Prov. Eng.]

weather-driven (weтн'ėr-driv'n), a. [= Sw. väderdriven, wind-driven: as weather + driven.] Driven by winds or storms; forced by stress of weather.

weathered (weтн'ėrd), p. a. 1. Discolored or disintegrated by the action of the elements;

...ces of surfaces of wood, but often ... rocks. Trees which show signs of having ... from exposure to the weather, as many old ones do, are sometimes said to be weather-beaten, but rarely, if ever, to be weathered. See weathering, 2.

The beds of stratification . . . can be distinguished in many places, especially in Navarin Island, but only on the weathered surfaces of the slate.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, II. 448.

The force of the wind is such as actually to loosen the weathered parts of the rock and dislodge them.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii.

2. Seasoned by exposure to the air or the weather.—3. In arch., having a slope or inclination to prevent the lodgment of water: noting surfaces approximately or theoretically horizontal, as those of window-sills, the tops of cornices, and the upper surface of flat stone-work.

weather-eye (weтн'ėr-i), n. The eye imagined to be specially used for the purpose of observing the sky in order to forecast the weather.—To keep one's weather-eye open or awake, to be on one's guard; have one's wits about one. [Colloq.]

Keep your weather eye awake, and don't make any more acquaintances, however handsome.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, ii. 5.

weather-fend (weтн'ėr-fend), v. t. [< weather + fend[1].] To shelter; defend from the weather. [Rare.]

The line grove which weather-fends your cell.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 10.

weather-fish (weтн'ėr-fish), n. The mud-fish, thunder-fish, or misgurn of Europe, Misgurnus fossilis: regarded as a weather-prophet because it is supposed to come out of the mud, in which it habitually burrows, before a storm.

weather-gage (weтн'ėr-gāj), n. 1. Naut., the advantage of the wind; the position of a ship when she is to windward of another ship: opposed to lee-gage.

A ship is said to have the weather gage of another when she is at the windward of her.
Admiral Smyth.

Hence—2. Advantage of position; the upper hand.

Were the line
Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
I gain the weather-gage of fate!
Scott, Rokeby, vi 24.

To dispute the weather-gage. See dispute.

weather-gall (weтн'ėr-gâl), n. Same as water-gall, 2.

weather-glass (weтн'ėr glâs), n. [= D. weer glas = Sw. vaderglas = Dan. værglas, barometer; as weather + glass.] An instrument designed to indicate the state of the atmosphere. This word is commonly applied to the barometer, but also to other instruments for measuring atmospheric changes and indicating the state of the weather, as the thermometer and various kinds of hygroscopes.

The King of Spain's health is the Weather-glass upon which all our politicians look, as that rises or falls, we look pleasant or uneasy.
Prior (Ellis's Lit Letters, p 265).

Shepherd's or poor man's weather-glass. See shepherd.

weather-gleam (weтн'ėr glēm), n. A peculiar appearance of clear sky near the horizon. [Prov. Eng.]

You have marked the lightning of the sky just above the horizon when clouds are about to break up and disappear. Whatever name you gave it, you would hardly improve on that of the weather-gleam, which in some of our dialects it bears.
Trench. (Imp. Dict.)

weather-hardened (weтн'ėr-här'dnd), a. Hardened by the weather; weather-beaten.

A countenance which, weather hardened as it was, might have given the painter a model for a Patriarch.
Southey, The Doctor, ix.

weather-head (weтн'ėr-hed), n. 1. A secondary rainbow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Stripes of cirrus cloud. [Scotch.]

weather-headed† (weтн'ėr hed'ed), a. Same as weather-headed.

Sir, is this usage for your son?—for that old weather headed fool, I know how to laugh at him, but you, Sir Congreve, Love for Love, II 7. (Davies.)

weather-house (weтн'ėr-hous), n. Same as weather-box. Cowper, Task, ii. 211.

weathering (weтн'ėr-ing), n. [< ME. wederyng; verbal n. of weather, v.] 1†. Weather, especially favorable or fair weather.

For alle trewe shipmen, and trewe pilgrymes, yat thrild for his grace yeue hem wederyng and passage, yat yei mowen sauely commen and gone.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p 23.

Which would have bene, with the weathering which we had, ten or twelve dayes worke.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III 515.

2. In geol., etc., the action of the elements in changing the color, texture, or composition of rock, in rounding off its edges, or gradually disintegrating it. The first effect of the weathering of rock-surfaces is discoloration. This arises in part from dust or dirt finding its way into the fissures, and is most quickly seen in large cities where much coal is burned. Discoloration often arises from the oxidation of some sulphur compound which the rock contains, and especially of iron pyrites, which is a widely disseminated mineral. Another very perceptible effect of weathering is the loss of the luster which many rock-constituents naturally have. This is particularly conspicuous in the case of feldspar, and is the result of incipient decomposition and hydration. Rounding of the edges of angular projections of the rock, or of its constituents, is another result of weathering, the decomposed minerals being more easily removed by the action of water than they were before decomposition. Weathering is a preliminary to erosion, but the rapidity with which these operations are carried on varies greatly with the nature of the rock and the climatic and other conditions to which it is subjected.

Many of them (nodules of various kinds) are, also, externally marked in the same direction with parallel ridges and furrows which have not been produced by weathering.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, i. 75.

3. In arch., a slight inclination given to an approximately horizontal surface to enable it to throw off water.

weathering-stock† (weтн'ėr-ing-stok), n. A post to which hawks are leashed in such a manner as to allow them limited exercise. See last quotation under weather, v. t., 1.

E'en like the hawk (whose keeper's wary hands Have made a prisoner to her weath'ring stock).
Quarles, Emblems, V. ix. 5.

weatherliness (weтн'ėr-li-nes), n. 1. Weatherly character or qualities: said of ships and boats.

To combine the speed of the ordinary type of American sloop with the weatherliness of the English cutter.
Science, VI. 168.

2. Naut., the state of a vessel as to her capacity to ply speedily and quickly to windward.

weatherly (weтн'ėr-li), a. [< weather + -ly[1].] Naut., making very little leeway when close-hauled, even in a stiff breeze and heavy sea: noting a ship or boat.

Notwithstanding her weatherly qualities, the heavy cross sea, as she drove into it headed her off bodily.
M. Scott, Tom Cringle's Log, viii.

weather-map (weтн'ėr-map), n. A map showing the temperature, pressure, wind, weather, and other meteorological elements over an extensive region, compiled from simultaneous observations at a large number of stations. The pressure is represented by isobars, the temperature by isotherms, the wind by arrows, and the weather by differently shaded circles or other conventional symbols. Weather maps prepared once or twice daily, form the basis upon which every government weather service forecasts the weather and issues storm-warning.

weather-molding (weтн'ėr-mol'ding), n. Same as drip-stone 1.

weathermost (weтн'ėr-mōst), a. superl. [< weather + -most.] Furthest to windward.

weather-notation (weтн'ėr-nō-tā'shon), n. A system of abbreviation for the principal meteorological phenomena. Beaufort's weather notation, which is used in Great Britain is as follows: b, blue sky, white clear or hazy, c, clouds (detached); d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, a very gloomy, h, hail, l, lightning; m, mist; o, overcast, p, passing, temporary showers, q, squally; r, rain, s, snow, t, thunder, u, ugly, threatening weather, w, dew.

weather-plant (weтн'ėr plant), n. The Indian bean tree, Abrus precatorius: so named in view of an alleged property of indicating the weather in advance. It is a common tropical twining shrub (see Abrus), having pinnate leaves with from 20 to 40 small leaflets. Recent careful observations show that the pairs of leaflets fold together more or less as the light is stronger or weaker, the movement being less vigorous in a moister atmosphere, that a certain wrinkling of the surface coexists with a coloring of the margin likely to be due to the attacks of an insect, and that the movement of the pairs, supposed to be barometric, is a diurnal oscillation which varies in extent with the amount of light. The temperature also affects the freedom of these motions. These characteristics are all paralleled in other plants, especially of the Leguminosæ. As a means of foreseeing, the plant is not likely to be of practical worth.

weather-proof (weтн'ėr-prōf), a. Proof against rough weather.

Lord, thou hast given me a cell
Wherein to dwell,
A little house, whose humble roof
Is weather proof
Herrick, A Thanksgiving to God for his House.

There were only two persons at the conference meeting last night, and seven of them were women, besides many weather proof Christians there are in the parish.
C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 72.

weather-prophet (weтн'ėr prof'et), n. [= Dan. vejr-profet; as weather + prophet.] 1. One who foretells weather; one skilled in foreseeing the changes or state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Who that has read Greek does not know the humour with which the meteorological theories of the Athenian weather-prophets are ridiculed by Aristophanes in "The Clouds"?
R. H. Scott, in Modern Meteorology, p. 166.

2. Anything in nature which serves as an indicator of weather changes, as a bird whose regular periodicity of migration or suddenness of appearance may indicate meteorological changes unappreciable by man.

Swallows have long been held for weather prophets, and with reason enough in the quick response of their organization to the influence of atmospheric changes.
Coues, Birds of the Colorado Valley (1878), I. 378.

3. A device for foretelling changes in the weather. In most forms materials are employed which are so affected by dampness as to move some indicatory, as a pair of figures of which one appears or advances in dry and the other in wet weather. Other forms employ materials which change color according to the state of the atmosphere. Compare weather-box.

weather-report (weтн'ėr re-port'), n. A daily report of meteorological observations and of probable changes in the weather, especially one issued by a weather service. [Colloq.]

weather-roll (weтн'ėr rōl), n. The roll of a ship to windward, in a heavy sea on the beam: opposed to lee lurch.

weather-service (weтн'ėr-sėr'vis), n. An institution organized for taking meteorological observations in accordance with a systematic plan, and for utilizing the data thus collected by forecasting the weather, issuing warnings of storms and floods, publishing climatological tables, distributing information as to the effect of the weather on growing crops, and by allied services. All the principal governments of the world now maintain a weather-service, upon which a part or all of these duties are imposed. In the United States an annual appropriation of nearly a million dollars is made to the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, which is charged with performing these services. In addition to the Weather Bureau, and cooperating with it, there is organized in nearly every State a State weather-service, composed of voluntary observers whose work is directed toward giving information upon the condition of the crops as affected by the weather, and in general toward extending knowledge of local climatology.

weather-shore (weтн'ėr-shor), n. The shore from which the wind blows

[The wind] set so violently as rais'd on the sudden so greate a sea that we could not recover the weather-shore, for many houres.
Evelyn, Diary, Oct 11, 1644.

weather-sign (weтн'ėr-sin), n. Any phenomenon or sensation indicating state or change of weather; hence, generally, any prognostic or sign.

I am not old for nothing; I can tell
The weather signs of love, you love this man.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, ii.

weather spy (weтн'ėr spī), n. One who foretells the weather; a weather prophet. Donne. [Rare.]

weather-stain (weтн'ėr-stān), n. [< weather + stain.] A stain or discoloration left or produced by the weather or by weathering.

Walls must get the weather stain
Before they grow the ivy.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, viii.

He felt that the shape and colour of every roof and weather stain and broken hillock was good, because his growing senses had been fed on them.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, III. 9.

With weather-stains upon the wall,
And stairways worn, and crazy doors.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

weather-stained (weтн'ėr-stānd), a. Stained or discolored by the weather. See weathering, 2.

A tomb somewhat weather stained.
Longfellow.

weather-station (weтн'ėr-stā'shon), n. A station where daily meteorological observations are made and reported to a central office; one of the stations of a weather service.

weather-strip (weтн'ėr-strip), n. A slender strip of some material intended to keep out wind and cold; originally, a strip of wood covered with soft material, as list or cloth; specifically, a contrivance by which a strip of india-rubber is adjusted closely to the apertures of a door or window or its frame or pasch, covering the crevice very tightly; it is generally a wooden molding into which a thin strip of rubber is fitted.

weather-strip (weтн'ėr-strip), v. t.; pret. and pp. weather-stripped, ppr. weather-stripping. To apply weather strips to, fit or secure with weather strips.

weather-symbol (weтн'ėr sim'bol), n. A conventional sign used in meteorological records, or in published meteorological observations or weather-maps, to represent graphically any designated phenomenon. The following symbols have been adopted by the International Meteorological Congress to represent the principal hydrometeors and a few other phenomena: Rain, ●; snow, ✳, thunderstorm, ↯; lightning, ⚡; hail, ▲; mist, ≡; frost, ⁂; dew, ∴; snowdrift, ⊢; high wind, ≀; solar corona, ◎; solar halo, ⊙; lunar corona, ☽; lunar halo, ☽; rainbow, ⌒; aurora, ≈; haze, dust haze, ∞.

weather-tile (weтн'ėr-til), n. A tile used as a substitute for a weather-board in frame-buildings. These tiles are overlapped like shingles, and are held in place by nails driven through holes formed in the tiles in nailing.

weather-vane (weтн'ėr-vān), n. A vane to show the direction of the wind; a weather-cock. See cut under cane.

weather-waft (weтн'ėr-waft), a. Tossed or carried by the wind. [Rare.]

I cannot but feare that those men never Moored their Anchors well in the firme soile of Heaven that are weather waft up and down with every eddy wind of every new doctrine. N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 20.

weather-wind (weтн'ėr-wind), n. [A corruption of withywind for withwind.] Bindweed. Halliwell. [Provincial.] weather-wise (weтн'ėr-wiz), a. [< ME. weder-wis; < weather + *wise*1.] Skilful in prognosticating the changes of the weather.

For thorw werre and wykked werkes and wederes vnresonable, Wederwise shipmen and witti clerkes also Han no bilieue to the lifte ne to the lore of philosofres.
Piers Ploughman (B), xv. 350.

weather-wiser† (weтн'ėr-wī'zėr), n. [< weather + wiser*, indicator; cf. waywiser.] Something that foretells the changes of the weather.

The flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weather-wiser.
Derham, Physico-Theol., v., note.

weather-work (weтн'ėr-werk), n. Defense or provision against the wind, sea, etc. Cook, Voyages, III. i. 3. (Encyc. Dict.) weather-worn (weтн'ėr-wôrn), a. [< weather + worn.] Worn, injured, or defaced by the action of the weather; weathered.

weather-wreck (weтн'ėr-rek), n. A wreck by storms. [Rare.]

Well, well, you have built a nest
That will stand all storms, you need not mistrust
A weather-wreck.
Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, ii. 2.

weave1 (wēv), v.; pret. wove (formerly also weaved), pp. woven (sometimes wove and formerly also weaved), ppr. weaving. [< ME. weven (pret. waf, wef, pl. weven, woven, pp. woven), < AS. wefan (pret. wæf, pp. wefen) = MD. D. weven = OHG. weban, MHG. G. weben = Icel. vefa = Sw. väfva = Dan. væve, weave (connection with Goth. bi-wahjan, wrap around, is doubtful), = Gr. √ ὑφ (orig. √ ϝεφ), in ὑφή, ὕφος, a web, ὑφαίνειν, weave; cf. Skt. ūrṇa-nābhi, a spider, lit. 'wool-weaver,' Skt. √ vā, weave, also Lith. voras, a spinner, spider. From the root of *weave*1 are ult. E. web, *weft*1, woof, oof, ahb, etc.] I. trans. 1. To form by interlacing flexible parts, such as threads, yarns, filaments, or strips of different materials. See weaving.

Where the women wove hangings for the grove.
2 Ki. xxiii. 7.

And now his woven girths he breaks asunder.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 706.

To wanton Dalliance negligently laid,
We weave the Chaplet, and we crown the Bowl.
Prior, Solomon, ii.

These purple vests were wearied by Dardan dames.
Dryden.

2. To form a texture from; interlace or entwine into a fabric.

When she weaved the sleided silk Shak. Pericles, iv., Prol., l. 21.

3. To entwine; unite by intermixture or close connection; insert by or as by weaving.

She wof it wel, and wroot the story above.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2564.

This weaves itself perforce into my business.
Shak., Lear, ii. 1. 15.

The government of Episcopacy is now so weaved into the common Law: In Gods name let weave out againe.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

These words, thus woven into song.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 112.

He carries off only such scraps in his memory as it is hardly possible to weave into a connected and consistent whole. Prescott. (Imp. Dict.)

4. To inclose by weaving something about.

The mind can weave itself warmly in the cocoon of its own thoughts and dwell a hermit anywhere.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 56.

5. To contrive, fabricate, or construct with design or elaborate care; as, to weave a plot.

For answer Aeschylus weaveth out a long history of things that happened in the persecution under Dionysius, and of men which to save life lost not faith.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 6.

My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 340.

Wove paper. See paper.

II. intrans. 1. To practise weaving; work with a loom.

Proclaim that I can sing, weave, [illegible]
Shak., Pericles, iv. 6. 194.

They that pretend to wonders must weave cunningly.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, ii. 1.

2. To become woven or interwoven. [Rare.]

The amorous vine which in the elm still weaves.
W. Browne.

3. In the manège, to make a motion of the head, neck, and body from side to side like the shuttle of a weaver: said of a horse. Imp. Dict.

weave1 (wēv), n. [< *weave*1, v.] The act or a style of weaving. [Trade use.]

A Practical Treatise on the Construction and Application of weaves for all Textile Fabrics. Nature, XXXVIII. 609.

The great difference between a twill and a plain, or between a plain and a satin weave. Fibre and Fabric, V. 15.

weave2†, v. [Also weve; < ME. woven (pret. wevede, wefde, pp. weved), < AS. wīfan* (in comp. be-wīfan, wrap around, clothe, = OHG. ze-weban = Goth. bi-wahjan, wrap around, cover, mixed with the appar. cognate Icel. vefja, shake, vibrate, wave: see *waver*1.] I. trans. 1. To shake; cause to waver; wave; brandish; toss; waft.

Auntrose (dangerous) is thin cuel,
Ful wonderlic he it the weues, wel I wot the sothe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 922.

Shaking a pike of five in defiance of the enemie, and weaving them amaine, we had them come aboord.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 556.

2. To move; cause to move.

That condi ladi cayres to hire chaumber, & weued vp a window.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2978.

II. intrans. 1. To wave; waver; float about.

To cold colos sche schal be brent 3it or come eue,
& the nachis of hire body with the wind weue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4398.

2. To move; go.

Thou wylne ouer thys water to weue.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 319.

He saugh the stroke come and weved a side.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 389.

weavelt, n. See weevil.

weaver (wē'vėr), n. [< ME. weevere, wevar, < AS. wefere* = MD. D. wever = OHG. webari, MHG. webære, G. weber = Sw. väfvare = Dan. væver, a weaver; as *weave*1 + *-er*1. Cf. webber.] 1. One who weaves; one whose occupation is weaving.

Weavers also of wolne and lynnyn.
Quoted in Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xlvii.

Weavers were supposed to be generally good singers. Their trade being sedentary, they had an opportunity of practising, and sometimes in parts, while they were at work. Warburton adds that many of the weavers in Queen Elizabeth's days were Flemish Calvinists, who fled from the persecution of the Duke of Alva, and were therefore particularly given to singing psalms. . . . Hence the exclamation of Falstaff: "I would I were a weaver! I could sing psalms, and all manner of songs." Nares.

2. In ornith., a weaver-bird. — 3. In entom.: (a) A gyrinid beetle; a whirligig: so called from its intricate circlings and gyrations on the surface of the water. See whirligig, 4, and cut under Gyrinus. (b) A spinning-spider; a true araneid which weaves a web. Various groups of such spiders are distinguished by the form of their webs, as line-weavers, orb-weavers, tapestry-weavers, tube-weavers, tunnel-weavers, etc. See spider.

4. In ichth., same as weever. — Mahali weaver. see weaver-bird. Sociable weaver. See weaver-bird. — Tapestry weaver. See tapestry. Weavers' bottom, a chronic inflammation of a bursa situated over the tuberosity of the ischium, occurring as a result of sitting long and constantly on a hard seat. Yellow-crowned weaver. See weaver-bird.

weaver-bird (wē'vėr-bėrd), n. One of numerous Old World (chiefly African and Indian) conirostral passerine birds, noted for the dexterity and ingenuity with which they weave the materials of their nests into a textile fabric, and also for the extraordinary size and unusual shape of some of these structures. The name weaver-bird, in its present broad sense, is modern, and appears to have originally specified a single species (see below). In the last and early in the present century the birds of this group which were then known were classed with the finches and grosbeaks, sometimes with the orioles, mainly according to the thickness of the bill, and some of them received still more misleading names. Though there was an Oriolus textor in 1788, the genus Ploceus was not named till 1817, and the family Ploceidæ not till 1847. With the recognition of this large and varied group, as well marked from the Fringillidæ by the possession of 10 instead of 9 primaries, an English name became a desideratum; and weavers, weaver-birds, or weaver-finches became synonymous with Ploceidæ, without implying that all the birds so named build very elaborate nests. (See Ploceus, Ploceidæ.) Two remarkable types of nest may be noted. One is the hive-nest of the republican or sociable weavers, many pairs of which build in common an enormous domed structure. (See Philetærus and cut under Aves, nest.) The other, the usual type of nest, is a globe or pendulous, and very closely woven, like that of the American hang-nests, but more elaborate, and with a hole in one side instead of being open at the top, in this respect resembling the nests of weakly titmice (bush-tits

[illegible] ally slung at the ends of long, slender, drooping [illegible] often over the water of a pool or stream, where [illegible] safe from monkeys and snakes. In some cases the [illegible] build additional nests for themselves, in which no eggs are to be laid — a habit, however, not confined to weaver-birds (see cock-nest). One of the largest, most characteristic, and best-known genera of weaver-birds is that African form called Oryx (a preoccupied name) by Boie in 1831, and Pyromelana by Bonaparte in that year, though often called Euplectes (Swainson, 1837). There are 12 or 15 species, the characteristic coloration of which is black set off with scarlet or orange in large massed areas. P. oryx, the male of which is scarlet and black, is about 6 inches long. It was originally described by Edwards in 1751 as "the grenadier," from some fancied likeness of its plumage to a soldier's uniform. It inhabits South Africa. P. aurea of western Africa is the golden-backed finch and gold-backed grosbeak of the early ornithologists, being one of the yellow and black species. P. capensis, the Cape grosbeak of Latham, is another, from Cape Colony. P. taha, sometimes known as the Mahali weaver, and generally called Ploceus or Euplectes taha, is very small (scarcely 4½ inches long), of rich golden-yellow and velvety black hues, and its nest is disproportionately large. It belongs to an extensive region of southeastern Africa. (See cut under taha.) Several other African weavers represent the genus Ploceipasser, as P. mahali. There is a large series of small birds, all technically, weavers (Ploceidæ), which fall in the spermestine division of the family, and belong to numerous genera of the Ethiopian, Oriental, and even the Australian region, as various amadavats, waxbills, strawberry-finches, blood-finches, senegals, etc. (See *Vidua*næ (a), and cuts under Ploceus, Senegal, Taeniopygia, and waxbill.) The birds of an extensive Oriental and Australian genus Munia (with its subdivisions, as Padda) belong here. (See cut under sparrow.) Fifteen species of Coliuschu, characterized by exserted middle tail-feathers, range from Africa to New Guinea, one of them is C. acuticauda. The genus Erythrura is another large one, reaching from India through much of Polynesia. None of the foregoing birds falls in the subfamily Ploceinæ as now restricted. Among the latter may be noted the species of the African genus Sitagra (6 in number, of which the best-known is S. capensis of Cape Colony, the olive oriole of Latham), commonly called spilonotus and weaver and Ploceus xiphocephalus. This is 7 inches long of an olive and golden-yellow and black color, it builds a large bottle-shaped or kidney-formed pensile nest. Foudia is a Madagascar type. The most extensive genus of all is the African Hyphantornis, with over 30 species, or the golden weavers, as H. galbula. These birds represent in Africa, or may be compared with, the hang-nest orioles of America. One of the longest and best-known is H. cucullatus of western Africa, from Senegambia to the Gaboon: it has oftener been called H. textor (after Oriolus textor of Gmelin, 1788), and enjoys the distinction of being one of the first, if not the first, to which the name weaver attached, being the weaver oriole of Latham (1782); it is 6 inches long, yellow and black. Malimbus is an African genus of black and crimson, scarlet, vermilion, or yellow coloration, as M. cristatus. The African genus Textor (one of the early names — Temminck, 1838) has 2 marked species, T. albirostris (or alecto), the white-billed, and T. erythrorhynchus (or niger) the red-billed. (See cut under Textor.) Finally, the genus Ploceus itself as now restricted is an Oriental type of a few species, commonly called baya-birds, though it used to be indiscriminately applied to any of the foregoing, and became the name-giving genus of the whole group. See cut under Ploceus. (For those Ploceidæ known as whidah-birds, see *Vidua*næ.)

Weaver-bird (Sitagra capensis).

Weaver-bird (Hyphantornis textor).

weaveress† (wē'vėr-es), n. [< weaver + -ess.] A female weaver.

He found two looms alone remaining at work, in the hands of an ancient weaver and weaveress.
J. H. Elwes, Hist. of Dunsley, p. 222. (Davies.)

weaver-finch (wē'vėr-finch), n. Any weaver-bird.

The Ploceidæ, or weaver-finches.
A. R. Wallace, Distribution of Animals, II. 238.

weaver-fish (wē'vėr-fish), n. A fish of the genus Trachinus; a weever. See cut under Trachinus.

weaver-shell (wē'vėr-shel), n. A shuttle-shell.

weaver's-shuttle (wē'vėrz-shut'l), n. The shuttle-shell, Radius volva. See Oculina, and cut under shuttle-shell.

weavil, n. An old spelling of weevil.

weaving (wē'ving), n. [< ME. wevynge, weffynge; verbal n. of weave[1], v.] 1. The act of one who or that which weaves; specifically, the act or art of producing cloth or other textile fabrics by means of a loom from the combination of threads or filaments. In weaving all kinds of fabrics, whether plain or figured, one system of threads, called the woof or weft, is made to pass alternately under and over another system of threads, called the warp, web, or chain. The essential operations are the successive raising of certain threads of the warp and the depression of others, so as to form a shed for the passage of the weft-yarn, which is then beaten up by means of a lathe or batten. Weaving is performed by the hand in what are called hand-looms, or by steam-power in what are called power-looms, but the general arrangements for both are to a certain extent the same. (See loom[1].) Weaving, in the most general sense of the term, comprehends not only the manufacture of those textile fabrics which are prepared in the loom, but also that of network, lacework, etc. See cut under shuttle.

2. In the manège, the action of a horse that weaves, or moves the body from side to side.

weasand, n. See weasand.

weaselt, n. See weasel.

weazen (wē'zn). See wizen[1].

web (web), n. [< ME. web, webbe, < AS. web (webb-), a web (= OS. webbi = OFries. web, wob = D. web, webbe, a web (= LG. web, webbe = OHG. wrppa, wappi, MHG. wrppe, webbe, webe, G. dial. webb (cf. G. gewebe), web, woof, = Icel. vefr = Sw. väf = Dan. væv, web), < wefan, weave: see weave[1].] 1. That which is woven; a woven fabric; specifically, a whole piece of cloth in course of being woven, or after it comes from the loom.

Biholde how Eleyne hath a newe cote,
I wisshe thanne it were myne and al the webbe after (i. e., all left after making the coat).
Piers Plowman (B), x. 111

My dochter she's a thrifty lass;
She span seven yeat to me;
An' if it war well counted up,
Full ten webs it would be.
Kempy Kaye (Child's Ballads, VIII. 140)

At noon
To morrow come, and ye shall pay
Each fortieth web of cloth to me,
As the law is, and go your way.
M. Arnold, The Sick King in Bokhara

2. Same as webbing, 1.—3. The warp in a loom. [Provincial.]—4. Something resembling a web or sheet of cloth; specifically, a large roll of paper such as is used in the web-press for newspapers.

Several men or boys are placed to receive the sheets [of paper] according to the number into which the width of the web is divided.
Ure, Dict., III. 403.

5. Any one of various thin and broad objects, probably so named from some similarity to the thin, broad fabric of the loom. Especially (a) A sheet or thin plate, as of lead.

There with stately pomp by heaps they wend,
And Christians slain roll up in webs of lead.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, x. 91

(b) The blade of a sword.

A sword, whereof the web was steel,
Pummel, rich stone; hilts, gold, approved by touch.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, II. 98.

(c) The blade of a saw. (d) The plate (or its equivalent) in a beam or girder which connects the upper and lower flat or laterally extending plates. (e) The corresponding part of a rail, between the tread and the foot. See cut under rail. (f) The flat part of a wheel, between the nave and the rim, as in some railway wheels—occupying the space where spokes would be in an ordinary wheel. (g) The solid part of the bit of a key. (h) The part of an anvil below the head, which is of reduced size. (i) The thin, sharp part of the colter of a plow. See cut under plow. (j) A canvas cloth used in a saddle. (k) The basketwork of a gabion. See cut under gabion. (l) In a vehicle, a combination of bands or straps of a stout fabric, serving to keep the hood from opening too far. E. H. Knight. (m) The arm of a crank.

6. In ornith., the blade, standard, vane, or vexillum of a feather: so called from the texture acquired through the weaving or interlocking of the barbs by the barbules with their barbicels and hooklets. That vane which is farthest from the middle line of the bird's body is the outer web; the other, the inner web, is technically distinguished as pogonium externum and internum. The two often differ from each other in size, shape, or color, or in all these respects; the difference is most pronounced on the flight-feathers (as seen in any quill pen) and lateral rudder-feathers. See cuts under aftershaft, barb, conflate, and penciling.

They [barbules] make the vane truly a web; that is, they so connect the barbs together that some little force is required to pull them apart.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 84.

7. The plexus of very delicate threads or filaments which a spider spins, and which serves as a net to catch flies or other insects for its food; a cobweb; also, a similar substance spun and woven into a sort of fabric by many insects, usually as a covering or protection. See bag-worm, web-worm, and leaf-caterpillar.

The Comicarios count'a a spiders webbe,
That doth entangle all the lesser flies.
Tom's Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, xviii.

8. Figuratively, anything carefully contrived and elaborately put together or woven; a plot; a scheme.

All this is but a web of the wit; it can work nothing.
Bacon, Praise of Knowledge (ed. 1887).

The Fates at length the blissful Web have spun Congreve, Birth of the Muse.

O what a tangled web we weave
When first we practise to deceive!
Scott, Marmion, vi. 17.

It is one web of intricate complications between the Emperors of the East and West, the Republic of Venice, the Kings of Hungary, Dalmatia, and Bosnia.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 229.

9. In anat., a connective or other tissue; any open structure composed of fibers and membranes running into each other irregularly as if tangled, and serving to support fat or other soft substances. See tissue and histology.—10. In zoöl., the membrane or fold of skin which connects the digits of any animal; especially, that which connects the toes of a bird or a quadruped, making the animal palmiped, and the foot itself palmate, as occurs in nearly all aquatic birds (hence called web-footed), and in many aquatic mammals, as the beaver, the muskrat, and ornithorhynchus. Webs sometimes occur as a congenital defect of the human fingers or toes. The relatively largest webs are those of the bats' wings. In birds the extent and special character of the webs (technically called palmures) are taken into some account in classification, and some conditions of the webs receive special names. See web-footed, and cuts under bat[1], duckbill, fin-ray foot, Odontus, stary, palmate, semipalmate, and totipalmate.

Some fail bregated swan
That, flutting a wild carol ere her death
Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs.
Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

11. In coal-mining, the face or wall of a long-wall stall in course of being holed and broken down for removal. Greeley. [Midland coal-fields, Eng.] Basal web, a small web between a bird's toes, extending little if any beyond the basal joints of the digits it connects. See cuts under Eremetes and semipalmate. Chain-web, a kind of saw, a scroll saw. Choroid web, the ectoloma interpositum. Emarginate web, a web between a bird's toes, whose free border is notched or emarginate. See cut under totipalmate. Geometrical spider's web. See geometric, and cut under Tetragnatha. Holland web, same as holland, n., 1. Incised web, a very deeply emarginate web of a bird's foot. India-rubber web, a fabric in which a warp of rubber threads is filled with a weft of silk, linen, or cotton. The warp, rendered inelastic during the weaving, has its elasticity subsequently restored by a process in which the fabric is subjected to heat. Also called elastic web. Mill-saw web, a thin saw carried in a vertical frame and used for resawing. Pin and web. See pin[1]. Spider's web. See spider-web.

web (web), v. t.; pret. and pp. webbed, ppr. webbing. [< ME. webben, < AS. webban, weave, web; from the noun.] 1. To cover with or as with a web; envelop.—2. To connect with a web, as the toes of a bird; render palmate.—Webbed fingers, two or more fingers of the human hand which are united by a band of connecting tissue, either occurring congenitally or as an abnormality, or resulting from contraction after burns and other wounds. dactylion. See web-fingered, and Dalziel's operation (under operation). Webbed toes, a condition affecting the toes of the human foot, abnormally or accidentally, similar to that of webbed fingers. See web-footed.

webbe[1]t, n. [< ME. webbe, a weaver, < AS. webba, a weaver, < wefan, weave; see weave[1], and web. The ME. noun webbe survives in the proper name Webb.] A weaver. See webber.

A webbe, a dyer, a tapicer.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 362

The webbes and the fullers assembled in bon nib,
And unkessen bere counsil in bere common hall.
Plemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 270)

webbe[2]t, n. An old spelling of web.

webbert (web'ėr), n. [< ME. webbare, < AS. webbere, a weaver, < webban, weave; see web, v.] The noun survives in the surname Webber.] A Middle English form of weaver[1].

webbing (web'ing), n. [< ME. webbynge; verbal n. of web, v.] 1. A woven material, especially one woven without pile, plainly and strongly. The term is applied to material or pieces of material which are intended for strength, to bear a weight, to be drawn tight, or the like, as a belt or surcingle, and also for that which serves to protect and cover the edge of a piece of more delicate fabric: thus, Eastern rugs are often made with several inches of webbing projecting beyond the part that is covered with pile.

2. In printing, the broad tapes used to conduct webs or sheets of paper in a printing-machine, or the broad straps or girths attached to the rounce of the hand-press.—3. In zoöl., the webs of the digits collectively; as, the webbing is extensive or complete; the webbed state of the digits, or the formation of their webs; palmation. See web, n., 10. Elastic webbing. See elastic.

webby (web'i), a. [< web + -y[1].] Relating to a web, or consisting of a web, in any sense; web-like; membranous.

Bats on their webby wings in darkness move,
And feebly shriek their melancholy love.
Crabbe, Works, I. 58.

weber (vā'bėr), n. [After Wilhelm Weber (1804–1891), a German physicist.] A name proposed by Latimer Clarke for the unit of electrical quantity which has since been named coulomb; it was also for some time used for the practical unit of electrical current which is now called ampere.

Weberian (we-bē'rian), a. [< Weber (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to or named after a person named Weber (in the following phrases E. H. Weber, 1795–1853, a German anatomist and physiologist). Weberian apparatus, the whole of the parts or organs by means of which the air bladder of some fishes is connected with the ear, including the Weberian ossicles and their connections.

An air bladder connected with the auditory organ by intervention of a Weberian apparatus, formed of parts of the anterior vertebræ, modified after precisely the same plan as in the other siluroids.
Amer. Nat., May, 1889, p. 427.

Weberian ossicles. See ossicle.

weber-meter (vā'bėr-mē'tėr), n. Same as volt-meter or as coulomb meter (see weber).

Weber's chronometer. A kind of metronome invented by Gottfried Weber, consisting of a weight and a graduated and adjustable cord. See metronome.

Weber's corpuscle. The depression in the vera mentanum situated between the openings of the ejaculatory ducts.

Weber's experiment. The experiment of closing one ear to find that a vibrating tuning-fork placed with the end resting against the vertex will be heard more distinctly in that ear.

Weber's glands. The mucous glands of the tongue.

Weber's law. See law[1].

Weber's paradox. The fact that a muscle, when so stretched that it cannot contract, may elongate.

web-eye (web'ī), n. In pathol., same as pterygium, 2.

web-eyed (web'īd), a. Exhibiting or affected with the disease called web-eye.

web-fingered (web'fing"gėrd), a. Having the fingers of the hand, or any digits of the fore limb, connected by means of more or less extensive webs formed of a fold of skin; as, the bat is a completely web-fingered animal. The fingers of the human hand are naturally webbed a little at the base, and sometimes connected for their whole length, constituting a congenital deformity. Compare webbed fingers (under web, v. t.), and see cuts under bat[1], flying-fox, and flying frog.

He was, it is said, web-footed naturally, and partially web-fingered.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 127.

web-foot (web'fut), n. A foot whose toes, or some of them, are webbed; also, the condition of being web-footed. As applied to persons, it implies an abnormal condition, corresponding to the web-fingered. Gillie web-foot. See gillie.

web-footed (web'fut-ed), a. Having web-feet; being web-toed, whether as an abnormality of persons, or as the natural formation of the feet of many aquatic animals. Many mammals are web-footed, as the seal, the otter, the muskrat, the beaver, and the duck-mole. Nearly all swimming and many wading birds are web-footed, to a varying extent in different cases. The salientian batrachians are mostly web-footed especially frogs, as to their hind feet. See web, n., 10, and totipalmate, semipalmate, palmate, semipalmate, totipalmate, with various cuts, and those under flying frog, duckbill, and stary.

web-footedness (web'fut-ed-nes), n. Web-foot; the state of being web-footed.

web-machine (web'ma-shēn"), n. Same as web-press.

web-press (web′ pres), n. A printing-machine which is automatically supplied with its paper from a great web or roll: usually a rotary machine, but the name is given to newspaper printing machines of different constructions, like those of Hoe, Marinoni, Walter, and others. See cut under printing-machine.

web-saw (web′sâ), n. A frame-saw.

The web-saw, the glue pot, the plane, and the hammer are the principal tools used. The Century, XXXVII. 918 webster† (web′stėr), n. [= Sc. wabster, < ME. webstere, webstar, < AS. webbestre, a female weaver, < webban, weave: see web and -ster. As with other ME forms in -ster (strictly fem. in themselves), the word was also often regarded as masc. (cf. baxter and brewster), used as masc. in ME.). The name survives in the surname Webster.] A weaver. Wyclif, Job vii. 6.

One witness says "a very good webster can get 1*l.* and four pence a day with weaving."
Record Soc. Lancashire and Cheshire, XI. x.

websterite (web′stėr-it), n. [So named in honor of Thomas Webster (1772–1844), a Scottish geologist.] Alumanite; hydrous tribasic sulphate of aluminium, found in Sussex, England, and at Halle in Prussia, in reniform masses and botryoidal concretions of a white or yellowish-white color.

Webster's condenser. An apparatus consisting of two lenses, used in microscopy for intensifying the light thrown on the object.

web-toed (web′tōd), a. Web-footed.

web-wheel (web′hwēl), n. A wheel in which the hub and rim are connected by a web or plate, which may be either intact or perforated. It is a common form for railway car-wheels and is also used for the wheels of watches and clocks, which are cast or stamped with webs, and then crossed out — that is, the web is perforated and filed into the form of spokes. E. H. Knight.

web-winged (web′wingd), a. Winged by large webs stretched between elongated digits of the fore limbs, as bats; chiropterous. See cuts under bat[2] and Furia.

web-worm (web′wėrm), n. Any one of several lepidopterous larvæ which feed more or less gregariously, and spin large webs into which they retire at night, or within which they feed during the day until the contained foliage is entirely devoured, when the web is enlarged. The tent caterpillars Clisiocampa americana and C. sylvatica, are web-worms. (See cut under tent caterpillar.) The fall web-worm is the larva of the bombycid Hyphantria cunea. The garden web-worm is the larva of Eurycreon rantalis, a pyralid moth of the family Botydæ. This species is not gregarious, but the larvæ form individual webs near the roots of corn, cotton, cabbage, melon, potato, and other cultivated crops in the western United States. Grape web-worm. Same as vine web-worm (which see, under vine). Turf web-worm. Same as sod-worm.

wecht (wecht), n. [Also spelled weight, weight, perhaps connected with ME. weggen, < AS. weegan, move, a secondary verb, < wegan, carry: see weigh[1], and cf. weight[1].] An instrument in the form of a sieve, but without holes, used for lifting grain. Burns. [Scotch.]

wed[1] (wed), n. [= Sc. wad; < ME. wed, wedde, < AS. wed, wedd, a pledge, = OFries. wed = MD. wedde = OHG. wetti, weti, MHG. wette, wete, wet, G. wette = Icel. veth, a pledge, = Sw. vad, a bet, appeal, = Goth. wadi, a pledge, = L. vas (vad-), a pledge; cf. Gr. ἀ-θλον, contr. ἆθλον (orig. *ἄ-θέλιον), a prize, the prize of a contest (> ult. E. athlete, etc.); cf. Skt. vadhu, a bride, woman. Hence wed, v., wadset, etc. From the same source, L. or Teut., are ult. E. redimony, gage, engage, wage, wager, etc.] A pledge; pawn; security.

He that lawith at a mynstrels worde gevith to hym a wedde. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 24.

Passage shalt thou pal here under the grene wode tre,
Or els thou shalt leve a wedde with me.
Playe of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, v. 427).

There's none that goes by Cutterhaugh
But maun leave him a wed,
Either gowd rings, or green mantles,
Or else their winsome heads.
The Young Tamlane (Child's Ballads, I. 115).

To wed, to pledge; to pawn.

A Kyng of Fraunce boughte these Relikes [relics of the Jews], to whom the Emperour had leide hem to wedde, for a gret summe of Sylver.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 13.

Let him be wa; his nekke lith to wedde.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1.

My bonnes both set to wedde, Robyn
Until a certayne day.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 54).

wed (wed), v.; pret. and pp. wedded, wed, ppr. wedding. [< ME. wedden, < AS. weddian, pledge, engage, = OS. weddian = MD. D. wedden, lay a wager, = MHG. G. wetten, wager, = Icel. vetha, wager, = Sw. vädja, appeal, = Dan. vædde, wager, = Goth. ga-wadjôn, pledge, betroth; from the noun. Cf. wage, gage[1], v.] I. trans. 1†. To pledge; hence, to wager.

Yee be welcome, that dare I wele wedde.
My hede has sente for to seke hym.
York Plays, p. 261.

The yonge man, hauinge his hart all redy wedded to his fryndes lures, . . . refused . . . to be parswaded.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, II. 12.

I'll wed a weather he'll gar the bludie spin frae under your nails.
Scott, Black Dwarf, xvii.

2. To marry; take for husband or for wife.

Thei wedden there no Wyves; for alle the Wommen there ben in commonn; and thei forsake no man.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 179.

Since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee.
Milton, P. L., ix. 1030.

3. To join in marriage; give or unite in wedlock.

In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman.
Shak., C. of E., i. 1. 37.

4. To unite closely in affection; attach firmly by passion or prejudice; as, to be wedded to one's habits or opinions.

Men are wedded to their lusts.
Tillotson, Sermons.

I am not wedded to those ideas.
Jefferson, To Col. Innes Monroe (Correspondence, I. 230).

Faith, fanatic Faith, once wedded fast
To some dear falsehood hugs it to the last.
Moore, Lalla Rookh, Veiled Prophet.

5. To unite forever or inseparably.

Thou art wedded to calamity.
Shak., R. and J., iii. 3. 3.

They led the vine
To wed her elm.
Milton, P. L., v. 215.

6†. To espouse; take part with.

They . . . wedded his cause.
Clarendon.

To wed with a rush ring. See rush[1].

II. intrans. To marry; contract marriage; become united as in matrimony.

With Athulf child he wedde.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 9.

Iwis to been a wyf he gaf me lene
Of indulgence, so it is no repreve
To wedde me if that my make dye.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 85.

Thought leapt out to wed with Thought
Ere Thought could wed itself with Speech.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xxiii.

Wed. An abbreviation of Wednesday.

wedbrek†, n. [ME., < wed + breal.] An adulterer. Early English Psalter, Ps. xlix. 18. (Stratmann.) weddet, n. Same as wed[1].

wedded (wed′ed), p. a. 1. Married; united in marriage.

Let wealth, let honour, wait the wedded dame.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 77.

2. Of or pertaining to matrimony; as, wedded life; wedded bliss. — 3. Intimately united or joined together; clasped together.

Then fled she to her inmost bower, and there Unclasp'd the wedded eagles of her belt.
Tennyson, Godiva.

wedde-fee, n. See wed-fee.

wedder[1] (wed′ėr), n. [< wed + -er[1].] One who weds.

wedder[2] (wed′ėr), n. A dialectal form of wether.

wedde-settet, v. t. See wedset, wadset.

wedding (wed′ing), n. [< ME. wedding, wedd(e)ynge, < AS. weddung (= MD. weddinghe), wedding, marriage, verbal n. of weddian, pledge, wed: see wed[1].] Marriage; nuptials; nuptial ceremony or festivities, especially the latter: also used attributively; as, wedding cheer.

There dede oure Lord the firste Myracle at the Wedyng, whan he turned Watre in to Wyn.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 113.

The kyngdam of heuenes is maad lic to a man kyng that made weddyngis to his sone.
Wyclif, Mat. xxii. 2.

Simple and brief was the wedding, as that of Ruth and of Boaz.

Softly the youth and the maiden repeated the words of betrothal.

Taking each other for husband and wife in the Magistrate's presence.
Longfellow, Miles Standish, ix.

Penny wedding, a wedding at which the guests contribute toward the expenses of the entertainment, and frequently toward the household outfit of the wedded pair.

Love that no gold nor ties can attach . . . will fly away from an Emperor's match
To dance at a Penny Wedding!
Rev. Miss Kilmansegg, Her Honeymoon.

Silver wedding, golden wedding, diamond wedding, the celebrations of the twenty-fifth, the fiftieth, and the seventy-fifth anniversaries of a wedding, at which silver, gold, and diamond presents respectively are made. Paper, wooden, tin, crystal, and china weddings are also sometimes celebrated on first, fifth, tenth, fifteenth, and twentieth anniversaries. — Syn. Nuptials, Matrimony, etc. See marriage.

wedding-day (wed′ing-dā), n. The day of marriage.

wedding-dower (wed′ing-dou′ėr), n. A marriage-portion.

Let her beauty be her wedding dower.
Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 1. 78.

wedding-dress (wed′ing-dres′), n. The dress worn by a bride at her wedding.

weddinger (wed′ing-ėr), n. [< wedding + -er[1].] A guest at a wedding; one of a wedding party. [Provincial.]

wedding-favor (wed′ing-fā′vor), n. A bunch of white ribbons, or a rosette, etc., sometimes worn by men attending a wedding. Simmonds.

wedding-feast (wed′ing-fēst), n. A feast or entertainment in honor of a wedding.

wedding-flower (wed′ing flou′ėr), n. A plant, Moræa (Iris) Robsoniana of Lord Howe's Island, New South Wales, having white iris-like flowers sometimes 4 inches across. Cape wedding-flower, Dombeya Natalensis, a South African shrub or small tree with showy flowers.

wedding-garment (wed′ing-gär′ment), n. A garment such as is worn at a wedding ceremony or entertainment.

And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment.
Mat. xxii. 11.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, . . . and every officer his wedding garment? Shak., 1 of the 8., iv. 1. 51.

wedding-knife (wed′ing-nīf), n. One of a pair of knives contained in a sheath which is arranged to be worn at the girdle. This was a common wedding-gift in the seventeenth century.

wedding-ring (wed′ing-ring), n. A ring which is given by one of a married pair to the other on the occasion of their marriage, especially one given by the groom to the bride. It is usually a plain gold ring.

wedding-song (wed′ing-sông), n. A song sung in honor of a bride and groom; an epithalamium.

wede[1]†, v. i. [ME. weden, < AS. wédan, be mad, < wód, mad: see wood[2].] To go mad; rage; rave.

He tok his leue & went home a-geine
Weping as he wold wede for wo & for sorwe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1509.

wede[1]†, n. [ME., < wede, v.] Madness.

And had therof so mochе drede,
That he wende have go to wede.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 24. (Halliwell.)

wede[2]†, n. A Middle English form of weed[2].

wed-fee (wed′fē), n. [Also wedde-fee; < wed + fee[1].] 1. A wager. Robson. (Halliwell.) [Prov. Eng.] — 2. Wage; reward; recompense. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

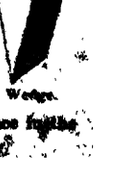
wedge[1] (wej), n. [< ME. wegge, wigge, wedge, < AS. wecg, a wedge (a mass of metal), = MD. weegh, wegghe, D. wegge, wig, a wedge, = MLG. wegge = OHG. wekki, weggi, MHG. wecke, wegge, G. wecke, weck, a wedge-shaped loaf, = Icel. veggr = Sw. vigg = Dan. vægge, a wedge; prob. lit. 'a mover' (from the use and effect in splitting), ult. from the verb represented by weigh[1]. Cf. Lith. vagis, a bent wooden peg for hanging things on, a spigot for a cask, also a wedge.] 1. A simple machine consisting of a very acute-angled triangular prism of hard material, which is driven in between objects to be separated, or into anything which is to be split. The wedge is merely a special application of an inclined plane, and is nowise entitled to a distinct place in the list of mechanical powers.



Wedge.

Thou hyt here, a wegge sake of a bronde
Wrought dryve in the mote, or mandel free
Lat dicke and thik with cashon let it stande.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 33.

There with pyn'ther goth a litel wegge which that is cleped the horn. Chaucer, Astrolabe.

For 'tis with Pleasure as it is with Wedges; one drives out another.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 157.

2. A mass resembling a wedge in form; anything in the form of a wedge.

They gather it [gold] with great laboure and melte it and caste it, tyrate into masses or wedges, and afterwarde into brode plates.
R. Eden, tr. of Sebastian Munster (First Books on America [ca. ed. Arber, p. 20).

Open the mails, yet guard the treasure sure;
Lay out our golden wedges to the view.
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., I. 2.

A wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight. Josh. vii. 21.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.
Milton, P. R., iii. 330.

3. In her., a bearing representing a triangle with one very acute angle—that is, like a pile, but free in the escutcheon instead of being attached to one of its edges.—4. In Cambridge University, the name given to the man whose name stands lowest on the list of the classical tripos: said to be a designation suggested by the name (Wedgewood) of the man who occupied this place on the first list (1824). Compare wooden spoon, under spoon[1].

Five were Wranglers, four of these Double men, and the fifth a favorite for the Wedge. The last man is called the Wedge, corresponding to the Spoon in Mathematics.
Cambridge Univ. Calendar, p. 312.

Foxtail wedge. Same as fox wedge. — The thin or small end of the wedge, figuratively, an initiatory move of small apparent importance, but calculated to produce or lead to an ultimate important effect. — Wedge of least resistance, the form in which loose earth and other substances yield to pressure. Wooden wedge. Same as wedge[1], 4.

wedge[1] (wej), v.; pret. and pp. wedged, ppr. wedging. [< late ME. wedgen, from the noun.]
I. trans. 1. To cleave with a wedge or with wedges; rive.

My heart
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain
Shak., T. and C., I. 1. 35.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven; crowd or compress closely; jam.

Among the crowd i' the Abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 5.

Wedged in the rocky shoals, and stranding fast.
Dryden, Æneid, v. 285.

The age had not so much refinement that any sense of impropriety attracted the wearers of petticoat and farthingale from stepping forth into the public ways, and wedging their not unsubstantial persons . . . into the throng nearest to the scaffold at an execution.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, ii.

3. To fasten with a wedge or with wedges; fix in the manner of a wedge: as, to wedge on a scythe; to wedge in a rail or a piece of timber.—4. In ceram., to cut, divide, and work together (a mass of wet clay) to drive out bubbles and render it plastic, just before placing it on the wheel.—5. To make into the shape of a wedge; render cuneiform.—6. To force apart or split off with or as with a wedge.

Yawning fissures which will surely widen until they wedge off the projecting masses, and strip huge allices from the face of the cliff. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii.

II. intrans. To force one's way like a wedge.

Haunting
The Globes and Mermaids, wedging in with lords Still at the table. B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, iii. 1.

wedge[2] (wej), n. [A dial. var. of wadge, wage.] A pledge: a gage. Halliwell.

Wedge-bill (Schistes geoffroyi).

wedgebill (wej'bil), n. A humming-bird of the genus Schistes, having the bill of peculiar shape, rather thick for a hummer, and suddenly sharp-pointed. There are 2 species, both Ecuadorian, S. geoffroyi and S. personatus, 3½ inches long. See cut in preceding column.

wedge-bone (wej'bōn), n. An ossicle often found on the under surface of the spinal column at the junction of any pair of vertebræ: more fully called subvertebral wedge-bone.

Such a separate ossification, or sub vertebral wedge bone, is commonly developed beneath and between the odontoid bone and the body of the second vertebra [in Lacertilia].
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 187.

wedge-cutter (wej'kut'ėr), n. 1. An instrument used in dentistry to cut off the projecting part of a wedge that has been driven between two teeth.—2. In wood-working, a machine for relishing and cutting the wedges of a door-mat. See relish[2]. E. H. Knight.

wedged (wejd), a. [< wedge + -ed[2].] In zoöl., wedge-shaped; cuneiform or cuneate: as, a wedged bone; the wedged tail of a bird.

wedge-micrometer (wej'mī-krom'e-tėr), n. See micrometer.

wedge-photometer (wej'fō-tom'e-ter), n. An instrument for measuring the brightness of stars. It consists of a long wedge of neutral-tinted dark glass arranged to slide before the eyepiece of a telescope, and provided with a graduated scale. The scale-reading, which corresponds to the thickness of the wedge at the point where the image of the star becomes invisible, determines the star's brightness.

wedge-press (wej'pres), n. A press for extracting oil from seeds, as hempseed, sunflower-seed, etc., by crushing. It has perforated iron check plates, between which the seeds are placed in hair bags, with blocks and wedges between the bags and the plates. A tightening wedge is then driven in by a mall, and the juice escapes through the perforations in the plates, and is collected in a cistern below.

wedge-shaped (wej'shāpt), a. Having the shape of a wedge; wedged; cuneiform; cuneate: as, a wedge shaped leaf; the wedge shaped tail of a bird: usually noting surfaces, without regard to solidity. Wedge-shaped isobar, an isobar bounding a projecting area of high pressure moving along between two cyclones.

wedge-shell (wej'shel), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Donacidæ.

wedge-tailed (wej'tāld), a. Having the tail wedged or cuneate; noting birds whose tail feathers are regularly graduated in length to such an extent that the tail when moderately spread appears to be beveled off obliquely at the end from the middle to the outermost feather on each side. It is a very common formation. See cuts under Sphenocercus, Sphenura, Trichoglossus, and Uromitus. — Wedge-tailed eagle, Uroaëtus audax, of Australia. See cut under Uroaëtus. Wedge-tailed pigeon or dove. See Sphenocercus (with cut).

wedge-valve (wej'valv), n. A wedge-shaped valve driven into its seat by a screw: used for closing water mains, etc.

wedge wise (wej'wīz), adv. In the manner of a wedge.

wedging (wej'ing), n. 1. A method of joining timbers, in which the tenon is made just long enough to pass through the mortised piece, and a small wedge is driven into a saw-cut in the end of the tenon, with the effect of expanding it, and thus preventing its withdrawal.—2. In kneading clay for fine modeling, the process of cutting the clay to pieces, as by means of a strained wire, and then throwing the severed pieces forcibly upon the mass, the object being to expel the air. Foxtail wedging. See foxtail.

wedging-crib (wej'ing-krib), n. In mining, in shaft-sinking in very watery ground, a curb or crib on which the tubbing is placed. It generally consists of pieces of oak carefully shaped and joined together. Between the exterior of this curb and the rock there is left a space of a few inches in width, which is made water tight by the most careful wedging and the use of moss. The object of the whole arrangement of the wedging-crib and the tubbing which rests upon it is permanently to hold back the water which would otherwise find its way into the shaft and have to be raised to the surface by pumping. In some mining districts the wedging-crib is made of cast iron.

Wedgwood scale. A scale used by the pyrometer in measuring high temperatures by his porcelain clay, invented by Wedgwood. The zero corresponds to 1077° F.

Wedgwood ware. See ware[2].

wedgy (wej'i), a. [< wedge[1] + -y[1].] Formed or adapted to use as a wedge; fitted for prying into or among.

Pushed his wedgy snout far within the straw substance. Landor, Imag. Conv.

wedhood† (wed'hud), n. [ME. wedhad, < wed + -hood.] The state of marriage.

Save in here wedhod
That ye hyre to-fore God.
MS. Cott. Claud. A. ii. f. 128. (Halliwell.)

wedlock (wed'lok), n. [< ME. wedlac, wedlak, wedlake, wedlaik, wedlock, matrimony, marriage, < AS. wedlac, pledge, < wed, a pledge, + lāc, a gift, etc.: see wed and lake[2], lake[4]. The compound wedlac is supposed to mean 'a gift given as a pledge,' hence a gift given to a bride, but the second element is perhaps to be taken in the sense of 'condition, state,' being ult. nearly identical with the suffix in knowledge, etc.] 1. Marriage; matrimony; the married state; the vows and sacrament of marriage. Sometimes used attributively.

Which that men clepeth spousal or wedlok.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 93.

You would sooner commit your grave head to this knot than to the wedlock noose. B. Jonson, Epicœne, ii. 1.

By holy crosses she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 32.

2†. A wife.

Which of these is thy wedlock, Menelaus? thy Helen, thy Lucrece? B. Jonson, Poetaster, iv. 1.

To break wedlock, to commit adultery. Exod. xxi. 22.

Howe be it, she kept but onyll the sacrament of matrimony, but brake her wedlode.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. xxi.

= Syn. 1. Matrimony, Wedding, etc. See marriage.

wedlock (wed'lok), v. t. [< wedlock, n.] To unite in marriage; marry.

Man thus wedlocked. Milton, Divorce, ii. 15.

Wednesday (wenz'dā), n. [< ME. Wednesday, Wodnesdei, Wednesdai, < AS. Wōdnes dæg = D. Woensdag = Icel. Othinsdagr = Sw. Dan. Onsdag (for Odensdag*); lit. 'Woden's day'; AS. Wōdnes, gen. of Wōden = OS. Wodan, Wōden = OHG. Wuotan, Wotan = Icel. Othinn (> E. Odin), Woden; prob. lit. 'the furious,' i. e., the mighty warrior, < AS. wōd, etc., furious, raging, mad: see wood[2].] The fourth day of the week; the day next after Tuesday. Abbreviated Wed. See week. — Pulver Wednesday†, Same as Ash Wednesday.

wedset, v. t. [ME. wedsettan; < wed + set[1], Cf. wadset.] To pledge: same as wadset.

wee[1] (wē), n. and a. [< ME. we, in the phrase a litle we, a little bit, a short way or space, appar. for a litle way, the form we being appar. a Scand. form (Icel. vegr, a way, = Sw. väg = Dan. vei) of way: see way[1]. Little and wee were and are so constantly associated that they have become synonymous, and wee has changed to an adjective. Cf. way-bit, aquiv, to we bit. E. wee cannot be connected with OHG. wenic, G. wenig, little.] I. n. A bit. Specifically (a) A short distance.

Pehynd hit a litill we
It is stonyd full.
Barbour, Bruce (E. E. T. S.), xvii. 677.

(b) A short space of time.

O hold your hand, you minister,
Hold it a little wee.
Sweet William (Child's Ballads, IV. 263).

II. a. Small; little; tiny. [Colloq.]

He hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 4. 22.

wee[2]†, n. An obsolete form of woe.

wee[3]†, pron. An old spelling of we.

weebit (wē'bit), n. Same as way-bit.

weechelm†, n. An obsolete form of witch-elm.

weed[1] (wēd), n. [< ME. weed, wed, weod, weid, a weed, < AS. weed, wiod, < OS. MD. wiod, D. wiede, a weed, = MG. woden, wode, pl., the green stalks and leaves of turnips, etc.] 1. Any one of those herbaceous plants which are useless and without special beauty, or especially which are positively troublesome. The application of this general term is somewhat relative. Handsome but pernicious plants, as the ox-eye daisy, cone flower, and the purple cow wheat of Europe (Melampyrum arvense), are weeds to the agriculturist, flowers to the esthete. So also plants that are cultivated for use or beauty, as grasses, hemp, carrot parsnip, morning glory, become weeds when the keeping up where they are not wanted. The exotics of cool countries are sometimes weeds in the tropics.

On fat lands and fat of dung fouliest weeds groweth.
Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 224.

An ill weed grows apace. Love and M., Cocoanb., iv. 3.

2. A worn, worthless animal unfit for the breeding of stock; especially, a leggy, loose-bodied horse; a race horse having the appearance but wanting the other qualities of a thoroughbred. [Slang.]

He bore the same relation to a man of fashion that a weed does to a "winner of the Derby".
Lever, Davenport Dunn, ii.

3. A cigar; with the definite article, tobacco. [Colloq.]

Sir Bilbo puffed his own weed in solitude, strolling up and down the terrace.
H. James, Jr., Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 68.

Angola weed, an orchil-plant, Ramalina farfuracea, growing in Angola, a district on the western coast of Africa. — Asthma-weed, Lobelia inflata, Indian tobacco. — Cancer-weed, a name given to a wild sage, Salvia lyrata, to the rattlesnake plantain, Goodyera pubescens, and to a species of rattlesnake root, Prenanthes alba. [U. S.] — Consumptive's-weed. See consumptive. Cross-weed, a plant of the cruciferous genus Diplotaxis. Emetic, French, guinea-hen weed. See the qualifying words. — Jamestown weed†. See jimson weed and stramonium. Joy-weed, a plant of the genus Alternanthera. — Phthisis-weed, Ludwigia palustris, water-purslane. Salt-rheum weed. See salt rheum. — Soldier's weed, Piper angustifolium, matico. — Turpentine-weed, the rosin-weed, Silphium laciniatum. Yaw-weed. See Richardia. (See also basil weed, bindweed, bishop's weed, breastweed, butterweed, carpet weed, dyer's weed, pepper-weed, knapweed, knotweed, lake-weed, locoweed, love-vine, mat weed, Maurandia weed, mermaid-weed, milkweed, morass weed, mugwort, neckweed, orcanet, trumpet-weed, tumble weed, winterweed, yellow weed.) weed[1] (wēd), v. [< ME. weeden, weoden < AS. weodian, weed, = D. wieden = LG. weden, widen = G. dial. wieden, weed; see weed[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To free from weeds or noxious plants.

There were also a few specimens of antique and hereditary flowers, in no very flourishing condition, but scrupulously weeded. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, vi.

2. To take away, as noxious plants; remove what is injurious, offensive, or unseemly; extirpate.

Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shak., Cor., iv. 5. 108.

We'll join to weed them out. B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 1.

3. To free from anything hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the Kingdom of such as were devoted to Flaiana. Howell, Vocall Forrest, p. 4.

II. intrans. To root up and remove weeds, or anything resembling weeds.

Thei corueu here copes and coutepies hem made,
And weuten as workmen to weden and mowen,
Al for drede of hem deth, suche dyntes gan thunge.
Piers Plowman (C), ix. 186.

There are also in the plains and rich low grounds of the freshes, abundance of hops which lyeld them prodigiously without any labor of the husbandman, in weeding, hilling, or poling. Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 17.

weed[1]†. A reduced form of weeded, past participle of weed[1].

weed[2] (wēd), n. [< ME. wede, wæde, < AS. wæde, neut., wæd, f., a garment, = OS. wād = OFries. wede, wed = MD. wade, waede, a garment, = OHG. MHG. wat, clothing, accoutrements, armor, G. obs. wat (cf. G. leinwand, linen cloth, canvas, with interloping n, by false analogy with gewand, garment, < OHG. MHG. lînwât = AS. lînwæd) = Icel. vath, a piece of stuff or cloth, also a garment (see wadi, wadmal); cf. Goth. ga-widan (pret. gawath), bind together; Zend √ vath, clothe.] A garment of any sort, especially an outer garment; hence, garments in general, especially the whole costume worn at any one time; now commonly in the plural, and chiefly in the phrase widows' weeds. See widow[1].

He spendeth, feasteth, maketh festeyinges,
He gyveth robes fele and chaungeth weedes.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1749.

The grete dispite which he in hert he had Off Fromont, that in monkes weed was clade.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 9418.

O sir, know that under simple weeds
The gods have masked. Greene, Orlando Furioso (ed. Grosart), l. 1146.

weed[3] (wēd), n. [Sc. also weid, origin obscure.] 1. A general name for any sudden illness from cold or relapse, usually accompanied by febrile symptoms, taken by women after confinement or during nursing, especially milk fever or inflammation of the breast. [Scotch.] — 2. Lymphangitis in the horse, characterized by fever and temporary swelling of the limbs. It appears usually after a period of inactivity.

weed[4] (wēd), n. [Perhaps a dial. var. of weigh[1].] A heavy weight. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

weeded (wē'ded), a. [< weed[1] + -ed[2].] Overgrown with weeds. [Rare.]

Worn and worn the ancient thatch
Upon the lonely moated grange.
Tennyson, Mariana.

weeder (wē'dėr), n. [< ME. wedare, a weeding-hook; < weed[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who weeds, or frees from anything noxious.

A weeder, out, thou proud adversary.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 13.

These weeders then do require some wages of their handmaid to their owners. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 467.

2. In agric., any form of hand or horse-tool for uprooting or destroying weeds. The name is given especially to one of a class of small hand-tools having a series of bent teeth, a sharp steel bow set transversely, or a modified hoe-blade, etc., the object of all being to cut off the weeds below the surface, or to drag them up by the roots.

weeder-clips (wē'dėr-klips), n. pl. Weeding-shears. Burns. [Scotch.]

weedery (wē'dėr-i), n. [< weed[1] + -ery.] 1. Weeds collectively. [Rare.]

The weedery which through
The interstices of those neglected courts
Unchecked had flourished long, and seeded there,
Was trampled then and bruised beneath the feet.
Southey.

2. A place full of weeds. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]

weed-grown (wēd'grōn), a. Overgrown with weeds.

weed-hook (wēd'hůk), n. [= Sc. weedock; < ME. weedhook, wedhoc, wedhoc, < AS. wēodhōc, < wēod, weed, + hōc, hook.] 1. A hook used for cutting away or extirpating weeds. Tusser, Husbandry. — 2. An attachment to a plow for bending the weeds over in front of the share so that they may be covered by the inverted sod.

weediness (wē'di-nes), n. A weedy character or state: as, a garden remarkable for its weediness.

weeding (wē'ding), n. [< ME. wedynge; verbal n. of weed[1], v.] The act or process of removing weeds from ground.

weeding-chisel (wē'ding-chiz'el), n. A tool with a divided chisel-point for cutting the roots of large weeds beneath the ground.

weeding-forceps (wē'ding-for'seps), n. sing. and pl. An instrument for pulling up some sorts of plants in weeding, as thistles.

weeding-fork (wē'ding-fôrk), n. A strong three-pronged fork with flat tines, used for clearing ground of weeds.

weeding-hook (wē'ding-hůk), n. [< ME. weedynge-hooke; < weeding + hook.] Same as weed-hook, 1.

The last purgatory fire which God uses, to burn the thistles, . . . when the gentle influence of a sun beam will not wither them, nor the weeding hook of a short affliction cut them out.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 839.

weeding-iron (wē'ding-ī'ėrn), n. Same as weeding-fork.

weeding-pincers (wē'ding-pin'sėrz), n. sing. and pl. Same as weeding-forceps.

weeding-rim (wē'ding-rim), n. [Spelled erroneously weeding-shim; < weeding + E. dial. rim, remove, var. of ream[2]; see ream[2].] An implement somewhat like the frame of a wheelbarrow, used for tearing up weeds on summer fallows, etc. [Local, Eng.]

weeding-shears (wē'ding-shērz), n. sing. and pl. Shears used for cutting weeds.

weeding-tongs (wē'ding-tôngz), n. sing. and pl. Same as weeding-forceps.

weeding-tool (wē'ding-tōl), n. An implement for pulling up, digging up, or cutting weeds.

weedless (wēd'les), a. [< weed[1] + -less.] Free from weeds or noxious matter.

Weedless paradises. Donne, Anatomy of the World, i.

weedy[1] (wē'di), a. [< weed[1] + -y[1].] 1. Having the character of a weed; weed-like.

Some of them are clever in a way, rooted fools by nature, who beat a weedy little blossom of wit, and suppose themselves to flower all over, like rhododendrons in the season. D. C. Murray, Weaker Vessel, xiv.

2. Consisting of weeds.

Her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 175.

Nettles rise, and all the weedy nation.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph over Death.

3. Abounding with weeds. Irving.

When the grain is weedy, we must reap high.
S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 8.

4. Not of good blood; not of good strength or mettle; scraggy; hence, worthless, as for breeding or racing purposes: as, a weedy horse. [Slang.]

Along the middle of the street the main business was horse dealing, and a gypsy hostler would trot out a succession of the weediest old screws that ever kept out of the kennels. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 625.

weedy[2] (wē'di), a. [< weed[2] + -y[1].] Clad in weeds, or widows' mourning. [Rare.]

She was as weedy as in the early days of her mourning.
Dickens.

A weedy woman came sweeping up to us.
Longfellow, Journal, Oct. 16, 1848.

weef, wif, n. [Prob. a dial. var. of woof.] A flexible rough sapling, or a split sapling, adapted for interweaving with others, as in the manufacture of crates. [Prov. Eng.]

week[1] (wēk), n. [Early mod. E. weeke, < ME. weke, wike, wuke, woke, wouke (pl. wiken, woken, wikes, wukes, wukes), a week, period of seven days, < AS. wice, wicu, wuce, wucu = OS. wika = OFries. wike = MD. weke, D. week = MLG. weke, LG. weke, wek, week = OHG. wehha, also wohha (> Finnish viikka), MHG. woche, wuche, G. woche, week, = Icel. vika = Sw. vecka = Dan. uge (for vuge*), a week, = Goth. wiko, found in the phrase wikon kunjis seinis, tr. Gr. τῆς τάξεως ἑαυτοῦ ἀπαρχάς, L. in ordine vicis suæ, 'in the order of his course,' Luke i. 8, but prob. to be taken, in the Goth., as 'in the week or period of his course,' wikôn appearing to mean 'succession,' 'change,' hence 'recurrent period,' and to be allied to Icel. vikja, turn, return, etc.: see weal. The collocation of the Goth. wikôns and the L. vicis in this passage, and the resemblance of form, have given rise to the notion that the Teut. word is borrowed from the L.; but the L. word equiv. to wikôn is ordine, and there is no evidence that L. vix, vicis was ever used in the sense 'week.'] 1. A period of seven days, of which the days are numbered or named in like succession in every period — in English, Sunday (or first day, etc.), Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday (or seventh day); hence, a period of seven days. The week is not dependent upon any other period, as a subdivision of that period, but cuts across the division-lines of month and year alike with its never ending repetition. In general Jewish and Christian belief, it is founded on the creation of the world in six days (according to the account in Genesis), with a succeeding seventh day of rest, specially commemorated by the Jewish rest-day, or Sabbath, our Saturday. It has also been conjectured to represent a fourth of the lunar month of about 28 days; but no people is known as having made and maintained such a subdivision of the month. As a period and division of time, its use is limited to Jews and Christians (including also to some extent the Mohammedans, by derivation from the Jews); but the week-day names and their succession are found more widely, and are of a wholly different origin; they rest upon an astrological principle, which assigns each day in succession to one of the planets as regent; and they further involve a division of the day into 24 hours. If the planets are arranged in the order of their distance from us as held by the ancients — namely, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon, — then, if the first hour of a day is allotted to Saturn and each following hour to the next planet, the 25th hour, or the first of the next day, will fall to the Sun, the 49th or the first of the following day, to the Moon, and so to Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, in succession, and, each planet being reckoned as regent of the whole day of whose first hour it is regent, the days are Sun's day, Moon's day, Mars' day, and so on to Saturn's day, where the same succession is taken up anew. These names were unknown to, or at least never used by, the Jews, nor do they appear in classical Greek, nor do the Mohammedans employ them, but they passed from Roman use to disappear, and not only in their Latin forms, but also as translated into Germanic languages, the names of Germanic divinities being, by a rude identification, substituted in them for those of the Roman, as Mars, etc., without any regard to the planets (see the names Tuesday, etc.), and they are found also in India, which doubtless received them, with the rest of its astronomy and astrology, from Greece and Rome. The Indian days are coincident with our days of the same name — that is, it is Sun's day there when it is our Sunday, and so on. But there is no other than an astrological significance belonging to the names there, a week as a division of time is wholly unknown to both ancient and modern India. In law, week is sometimes construed to mean any period of seven full days, and sometimes to mean such a period beginning with the beginning of a Sunday. Thus, a requirement of 'a week's notice' may be satisfied by the lapse of any seven consecutive days, but a publication of a notice 'once in each week for three weeks before the sale' is held to contemplate three weeks reckoned as from Sunday to Sunday, not merely 21 days before the sale. Abbreviated w., wk.

By twyne the Cytee of Darke and the Cytee of Raphane ys a Ryver, that men clepen Sabatorye. For on the Saturday hyt reuneth faste, and alle the Weeke elles hyt stondeth stylle, and reuneth nouzt or lytel.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 125.

I shal namore come here this weke.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 480.

Nor can I go much to country-houses for the same reason. Say what they will, ladies do not like you to smoke in their best rooms, their silly little noses scent out the odour upon the chintz, weeks after you have left them.
Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle's Confessions.

2. The six working-days of the week; the week minus Sunday: as, to be paid so much a week.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 76.

A prophetic week, in Script., a week of years, or seven years. A warp of weeks. See warp. — A week of Sundays, seven Sundays, hence, seven weeks, and, more loosely, a long time. [Colloq.] — Chaste week, Cleansing week. See chaste. — Easter, Exhortation, Expectation week. See the qualifying words. — Grass week, Rogation week. Bourne, Pop. Antiq. (1777), p. 270. — Great Week, in ancient times and still in the Greek Church, Holy Week. The Greek Church has retained from early usage the epithet great (or holy and great) not only for this week, but for the several days in it, as Great Monday, etc., Good Friday having also other special names, Great Great Saturday has been a name for Easter Eve from very early times in both East and West.—Holy week, in the ecclesiastical year, the week immediately preceding Easter Sunday: sometimes also called Passion Week.—Minerva week. See minerva.—New week. See new.—Parson's week. See parson.—Passion Week. See passion.—Procession week, Rogation week. See rogation.—The feast of weeks, a Jewish festival lasting seven weeks—that is, a "week of weeks" after the Passover. It corresponds to Pentecost or Whitsuntide. See Pentecost, 1.—This (that) day week. See day[1].

This day-week you will be alone.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxvi.

Week about. See about.—Week's day, that day of last week or of next week which corresponds to the present day.

I mene if God please to be at Salisburie the wekesdaw at night before Easterdaie; where for divers respectes I would gladlie speake with you.
Darnell Papers (1582) (H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age).

week[2]†, n. An obsolete form of wick[1].

week[3] (wēk), n. [Sc. also weik, wirk; a var. of wike[1].] A corner; an angle: as, the weeks of the mouth or the eye.

The men of the world say we will tell the truth; we will let them ken that we will bing by the weeks of the mouth for the least point of truth.
M. Bruce, Soul-Confirmation, p. 18. (Jamieson.) week-day (wēk'dā), n. [E. dial. weekyday; < ME. wekeday*, < AS. wucdæg, wucudæg = Icel. vikudagr; as week[1] + day[1].] Any day of the week except Sunday: often used adjectively.

She loues Preaching better then Praying, and of Preachers Lecturers, and thinkes the Weeke-dayes Exercise farre more edifying then the Sundaies.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Shee precise Hypocrite.

One solid dish his week day meal affords,
An added pudding solemnised the Lord's.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 345.

For dinner—which on a weekday is hardly ever eaten at the costermonger's absolute—they buy "block ornaments" as they call the small, dark-coloured pieces of meat exposed on the cheap butchers' blocks or counters.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 52.

weekly (wēk'li), a. and n. [< week[1] + -ly[1].] I. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or lasting for a week; reckoned by the week; produced or performed between one Sunday and the next: as, weekly work.—2. Coming, happening, or done once a week: as, a weekly payment; a weekly paper; a weekly allowance; the weekly sailings of steamers; a weekly maid.

When yonder broken arch was whole,
'Twas then was dealt the weekly dole.
Scott, Rokeby, vi. 1.

II. n.; pl. weeklies (-liz). A periodical, as a newspaper, appearing once a week.

weekly (wēk'li), adv. [< weekly, a.] Once a week; at intervals of seven days: as, a paper published weekly; wages paid weekly.

week-work (wēk'wėrk), n. In old Eng. usage, the distinctive service of a serf or villein, being a specified number of days, usually three, in each week.

weel[1]† (wēl), n. [E. dial. also weal, weel, also wale; < ME weel, wele, wel, < AS. wæl = MD. wael, a whirlpool, = MLG. wel, a pool.] A whirlpool.

weel[2] (wēl), n. [Also weal; cf. wally, a willow basket, < willy, a var. of willow: see willow[1].] 1. A kind of trap or snare for fish. [Obsolete or provincial.]

Fishing is a kind of hunting by water, be it with nets, weeles, baits, angling.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 310.

Diog. Laert. tells us that it was a saying of Socrates that young batchelors desirous of marriage were like to fishes who play about the weels, and gladly would get in, when on the contrary they that are within strive how they should get out.
Heywood, Anna and Philila (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 310).

In our river Ishnia eel pouts were caught as well as crustacians and crawfish, the last tumbled of themselves in the weels set for them, or into ordinary baskets.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 579.

2. In her., a bearing representing a kind of eel-pot or fish-pot, composed of strips or slats with open spaces between. Sometimes the number of these slats is mentioned in the blazon.

weel[3] (wēl), adv. and a. A Scotch form of well[2].

weem (wēm), n. [Cf. Gael. uamha, a cave.] An earth-house; an artificial cave or subterranean building. [Scotch.]

ween† (wēn), n. [< ME. wene, wen, < AS. wen, f. wēna, m., hope, weening, expectation, = OS. wān = OFries. wēn, hope, = D. waan, opinion, conjecture, = OHG. MHG. wān, G. wahn, illusion, false hope, = Icel. vān, expectation, = Goth. wēns, expectation; from the root of win: see win.] Doubt; conjecture.

I wol ben here, withouten any wene.
* Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1562.

For lyt and delh, withouten wene,
Is in his blande.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4888.

ween (wēn), v. [< ME. wenen, < AS. wēnan (pret. wende, pp. wended, wenede), hope, expect, imagine, = OS. wānian = OFries. wēna = D. wanen, think, fancy, = Lith. wanoti, fancy, = OHG. wānan, wānēn; MHG. wænen, G. wähnen = Icel. væna, hope (cf. Sw. vänta = Dan. vente), = Goth. wēnjan, expect; from the noun.] To be of opinion; have the notion; think; imagine; suppose. (Archaic.)

And whan thei wil fighte, thei wille schokken hem to gidre in a plomp, that, al there be xxxm mo, men schalle not wenen that there be xx and mm.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 282.

But trewely I wende, as in this cas,
Nought have agilt, ne deem to love trespas.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 462.

Prosperitie . . . may be discontinued by moe wayes than you would ween have went.
Sir T. More, Cumfort against Tribulation (1573) fol. 34.

Earle Robert would needes set forward, weening to get all the glory to himselfe before the comming of the boate.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 30.

Ye ween to hear a melting tale
Of two true lovers in a dale.
Scott, L. of L. M., ii. 29.

Though never a dream the rosen sent
Of science or love's compliment,
I ween they smelt as sweet.
Mrs Browning, Deserted Garden.

weenong-tree (we nong tre), n. See Tetrameles.

weep[1] (wēp), v.; pret. and pp. wept, ppr. weeping. [< ME. weepen, weopen (pret. weep, wep, weop, wop, wep, pl. wepen, wepe, wepen, later wepte), weep, wail, shed tears, < AS. wēpan (pret. wēop), cry aloud, wail, = OS. wōpan, cry aloud, = OFries. wēpa = OHG. wuofan, wuofjan (pret. wuof), MHG. wuofen, wüefen = Icel. æpa (pret. æpti), cry, shout, = Goth. wōpjan (pret. wōpida), cry out, weep; from a noun, AS. wōp, clamor, outcry, = OS. wōp = OHG. wuof, wuaf, outcry, lament, = Icel. óp, a shout; cf. Russ. vopite, sob, wail, lament. Not connected with E. whoop, which is prop. hoop.] I. intrans. 1. To express sorrow, grief, or anguish by outcry; wail; lament; in more modern usage, to shed tears.

The first of the Centre seyn that Adam and Eve wepten upon that Mount an 100 Zeer, whan they weren dryven out of Paradys.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 199.

In al this world ther nis so cruwel herte
That it ne sholde have sorwen for hire peynes smerte,
So tendrely she wepte both eye and morwe.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 724.

To whom he seyde: "Wepe ye not nor mourne me, ye doughters of Jherusalem, but wepe ye vpon your owne self and vpon your children."
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 28.

They all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him.
Acts xx. 37.

Then they for sudden joy did weep.
Shak., Lear, I. 4. 191 (song).

The Indian elephant is known sometimes to weep.
Darwin, Express. of Emotions, p. 167.

2. To shed or flow as tears.

The blood weeps from my heart.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 4. 58.

3. To exude drops; drop water; drip: hence, to rain.

Wet heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'erflow?
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 1. 222.

4. To give out moisture; be very damp.

Clayes weepe.
Un ortoals, whose teres beth right swete.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 177.

It is a delitious place for prospect and yet this kette, but the soile cold and weeping clay.
Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 17, 1692.

5. To have drooping branches; be pendent; droop: as, a weeping tree; the weeping willow.

To weep Irish, to express or affect sympathetic grief by wailing and shedding tears: keen.

say to the Egyptians did not weep Irish with fained and counterfeit tears.
Fuller, Pisgah-sight, II. xii. 1. (Davies.)

Weeping ash, the variety pendula of the European ash, Fraxinus excelsior, having the branches strongly drooping instead of upward. — Weeping birch, a variety of the white birch, Betula alba, of a weeping habit, common in Europe, and often cultivated for ornament. Its sheets when young are quite smooth, but when mature are of a bright chocolate-brown covered with little white warts. — Weeping eczema, eczema attended with considerable exudation. [Colloq.] — Weeping grass, a grass, Microlæna stipoides, . . . Australia and New Zealand, so called doubtless from the form of its panicle. It is a perennial grass, keeping green through the year and valued for grazing. Maclay, Select Extra-tropic Plants. — Weeping oak. See oak. — Weeping pipe, a small pipe connected with a tank or water-supply pipe, and designed to allow a little water to escape at intervals so as to preserve the seal in traps. — Weeping poplar. See poplar. — Weeping rock, a porous rock from which water oozes. — Weeping sinew, a gathering of fluid in the synovial sheath of a tendon; ganglion. — Weeping willow. See willow[1].

II. trans. 1. To lament; bewail; bemoan.

Pensive she sat, revolving fates to come,
And wept her godlike son's approaching doom.
Pope, Iliad, xxiv. 118.

Nor is it
Wiser to weep a true occasion lost,
But trim our sails, and let old bygones be,
While fresh occasion tempts?
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

To weep his obsequies.
Dryden, Æneid, ix. 568.

2. To shed or let fall drop by drop, as tears; give out in drops.

Sithen thou hast wepen [var. wopen] many a drope.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 941.

Sir Gawein that thes of hadde grete pite hit toke with gladde chere and myrt, and wepte right tendirly water with his iven vndir his helme.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 477.

Weep your tears
Into the channel.
Shak., J. C., i. 4. 63.

Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm.
Milton, P. L., iv. 248.

3. To spend or consume in weeping; exhaust in tears: usually followed by away, out, or the like.

Weep my life away.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes.
Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 99.

To weep millstones†. See millstone.

weep[1] (wēp), n. [< ME. wepe, wep, a later form, after the verb, of wop, < AS. wop, clamor, cry: see weep[1], v.] 1†. Weeping, a fit of weeping.

She began to bresle a wepe anon.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 408.

Wid rewelt lole, and sorwe, and wepe.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2338.

2. Exudation; sweat, as of a gum-tree; a leak, as in the joint of a pipe. [Obsolete, colloq., or trade use.]

weep[2]†, n. [Imitative.] Same as peewee for pewit. Also wype, wipe.

weepable† (wē'pa-bl), a. [Early mod. E. wepable; < weep[1] + -able.] Exciting or moving to tears; lamentable; grievous. Bp. Pecock.

weeper (wē'pėr), n. [< weep[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who weeps; one who sheds tears; specifically, a hired mourner at a funeral.

If you have saved God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers, tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, ii. 6.

Laughing is easy, but the wonder how
What store of brine supplied the weeper's eyes.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x. 46.

2. Something worn conventionally as a badge of mourning. (a) A strip of white linen or muslin worn on the end of the sleeve like a cuff. The term is also used for the band of crape worn as a mark of mourning.

Our . . . mourners clap bits of muslin on their sleeves, and these are called weepers.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xcvi.

There was not a widow in all the country who went to such an expense for black bombazine. She had her beautiful hair confined in crimped caps and her weepers came over her elbows.
Thackeray, Bluebeard's Ghost.

(b) A long hatband, like a scarf, of crape or other black stuff, worn by men at a funeral.

It is a funereal street Old Parr Street, certainly: the carriages which drive there ought to have feathers on the roof, and the hatters who open the doors should wear weepers.
Thackeray, Philip, ii.

(c) The long black crape veil worn by a widow in her weeds.

Most thankful I shall be to see you with a couple of pounds' worth less of crape. . . . If anybody was to marry me flattering himself I should wear those hideous weepers two years for him, he'd be deceived by his own vanity, that's all.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxxx.

3. Anything resembling a weeper in senses 1 and 2 in shape or use.

The fire were hung with weepers of black green moss.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 189.

The eyes with which it [the aquarium] longs to weep are rightly called weepers, being small rectangular openings in the side walls, through which all the water collected and collecting on the outside of the museum pours into the inside.
New York Tribune, February 2, 1880.

4. The South American capuchin monkey, Cebus capucinus.

weepful (wēp'ful), a. [< weep[1], n., + -ful.] Full of weeping; mournful. Hyclif.

weeping (wē'ping), n. [< ME. weping, wepinge, wepynge; verbal n. of weep[1], v.] Wailing; lamentation; shedding of tears.

With moche weping and sorwe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8488.

There shall be . . . weeping and gnashing of teeth.
Mat. viii. 12.

weeping-cross (wē'ping-krôs), n. A cross, often of stone, erected on or by the side of a highway, at which penitential devotions were performed.

One is a kind of weeping cross, Jack,
A gentle purgatory.
Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, i. 1.

For here I mourn for your, our publike losse,
And doe my penance at the weeping crosse.
Wither, Prince Henry's Obsequies.

To return or come home by weeping-cross†, to suffer defeat in some adventure; meet with repulse or failure; hence, to repent of having taken a certain course or engaged in a certain undertaking.

The judgement stands, onely this verdit too
Had you before the law foreseen the losse,
You had not now come home by weeping crosse.
Heywood, If you Know not me (Works, ed. 1874, I. 265).

But the time will come when, comming home by Weeping-Crosse, thou shalt confesse that it was better to be at home. Lyly, Euphues and his England.

weepingly (wē'ping-li), adv. [< weeping + *-ly*².] With weeping; in tears.

She took her son into her arms weepingly laughing.
Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ.

weeping-ripe† (wē'ping-rīp), a. Ready to weep.

The king was weeping ripe for a good word.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 274.

weeping-spring (wē'ping-spring), n. A spring that very slowly discharges water.

weeping-widow (wē'ping-wid'ō), n. The guinea-hen flower, Fritillaria Meleagris. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

weeply† (wēp'li), a. [< ME. weple, < weep + *-ly*¹.] Weeping; tearful.

I . . . markede my weply compleynte with office of poyntel. Chaucer, Boethius, i. prose 1.

weepy (wē'pi), a. [< weep + *-y*¹.] Moist; springy; exuding moisture; oozy; seepy: as, weepy clay; weepy stone. [Prov. Eng.]

weerish†, a. Same as wearish.

weesand†, n. An old spelling of weasand.

weese-allon (wēs'al-on), n. The jäger or skua-gull. See dirty allen. Also wease allan, weese allan, weese-aulin.

weesel†, n. An old spelling of weasel.

weet¹†, v. An obsolete form of *wit*¹.

weet¹ (wēt), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of *wit*¹.

weet² (wēt), n., a., and v. A dialectal form of wet.

weet³ (wēt), a. A dialectal form of *wight*².

weet⁴ (wēt), n. [Imitative.] The peetweet, or common sandpiper. See Tringoides. Weet-my-feet, an imitative name for the common quail, Coturnix communis (or dactylisonans). [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

weet⁵ (wēt), v. i. [See *weet*⁴, n.] To cry as a weet or peetweet.

A sand-piper glided weet-weeting along the shore.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

weet-bird (wēt'bėrd), n. [< *weet*⁴ + *bird*¹. Cf. peetweet.] The wryneck, Iynx torquilla: from its cry. See cut under wryneck.

weeting†, weetingly†. See witting, wittingly.

weetless†, a. An obsolete form of witless.

weetweet (wēt'wēt), n. Same as *weet*⁴.

weever¹†, n. Same as weaver-bird. Latham, 1782.

weever² (wē'vėr), n. [Formerly spelled weaver, and appar. a particular use of *weaver*¹. Zoologists now connect it with the L. specific name vipera, as if weever were a var. of the obs. wiver.] Either one of two British fishes of the genus Trachinus, the greater, T. draco, 10 or 12 inches long, and the lesser, T. vipera, of half this length; hence, any member of the Trachinidæ (which see). These fishes have sharp dorsal and opercular spines, with which they may inflict a painful and serious wound when incautiously handled. It does not appear that the spines convey a specific poison, but they are smeared with a slime which causes the puncture they inflict to fester, like the similar wound from the tail-spine of the sting-ray. See cut under Trachinus.

weever-fish (wē'vėr-fish), n. Same as *weever*².

weevil (wē'vl), n. [Early mod. E. also weevell, weavel, wivel; < ME. wevel, wivel, wevyl, wyvel, < AS. wifel, in an early gloss wibil, a beetle (cf. wibba in scearn-wibba, dung-beetle), = OS. wivil = MLG. wevel = D. wevel = OHG. wibil, wibel, MHG. wibel, G. wiebel, wibel, a weevil, = Icel. yfill in comp. tord-yfill, dung-beetle.] 1. A snout-beetle; any coleopterous insect of the section Rhynchophora (which see). The term is more properly restricted to the long-snouted forms of the family Curculionidæ, but is also extended (beyond the Rhynchophora) to the family Bruchidæ. The weevils are almost exclusively plant-feeders, and [illegible] live in nuts, grains, the stems of plants, rolled-up leaves, catkins, or fruit, while others are leaf-miners, or [illegible] gall-like excrescences on the stems or roots of plants. Brachytarsus contains the only carnivorous forms, and these are said to live on bark-lice. Some forms are semi-aquatic, as the water-weevil, Lissorhoptrus simplex. See phrases following, and cuts under Anthonomus, Balaninus, bean-weevil, Bruchus, Calandra, clover-weevil, Conotrachelus, diamond-beetle, Epicærus, pea-weevil, Pissodes, plum-gouger, Rhynchophora, and seed-weevil.

The wheat which is not turned is eaten with wivels.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 94.

About this time it chanced a pretty secret to be discovered to preserve their corne from the fly, or weauell, which did in a manner as much hurt as the rats.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 161.

The Hundred which went to Bermuda the 17th October, now returned, bringing corn and goats from Virginia (for the weevils had taken the corn at Bermuda before they came there). Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 150.

2. Any insect which damages stored grain, as the fly-weevil, a local name in the southern United States for the grain-moth, Gelechia cerealella. See grain-moth, 2.—3. The larva of the wheat-midge, Diplosis tritici. Also called red weevil. C. V. Riley. [Western U. S.]—Apple-blossom weevil, Anthonomus pomorum, which attacks the flower-buds of the apple in Europe.—Apple-weevil, Anthonomus quadrigibbus, a weevil which infests the fruit of the apple in the United States. Commonly called apple curculio. See apple-curculio, and cut under Anthonomus.—Cabbage-weevil, Ceuthorhynchus napi, whose larva bores the crown of young cabbages in Europe, and which is supposed to have been introduced recently into the United States.—Chestnut-weevil, Balaninus caryatrypes, a very long-nosed weevil whose larva is the common chestnut-grub of the United States.—Clover-weevil. (a) See clover-weevil (with cut). (b) Phytonomus punctatus, whose larva feed on the leaves of clover in Europe and the United States. (c) Sitones crinitus and S. flavescens, which feed upon the leaves of clover in Europe, their larvæ boring in the roots. The latter has been introduced into the United States.—Cranberry-weevil, Anthonomus suturalis.—Grape-weevil. (a) Craponius inæqualis, which attacks the fruit of the grape in the United States. (b) Otiorhynchus sulcatus and O. picipes, which feed upon the leaves and shoots of the grape in Europe. (c) Rhynchites betuleti, a formidable grape-pest in Europe, which rolls the leaves of the vine.—Hazelnut-weevil, Balaninus nucum.—Hickory-nut weevil, Balaninus nasicus, whose larva is found commonly in hickory-nuts in the United States.—Imbricated weevil, Epicærus imbricatus, of the United States. See Epicærus (with cut).—Ironwood leaf-weevil, an undetermined weevil which mines the leaves of ironwood in the United States.—Leaf-rolling weevil, any weevil whose larva lives in a leaf-roll, as Attelabus bipunctulatus of the United States, whose larva rolls the leaves of oak.—New York weevil, Ithycerus noveboracensis, the adult of which gnaws the twigs of fruit-trees in the United States, while its larva devours the interior of oak and hickory twigs.—Oak-bark weevil, Magdalis olyra, which lives under the bark of oak in the United States.—Palm-weevil, Rhynchophorus palmarum, R. ferrugineus, and allied species, which bore into the trunk of palm-trees. See palm-worm, under worm.—Pear-shaped weevil, any weevil of the genus Apion, as A. apricans, an enemy to clover in England. See cuts under clover-weevil and seed-weevil.—Pitch-eating weevil, Pachylobius picivorus,

New York Weevil (Ithycerus noveboracensis).
a, stem punctured by larva; b, larva; c, beetle.

which lives under the bark of the pitch-pine in the United States.—Potato-stalk weevil, Trichobaris (or Baridius) trinotatus, a weevil whose larva bores the stalks of the potato in the middle United States.—Quince-weevil, Conotrachelus cratægi, which bores into the fruit of the quince in the United States.—Rhubarb-weevil, Lixus concavus, which bores the stems of rhubarb in the middle United States.—Rose-weevil, Aramigus fulleri, whose larva burrows in the roots of the rose.—Strawberry-weevil. (a) The strawberry crown-borer (which see, without, under strawberry), Tyloderma fragariæ, whose larva bores into the root-crown of the strawberry in the United States. (b) Anthonomus musculus, the adult of which destroys the blossoms and flower-stalks of the strawberry in the eastern United States.—White-pine weevil. See Pissodes (with cut). (See also acorn-weevil, bean-weevil, diamond-weevil, grain-weevil, [illegible].)

[illegible]

weeviled, weevilled (wē'vld), a. [< weevil + *-ed*².] Infested or infected with weevils, as grain.

weevily, weevilly (wē'vl-i), a. [< weevil + *-y*¹.] Same as weeviled.

wee-wow¹ (wē'wou), a. [Appar. a redupl. var. of *wow*², < AS. woh, crooked.] Wrong. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wee-wow² (wē'wou), v. [< *wee-wow*¹, a.] To twist about in an irregular manner. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

weezel†, n. An old spelling of weasel.

weft¹ (weft), n. [< ME. weft, < AS. weft, [illegible] (= Icel. veftr, also vipta, vifta), threads woven into and crossing the warp; with formative -t, < wefan, weave: see *weave*¹.] 1. The threads, taken together, which run across the web from side to side, or from selvage to selvage. Also called woof.

The weft was so called from its being "wafted" in and out of the warp; it is also often called the woof, though more correctly the woof is the same as the web or finished stuff. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 208.

2. In bot., a name sometimes given to a felt-like stratum produced in certain fungi by abundant closely interwoven hyphæ.

The peripheral portion of the delicate hyphal weft.
De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 217.

weft²†. An obsolete form of the preterit and past participle of *wave*¹.

So can thy irrevocable desteny bee wefte.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 36.

weft³†, n. Same as waif.

weft⁴ (weft), n. A dialectal form of waft, 3.

The strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 833.

weftage† (wef'tāj), n. [< *weft*¹ + -age.] Texture: the style or quality of the web, as of any textile fabric.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned, whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew, Museum. (Latham.) weft-fork (weft'fôrk), n. 1. A device employed in some looms to lay in, piece by piece, a filling of slats, whalebone, palm-leaf, or other stiffening material.—2. An early arrangement for stopping a loom in case of the failure of the weft-thread. It is essentially a weighted lever which is supported by the weft-thread, and performs its action by falling in the event of the breakage or failure of the thread.

weft-hook (weft'hůk), n. A tool used to draw the filling through the warp in some kinds of hand-weaving, as in slat-weaving and some narrow-ware weaving or ribbon-weaving.

wegge†, n. A Middle English form of *wedge*¹.

weght, weigh³†, n. See way.

weght, n. See weight.

weghtnes†, n. Same as weightiness.

wehee†, n. See wighee.

wehrgeld, wehrgelt, n. See wergild.

wehrlite (wār'līt), n. [Named after Aloys Wehrle, an Austrian metallurgist and mining official (1791–1835).] A mineral obtained from Deutsch-Pilsen, in Hungary, in steel-gray folia with bright metallic luster and high specific gravity (8.4). It consists essentially of bismuth and tellurium, and some analyses show the presence of a small amount of silver. It is allied to tetradymite, but its exact composition is uncertain, and it is possible that more than one species may be included under the name.

wehr-wolf†, n. See werwolf.

wei†, n. An old spelling of way.

weibyeite, n. A rare fluo-carbonate of the metals of the cerium group, occurring in minute white crystals in southern Norway.

weid (wēd), n. Same as *weed*³.

Weierstrassian (vī-er-stras'i-an), a. Of or pertaining to, or named from, K. T. W. Weierstrass, a German mathematician (born 1816).

Weierstrassian function. (a) One of the functions used in Weierstrass's method of treating elliptic functions. (b) The function

$$y = \sum_{0}^{\infty} a_n \cos(b^n \pi x).$$

In certain cases, as when $p = 1$, $b > 1$, $ab > 1 + \frac{3}{2}\pi$, this function, although continuous, has no differential coefficient. In fact, the curve of the function, when seen at a distance, appears like a simple curve of sines; but when it is magnified, small waves are seen upon it; under a higher magnifying power, wavelets on these waves; and so on ad infinitum, so that, although $f(x+h) - fx$ becomes infinitesimal with h, yet it has no limiting ratio to h.

Weigelia (wī-ģē'li-ä), n. [Properly Weigelia; named for C. E. Weigel, a German botanist.] See Diervilla.

Weigert's method. The method of tracing the course of the medullated nerve-fibers by hardening and staining them.

weigh¹ (wā), v. [Early mod. E. also way; < ME. weyen, weyhen, wegen (pret. wei, wai, wege, wew, weigh, pp. weien, wege, wein, wowin), < AS. wegan (pret. wæg, pp. wegen), carry, bear, also intr. move, = OFries. wega, weia = MD. weghen, D. wegen, weigh, = OHG. wegan, MHG. wegen, move, G. wegen in comp. bewegen, move, also in var. forms wiegen, rock, wägen, weigh, = Icel. vega, move, carry, lift, weigh, = Sw. väga, weigh, = Dan. veie, weigh, = Goth. gawigan, move, shake about, = OBulg. vesti, go, move, = L. vehere, carry, = Gr. [illegible], = Skt.

go, move. The orig. sense 'carry' passed into that of 'raise, lift,' and thence into that of 'weigh.' Hence ult. (< AS. wegan, etc.) way[1], wagon, wain[1], way[1], weight[1], wish, and (< L. vehere) vehicle, convection, etc.: see esp. way[1].] I. trans. 1. To raise or lift; bear up: as, to weigh anchor; to weigh a ship that has been sunk.

And so ye same morwyng we weyde our ancre and made sayle, and come into the foresayd haben at Mylo.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 68.

[The ship] struck upon a rock, and, being forced to run ashore to save her men, could never be weighed since, although she lies a great height above the water.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 3.

2. To bear up or balance in order to determine the weight of; determine the relative heaviness of (something) by comparison in a balance with some recognized standard; ascertain the number of pounds, ounces, etc., in: as, to weigh sugar; to weigh gold.

Like stuffe have I read in S. Francis Legend, of the ballance wherein mens deedes are weighed, and the Deuill lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 146.

The hunter took up his rifle instinctively from the corner of the room, weighed it in both hands held palm upward.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 230.

3. To consider or examine for the purpose of forming an opinion or coming to a conclusion; compare; estimate deliberately and maturely; balance; ponder: as, to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a scheme.

In nolde corsage ogbte been arrete,
And weyen every thing by equitee
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 498.

Wherefore I pray you weigh this with yourself the better, and see whether you can copy how your doctrine is doubtful. J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853) II. 130.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., i.

Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh.
Shak., M. N. D., iv. 2. 140.

4†. To consider as worthy of notice; make account of; care for; regard; esteem.

You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 67.

You are light, gentlemen,
Nothing to weigh your hearts
Fletcher and Shirley, Night Walker, i. 1.

5. To overweigh or overpower; burden, oppress. See the following phrases. To weigh down. (a) To preponderate over.

He weighs King Richard down.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 4. 80.

(b) To oppress with weight or heaviness; overburden; depress.

Thou (sleep) so most will weigh my eyelids down
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1.

II. intrans. 1. To weigh anchor; get under way or in readiness to sail.

When he was aboard his bark he weighed and set sail, and shot off all his guns.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 232.

The vessel weighs forsake the shore,
And bounding to the sight.
Cowper, The Bird's Nest.

2. To have weight, literally or figuratively.

Alliances how near soever weigh but light in the Scales of State.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 117.

3. To be or amount in heaviness or weight; be of equal effect with in the balance: as, a nugget weighing several ounces; a load which weighs two tons. The terms expressing the weight are in the adversial objective. That which a balance measures is the proportionate acceleration of mass toward the center of the earth. This is equal to their proportionate masses; and mass is the important quantity determined. The weight, or attraction of gravitation (less the centrifugal force), differs at different stations, and is not determined by the operation of weighing.

And the Frensshe kyng gaue hym a goblet of syluer weyinge iiii. marke.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. lxxxvii.

Master Featherstone, O Master Featherstone, you may now make your fortunes weigh ten stone of feather more than ever they did!
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

4. To be considered as important; have weight in the intellectual balance.

He finds . . . that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands . . . before him.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ii.

Such consideration weighs with them.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxi.

5. To bear heavily; press hard.

Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart.
Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 45.

6. To consider; reflect.

My tongue was never oil'd with "Here, an't like you" "There, I beseech you", weigh. I am a soldier,
And truth I covet only, my fine terms, sir.
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1.

The soldiers, less weighing because less knowing, clamoured to be led on against any danger.
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

To weigh down, to sink by its own weight or burden.

The softness of the stalk, which maketh the bough, being over-laden, . . . weigh down.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 616.

To weigh in, in sporting, to ascertain one's weight before the contest. [Applied to jockeys.] White Rose, I. xiv.

weigh[1] (wā), n. [< weigh, v.] A certain quantity or measure, estimated by weight; a measure of weight (compare sack); in the South Wales coal-fields, a weight of ten tons.

weigh[2] (wā), n. A misspelling of way[1], in the phrase under way, due to confusion with the phrase to weigh anchor.

We lost no time in getting under weigh again.
E. Paylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 230.

weigh[3], n. See weigh.

weighable (wā'a-bl), a. [< weigh[1] + -able.] Capable of being weighed.

weighage (wā'āj), n. [< weigh[1] + -age.] A rate or toll paid for the weighing of goods. Imp. Dict.

weigh-bauk (wā'bak), n. The beam of a balance; hence, in the plural, a pair of scales. [Scotch.]

Captain, in the air in a pair of weigh-bauks now upnow down. Scott, Redgauntlet, xxiv. (Encyc. Dict.) weigh-beam (wā'bēm), n. A weighing-scale carried by a wooden or iron horse, for convenience in weighing freight at a dock or railroad-station: a portable scale used by custom-house weighers, etc.

weigh-board (wā'bōrd), n. In mining. See waybord.

weigh-bridge (wā'brij), n. A weighing machine for weighing carts, wagons, etc., with their load.

weigh-can (wā'kan), n. A reservoir from which supplies are drawn, so connected with a scale that any desired weight may be conveniently drawn out.

weighed† (wād), a. Balanced; experienced.

A young man not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

weigher (wā'er), n. [< ME. weyere (= MLG. MHG. weger); < weigh[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which weighs; an officer whose duty it is to weigh commodities or test weights. 2. The equator.

This our earth is elyped also the weyere (equator) of the day, for, whan the sonne is in the heved of Aries and Libra, thanne ben the daies and the nyhtes like of lengthe in the world. Chaucer, Astrolabe, I. sec. 14.

Packer and weigher. See packer.

weighership (wā'er-ship), n. [< weigher + -ship.] The office of weigher.

weigh-house (wā'hous), n. A building (generally of a public character) at or in which goods are weighed by suitable apparatus.

He shall, with an hour's lying in the pulpit, get enough (not thirty or forty sturdy lubbers a month long, of which the weakest shall be as strong in the belly, when he hath eat onto the matter, as the mightiest porter in the weigh-house.
Lodge, Anatomie of Moris, etc. (Parker Soc., 1879), p. 70.

weighing, n. [< ME. weyinge, weyenge, verbal n. of weigh[1], v.] 1. The act of ascertaining weight. 2. As much as is weighed at once: as, a weighing of beef. Imp. Dict. 3. Same as weighment.

weighing-cage (wā'ing kāj), n. A cage in which living animals, as pigs, sheep, and calves, may be conveniently weighed.

weighing-house (wā'ing hous), n. Same as weigh-house.

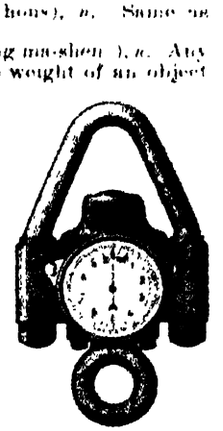
weighing-machine (wā'ing ma-shēn'), n. Any contrivance by which the weight of an object may be ascertained as the common balance, spring-balance, steelyard, etc. See cuts under balance and steelyard. The term is now generally applied only to those contrivances which are employed for ascertaining the weight of heavy bodies as the term is used for the purpose of excluding the weights of vehicles, machines for weighing other machines or articles such as goods, as large casks, bales, etc. The lowest of the weighing-machines was only capable of ascertaining the weight of a single article, within which moved a lighter parcel platform, the space being filled with waste-oil, the long arm of it attached to the cylinder and the ring below to the piston. When the object to be weighed is hung on the ring, the piston is drawn on the oil, and this passes by a channel to a gage which indicates by the motion of the index on the dial the weight in pounds and tons.



Hydraulic weighing-machine.

weighing-scoop (wā'ing-skōp), n. A combined scoop and spring-balance. The spring is in the handle of the scoop, and while the scoop is being filled the spring is held in place by a stop controlled by the thumb. On raising the loaded scoop the stop is released, and the weight of the contents is indicated on the handle. K. H. Knight.

weigh-lock (wā'lok), n. A canal-lock at which barges are weighed and their tonnage is settled.

weighman (wā'man), n.; pl. weighmen (-men). A weigher. [Rare.]

Two weeks after the coopers strike came the strike of the light-men and weighmen.
U. S. Gov. Rep., No. lxv. (1887), p. 208.

weigh-shaft (wā'shaft), n. In a steam-engine, a rocking shaft or rocker-shaft.

weight[1] (wāt), n. [Formerly also waught; < ME. weight, weihte, wei, he, weght, wight, wiht, < AS. gewiht, wiht, weight, = MLG. wicht, gewicht = D. gewigt = OHG. gawiht, MHG. gewicht, gewihte, G. gewicht, weight, = Icel. vætt = Sw. vigt = Dan. vægt, weight; with formative t, < AS. wegan, etc., raise, lift: see weigh[1]. The reg. mod. form would be weight (parallel with night, sight, etc.); the present vowel-form is due to conformity with the verb weigh[1].] 1. Downward force of a body; gravity; heaviness; ponderousness; more exactly, the resultant of the force of the earth's gravitation and of the centrifugal pressure from its axis of rotation, considered as a property of the body affected by it. Considerable confusion has existed between weight and mass, the latter being the quantity of matter as so named by the ratio of the momentum of a body to its velocity. Weight, in this the proper sense of the word, is something which varies with the latitude of the station at which the heavy body is, being greater by $\frac{1}{194}$ of itself at the poles than at the equator, it also varies coincidently with the elevation above the sea ($\frac{1}{3}$ for every kilometer). The weights of different bodies at one and the same station were proved, by Newton's experiments with pendulums of different material, to be in the ratio of their masses, and irrespective of their chemical composition; consequently, a balance which shows the equality of weight of two bodies at one station also shows the equality of their masses. In determining the specific gravity of a body, it is hung by a fine thread to one pan of the balance, and immersed completely in water. The reduced number of pounds, ounces, etc., which is required in the other pan to balance the first, under these circumstances, is called the weight of the body in water. In like manner, we speak of the weight in air and the weight in water. These expressions forbid our conceiving of weight as synonymous with the quantity of matter, and yet, when a pound is said to be a unit of weight, although it is intended to be carried up mountains and to distant planets, mass or quantity of matter, must be understood, since there is no important quantity but the quantity of matter which a pound or a kilogram measures. The confusion is increased when the pound is defined, as it still is in the United States, by the weight of a certain standard in air, without reference to the height of the barometer and thermometer. In the older books on mechanics, a pound is taken as a force, and the quantity of matter is obtained by dividing the weight by the measure of gravity; but now both the theoretical books and the legal definitions of the standards used in weighing make the pound, kilo, etc., to be masses, or quantities of matter, whose weight is obtained by multiplying them by the acceleration of gravity at any station. Nevertheless, the older system still finds many supporters. It was long after Galileo had finally established the law of falling bodies before it occurred to anybody that weight was a force. Gravity, so far as common observation shows, draws bodies to the earth alone, and that in parallel lines; and Galileo had shown that it accelerates all bodies alike, whether they are great or small, so that there was nothing to suggest the idea of force, especially as that idea was then in its infancy, and had not attained its present prominence in the minds of men. Weight in those days being looked upon as a property of single bodies, and not as subsisting between pairs of bodies, was necessarily confounded with mass, and a mental inertia or natural clinging to old conceptions, kept up the confusion after Newton had demonstrated the true law of gravitation. For the units of weight, see def. 5. Abbreviated wt.

Alla that I delighte
Of pured gold a thousand pound of wighte.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 822.

We delight in pounds heap'd on their shattered sides
The more whole weight here met with swelling tides.
Addison, The Campaign.

Though a pound of a gramme [= 15 grains] of the same all over the world, the weight of a pound or a gramme is greater in high latitudes than near the equator.
Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, Art. xviii.

2. Mass; relative quantity of matter. — 3. A heavy mass; specifically, something used on account of the weight of its mass. Thus, the pieces of the weights that a man holds in his hands in leaping or jumping he so the addition they impart to the body in its descent and dragging him down is a disadvantage, but the weights of a clock are by giving a downward pull and their momentum is practically nothing.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 926.

Both men and women in Cochin account it a great deformity to have wide ears, which they strive by art by hanging weights on them till they reach to their shoulders.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 466.

Impartial Justice holds her equal Scales,
Till stronger Virtue does the Weight incline.
Prior, Ode to the Queen, st. 10

? When I said I would match you, I meant with even weight, you little four-stone lightfoot than I. "Very well, but I am content to carry weight." Scott, Rob Roy, iii.

4. Specifically, a body of determinate mass, intended to be used on a balance or scale for measuring the weight or mass of the body in the other pan or part of the scale (as the platform in a platform scale). — 5 A system of units for expressing the weight or mass of bodies. Avoirdupois weight is founded on the avoirdupois pound or pound, which is equal to 453.59243 grams. It is divided into 16 ounces, and each ounce into 16 drams, 112 (in the United States commonly 100) pounds make a hundredweight, and 20 hundredweights a ton. (See ton.) The dram is 1¾ pounds. Troy weight is founded on the troy pound, which is 373.242 grams. It is divided into 12 ounces, each ounce into 20 pennyweights, and each pennyweight into 24 grains. But formerly the pennyweight was divided into 32 real grains. There was also an ideal subdivision of the grain into 20 mites, each of 24 droites, each of 20 perits, each of 24 blanks. The goldsmith's method divided the ounce troy into 24 carats of 4 grains each for gold and silver, and into 150 carats of 4 grains each for diamonds. Troy weight, formerly employed for many purposes, is now only used for gold and silver. Apothecaries' weight still used in the United States for dispensing medicine, divides the troy ounce into 8 drams, each dram into 3 scruples, and each scruple into 20 grains, which are identical with troy grains. For weight in the metric system, see metric.

6. Pressure; burden; care; responsibility.

A wise Christian never tries the weight
Of the execution of a law Explicit
But vnto those whom he most honoureth
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Works, i. 7

The weight of mighty Monarchies
Milton, P. L., ii. 307.

Why does that lucky Head, like a fair Flower,
Oppressed with Drops of a hard falling Show'r, Bend with the Weight of Grief? Congreve, Tot vnthis.

7. In coal mining, subsidence of the roof due to pressure from above, which takes effect as the coal is worked away. In long wall working, the weight is usually of importance as causing the coal after it has been holed to "get itself," that is, to break down without the necessity of using powder, wedges, or something similar. Properly, "weight" is the cause and "weighting" the result; but the two words are often used with nearly the same meaning.

8. Importance; specifically, the importance of a fact as evidence tending to establish a conclusion; efficacy; power of influencing the conduct of persons and the course of events; effective influence in general. In calculations by least squares, the weight assigned to an observation is its effect upon the result expressed by its equivalence to a certain number of concordant observations of standard accuracy.

It happens many times that, to urge and enforce the matter we speake of, we go still mounting by degrees and encreasing our speech with words or with sentences of more weight one then another, A is a figure of great both offtecte & ornament. . . We call this figure by the Greeke originall the Auancer or figure of encrease, because euery word that is spoken is one of more weight then another. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 177.

For well anenghe they vnderstood
The matter was of weight
Battle of Balrinne (Child's Ballads, VII. 209).

As men are in quality and as their services are in weight for the public good so likewise their rewards and encouragements . . . must let some what declare how the state itself doth accept them paste.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81

If the people of Ireland were a united nation, it is conceivable that their demand for autonomy would have weight. Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII. 468.

9. In med., a sensation of oppression or heaviness over the whole body or over a part of it, as the head or stomach. Atomic weight. See atomic. Dead weight, the pressure produced by a heavy body supported in a state of rest by anything: used literally and figuratively.

The huge dead weight of stupidity and inbelonce is al ways ready to smother and toss enquiries.
Leslie Stephen, Life Thomas Ht, i. 317

I feel so free and well at
By the loss of that dear weight
Tennyson, Maud, xxv. 10.

Fisherman's weight. See fisherman. Gross weight, the weight before deduction for tare, trepanny, or other similar correction: in contradistinction to net or nett weight. Lazy, net, trou weight. See the qualifying words. Mercurial-weight thermometer. Same as air-weight thermometer (which see, under thermometer). Molecular weight, the weight of a molecule that of hydrogen being taken as the standard. Weight of an observation, the number of ordinary observations to which it is considered as equivalent in the determination of the most probable value. Compare def. 8. Weight of a reciprocant. See reciprocant. Weight of metal, the weight of [illegible] in the thickness of one thickness [illegible]. Weight of wind, in meteor., [illegible] an [illegible] furnished by the [illegible] of steps. The usual [illegible] according of water in a U tube depressed [illegible].

weight[1] (wāt), v. [< ME. weighten, < weight[1], n.] 1. To add or attach a weight or weights to; load with additional weight; add to the heaviness of.

Some of the [balance] poles are weighted at both ends, but ours are not. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor.

2. In dyeing, to load (the threads) with mineral or other foreign matters mixed with the dyes, for the purpose of making the fabrics appear thick and heavy.

Baryte . . . is used for weighting, that is, for giving weight and apparent body and firmness to inferior goods.
O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 74.

3. In founding, to bind (the parts of a flask) together by means of weights placed on the top, in order to prevent the bursting of the flask under the pressure of the liquid metal.

weight[2] (wāt), n. See wecht.

weightily (wā'ti-li), adv. In a weighty manner. (a) Heavily; ponderously. (b) With force or impressiveness; with moral power.

weightiness (wā'ti-nes), n. The state or quality of being weighty; ponderousness; heaviness, literally or figuratively; solidity; force; importance.

The weightiness that was upon their spirits and countenances keeping down the lightness that would have been upon us. T. Ellwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 102.

The weightiness of any argument. Locke.

The weightiness of the adventure. Sir J. Hayward.

weighting (wā'ting), n. [Verbal n. of weight[1], v.] In coal mining, subsidence or other disturbance in a coal-mine due to "weight," or pressure of the overlying mass of rock. A mine in which such subsidence is taking place is said to be "on the weight." [Eng.]

weightless (wāt'les), a. [< weight[1] + -less.] 1. Having no weight; imponderable; light.

That light and weightless down.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 93.

2. Of no importance or consideration.

And so they are of things so saddened to take upon them as from aloft so very weake and weightlesse discourses.
Bp. Hall, Apol. against Brownists, § 1.

weight-nail (wāt'nāl), n. In ship building, a nail somewhat similar to a deck-nail, but not so fine, and with a square head, used for fastening clents, etc.

weight-rest (wāt'rest), n. A form of lathe-rest which is held firmly upon the shears by a weight hung beneath. E. H. Knight.

weighty (wā'ti), a. [Early mod. E. also weighti, weaghty, < weight[1] + -y[1].] 1. Having considerable weight; heavy; ponderous.

Locke. I pray you, Uncle, give me this Dagger.
Glo. It is too weighty for your Grace to weare.
Shak., Rich. III. (fol. 1623), iii. 1.

2. Burdensome; hard to bear.

He was beholding to the Romanes, that eased him of so weighty a burthen, and lessened his cares of government.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 84

The cares of empire are great, and the burthen which lies upon the shoulders of princes very weighty.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. viii.

3. Important; serious; momentous; grave.

Not for no fauour nold promote thame
To that most great and weichty cure.
Lancelot, Dewtie of Kynges (E. E. T. S.), l. 236

This secret is so weighty 'twill require
A strong faith to conceal it.
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 1. 141

My head is full of thoughts
More weighty than thy life or death can be.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, ii. 2.

4. Adapted to affect the judgment or to convince; forcibly cogent.

Muskam the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.
Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 126.

Skilful diplomatists were surprised to hear the weighty observations which it seemed to the prince made on public affairs. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

5. Grave or serious in aspect or purport.

Thus . . .
That he is a weighty and a sett his brow.
Shak., Hen. VIII., Prol., l. 2.

She looked upon me with a weighty countenance, and fetched a deep sigh, crying out, "O the cumber and entanglements of this vain world!"
Penn, Travels in Holland, etc.

6. Authoritative; influential; important.

The weightiest men in the weightiest stations. Swift.

The grave and weighty men who listened to him approved his words. Bancroft, Hist. Const., II. 257.

7†. Severe; rigorous; afflictive.

We banish thee for ever . . .
If after two days' shine Athens contain thee
Attend our weighty pleasures.
Shak., T. of A., iii. 5. 103.

weik, v. See weel[3].

weil, n. Same as weel[2].

Weil's disease. An infectious disease, having a course of about ten days, characterized by jaundice, muscular pains, enlargement of the liver and spleen, and fever. Also called infectious jaundice.

weily, adv. A dialectal form of welly.

Well, I'm weily beaten, as they say in Lancashire.
Swift, Polite Conversation, ii. (Davies.)

Weingarten's theorem. See theorem.

Weinmannia (win-man'i-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1763), named after J. W. Weinmann, a German apothecary.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Saxifragaceæ and tribe Cunonieæ. It is characterized by flowers with imbricated sepals four or five, petals, eight or ten long stamens inserted on the base of a fleshy disk, and small oblong, commonly pilose seeds. There are about 60 species, principally of tropical or south temperate regions, occurring in America, Australia, New Zealand, and the Mascarene and Pacific islands. They are trees or shrubs with opposite branchlets, opposite coriaceous, often glandular leaves, odd-pinnate with a winged rachis. The small white flowers are disposed in simple terminal or axillary erect racemes, followed by small coriaceous two-celled capsules splitting into two sharp boat-like valves. Some species afford a soft light wood used in carpentry and cabinet-work. A Peruvian species yields an astringent bark utilized in tanning. W. tinctoria is employed in the Isle of Bourbon in dyeing red. W. pinnata, a tree with downy branches, native from the West Indies and Mexico to Guiana, is known in Jamaica as bastard boxwood. W. Benthamii, an evergreen tree of New South Wales, reaches 100 feet high; 4 others are Australian, and 2 occur in New Zealand, of which W. sylvicola, a small tree with blackish bark, is now cultivated in England, and W. racemosa is known as the tawaki-bark tree.

weir, wear[3] (wēr), n. [The spelling wey is irreg. and appar. Sc.; the proper spelling is weir, early mod. E. weer, were, sometimes ware; < ME. wer (dat. were), < AS. wer, a weir, dam, fence, hedge, inclosure, = G. wehr, a weir, dam, dike, = Icel. verr, a fenced-in landing place; from the root of AS. werian, protect, guard, defend, etc., also fence, dam: see wear[2].] 1. A dam erected across a river to stop and raise the water, as for the purpose of taking fish, of conveying a stream to a mill, of maintaining the water at the level required for navigating it, or for purposes of irrigation.

Half the river fell over a high weir, with all its appendages of locks, and half-ways and cut-banks, into the Nun's pool. Kingsley, Yeast, iii.

2. A fence, as of twigs or stakes, set in a stream for catching fish. Weirs differ from pounds principally in being constructed, in whole or in part, of brush or of narrow boards, with or without netting; and they are sometimes arranged so that at low tide a sand-bar cuts off the escape of the fish, leaving them in a basin, and allowing them to be taken at any time before a certain stage of rise of the next tide. Weirs are of two kinds, the shoal-water weir and the deep-water weir. The shoal-water weir, as illustrated in fig. 1, has a leader L, which is a row of stakes, generally woven with brush, leading out from the shore. Its extremity is at the entrance of the big pound M. The second pound is likewise of stakes filled with brush, and its entrance 30 feet wide. This leads by a passage 6 feet wide into the little pound N, and this into the pocket, which is a frame about 16 feet long and 10 feet wide, with sides of netting, and a board floor. The fish following the shore meet the leader, turn and follow it into the big pound; here they follow the side around until they pass into the little pound, and from that into the pocket, where they are left by the receding tide and taken out at low water. The deep-water weir (fig. 2) has a similar leader A, extending to the entrance of the big pound, or heart, B, beyond which are the small pound C and the bowl D, into which the fish finally go. The form of the inclosures in both cases leads the fish constantly forward, and they rarely or never find their way back through the passages. In both figures E represents the land or high-water mark, and F the low-water mark.

The day following we came to Chippanam, where the people were fled, but their weres afforded us fish.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

Deep-water weir. See def. 2. — Dry weir, a weir on a flat which is left bare at ebb-tide. — Half-tide weir, a fish-weir so placed that the fish taken can be removed at half-ebb or half tide, without waiting for low tide, as is generally done. — Lock-weir, a weir having a lock-chamber and gates. E. H. Knight. — Shoal-water weir. See def. 2. — Slat weir. See slat[1].

weirangle, n. Same as warrongle. Willoughby.

weird (werd), n. [Formerly also wierd; < ME. werde, wurde, wirde, wyrde, wurde, < AS. wyrd, gewyrd, wurd, destiny, fate, also, personified, one of the Fates, = OS. wurth = MD. weird, wirth = OHG. wurt, MHG. wurde, fate, death, = Icel. urthr, fate, one of the three Norns or Fates), < weorthan (pret. pl. wurdon), etc., become, happen: see worth[1]. The spelling weird is Sc.] 1. Fate; destiny; luck.

The wirdes that were elegen destines.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2580.

I was youngest,
And aye my weird it was the hardest.
Cospatrick (Child's Ballads, I. 155).

My weird maun be fulfilled.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xii.

For the personification of Weird or Destiny, see Kemble, Saxons in England, i. 402: "It shall befall us as Weird decideth, the lord of every man."
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 386.

2. A prediction.

His mither in her weirds
Foretald his death at Troy.
Poems in Buchan Dialect, p. 18. (Jamieson.)

3. A spell; a charm. Scott. (Imp. Dict.)—4. That which comes to pass; a fact.

After word comes weird, fair fall them that call me Madam.
Scotch Proverb. (Jamieson.)

5. The Fates personified. [Rare.]

Wo worth (quoth the Weirds) the wights that thee wrought.
Montgomerie, in Watson's Coll. (Jamieson.)

To dree one's or a weird. See dree.

weird (wērd), a. [Not directly < weird, n., but first in the phrase weird sisters, an awkward expression, lit. 'the fate sisters,' appar. meant for 'the Sister Fates'; but perhaps weird was thought to be an actual adjective meaning 'fatal.' No such adjective use is known in ME. The second use (def. 2) is due to an erroneous notion of the meaning of the phrase the weird sisters, which has been taken to mean 'the sisters who look witch-like or uncanny.'] 1. Connected with fate or destiny; able to influence fate.

Makbrth and Bãnqho . . . met be ye gait thre women clothit in elrage and uncouth weid. They wer jugit be the pepill to be weird sisteris. Boethius (tr. by Bellenden).

2. Of or pertaining to witches or witchcraft; supernatural; hobgoblin, unearthly; suggestive of witches, witchery, or unearthliness; wild; uncanny.

Out of the hardened clay and marl of the lake bottoms the elements are carving some of the weirdest scenery on the face of the earth.
Geikie, Good Sketches, I. 8.

We heard the hawks at twilight play, . . .
The hounds weird laughter far away.
Whittier, Snow Bound.

The weird sisters, the Fates.

The remanant hereof, quhat euer be it,
The weird sisteris hes fenditt that sould be wit.
G. Douglas, Æneid, iii.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters.
Shak., Macbeth, II. i. 20.

weird (wērd), v. t. [Formerly also weird; < weird, n.] 1. To destine; doom, change by witchcraft or sorcery.

I weird ye to a fiery boast,
And rehosed sall ye never be.
Kempion (Child's Ballads, I. 149).

Say, what hath forged thy wyrded Rok of destiny with the House of Avenel?
Scott, Monastery, I. 251.

2. To warn solemnly; adjure.

O byde at hame, my gude Lord Weire,
I weird ye byde at hame.
Lammikin (Child's Ballads, III. 398).

weirdless† (wērd'les), a. [< weird + -less.] Ill-fated; luckless.

Wa be to that weirdless wicht,
And a his witchcrì.
Mary Hamilton (Child's Ballads, III. 325).

weirdly (wērd'li), adv. In a weird manner; with a weird or unearthly effect or appearance.

weirdness (wērd'nes), n. The state of being weird, or of inspiring a sort of unaccountable or superstitious dread or fear; eerieness.
Contemporary Rev.

weir-fishing (wēr'fish'ing), n. The method or practice of taking fish by means of a weir.

weir-table (wēr'tā'bl), n. A record or memorandum used to estimate the quantity of water that will flow in a given time over a weir of given width at different heights of the water.

weise (wēz), v. t. A Scotch form of wise[3].

weism (wē'izm), n. [< we + -ism, in imitation of egotism.] The frequent use of the pronoun we. Antijacobin Rev. [Cant.] (Imp. Dict.) Weithrecht's cartilage. An interarticular cartilage in the acromioclavicular joint.

Weithrecht's ligament. A thin band of fibers passing between the radius and ulna in the forearm.

weive†, v. An old spelling of waive.

wejack, n. The fisher, or Pennant's marten. See fisher (with cut).

weka rail. See Ocydromus.

weke[1]†, n. A Middle English form of wick[1].

weke[2]†, a. and r. An old spelling of weak.

weke[3] (wēk), interj. [Cf. wheek, squeak.] An imitation of the squeaking of an infant or a pig.

Weke, weke! so cries a pig prepared to the spit.
Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2. 160.

wekot, n. A Middle English form of wicket.

wekyd, a. A Middle English form of wicked[1].

wel, adv. An old spelling of well[2].

welat, adv. An occasional Middle English form of wel[2], as in wela wylle, very wild, wela wynne, very joyful, etc.

Wela-wynne is the wort that woxes thor-oute,
When the donkande dewe dropes of the leves,
To bide a blyssful blusch of the bry3t sunne.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 518.

Wela walle watz the way, that thay in wod schulden,
Ful hilÞ watz some kosoum that the sunne vpnos.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2084.

welaway†, welawo†, interj. and n. See well-away.

Welch† (welch), a. and n. An obsolete form of Welsh.

Welcker's sphenoidal angle. The angle formed by the junction, at the middle of the crest separating the optic grooves from the pituitary fossa, of lines drawn to this point from the basion and from the nasofrontal suture.

welcome (wel'kum), a. [< ME. welcome, welcume, walcome, walcume, wælcume, wælcome, welkume, welcome, used in predicate and orig. a noun, < AS. wilcuma, one whose coming suits the will or wish of another, one who is received with pleasure, a welcome guest (= OHG. willkumo, one who is received with pleasure, MHG. willekomen, G. willkommen, welcome, = MD. welkom, wellom, D. welkom, adj., welcome); < wil-la, will, wish, pleasure, + cuma, one who comes, a comer: see will and come. In ME. the word becomes confused with a similar form of Scand. origin, namely Icel. velkominn = Sw. välkommen = Dan. velkommen, welcome, lit. 'well come,' like F. bien venu, < vel, etc. (< L. well), + venu, etc., = E. come, pp.; but these forms were prob. orig. identical with the AS., D., and G. The adj. use is due to the position of the noun in the predicate, and in greeting, where it could still be regarded as a noun.] 1. Gladly received for intercourse or entertainment; as, treated as one whose coming or presence is agreeable; held as doing well to come, as, a welcome guest or visitor; you are always welcome to my house; to make a visitor feel welcome. Sometimes used elliptically as a word of greeting to a comer or comers, as, welcome home; hid me heartily welcome.

Ha, welcome, thou dea, but I woote fayne
How farre ye with that false woman.
Jack Drum's Entertainment, p. 194.

Ye be welcome hete, my yonge cosin,
Ful coud and sauflé fele.
Young Beichan (Child's Ballads, III. 13).

Politeness and good breeding are equally necessary to make you welcome and agreeable in conversation, and common morals to Chesterfield, Letters.

2. Conferring gladness on receipt or presentation; such that its perception or acquisition gives pleasure; gladly received into knowledge or possession; as, welcome news; a welcome present.

A welcome present to my master.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, v. 3.

Although these thoughts seem'd, they are welcome to me.
Fletcher, Wife for a Month, i. 1.

They were a welcome sight to see.
Jamie Telfer (Child's Ballads, VI. 110).

3. Gladly or willingly permitted, privileged, or the like; free to have, enjoy, etc.: as, you are welcome to do as you please; he is welcome to the money, or to all his honors.

Lod. Madam, good night. I humbly thank your ladyship.
Des. Your honour is most welcome.
Shak., Othello, iv. 3. 4.

= Syn. 1 and 2 Acceptable, agreeable, gratifying, pleasant.

welcome (wel'kum), v. t.; pret. and pp. welcomed, ppr. welcoming. [< ME. welcumen, wilcumen, wælcumen, welcumen, welcumen, < AS. wilcuman = G. willkommen; welcome, treat as a welcome guest, < wilcuma, a welcome guest: see welcome, a.] To greet the coming of with pleasure; salute with a welcome; receive gladly or joyfully: as, to welcome a friend, or the break of day.

That . . . come to hegren He thanke day, and [that were that it] duly welcomed.
Merlin, i. 1. 5, p. 147.

A kiss of kent that seem'd to welcome woe.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1790.

welcome (wel'kum), n. [< welcome, v.] 1. The act of bidding or making welcome; a kindly greeting to one coming.

The camp receiv'd him with acclamations of joy and welcome.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, i. 1.

2. Kind or hospitable reception of a guest or new comer.

Whoe'er has travell'd life's dull round,
Where'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
The warmest welcome at an inn.
Shenstone, Written on the Window of an Inn.

To bid a welcome, to receive with professions of friendship, kindness, or gladness.

To thee and thy company I bid
A hearty welcome.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 111.

welcomely† (wel'kum-li), adv. [< welcome + -ly[2].] In a welcome manner.

Juvenal . . . by an handsome and metrical expression, most welcomely, ingratiates and endears our junior memories.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 4.

welcomeness (wel'kum-nes), n. The state of being welcome; agreeableness; kind reception. [Rare.]

The poor little fellow pressed it upon them with a mad of welcomeness.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 87.

welcomer (wel'kum-er), n. [< welcome + -er[1].] One who welcomes, or salutes or receives kindly a new-comer.

Thou wilful welcomer of glory.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 1. 90.

weld[1], weld[2] (weld, wold), n. [Also Se. wald; < ME. welde, walde, wolde, weld, dyers' yellow-weed; cf. D. wouw = Sw. Dan. reps = G. wau, waude, waid (> F. gaude = Sp. gualda = Pg. gualda), weld. Further connections uncertain. Some compare woad, and, for the root, the verb well[2], boil.] The dyer's-weed, Reseda luteola, a scentless species of mignonette, native in southern Europe and naturalized further north. It was formerly much cultivated as a dye plant, its pods affording a permanent yellow suited to both animal and vegetable fibers later displaced, however, by quercitron, flavin and the aniline dyes. Its seeds yield a drying-oil. Also yellow weed, and sometimes woad or wold woad.

weld[2] (weld), v. [Lit. a variant, through the Scand. forms, of well, boil; see well[2].] I. trans. 1. To unite or consolidate, as pieces of metal or a metallic powder, by hammering or compression with or without previous softening by heat. Welding is and has long been a matter of great practical importance, chiefly in the manufacture of iron and steel, and of the various tools, utensils, and implements made of those metals. Iron has the valuable property of continuing in a kind of pasty condition through quite a wide range of temperature between its melting-point, and the [illegible] a circumstance highly favorable to the process of welding. Most metals, however, pass quickly, when sufficiently heated, from a solid to a liquid condition, and with such a welding is more difficult. The term welding is most properly used when the junction of the pieces is effected without the actual fusing point of the metal having been reached. Steel and iron have sometimes been united together by fusing the metal with a blowpipe along the two edges in contact with each other, and this has been called autogenous soldering, or burning if the heating was done with a hot iron. 1888. "The difference between welding and autogenous soldering is only one of degree." (Percy). The term welding is also used in speaking of the uniting of articles not metallic. Most metals when in the form of powder can be consolidated or welded into a perfectly homogeneous mass by pressure without the aid of heat. The same is true of various non-metallic substances, such as graphite, coal, and probably many others. A method of welding has been recently invented by Elihu Thomson, which appears to be capable of being employed with a variety of metals on a very extensive scale. In this, which is known as electric welding, a current of electricity heats the abutting ends of the two objects which are to be welded, these being pressed together by mechanical force, and so arranged with reference to the electric current that there is a great and rapid accumulation of heat at the joint in consequence of the greater relative conductivity of the rest of the circuit. This method of welding in some cases partakes of the nature of autogenous soldering, the pieces of metal being actually fused while uniting; in other cases, as with iron, nickel, or platinum, the union may take place without fusion, as in ordinary welding. In electric welding the pressure which forces the metallic surfaces together may, in the case of a plastic metal like iron, be either quiet or percussive in character, in autogenous soldering a more delicate and quiet pressure is generally preferred. In case of large articles hydraulic pressure can be used to force their surfaces into contact with each other.

To weld once the chain
On that rest anvil where each blow is pain.
Browning, A Word for the Hour.

2. Figuratively, to bring into intimate union; make a close joining of: as, to weld together the parts of an argument.

How he . . . shew re-wrought
That language . . . welding words into the crude Mass from the new speech round him.
Browning, Sordello, ii.

II. intrans. To undergo the welding process; be capable of being welded.

weld[3] (weld), n. [< weld[2], v.] A solid union of metallic pieces formed by welding; a welded junction or joint.

Round welds are very difficult to make in wire, and are not to be trusted. R. S. Culley, Pract. Teleg., § 311.

weld[3]†, v. t. A Middle English form of wield.

weldability (wel-da-bil'i-ti), n. [< weldable + -ity (see bility).] Capability of being welded.

The above-mentioned elements harden malleable iron, and probably affect its weldability by their ready oxidability. W. H. Greenwood, Steel and Iron, p. 8.

weldable (wel'da-bl), a. [< weld[2] + able.] Capable of being welded.

weld-bore (weld'bor), n. A kind of woolen cloth made at Bradford, in Yorkshire, England. Dict. of Needlework.

welder[1] (wel'der), n. [< weld[2] + -er[1].] One who welds, or an instrument or appliance for welding.

welder[2]†, n. An obsolete form of welter.

welding-heat (wel'ding hēt), n. See heat.

welding-machine (wel'ding ma-shēn'), n. A machine by which the edges of plates previously bent are joined. The edges are made to overlap inside a chamber, and are exposed to a gas-flame, where the joint is passed beneath a gang of rolls or a hammer.

welding-powder (wel'ding pou'der), n. A flux for use in heating metal for welding, consisting of a calcined powder formed from borax and other ingredients.

The steel to be welded . . . is then dipped into the welding powder, and again placed in the fire. Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 64.

welding-swage (wel'ding swāj), n. A block or a fulling-tool used in closing a welded joint. E. H. Knight.

weld-iron (weld'ī'ėrn), n. A name sometimes applied to wrought iron. This name was recommended by an international committee appointed by the American Institute of Mining Engineers, but has not been generally adopted; indeed the institute did not accept the report of its committee in so far as this modification of the established nomenclature of iron is concerned.

weldless (weld'les), a. [< weld[2] + less.] Having no welds; made without welding.

It is their intention to lay down plant for the construction of boilers built up of weldless rings. The Engineer, LXIX. 70.

weld-steel (weld'stēl), n. Puddled steel. This name was suggested by a committee appointed by the American Institute of Mining Engineers, but has not been generally adopted.

weldy (wel'di), a. An obsolete or dialectal form of welchy.

welet, v. A Middle English form of wail[1], wail[2].

welefult, a. Another spelling of wealful.

welewt, v. A Middle English form of wallow[2].

First a man growith as doth a gras,
And anoon after welewith ne flourys of hay.
Political Poems (ed. Furnivall), p. 17.

welfare (wel'fār), n. [< ME. welfare (= MLG. wolvare); < weal[2] + fare, v.] 1. A state or condition of doing well; prosperous or satisfactory course or relation, exemption from evil; state with respect to well-being; as, to promote the physical or the spiritual welfare of society; to inquire after a friend's welfare; to be anxious about the welfare of a ship at sea.

My daughter's welfare I do feare.
The Merchant's Daughter (Child's Ballads, IV. 332).

He [James II.] seems to have determined to make some amends for neglecting the welfare of his own soul by taking care of the souls of others. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

2†. A source of well-being; a blessing; a good.

Lith Troylus, by-fall of ech welfare,
Abounden in the blake bark of care.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 228.

welk[1], n. Same as whelk.

welk[2]† (welk), v. i. [< ME. welken, fade, vanish, wither, = D. welken = OHG. welchen, MHG. G. welken, wither; from an adj. seen in OHG. welc, welch, MHG. G. welk, moist, mild, soft, withered; cf. OHalg. clogi, moisture, dampness, clugakn, moist, Lith. vilgyti, make moist, prob. from a root welg*, be moist. Cf. welkin.] 1. To fade, decline; decrease.

But nowe sadde Winter welked hath the day.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., November.

Now seven times Phœbus had his wels and wax Upon the top of Cancer's tropic set.
Drayton, Baron's Wars, v.

2. To wither; wrinkle; shrivel.

Ful pale and welked is my face.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 70.

welk[3], n. Same as whelk[2].

welked, a. See unwelked.

welkin (wel'kin), n. and a. [< ME. welkin, welkne, welken, wolken, wolkne, wolcne, welcne, the welkin, the sky, the region of clouds, orig. 'the clouds,' < AS. wolcen, clouds, pl. of wolcn, a cloud, = OS. wolkan = OFries. wolken, alken = MD. wolcke, D. wolk = LG. wulke = OHG. wolchan, also wolcha, MHG. wolken, welke, G. wolke, a cloud; prob. orig. 'mist, fog, moisture,' < √ welg*, be moist: see welk[1]. For the transition from 'cloud' to 'sky,' cf. sky[1], heaven, orig. 'cloud.'] I. n. The sky; the vault of heaven; the heavens. [Now used chiefly in poetry.]

The see may ebbe and flowen more or lesse,
The welkne hath might to shyne, reyne, or hayle.
Chaucer, Fortune, l. 62.

All the heavens revolve;
In the small welkin of a drop of dew.
Lowell, Under the Willows.

II. a. Sky-blue. [Rare.]

Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye: sweet villain!
Shak., W. T., I. 2. 136.

welky, a. See whelky.

well[1] (wel), v. t. [< ME. wellen, < AS. wellan, wyllan, well or spring up = OHG. wellan, MHG. G. wellen, well up, = Icel. vella, make to boil), a secondary form, associated with the noun well[1], from the orig. strong verb AS. weallan (= OFries. wallā = OS. OHG. wallan = Icel. vella = Sw. valla = Dan. vælde), boil, well up: see wall[2], and cf. well[1], n. Cf. also weld[2].] I. intrans. To issue forth, as water from the earth or from a spring; spring, flow up or out.

She no longer might restreyne
Hir terys: they gonne out to welle.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 709.

From out the sounding cells
What a gush of euphony voluminously wells!
Poe, The Bells, ii.

The springs that welled
Beneath the touch of Milton's rod.
Whittier, Rantoul.

II. trans. 1†. To boil.

He made him dryuke hot [lead] welid and In his mouth halide it there. Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 58.

2. To pour forth from or as if from a well or spring. Spenser.

It was like visiting some classic fountain, that had once welled its pure waters in a sacred shade, but finding it dry and dusty. Irving, Sketch Book, p. 40.

well[1] (wel), n. [< ME. wel (well-), also welle, wælle, welle, < AS. well, wyll, also wella, wylla, a well, spring (= MD. welle, D. wel = OHG. wella, MHG. G. welle, a wave, billow, surge, = Icel. vella, boiling, ebullition, = Dan. vælde (for vælli*), a spring), < weallan, boil: see wall[2], and cf. weld[2], n., and well[1], v.] 1. A natural source of water; a place where water springs up in or issues from the ground; a spring or well-spring; a fountain. As soon as a spring begins to be utilized as a source of water-supply it is more or less thoroughly transformed into a well. (See def. 4.) This is necessary both for rendering the access to it convenient, and for giving the water a chance to accumulate and be protected when not needed for use. Hence the word spring is much used by geologists in describing the natural sources of water-supply, and well, by those indicating the manner in which the supply has been made available. There is, however, no sharp distinction possible between the two words. Thus Prestwich speaks of the "bountiful spring [between Caterham and Chelsham] known as the Seven Wells," and Phillips of a "tickle intermittent spring [issuing from Oughtonwick Scar, in Yorkshire] known as the Ebbing and Flowing Well."

Thei weren fowre welles Came rennyng fro the clyfs adoun.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 180.

Ther sprong welles thre, . .
Of wel3r bothe fayr & good.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 118.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 15.

He deep comfort hath
Who, thirsting, drinks cool waters from a well.
R. W. Gilder, The Celestial Passion, Love and Death.

Hence 2. The source whence any series or order of things issues or is drawn; a well-spring of origin or supply; a fount in the figurative sense.

He that is of worthinesse the welle.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 678.

Dan Chaucer, well of Englishe undefyled.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. ii. 32.

3. That which flows or springs out or up from a source; water or other fluid issuing forth.

And from his gored wound a well of blood did gush.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iii. 35.

The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. John iv. 14.

4. A pit, hole, or shaft sunk in the ground, either by digging or by boring through earth and rock, to obtain a supply of water, or of other fluid, as mineral water, brine, petroleum, or natural gas, from a subterranean source, and walled or otherwise protected from caving in. Wells are generally cylindrical, and are sometimes bored to a depth of several hundreds or thousands of feet. (See Artesian well, under Artesian. See also oil-well, tube well.) From ordinary wells for domestic use the water is raised in vessels generally buckets hung in pairs to a windlass or singly to a well-sweep — often from deeper wells by pumping.

'Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but 'tis enough. Shak., R. and J., iii. 1. 88.

The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket which hung in the well.
S. Woodworth, The Old Oaken Bucket.

You were certain, by a sort of fate, to stop, in passing, at the well in the front yard for a drink.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 61.

5. A cavity, or an inclosed space, shaft, or the like, in some way comparable to or suggestive of an ordinary well, but of some other origin or use: as, an ink-well.

The writer of old well of a shivering best parlour. . .
Dickens, Christmas Carol, ii.

Through a most unsavory alley into a court, or rather space, serving as a well to light the rear range of a tenement house. T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, iv.

She had gotten it in a great well of a cupboard.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xliv.

The well . . . must be a square hole, a little larger than the plate for etching, and about an inch deep.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 166.

There must be perfect drainage secured from the bottom of the well [the receptacle for ice in an ice-house], so that the ice will be kept dry.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 304.

Specifically — (a) In a building, a compartment or shaft extending through the different floors, or from top to bottom, in which the stairs are placed, or round which they turn, or one in which an elevator or lift moves up and down, or one which serves for the admission of air or light to interior rooms, etc. The kinds of well named are distinctively called a well-staircase or (for the space inclosed) a stair-well or well-hole, an elevator-shaft, and an air- or light-shaft, dig. (b) A compartment formed by bulkheads round the pumps, for their protection and for ease of access to them. (c) A shaft through which to raise and lower an auxiliary screw-propeller. (d) The cockpit. (e) In a fishing-vessel or on a float, a compartment with a perforated bottom for the admission of water, in which fish are kept alive: distinctively called live well. (f) In a mill or mine, a shaft with branches or galleries running out from it. (g) In a furnace, the lower part of the cavity into which the metal falls. (h) In an Irish jaunting-car, the hollow space for luggage between the seats. (i) In some hatch-leading small arms, a cavity for the breech-block in the rear of the chamber. (k) In an English court of law, the inclosed space for the lawyers and their assistants, immediately in front of the judges' bench.

Solicitors . . . ranged in a line, in a long matted well, . . . between the registrar's and table and the silk gowns.
Dickens, Bleak House, i.

6. In her., a bearing to represent a well-curb, usually seen in perspective, circular, and masoned of large stones. — 7. A whirlpool; an eddy; especially, a dangerous eddy in the sea, as about the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

The wells of Corryvreckan, on which the stoutest vessel round and round, in despite of either sail or steerage.
Scott, Pirate, xxxviii.

O to us,
The fools of habit, sweeter seems
To rest beneath the clover sod
Than it will be to plash the roaring wells
Should gulf him fathom-deep in brine.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, x.

Absorbing-well. See absorb. Artesian well. See Artesian (with cuts). Driven well, or drive-well. See tube well. Flowing well. See flowing. Negative well. Same as absorbing well. The wells, or Wells, in England, wells or springs of mineral waters, or a place where such wells are situated, as, to drink of or go to the wells at Bath; Tunbridge Wells.

The New Wells at Epsom, with variety of Raffling Shops, will be opened on Easter Monday next.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 178.

Syn. 4. Well, Spring, Fountain, Cistern. A well is an artificial pit sunk to such a depth that water comes into the bottom and rises to the water level ready to be drawn up. A spring is a place where water comes naturally to the surface of the ground and flows away. A spring may be opened or struck in excavation, but cannot be made. A fountain is characterized by the leaping upward of the water. It may be natural and thus be a kind of spring, or it may be artificial, as in a public square. A cistern is an artificial receptacle for the storage of water, as that which is constructed to receive rain-water from roofs. figuratively, the word may be applied to smaller natural subterranean reservoirs.

well[2] (wel), adv.; compar. better, superl. best. [Also E. dial. wall; Sc. weel, weil: < ME. wel, weel, weil, wol, welle, wele, sometimes wela, < AS. wel, weġ = OS. wel = OFries. wel, wal, wol = D. wel = MLG. wol, wal, wale, LG. wall = OHG. wela, wola, MHG. wol, G. wohl, wol = Icel. vel (sometimes val) = Sw. val = Dan. vel = Goth. waila, well: orig. 'as wished,' 'as desired,' from the root of wail[1]; cf. Gr. ἀρέσκω, better, Skt. vara, better, varya, a wish, Skt. √ var, choose: see will[1]. Well has come to be used as the adverb of good.] 1. In a good or laudable manner; not ill; worthily; rightly; properly; suitably; as, to act or reason well; to work or ride well; to be well disposed; a well-built house.

The poets did well to conjoin music and medicine in Apollo. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 139.

You cannot anger him worse than to doe well.
Sp. Hawk, Micro-cosmographie, A Detractor.

'Tis as certain that life work was well done at first, seeing it performs it's office so well, at so great a distance of time. Maundrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 52.

Men who die on a scaffold for political offences almost always die well. Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

2. In a satisfactory or pleasing manner; according to desire, taste, or the like; fortunately; happily; favorably: as, to live or fare well; to succeed well in business; to be well situated.

The same dayes the wynde fell well in our wayes.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 61.

To make a savery pere and wel smellinge.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 89.

Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met Shak., M. W. of W., v. 1. 240

Take your fortune,
If you come off well, praise your wit.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, i. 1.

3. With satisfaction or gratification; commendably; agreeably; highly; excellently; as, to be well entertained or pleased.

I hear so well of your Proceedings that I should rather commend than encourage you. Howell, Letters, I. v. 9

All the world speaks well of you. Pope.

A man who thinks sufficiently well of himself is never shy. T. A. Trollope, What I Remember, p. 117.

4. In reality; fairly; practically; fully.

For blynd men (as I have feill)
Can nocht deceme fair colours weill.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), l. 451.

Would they were both well out of the room!
Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

Though winter be over in March by rights,
'Tis May perhaps ere the snow shall have withered well off the heights. Browning, Up at a Villa.

It is evident that before the 13th century had well begun an historical compendium of great value had already been drawn up. Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 314.

5. To a good or fair degree; not slightly or moderately; adequately: as, to be well deserving; to sleep well, a well-known author.

Whanne he was come the kyng he held hym well,
And liked him right well in every thyng.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 405

She looketh well to the ways of her household
Prov. xxxi. 27

Pray thee advise thyself well.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 3.

Look you, this ring doth fit me passing well.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 1.

Full well they laughed, with counterfeited glee,
At all his jokes, for many a joke had he.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 90.

I have heard of a military engineer who knew so well how a bridge should be built that he could never build one. Lowell, Coleridge.

6. To a large extent; greatly, either in an absolute or in a relative sense.

The kyng was wele in age, I yow ensure Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1205.

Aton is from thens southwardes wele towarde Jherusalem, within the londe and not upon the see.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 48.

She wears her bonnet well back on her head.
O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

7. Conformably to state or circumstances; with propriety; conveniently; advantageously; justifiably: as, I cannot well afford it.

A little evil
May well be suffer'd for a general good, sir.
Fletcher, Wife for a Month, iv. 2.

To know
In measure what the mind may well contain.
Milton, P. L., viii. 128.

You may well ask "What is to know?" for the expression is an ambiguous one. Mivart, Nature and Thought, p. 2.

8. Conformably to requirement or obligation, with due heed or diligence; carefully; conscientiously: now only in the legal phrase well and truly, as part of an oath or undertaking.

Ther for to lerne, wele and *de*wely, lythe, a mayde and emplithe soungyn. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 4.

Be quyke and redy, meke and mesurable,
Wele awaityng to fulfille anone
What that thy soverayne commaundithe the to be done.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 36.

In felonies the oath administered to jurors is "You shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make between our sovereign lady the Queen and the prisoner at the bar, etc." Encyc. Brit., XVII. 764.

9†. Entirely; fully; quite; in full measure.

That Castelle (Bethanee) is wel a Myle long fro Jerusalem. Mandeville, Travels, p. 97.

The elder brother hade a sonne to clerke,
Welle of fyftene wynter of age.
Political Poems, &c. (ed. Furnivall), p. 48.

Be these thre men wele of thi counselle?
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 38.

10. Very; much; very much: obsolete except in well nigh (see well-nigh).

Without presents or pens, she pleseth wel fewe
Piers Plowman (B), iii. 161.

Wel litel thynken ye upon my wo.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 515.

That tit agen turned, to telle the sothe, & bare hem wel better then thei bi-fore hade.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3330.

11. Elliptically, it is well; so be it: used as a sign of assent, either in earnest, in indifference, or in irony, or with other shades of meaning, as a prelude to a further statement, and often as a mere introductory expletive.

Well, I shall live to see your husbands beat you.
Beau. and Fl., Captain, iii. 3.

Well now look at our villa! Browning, Up at a Villa.

Well! 'tis well that I should bluster!
Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

As well, also, equally, besides: used absolutely.

I have trusted thee, Camillo
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber councils. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 236.

It is not simply a house. It is a person, as it were, as well. H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 98.

As well as. See as†. As well . . as, both . . and, one equally with the other; jointly.

Make out all kinds of fortifications [Rome as well to prevent the inlets and apps as the Canon Book of Fire-drawes (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), v. 4.

In polity, as well ecclesiastical as civil, there are and will be always evils which no art of man can cure, but rubs and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 9.

Just as well, improperly used by some writers for 'all the same.'

Her aged lover made her presents, but just as well she hated the sight of him.
Quoted in N. & Q., Ser. 8, xi. 184.

So well as†. See so. To go well. See go. To speak well for. See speak. Well enough, in a moderate degree, so as to give moderate satisfaction or so as to require no alteration. Well heeled. See heeled 2. Well met. See meet. Well must ye. See must. Well nigh, very nearly, almost: often compounded. See well-nigh.

My steps had well nigh slipped Ps. lxxiii. 2

One that is well-nigh worn to pieces.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 2. 23.

Well off, in a good condition, especially as to property. See off, a., 6.

George will have all my property, but Frank is nearly as well off, barring the bare notes.
T. Hook, Fathers and Sons, i.

Well spoken. See speak.

[Of the proper compounds of well with participial adjectives, only those are given below which are in standard use or the meaning of which is not directly obvious. In regard to the improper joining of well with participles in irregular verbal construction, see remark under well-.]

well-, (wel), a. and n. [< well, adv., and in most uses still strictly an adv.] I. a. 1. Agreeable to wish or desire; satisfactory as to condition or relation; fortunate; opportune: predicative only, predicative and most commonly, only used impersonal clauses.

Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well.
2 Ki. iv. 26.

Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.
Shak., Lear, I. 4. 360.

All is well as it can be Upon this earth where all has end.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 254.

2. Satisfactory in kind or character; suitable; proper; right; good: as, was it well to do thus? the well ordering of a household.

Thou wolden awreke that wikt for his well deden Piers Plowman's Creed (E. E. T. S.), l. 162.

Olym. Is't so, forsooth, new mistress?
Cent. She is well enough, madam.
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, i. 2.

It is a more common than convenient saying that nine Taylors make a man. If it were well adher'd to, it would make a woman to her minde. A. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 28.

In my Lord Chancellor's Eagle, by which he proceeded, he could (possibly) see a ghost: it sat very well in the day time. O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

3. In a good state or condition; well off; comfortable; free from trouble: used predicatively: as, I am quite well where I am.

Oh, woman! but yet I am well: another is not so, yet I am well. Shak., Much Ado, ii. 2.

4†. In good standing; favorably situated or connected; enjoying consideration: used predicatively.

He . . . was well with Henry the Fourth. Bowden.

5. In good health, not sick or ailing; in a sound condition as to body or mind: usually predicative: as, he is now well, or colloquially, a well man.

I am now a well
As any living man, why not I, valiant?
Fletcher, Humorous Lieut., iv. 4.

He grew tired of recovering: but when I [death] was well at it I was like to die of mortality.
Steele, Tatler No. 207.

To let well alone. See let. Well to live, having a competence; in comfortable circumstances. Compare well-to-do.

You're a made old man; . . . you're well to live.
Shak., W. T., iii. 3. 126.

Well to pass†. See pass, v. Syn. 5. Hale, hearty, sound.

II. n. That which is well or good; good state, health, or fortune. [Rare.]

"O! how," sayd he, "mote I that well out find,
That may restore me to your wonted well?"
Spenser, F. Q., I. ii. 42.

well-acquainted (wel'a-kwān'ted), a. Having intimate acquaintance or personal knowledge.

As if I were their well-acquainted friend.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 3. 2.

welladay (wel'a-dā'), interj. An altered form of wellaway, simulating day: the present time, either as the witness or the cause of distress, being often brought into ejaculations of this kind. See wellaway.

O well a day, Mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 3. 103.

Ah! woe is me, woe, woe is me,
Alack and well a day!
Herrick, Hesperides (The Maid Maud's Song).

well-advised (wel'ad-vīzd'), a. Accordant with good advice or careful reflection; considerate; prudent: as, a well advised proceeding.

well-aneart (wel'a-nerr'), adv. [Also well-anere (given as well-an-ere in Halliwell) as an exclamation; < *well*² + anear. In the exclamatory use anear seems to supply the same vague reference to the present time as day in welladay.] Almost immediately; very soon.

The lady shrieks and well a near Does fall in travail with her fear.
Shak., Troilus, iii., Prol., l. 51.

well-appointed (wel'a-poin'ted), a. 1. Complete in appointment or equipment; furnished with all requisites; in good trim.

The gentle Archbishop of York is up,
With well appointed powers.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 190.

They [defenders of the established religion] were a numerous, an intrepid, and a well appointed band of combatants. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

Hence—2†. Dominant; protective; auspicious.

Or seen her well appointed star
Come marching up the eastern hill afar.
Cowley.

well-appointedness (wel'a-poin'ted-nes), n. The state or condition of being well-appointed. [Rare.]

Her actual smartness as Londoner people would call it, her well appointedness and her evident command of more than a manner. H. James, Jr., Tragic Muse, xxvi.

wellaway (wel'a-wā'), interj. [< ME. well awaye, weiawey, weyleway, waylaway, walaway, weylawey, welaway, wer la wei, wo la wa, etc., < AS. wa la wa, wala wa, an exclamation of surprise or distress: wa, woe; la, lo; wa, woe. Hence, by variation, welladay.] An exclamation expressive of grief or sorrow, equivalent to alas.

Thus sayl, after the thynde day
Ben devon yede, weila wei.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2886.

This is the lif of this londe that lyves me thinke with Do bet,
And wel a wey wers and I shulde al telle.
Piers Plowman (A), xi. 215.

I have herd on dishonestee walaway!
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1056.

In Scarlet towne, where I was borne,
There was a fayre mayd dwellin,
Made every youth cry Well awaye!
Her name was Barbara Allen.
Barbara Allen's Cruelty (Child's Ballads, II. 158).

wellaway†, n. [< wellaway, interj.] Woe; misery.

For his gladnesse and his grete battle he hath a gretter penaunce
That is wela to what he wilneth not weyghe for colde.
Piers Plowman (C), xiv. 235.

Wel me wight what werre that is per regneth,
So what y wele he wele I nede y may hym teche.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 239.

well-balanced (wel'bal'anst), a. Rightly balanced, properly adjusted or regulated; not confused or disorderly.

The well balanced world is full of low, vulgar souls.
Milton Satirist, i. 122.

A well balanced mental system . . . holds a large variety of mental forces, which do not easily group themselves under one or two general aspects.
Carpenter, Mental Physiology, Intuition, p. 202.

well-behaved (wel'bē-hāvd'), a. Of good behavior or conduct; becoming in manner; courteous; civil.

Such, or such as you call well-behaved reproof, to all uncomfortable.
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 1. 50.

well being (wel'bē'ing), n. [< *well*² + being.] Well conditioned existence; good mode of being; moral or physical welfare; a state of life which secures or tends toward happiness. Sometimes written wellbeing.

It behooves not a wise Nation to commit the sum of their wellbeing, the whole state of their Safety, to Fortune.
Milton, Free Commonwealth.

No test of the physical well being of society can be named so decisive as that which is furnished by bills of mortality. Macaulay, Southey's Colloquies.

well-beloved (wel'bē-luv'ed), a. Greatly beloved; very dear. Sometimes used substantively.

Myrrh is my well beloved unto me. Cant. i. 13.
The well beloved Brutus Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 186.

well-beseeming (wel'bē-sē'ming), a. Properly or duly beseeming; suitably becoming.

In a noble Prince nothing is more decent and well seeming his greatnesse than to spare fowle speeches.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, i. 270.

Rome's royal empress,
Unfurnish'd of her well beseeming troop Shak., Tit. And., ii. 3. 56.

well-beseen† (wel'bē-sēn'), a. Well looking; fine in appearance; showy.

The Briton Prince him readie did inwayte,
In glistering armes right goodly well beseene Spenser, F. Q., V. viii. 39.

well-bestrutted (wel'bē-strut'ed), a. [See strut, v.] Fully stretched or distended; swelled out.

And well bestrutted bottles what bragge.
Herrick, Hesperides (Oberon's Feast)

well-boat (wel'bōt), n. A fishing boat provided with a live well; a smack boat or smack. [Canada and New Eng.]

well-borer (wel'bōr'er), n. A person engaged in or an instrument used for boring wells.

well-boring (wel'bōr'ing), n. A method of sinking wells by drilling or boring through rock, these wells often extending to a great depth. Percussion drilling is most used for this purpose. Compare oil-well, oil derrick, etc.

well-born (wel'born), a. [= G. wohlgeboren, as well[2] + born[1].] Of high or respectable birth; not of low origin.

The term well born was a contemptuous nickname given to the Federalists.
M. Mather, People of United States, I. 169.

well-breathed (wel'brethd), a. Long breathed; having good wind; strong of lung.

On thy well breath'd horse keep with thy hounds.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 678.

well-bred (wel'bred), a. 1. Of good breeding; polite; cultivated; refined.

For better have I that bonnie boy
Than a yont well bred men.
Lady Diamond (Child's Ballads, II. 483).

A moral, sensible, and well bred man
Will not affront me, and no other can.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 193.

2. Of good breed, stock, or race, as a domestic animal. Compare half bred, thoroughbred.

well-bucket (wel'buk'et), n. A vessel for drawing up water from a well: often used in pairs, one ascending while the other descends. It is usually of wood, and barrel shaped; in some parts of Europe copper vessels are used.

The muscles are so many well buckets who in one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey.
Dryden.

well-carriaged (wel'kar'ajd), a. Of good carriage or deportment; well mannered. [Rare.]

The mistress of the house, a pretty well carriaged woman.
Pepys, Diary, I. 31.

well-carset, n. [Also Sc. well-kerse; ME. welle carse, < AS. wylle-cerse, water cress, < wylle, well, spring, + cærse, cress; see well[1] and cress.] Water-cress.

Ich rede no faithful frere at thy feste sytte, but were me leuere, by oure lord, lyne by welle carses
Than haue my fode and my fyndynge of falso menne wynynges.
Piers Ploughman (C), vii. 265.

well-chain (wel'chān), n. A chain attached to a bucket or a pair of buckets, and used with a windlass, for drawing water from a well.

well-conditioned (wel'kon-dish'ond), a. [< ME. well condicioned; < well[2] + conditioned.] In good or favorable condition; in a desirable state of being: as, a well-conditioned mind. Prompt. Parv., p. 521.

well-conducted (wel'kon-duk'ted), a. 1. Properly led; under good conduct: as, a well conducted expedition.—2. Characterized by good conduct; acting well or properly; well-behaved: as, a well conducted person or community.

well-curb (wel'kėrb), n. A curb or inclosure around and above the top of a well. See cut under pozo.

Jonson . . . sat on the well-curb, shouting bad language down to the parrot.
R. Kipling, In the Matter of a Private.

well-deck (wel'dek), n. An open space on the main deck of a ship, inclosed like a well by the bulwarks and partial higher decks forward and aft.

The question of the freeboard of steamers of the well deck type is again being brought before the notice of Lloyd's by the shipowners of the northeast coast.
The Engineer, LXV. 468.

well-decker (wel'dek'ėr), n. A ship having a well-deck.

A large proportion of the steamers built and owned at West Hartlepool are well deckers.
The Engineer, LXVII. 192.

well-deed†, n. [< ME. welldede, weldæd, < AS. weldæd (= OHG. weladat = Goth. waladēds); as well[2] + deed.] Benefit.

well-disposed (wel'dis-pōzd'), a. Of a good or favorable disposition; in a kindly or friendly state of feeling; well-willed.

You lose a thousand well disposed hearts.
Shak., Rich. II., ii. 1. 296.

Some well disposed persons have taken offence at my using the word Free thinker as a term of reproach.
Steele, Tatler, No. 135.

well-doer (wel'dō'er), n. One who does well; a performer of good deeds or actions: opposed to evil-doer.

well-doing (wel'dō'ing), n. [< ME. well-doing; < well[2] + doing.] Good conduct or action.

The crisom ne myght but litill space endure, ne hadde be the well doinge of the v knyghtes.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 559.

Let us not be weary in well doing. Gal. vi. 9.

well-doing (wel'dō'ing), a. Acting well; doing what is right or satisfactory.

The well doing steed Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 112.

well-drain (wel'drān), n. 1. A drain or vent, somewhat like a well or pit, serving to discharge the water of wet land. 2. A drain leading to a well or pit.

well-drain (wel'drān), v. t. [< well-drain, n.] To drain, as land, by means of wells or pits, which receive the water, and from which it is discharged by machinery.

well-dressing (wel'dres'ing), n. The decoration of wells and springs with flowers, etc., accompanied by religious observances, practised at set times in England (especially at Tissington, in Derbyshire, on Ascension day) and elsewhere. Also called well flowering.

Fetich-ism survives in the honours paid to wells and fountains, common in Germany and in some parts of France, and in England known under the name of well dressing.
Kearn, Prim. Belief, p. 87.

well-drill (wel'dril), n. A tool or drill used in boring wells.

well-earned (wel'ėrnd), a. Thoroughly deserved; fully due on account of action or conduct: as, a well-earned punishment.

well-faced (wel'fāst'), a. Of good face or aspect. [Rare.]

He that hath any well faced phancy in his Crowne, and doth not vent it now, it is the pride of his owne heart will dub him dowce for ever.
A. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 2.

well-famed (wel'fāmd), a. Of great fame; famous; celebrated.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.
Agam. [To Troilus.] My well famed lord of Troy, no less to you.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 173.

well-fard (wel'fārd), a. [Sc., also weel-fard, weltarrd; a dial. contraction of well-favored.] Well-favored.

Now hold your tongue, my well fard maid,
Lat a' your mourning be.
John o Hazelgreen (Child's Ballads, IV. 80).

wellfare†, n. An obsolete spelling of welfare.

well-faring† (wel'fār'ing), a. [Cf. farel, v., 6.] Well seeming; fine-appearing; handsome.

Therwithal of brawnes and of bones
A wel faringe persone for the nones.
Chaucer, Prol. to Monk's Tale, l. 54.

well-favored (wel'fā'vėrd), a. Being of good favor or appearance; good looking; comely.

Rachel was beautiful and well favoured. Gen. xxix. 17.

To be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune.
Shak., Much Ado, iii. 3. 15.

well-fed (wel'fed), a. Showing the result of good feeding; in good condition; fat; plump.

And well fed sheep and sable oxen slay.
Pope, Iliad, xxiii. 205.

well-flowering (wel'flou'ėr-ing), n. Same as well-dressing.

Makes this feast of the well-flowering one of the most beautiful of all the old customs that are left in "Merrie England." N. and Q., 7th ser., III. 457.

well-foughten† (wel'fâ'tn), a. Bravely fought.

well-found (wel'found), a. Found to be good or good; approved; commendable.

Gerard de Narbon was my father;
In what he did profess well found.
Shak., All's Well, ii. 1. 108.

Many live comparatively well-found lives.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 728.

well-founded (wel'foun'ded), a. Founded on good reasons; having strong probability; not baseless: as, well-founded suspicions.

well-givent (wel'giv'n), a. Given to what is well or good; well-meaning; well-intentioned.

Why are you a burthen to the world's conscience, and an eye-sore to well-given men?
Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 2.

well-governort, n. [ME. wel-gouernour (tr. L. qui bene præest).] One who governs well.

The prestis that ben wel gouernouris.
Wyclif, 1 Tim. v. 17.

well-graced (wel'grāst), a. Held in good grace or esteem; viewed with favor; popular.

The eyes of men,
After a well graced actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next.
Shak., Rich. II., v. 2. 24.

well-grass (wel'grās), n. The water-cress, Nasturtium officinale. Also well-gerse. Compare well-cresses. [Scotch.]

well-grounded (wel'groun'ded), a. Having good grounds or reasons; well-based; well-founded.

well-head (wel'hed), n. The source of a natural well or spring.

To which [overflowed] alle thyse welle hedes [of the deluge] a-yein flowed.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 428.

Old well heads of haunted rills. Tennyson, Eleanore.

well-hole (wel'hōl), n. 1. A deep, narrow, perpendicular cavity, as the space from top to bottom of a house round which stairs turn; also, an inclosure in which a balancing-weight rises and falls, etc.—2. The well-room of a boat.

well-house (wel'hous'), n. A room or small house built round a well, for dairy and other domestic uses.

I lately had a trading in a well house . . . a great cauldron of copper. Harmar, Caveat for Curators, p. 25.

well-informed (wel'in-fōrmd'), a. Possessed of full information on a wide variety of subjects.

welling (wel'ing), n. [Verbal n. of well[3], v.] An outpouring, as of liquid or gas.

Wellington boot. 1. A riding-boot with leg extending upward at the rear to the angle of the knee, and high enough in front to cover the knee. So called because the pattern is supposed to have been patronized by the Duke of Wellington, who wore such boots in his campaigns.

2. A similar boot, somewhat shorter, worn under the trousers, and fitting the leg closely.

No gentleman could wear anything in the daytime but Wellington boots high up the leg over which the trousers fitted tightly, covering most of the foot, and secured underneath by a broad strap.
E. Yates, Fifty Years of London Life, I. ii.

Wellingtonia (wel-ing-tō'ni-a), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1853), named after the Duke of Wellington: see Wellingtonian.] A name much used in England for the big trees of California, which has given way to the earlier name Sequoia under the rule of priority. See Sequoia (with cut).

Wellingtonian (wel-ing-tō'ni-an), a. [< Wellington (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the first Duke of Wellington (Arthur Wellesley, 1769–1852), a British general and statesman.

The Wellingtonian legend was once as strong in England as the Napoleonic in France.
The Academy, No. 908, p. 156.

well-intentioned (wel'in-ten'shond), a. Characterized by or due to good intentions; meaning well; well-meant; intended for good.

The publicity and control which the forms of free constitutions provide for guarding even well-intentioned rulers against honest errors. Brougham.

"Immortality inherent in Nature" . . . is a well-intentioned argument. The American, XI. 44.

well-judged (wel'jujd), a. Treated or done with good judgment; correctly estimated or calculated; judicious; wise.

The well judg'd purchase, and the gift,
That grac'd his letter'd store.
Cowper, Burning of Lord Mansfield's Library.

well-knit (wel'nit), a. [< well[2] + knit, pp.] Firmly compacted; strongly framed or fixed.

O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson!
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 77.

His soul well-knit, and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.
M. Arnold, Immortality.

well-known (wel'nōn), a. Fully or familiarly known; clearly apprehended; generally acknowledged.

Imagined for aid each well-known face,
And strove to seek the Dame's embrace.
Scott, L. of L. M., iv. 25.

well-liking† (wel'lī'king), a. 1. Appearing well; good-looking; well-conditioned.

Children . . . as fat and as well-liking as if they had been gentlemen's children. Latimer.

Through the great providence of the Lord, they came all safe on shore, and most of them sound and well liking. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 244.

2. Showing off well; clever; smart.

Well-liking wits they have. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 268.

well-looked† (wel'lukt), a. Well-looking; having a good appearance.

They are both little, but very like one another and well-looked children. Pepys, Diary, III. 270.

well-looking (wel'lūk'ing), a. Looking well; fairly good-looking.

The horse was a bay, a well looking animal enough. Dickens.

She was a well looking, almost a handsome woman. J. C. Jeaffreson, Live it Down, xxx.

well-mannered (wel'man'erd), a. [< ME. well maneryd; < well[2] + mannered.] Having good manners; polite; well-bred; complaisant.

Sir, if you will not that men call you presumptuous, or, to speake plainly, do call you fools, haue a care to be well mannered. Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 74.

well-marked (wel'markt), a. 1. In zool. and bot., pronounced; decided; obvious; signal; easily recognized or determined: as, well-marked characters; a well-marked genus, species, or variety.—2. Specifying a South African tortoise, Homopus signatus. P. L. Sclater.

well-meaner (wel'mē'nėr), n. One who means well or whose intention is good.

Deluded well meaners come over out of honesty, and small offenders out of common distraction or fear. Dryden, Vind. of Duke of Guise.

well-meaning (wel'mē'ning), a. Well-intentioned: frequently used with slight contempt.

Plain well meaning soul. Shak., Rich. II., ii. 1. 126.

He was ever a timorous, chicken spirited, though well meaning man. Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, xx.

well-meant (wel'ment), a. Rightly intended; friendly; sincere; not feigned.

Edward a well meant honest love. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 67.

well-minded (wel'mīn'ded), a. Of good or well-disposed mind; well or favorably inclined.

For discharge of a bishop's office, to be well minded is not enough. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 24.

Well minded Clarence, be thou fortunate! Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 3. 27.

well-natured (wel'nā'tūrd), a. Of excellent nature or character; properly disposed; right-minded.

On their life no grievous burthen lies,
Who are well natured, temperate, and wise.
Sir J. Denham, Old Age.

They shou'd rather disturb than divert the well-natur'd and reflecting Part of an Audience. Congreve, Way of the World, Ded.

wellness (wel'nes), n. [< well[2] + -ness.] The state of being well or in good health. Hood.

well-nigh (wel'nī'), adv. [< ME. wel ny, wel nygh, wel neih; prop. two words: see well[1] and nigh.] Very nigh; very nearly; almost wholly or entirely. Also written as a single word and (more properly) as two words.

A wegge of leome or yron putte bytwene
The bark and tree welnugh III fingers depe.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 73.

The labour of wel-nigh fifty pioners. Sandys, Travailes, p. 19.

The dreary night has well-nigh passed. Whittier, Pæan.

well-ordered (wel'ôr'dėrd), a. Rightly or correctly ordered, regulated, or governed.

There is a law in each well-order'd nation
To curb those raging appetites.
Shak., T. and C., ii. 2. 181.

well-packing (wel'pak'ing), n. A cylindrical bag filled with flaxseed, or some similar apparatus, placed around the well-tube in deep oil-wells, to prevent the entrance of water above or below the oil in the well; a seed-bag. E. H. Knight. See cut under parking.

well-pleasing (wel'plē'zing), a. Acceptable; pleasing.

A sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God. Phil. iv. 18.

well-pleasing (wel'plē'zing), n. That which is well pleasing; also, the act of pleasing or satisfying. [Rare.]

The fruits of unity (next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all) are two. Baxter, Unity in Religion (ed. 1687).

Thou wouldst willingly walk in all well-pleasing unto Him. Bp. Leighton, Com. on 1st Peter.

well-proportioned (wel'prō-pôr'shond), a. Having good or correct proportions; fitting as to parts or relations; properly coördinated.

well-read (wel'red), a. Having read largely; having an extensive and intelligent knowledge of books or literature.

well-regulated (wel'reg'u-la-ted), a. Under proper regulation or control; in good order as to arrangement or management; well-ordered.

Things which would have distressed most well-regulated Belgravian damsels. E. Yates, Land at Last, iii. 3.

well-respected (wel'rē-spek'ted), a. 1. Held in high respect; highly esteemed. [Rare.]

If well respected honesty bid me on,
I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, my lord. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 10.

2†. Having respect to facts or conditions; properly viewed; carefully weighed.

well-room (wel'rōm), n. 1. A room which contains a well; especially, a room built over a mineral spring, or into which its waters are conducted, and where they are drunk.—2. In a boat, a place in the bottom where leakage and rainwater are collected, to be thrown out with a scoop.

well-rounded (wel'roun'ded), a. Being well or properly rounded or filled out; symmetrically proportioned; complete in all parts.

Something so complete and well-rounded in his . . . life. Longfellow.

well-seen (wel'sēn'), a. Highly accomplished; expert; skilful.

All six well seene in armes, and prov'd in many a fight. Spenser, F. Q., V. iii. 6.

As a well seen musician
Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 2. 134.

well-set (wel'set'), a. 1. Firmly set or fixed; properly placed or arranged.

Instead of a girdle, a rent, and, instead of well set hair, baldness. Isa. iii. 24.

2. Symmetrically formed; properly joined or put together: as, a well-set frame or body.

well-sinker (wel'sing'kėr), n. One who sinks or digs wells.

Modern well sinkers will go down to any strata almost to any depth. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV. 80.

well-sinking (wel'sing'king), n. The operation of sinking or digging wells: the art of boring for water.

well-smack (wel'smak), n. A boating-smack furnished with a well, a smack. [Canada and New Eng.]

well-spherometer (wel'sfe-rom'e-ter), n. A form of spherometer for accurately measuring the radius of curvature of a lens.

well-spoken (wel'spō'kn), a. 1. Spoken well or with propriety: as, a well-spoken recitation.—2. See well spoken, under speak.

well-spring (wel'spring), n. [< ME. well-spring, wel-spring, < AS. wyllspring, wylspring, a fountain spring of water, < wyll, well, + spring, spring: see well[3] and spring.] 1. A water source; a fountainhead; a living spring. [Obsolete or archaic.]

A litill brooke that com rennyng of two welle springes of a mountayne. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 328.

Hence—2. Figuratively, a perennial source of anything; a fountainhead of supply or of emanation.

Understanding is a wellspring of life unto him that hath it. Prov. xvi. 22.

well-staircase (wel'stār'kās), n. A staircase forming or built around a well or well-hole. See well[3], n., 5 (a).

well-sweep (wel'swēp), n. A sweep or pivoted pole to one end of which a bucket is hung for drawing water from a well.

Leaning well sweeps creaked in the scant garden. S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 1.

well-tempered (wel'tem'pėrd), a. In music, tuned in equal temperament. The term is used specifically in the (double) title of one of J. S. Bach's most famous works, "The Well Tempered Clavichord," a collection of forty-eight preludes and fugues, in two equal parts, one published in 1722 and the other in 1744, which were written in all the major and minor keys (doubtless of the keyboard for the purpose of testing the theory of tuning in equal temperament, at that time but little known. See temperament.

well-thewed, wel'thūd'), a. [< ME. wel-thewed, wel thewed; < well[2] + thewed.] Good in manner, habit, form, or construction; well-mannered; well done.

They beene so well-theawed, and so wise,
What ever that good old man bespake.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., February.

well-timbered (wel'tim'bėrd), a. Well furnished with timber: as, well-timbered land; also, made with good or abundant timber, literally or figuratively; strongly formed or built.

A well timbered fellow, he would have made a good column, an he had been thought on when the house was a building. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

well-timed (wel'tīmd), a. 1. Done at a good or suitable time; opportune.

Methinks an angry scorn is here well timed.
Lowell, To G. W. Curtis.

2. Keeping accurate time: as, well timed oars.

well-to-do (wel'tö dö'), a. 1. Having means to do or get along with; well off; forehanded; prosperous: as, a well-to-do merchant or farmer.

I am rich and well to do. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

2. Manifesting a state of being well off; indicative of prosperity.

There was a well to do aspect about the place. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, vi.

Tobermory is a commonplace town, with a semicircle of well to do houses on the shores of a sheltered bay. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 496.

well-tomb (wel'tōm), n. A deeply excavated tomb; one of a numerous class of ancient burial pits, as in Egypt and in Phœnician lands, etc., sunk in the ground or rock like wells.

The graves belong to the type of well tombs, and show a curious and subtle art in their design, for the purposes of concealment. The Nation, XLVIII. 305.

well-trap (wel'trap), n. Same as sink-trap.

well-tube (wel'tūb), n. A wooden or metallic tube or piping running from top to bottom of a well for the fluid to rise or be pumped through. See cut under packing. Well-tube filter, a filter or strainer at the end of the tube of a driven well, to prevent the entrance of gravel or sand.

well-turned (wel'tėrnd), a. 1. Accurately turned or rounded: as, a well-turned column.—2. Dexterously turned or fashioned; well-rounded; aptly constructed: as, a well-turned sentence or compliment.

well-warranted (wel'wor'an-ted), a. Having good warrant or credit; well accredited; well-trusted.

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin, . . .
Do with your injuries as seems you best.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 284.

well-water (wel'wa'tėr), n. The water of a well or of wells, water drawn from an artificial well.

He alludes to the excellence of her freestone well-water, declares he must really take a third drink out of her nice gourd. W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 349.

well-willed†, a. [< ME. welewyllyd; < well[2] + willd + -ed[2].] Bearing good-will; favorable.

well-willer† (wel'wil'ėr), n. One who wills or wishes well; a well wisher.

[They] scornefullie mocke his worde, and also spitefullie hate and hurte all well willers thereof. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 82.

Be ruled by your well willers. Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1. 72.

well-willing† (wel'wil'ing), a. [< ME. welewyllyng, welwillende, < AS. welwillende (tr. benevolus), < wel, well, + willende, ppr. of willan.] Wishing well; well inclined; favorable; friendly; propitious.

To ther desire the kyng was welewillyng,
Bi-fore on huntyng he rode ceteynly.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 964.

well-willy† (wel'wil'i), a. [Also welwillily; Sc. well-willie, < ME. welwillily (= sw. välvillig = Dan. velvillig), benevolent; < well[2] + willy + -y[1]. Cf. well-willing.] Kindly wishing; favorable; propitious.

Venus mene I, the welwilly planete. Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1257.

well-wish† (wel'wish'), n. A good or favorable wish; a benevolent desire.

If this be true, I must confess I am charitable only in my liberal indulgence and bountiful well wishes.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 13.

Let me end . . . enter into the heart of any one that hath . . . a well wish for his friends or posterity to think of peace with France. Addison, Present State of the War.

well-wished†, (wel'wisht), a. Held in good will; highly esteemed; well liked.

The general, subject to a well wish'd king, Quit their own part. Shak., M. for M., ii. 4. 32.

well-wisher (wel'wish'ėr), n. One who wishes well, as to a person or a cause; a person favorably inclined; a sympathizing friend.

It heartens the Young Libertine, and confirms the well-wishers to Atheism.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 160.

well-won (wel'wun), a. Honestly gained; hardly earned.

My bargains and my well won thrift.
Shak., M. of V., I. 3. 51.

well-worn (wel'worn), a. 1. Much affected by wear or use; hence, familiar from frequent repetition; worn threadbare.

The well worn plea that unequal acquaintance-ships never prosper.
Mrs. Gore, Two Aristocracies, xx.

Down which a well worn pathway courted us
Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

2. Properly or becomingly worn; suitably borne or maintained. [Rare.]

That well-worn reserve which proved he knew
No sympathy with that familiar crew Byron, Lara, I. 7.

welly (wel'i), adv. [An extension of *well*².] Well-nigh; very nearly; almost. [Prov. Eng.]

Our Joseph 's welly blind, poor lad.
Waugh's Lancashire Songs.

welmt, v. i. [ME. welmen, < welm, walm, a bubbling up, a spring: see walm.] To well; spring.

The water is ever fresh and newe
That welmeth up with wawes brighte
Rom. of the Rose, l. 1561.

wels (welz), n. The wheatfish, Silurus glanis.

Welsh[1] (welsh), a. and n. [Formerly also Welch, early mod. E. also Walsh, < ME. Welsc, Walshe, Walsce, Walsche, Walse, Walsc, Welse, < AS. welisc, wælisc, foreign, esp. Celtic, in later use applied also to the French (= OHG. walhisc, foreign, esp. pertaining to Rome, Roman, MHG. welsch, welhsch, walhisc, pertaining to Rome, French, Italian, G. welsch, foreign (cf. G. Welschland, Italy), = Icel. valskr, foreign), < wealh (pl. wealas), foreigner, esp. the Celts or Welshmen, = OHG. walh, MHG. welch, a foreigner, esp. a Roman (cf. Wallach); cf. Lith. Volex, a reflex of a Celtic name. The AS. noun, in the pl. Wealas, lit. 'foreigners,' exists in the patrial names Wales, Cornwall, and in comp. in walnut; and the adj. appears as a surname in the forms Welsh, Welch, Walsh.] I. a. 1†. Foreign. See walnut. — 2. Relating or pertaining to Wales (a titular principality and a part of the island of Great Britain, opposite the southern part of Ireland), or to its people or its indigenous Cymric language. Welsh clearwing, Trochilium scoliæformis, a British hawk-moth whose larva feeds on the birch. Welsh drake, the gadwall or gray duck, Chaulelasmus streperus. J. P. Grand, 1844. Also called German duck. See cut under Chaulelasmus. [New Jersey.] Welsh glave. See glave, 3. Welsh groin, in arch., a groin formed by the intersection of two cylindrical vaults, of which one is of less height than the other. See underpitch groining, under groining. Welsh harp. See harp. Welsh hook, an old military weapon of the bill kind, but having, in addition to a cutting blade, a hook at the back.

Swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 3. 2.

Welsh lay. See lay[1]. Welsh main, a match at cock-fighting where all must fight to death. Scott. Welsh mediar. Same as mazzard. Welsh mortgage. See mortgage. Welsh mutton, a choice and delicate quality of mutton obtained from a small breed of sheep in Wales. Simmonds. Welsh onion, the chief Allium ascalonicum so called from the German Welsch, which merely indicates a foreign origin. See cibol, 2, and Welsh parsley[1]. Welsh parsley[1], a burlesque name for hemp or a hangman's halter made of it.

This is a rascal deserves . . . to dance in hemp Derrick's cornute. let's choke him with Welsh parsley.
Randolph, Hey for Honesty, iv. 1.

Welsh poppy. See Meconopsis and poppy. Welsh rabbit, rare, wig, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. 1. Collectively, as a plural word with the definite article, the people of Wales, or the members of the Cymric race indigenous to Wales. They were ruled by petty princes and maintained their independence of the English till 1282–3. — 2. The language of Wales or of the Welsh. The Welsh is a member of the Celtic family of languages, forming with the Breton language and the now extinct Cornish branch the Cymric group.

welsh[2] (welsh), v. t. and i. [Also welch, welch, Welsh], either from the surname, or in allusion to the alleged bad faith of Welshmen.] To cheat or practise cheating by betting or taking money as a stake on a horse-race, and running off without settling.

A little decision of the courts has rather taken the lower class of bookmaker by surprise. welshing was decided to be an indictable offence. Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 830.

He stakes his money with one of the book-makers whom he has seen at his stand for many years, with the certainty that he will receive his winnings, and run no risk of being welshed.
Daily Telegraph, March 12, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

welsher (wel'shėr), n. [< welsh[2] + -er[1].] A swindling better or book-maker on a race-track; one who absconds without paying his losses, or what is due to others on account of money deposited with him for betting. Also written welcher.

The welcher properly so called takes the money offered him to back a horse, but, when he has taken money enough from his dupes, departs from the scene of his labors and trusts to his luck, a dyed wig, or a pair of false whiskers not to be recognized.
All the Year Round.

Welshman (welsh'man), n.; pl. Welshmen (-men). [Formerly also Welchman; < Welsh + man.] 1. A native of the principality of Wales, or a member of the Welsh race. — 2. A local name of the black-bass and of the squirrel-fish.

welshnut† (welsh'nut), n. [Also walshnut, < ME. welshnote, walshnote, lit. 'foreign nut': see Welsh and nut, and cf. walnut.] The nut of Juglans regia, the European walnut; also, the tree.

I saugh him carien a wind melle
Under a walsh note [var. welsh-nute] shale.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1281.

[Early printed editions have walnute.]

welsomet (wel'sum), a. [< ME. welsum; < well[2] + -some.] Well off; in good condition; prosperous. Wyclif, Gen. xxiv. 21.

welsomelyt (wel'sum-li), adv. [< ME. welsumlı, < welsome + -lı[2].] Prosperously; with favor or well-being.

I . . . shall be turned ayen welsumly to the hous of my fader.
Wyclif, Gen. xxviii. 21.

welt[1]† (welt), v. t. [< ME. welten, roll, upset, overturn, < AS. wyltan, roll, etc., = OHG. waltan, MHG. welzen, G. walzen, walzen = Icel. velta, roll: see wault.] To roll; revolve.

Hit walz a wenyng wowar (foolish) that welt in his mynde.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 115.

welt[2] (welt), n. [< ME. welte, a narrow strip of leather round a shoe, a hem, a fringe; perhaps < W. gwald, a hem, welt, gwaltes, the welt of a shoe (cf. gwaldu, welt, hem, gwaltesio, form a welt).] 1. An applied hem, selvage, bordering, or fringe; especially, a strengthening or ornamenting strip of material fastened along an edge, or over or between two joined edges, often forming a rounded ridge by the insertion of a cord or the doubling outward of the material. [Now rare, except in specific or technical uses.]

Little low hedges, round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well.
Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887).

Clap but a civil gown with a welt [a Fullian's gown with a furred border] on the one, and a canonical cloke with sleeves on the other.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 2.

A committee man's clerk, or some such excellent rascal, clothing himself from top to toe in knavery, without a welt or gard of goodness about him.
Randolph, Hey for Honesty, i. 1.

His coat was grocne,
With welts of white scamble-to tweene.
Greene, Mourning Garment.

Specifically (a) In a heraldic achievement, a narrow border to an ordinary or charge. (b) A strip of material sewed round or along an open edge, as of a glove.

He [a] glover makes welts or pieces for the thumbs . . . and for the binding round the topsand the opening just above the palm of the hand, which are called welts.
Chambers's Journal, 4th ser., III. 220.

(c) A strip of leather in a boot or shoe, sewed round the edge of the combined upper leather and inner sole, preparatory to the attachment of the bottom or outer sole. See cut under boot. (d) In carp., a strip forming an additional backing laid over a flush seam or joint, or placed in an angle to strengthen it, as in a carved built vessel. (e) In steel-roofing, a strip riveted to two continuous plates forming a butt-joint. (f) In knitting, (1) One of the ribs at an end of the work intended to prevent it from rolling up, as around the opening or top of a sock. (2) A separate flap, as a heel-piece, on any piece of work made in knitting machine. It is made independently of the work and afterward knitted on.

Hence — 2. A low superficial ridge or linear swelling, as on the skin; a weal or wale: as, to raise welts on a person or an animal by blows with a whip. See welt[2], v. t., 2. [Colloq.]

welt[3] (welt), v. t. [< welt[2], n.] 1. To fix a welt or welts to or in; furnish or ornament with anything called a welt: as, to welt shoes.

If any be sick in a speare is set up in his Tent with blocke Felt welted about it, and from thence forth no stranger entereth therein.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 412.

Wit's as suitable to guarded coats as wisdom is to welted shoes.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, iv. 1.

2. To beat severely with a whip or stick, whereby welts may be raised. See welt[2], n., 2. [Colloq.] Welted thistle. See thistle.

welt[3] (welt), v. i. [A dial. var. of wilt.] To wilt; wither; become soft or flabby, as from decay; become ropy or stringy, as some liquors. [Prov. Eng.]

Her couldn't have 'ouse by raison of the Christmas bakkon comin' on, and some o' the cider welted.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, ii.

welt[4]. Preterit of walt.

welt-cutter (welt'kut'ėr), n. In shoe-manuf., a machine to cut notches in the edges of a welt, in order to admit of laying it inconspicuously at the toe. The cutting-blade is triangular, and is depressed by a treadle and raised by a spring. E. H. Knight.

weltet. Preterit of weld[3], welde, older forms of wield.

welter (wel'tėr), v. [< ME. welteren, a var. of walteren, waltren, roll over: see walter.] I. intrans. 1. To roll or toss; tumble about; flow or act waveringly, confusedly, or tumultuously: used chiefly of waves, or of things comparable to them.

Again the reckless and the brave
Ride lords of weltering seas.
Motherwell, Battle-Flag of Sigurd.

Incapable of change,
Nor touched by welterings of passion.
Wordsworth, Prel., vi.

The waves
Whelmed the degraded race, and weltered o'er their graves.
Bryant, The Ages, st. 18.

2. To roll about, as in some fluid or unstable medium; be tossed or tumbled; hence, to wallow or grovel (in something).

He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind
Without the meed of some melodious tear.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 18.

Happier are they that welter in their sin,
Swine in the mud, that cannot see for slime.
Tennyson, Holy Grail.

3. To be exposed to or affected by some weltering or floating substance or medium: said of objects at rest.

When all is past, it is humbling to tread
Over the weltering field of the tombless dead.
Byron, Siege of Corinth, xvii.

We climbed over the crest of high sand, where the rushes lay weltering after the wind.
R. D. Blackmore, Maid of Sker, xi.

She fell from her horse, slain, and weltering in her blood.
E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, II. 153.

II. trans. 1†. To roll; cause to turn or revolve.

He that welteth a stone.
Bible of 1549 (Prov. xxvi. 27).

2. To subject to or affect by weltering; accomplish by or as if by wallowing. [Rare.]

Welteren your was through chaos and the murk of Hell.
Carlyle.

welter (wel'tėr), n. [< welter, v.] Rolling or wallowing motion; a tossing or tumbling about; hence, turmoil; ferment; hurly-burly.

The foul welter of our so-called religious or other controversies.
Carlyle.

Nothing but a confused welter and quiver of mingled air, and rain and spray, as if the very atmosphere is writhing in the clutches of the gale.
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, III.

The welter of the waves rose up to his chin.
William Morris, Sigurd, i.

welter-race (wel'tėr-ras), n. A race in which the horses carry welter weight. See welter-weight.

welter stakes (wel'tėr-stāks), n. pl. The stakes run in welter race.

welter-weight (wel'tėr-wāt), n. [Appar. < welter, v., + weight, in allusion to the heavier motion. But in early racing lists the first element is said to be swelter, for which then welter would be a substitute. Swelter would allude to the overheating of the heavily weighted horses.] In horse-racing, an unusually heavy weight, especially as carried by horses in many steeple-chases and hurdle-races. These weights sometimes amount to as much as 40 pounds over weight for age.

welt-guide (welt'gīd), n. An attachment to a shoe-sewing machine for presenting the welt to the machine in position for sewing in.

welting (wel'ting), n. [Verbal n. of welt[2], v.] 1. A sewed border or edging; a thickened edging. — 2. A severe beating with a whip, stick, strap, or the like. [Colloq.]

He [a clergyman] compared his weltings, and I *s*arce thought it creditable to him.
G. Meredith.

welt-leather (welt'leTH'ėr), n. Leather from the shoulders of tanned hides, used for making the welts of boots and shoes.

The demand for welt leather is greater than the supply.
U. S. Cons. Rep. No. 118 (1885), p. 442.

welt-machine (welt'ma-shēn'), n. In shoe-manuf., a machine for cutting leather into strips suitable for welts. The welts are afterward passed through the welt-cutter. Welts may also be cut and trimmed with hand-tools called welt-trimmers.

welt-shoulders (welt'shōl'dėrz), n. pl. Same as welt-leather.

welt-trimmer (welt'trim'ėr), n. A cutting-tool for trimming welts for shoes; also, a welt-machine.

wel-willy, a. See well-willy.

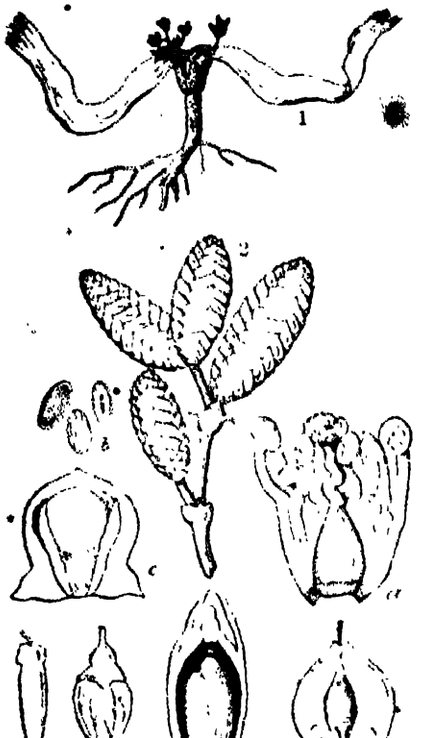
Welwitschia (wel-wich'i-ȧ), n. [NL. (J. D. Hooker, 1863), named after Friedrich Welwitsch (1806–72), an Austrian botanist and traveler.] A genus of gymnospermous plants, of the order Gnetaceæ, among the most remarkable in the vegetable kingdom, distinguished by dioecious many-flowered imbricated cone-like spikes paniculed at the margin of a short woody trunk. The only species, W. mirabilis, is a native of sandy regions of southwestern tropical Africa, in Benguela and Damara-land, between 14° and 23° south latitude.



Welwitschia mirabilis.

1 Entire plant; 2 lower end of the panicle; 3 staminate cone, fully developed, showing the imbricated scales; 4 pistillate cone, with one of the lower scales removed; 5 vertical section of the same, showing the ovule and integument of the apex; 6 one of the lower scales of the staminate cone; 7 the same with sporiferous apex of the filament of the scale; 8, 9 embryo.

Its thick trunk bears but two leaves. The original cotyledons, which are opposite, green, spreading, and persistent, are composed of a hard fibrous substance, and become often 6 feet long and 1° or 3 wide. They finally split into long shreds, but are still retained. It is said through over a hundred years of growth. The mature trunk forms a tabular mass only about a foot high, but 6 or 8 feet across, the top is truncate, hard pitted, and broken by cracks, and resembles a fungus of the genus Polyporus; the base is deeply sunk in the soil, and produces middle-sized roots. The paniculed inflorescence is composed of rigid erect dichotomously jointed stems from 6 to 12 inches high, with two opposite scales sheathing each joint, and is developed annually from the upper side of the trunk at the base of the cotyledons. The flower spikes are composed of hard blunt scarlet scales overlapping, usually in four rows; the male with spikes 12 inches long or under, the female larger, fewer, and thicker. Each scale contains a flower, the male a small loose membranous perianth, the filaments connate into a loosely exserted tube, and six anthers, each opening by three apical and finally confluent pores. The fruit is dry, two-winged, compressed, inclosed in a fibrous utricle. The new growth is chiefly horizontal enlarging the stem both above and below the base of the leaf, which finally projects from a deep marginal cavity.

welyt, a. [ME., < AS. welig, welan (= OHG. erlaggi), rich, wealthy, < wela, weal: see *weal*¹.] In a state of weal or good health; healthy.

> The clowes drie and scabbed olde hosely
> Kytte all away, and kepe up that is welu.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.

wem¹† (wem), n. [Early mod. E. also weme; < ME. wem, wemme, altered, after the verb, from wam*, wom*, < AS. wam, wom (wamm-, womm-), spot, blot, sin. = OS. wam = OFries. wam (in ellinwam) = OHG. wamm = Icel. vamm = Goth. wamm, a spot, blemish. Cf. *wem*², v.] A spot; scar; fault; blemish; taint.

> Serven your body into every place . . .
> Withoute wem of yow, thurgh foul or fair.
> Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 113.

The shaft must be made round, nothing flat, without gall or wem, for this purpose.
Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1868), p. 121.

Rubbe out the wrinckles of the minde, and be not curious about the wemme in the face.
Lyly, Euphues and his England (Arber's reprint), IV. 403.

wem²† (wem), v. t. [< ME. wemmen, < AS. wemman (= OHG. gi-wemman = Goth. us-wamm-jan), spot, blemish, etc., < wam (womm-), a spot: see *wem*¹, n.] To corrupt; vitiate. Drant.

wem³† (wem), n. [A shortened form of wem, womb, a dial. form of womb.] The belly; the womb.

> He had his gang therefore command us . . .
> To probe its [the Trojan horse's] wem with wedge and beetle. Cotton, Scarronides, p. 7. (Davies.) wemless† (wem'les), a. [< ME. wemles, wemmeles, wemeles, < AS. wemleas, womleas, without spot or blemish, < wem, spot, + -leas = E. -less.] Spotless; stainless; immaculate.

> Thou Virgin wemmeles,
> Bar of thy body, and dwelltest maiden pure.
> Chaucer, Second Nun's Tale, l. 47.

wemmy† (wem'i), a. [< *wem*¹ + *-y*¹.] Faulty; unsound; blemished; tainted.

> The musts we ate, the sowre wine, the ratt eaten bread, the wemmie cheese.
> Guevara, Letters (tr. by Bellowes, 1577), p. 55.

wen (wen), n. [< ME. wen, wenne, < AS. wen, wenn (wenn-, wenn) = OFries. wen = D. wen = MLG. wen, wenne = G. dial. wenne, wehne, wahne, a wen, wart.] A circumscribed benign tumor of moderate size, occurring on any part of the body, but especially on the scalp, consisting of a well-defined sac inclosing sebaceous matter.

wench¹ (wench), n. [< ME. wenche, shortened form of wenchel, orig. a child, prob. < AS. wencel*, a child, represented by the once occurring wencla, pl., children, prob. for wencele*, neut. pl. of the adj. wencel, wencele, weak (found once), in dat. pl. wencelum, applied to widows), var. of wancol, wancel, unstable, > E. wankle: see wankle. The AS. wenele, a wench, a daughter, given by Somner, is an error based upon the above forms.] 1†. A child (of either sex).

> Were A wif A wenched man and wife and child).
> Ancren Riwle, p. 334.

2. A female child; a girl; a maid or damsel; a young woman in general. [Wench had originally no depreciatory implication and continued to be used in a respectful sense, especially as a familiar term long after it had acquired such an implication to specific employment, and it is still commonly so used in provincial English, and sometimes archaically in literature.]

> Within A his worthi wenche [a princess] than were blithe
> Of the folk that thei hadde of this wold heat.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1901.
>
> Go, go, away, let the wenche is hot dede, but elepath.
> Rel. Ant., Mat in '4.
>
> Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-starred wench [Desdemona]!
> Shak., Othello, v. 2, 270.

3. Specifically—(a) A girl or young woman of a humble order or class, especially, a maid-servant; a working girl.

> A wench [maid-servant, R. V.] went and told them.
> 2 Sam. xvii. 17.
>
> The wench in the kitchen sings and scours from morning to night.
> Steele, Tatler, No. 76.

(b) A kept or immodest woman; a mistress; a concubine; a strumpet. [This use was early developed, and is always indicated by the context. It is obsolescent.]

> I am a gentil woomman, and no wenche.
> Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 355.
>
> A lodger [of some preceding] [who calls Cadiennis and] a cross upon a wench.
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 2.

(c) A coarse woman of any age; a hoyden or romp; especially one in service. [Colloq.]

wench¹ (wench), v. i. [< *wench*¹, n.] To consort with wenches.

> Why are you virtuous? why minch mangle?
> Shak., 1 and 2 Henry IV., i. 2, 30.

wench²†, n. An obsolete form of *winch*² for winnow.

wencher (wen'cher), n. [< wench + *-er*¹.] One who wenches; a lewd man.

> My cousin Pope [was] a . . . [but the Archbishop of Canterbury] is very somewhat more.
> Pepys, Diary, II. 267.

wend¹ (wend), v. [< ME. wenden, < AS. wendan, wendian, wendean = OFries. wenda = D. wenden, turn, turn, = OHG. wenten, MHG. G. wenden, cause to turn, = Icel. venda, wend, turn, change, = Sw. vända = Dan. vende = Goth. wandjan, cause to turn; caus. of AS. windan, etc., turn, wind: see *wind*¹, v.] I. trans. 1†. To turn; change.

> To wenden thus here thought.
> Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 4061.

2. To direct (one's way or course); proceed upon.

> Wende forthe thi course, I comaunde the.
> Piers Plowman, p. 83.
>
> And still, her thought that she was left alone
> Uncompanied, good voyages to wend
> In desert land, but Tyrian folk to seek.
> Surrey, Æneid, iv. 634.
>
> Then slower wended back his way
> Where the poor maiden bleeding lay.
> Scott, L. of the L., iv. 33.

II. intrans. 1†. To turn; make a turn; go round; veer.

> For so is this worlde ay-wat with hem that han powere.
> Piers Plowman (B), iii. 293.
>
> At the wending [turning of the furrow] slake
> The yoke, thyne oxen neckes for to ease.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 44.
>
> The lesser (ship) will turn her broadsides twice before the greater can wend once. Raleigh.

2. To take one's way or course; proceed; go.

> For every wyght which that to Rome went [wendeth]
> Halt nat o path or alwey o manere.
> Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 86.
>
> As fer as any wight hath ever went.
> Chaucer, Troilus, v. 444.
>
> Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
> But to procrastinate his lifeless end.
> Shak., C. of E., i. 1. 163.
>
> Bereft of thee he wends astray.
> Prior, Wandering Pilgrim, st. 13.

3†. To pass away; disappear; depart; vanish.

> The grete lomes ares wane and wende.
> Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2167.
>
> He patte thee doun, thou nightist not rise;
> Thi strengthe, thi witt, awei is went!
> Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 102.

Wend² (wend), n. [G. Wende, pl. Wenden (called in Slavic Serb, Serbi, etc.: see Serb, *Serbi*²); a name prob. ult. connected (like Vandal) with *wend*¹, wander.] 1. A name applied in early times by the Germans to their Slavic neighbors.—2. A member of a branch of the Slavic race dwelling in Lusatia: same as *Serb*².

wend¹†, wende†. Obsolete preterits of ween, weened.

Wendic (wen'dik), a. and n. [< *Wend*² + -ic.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Wends; Wendish; as, the Wendic tongue.

II. n. Same as Serbian, 2.

Wendish (wen'dish), a. [< G. Wendisch; as *Wend*² + *-ish*².] Of or pertaining to the Wends; Wendic.

> The original Wendish towns which the conquerors found already established . . . became German.
> H. Wilson, State, § 441.

wenet, n. and v. An old spelling of ween.

weng†, n. An obsolete form of wing.

Wenham prism. See prism.

wenion†, n. Same as wanion.

Wenlock group. See *group*¹.

wennish (wen'ish), a. [< wen + *-ish*¹.] Having the character or appearance of a wen; also, affected with wens or wen-like excrescences. Sir H. Watton.

wenny (wen'i), a. [< wen + *-y*¹.] Same as wennish. Wiseman, Surgery.

wenona (we-no'nȧ), n. [N. Amer. Ind.] A small American serpent, Charina plumbea, native of California and Mexico. It is a sort of sand-snake related to and formerly placed in the family Erycidæ, but represents a different family, Charinidæ.

went¹† (went), n. [< ME. wente, < *wend*¹ (cf. bend, n., ? *bent*¹).] 1. A turn or change of course; a turning or veering; hence, a rolling or tossing about.

> In went-bedde he wente
> And made of it was dey full many a wente.
> Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 63.
>
> He knew the diverse wentes of all waves.
> Spenser, F. Q., VI. vi. 8.

2. A course; a passage; a path.

> He hent wente
> Downe by a floury grene wente
> Full thicke of grass, soft and sweete.
> Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 398.
>
> But her new wrong to former hidden spight,
> Shall breake the bonds which her so long in went.
> Spenser, F. Q., IV. x. 45.

3. A winding of land. Halliwell.

went²†, verb. See weend and go.

went³†, wenten†. An obsolete preterit and past participle of ween.

wentle (wen'tl), v. [Prob. of wendl (cf. wentl)?] To turn; roll over. Halliwell.

wentletrap (wen'tl-trap), n. [< G. wendeltreppe, a winding staircase, cockle-stair, < wendel, in comp.

wentletrap a turning (< wenden, turn: see wend[1], and cf. windle), + treppe, stair: see trap[2].] A shell of the genus Scalaria or family Scalariidæ; a ladder-shell. See Scalariidæ, and cut under Scalaria.

wept. An obsolete preterit of weep[1].

wepelyt, a. See weeply.

wepent, wepnet, weppont, weppynt, etc., n. Obsolete forms of weapon.

wept (wept). Preterit and past participle of weep[1].

wer[1]†, n. [Also were, ME. wer, were, < AS. wer, a man, also a fine so called, wergild, = OS. wer = OHG. wer = Icel. verr = Goth. wair = L. vir, a man. Hence, in comp., wergild, werwolf. From the L. vir are ult. E. virile, virtue, etc., and the second element of decemvir, duumvir, triumvir, etc.] 1. A man.

Me hwat is he thes were that he art to wreddest?
Life of St. Juliana, l. 1. T. S., p. 81.

Ne lihne no wif to hire were, ne were to hire wyve.
Old Eng. Homilies (E. E. T. S., 1st ser.), Moral Ode, l. 97.

2. Wergild.

Every man was valued at a certain sum, which was called his were. Bosworth, Anglo-Saxon Dict.

Wer (in ancient English criminal law) was a species of fine, a price set upon a man according to his rank in life. Stephen, Hist. Crim. Law, I. 47.

wer[2]†, n. An obsolete form of weir.

wer[3], pron. A dialectal form of our[1].

werblet, v. and n. An old form of warble[1].

wercht, v. and n. An old form of work[1].

werche, n. Same as worsh.

werdt, n. A Middle English form of weird.

were[1]†, n. An obsolete form of wear[1], weir[2], weir, war[1], ware.

were[2]†, n. See wer[1].

were[3]. Indicative plural and subjunctive (singular and plural) of was. See was.

were-angel, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of warrangle.

weregild, n. See wergild.

werelyet, a. Same as warely.

weremod, n. Same as wormwood. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

werent. An obsolete form of were[3].

werena (wer'na). A Scotch form of were na, that is, were not.

werewolf, werewolfish, etc. See werwolf, etc.

wergild, weregild (wėr', wer'gild), n. [Also weregeld; prop. wergild, repr. AS. wergild, wergeld, weregild, also erroneously wargeld, weregild (= OHG. MHG. wergelt, G. wergeld, wehrgeld), < wer, a man, + gild, geld, gyld, retribution, compensation: see wer[1] and yield, n., geld[2], gild[2].] In Anglo-Saxon and ancient Teutonic law, a kind of fine for manslaughter and other crimes against the person, by paying which the offender or friends for him freed himself from every further obligation or punishment. The fine or composition due by the offender varied in amount according to his rank or station and that of the person killed or injured, and also according to the nature of the injury. It was to be paid to the relatives of him who had been slain, or in the case of a wound or other bodily harm to the person who sustained the injury, but, if the cause was brought before the community, the plaintiff received only part of the fine, the community, or the king when there was one, receiving the remainder.

weriet, v. t. A Middle English form of wear[2].

werisht, werishnesst. Same as weavish, weavishness.

werkandt, a. See warkand.

werlaughet, n. An obsolete variant of warlock[1].

Werlhop's disease. Purpura hemorrhagica.

werlyt, a. An old form of scarcely.

wermodt, n. An old form of wormwood.

wernt, v. t. An old form of warn.

wernardt, n. [ME., < OF. guernart, deceitful, prob., with suffix -art, E. -ard, < guerpir, desert, < OS. werpan, etc., deny: see warve.] A deceiver; a liar.

Wel thow wost, wernard, but yif thow wolt gabbe,
Thow hast hanged on myne halt ellevene lymes.
Piers Plowman (C), iv. 179.

Thus sat how a wernard, God yive him mischance!
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. [MS.].

Wernerian (wer-nē'ri-an), a. and n. [< Werner (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Partaking of or in conformity with the views of Abraham Gottlob Werner (1750–1817), a German geologist, professor in the mining school of Freiberg, Saxony, who had much influence on the development of geology at the time when this branch of science began to be seriously studied. He was the principal expounder of the so-called Neptunian theory of the earth's formation, according to which the earth was originally covered by a chaotic ocean which held the materials of all the rocks in solution, and from which ocean the various formations were precipitated one after another.

The Wernerian notion of the aqueous precipitation of "Trap" has since that date never held up its head.
G. P. Scrope, Geol. and Extinct Volcanos of Central France, Pref., p. lx.

II. n. In geol., an advocate of the Wernerian theory.

My two friends agreed with me in the opinion that the error of the Wernerians in underrating or rather despising altogether as of no appreciable value, the influence of volcanic forces in the production of the rocks that compose the surface of the globe formed a fatal bar to the progress of sound geological science which it was above all things desirable to remove.
G. P. Scrope, Geol. and Extinct Volcanos of Central France, Pref., p. vi.

Neptune had failed to extinguish the torch of Pluto, and the Wernerians were retreating before the Huttonians. Nature, XLII. 218.

wernerite (wer'ner-īt). n. [< Werner (see Wernerian) + -ite[2].] A variety of scapolite.

Werner's map-projection. See projection.

Wernicke's fissure. The exoccipital fissure of the cerebrum; one of the so-called ape-fissures, found in apes as well as in man.

werowance†, n. [Amer. Ind.] An Indian chief.

A Werowance is a military officer, who of course takes upon him the command of all parties either of hunting, travelling, warring or the like, and the word signifies a war captain. Beverley, Virginia, iii. ¶ 17.

The Indians were also deprived of the power of choosing their own chief or werowance.
E. D. Neill, Virginia Carolorum, viii.

werre†. A Middle English form of war[1], war[2].

worreiet, werreyt, werryt, v. t. Middle English forms of warray.

werreyourt, n. A Middle English form of warrior.

werset, a. An old spelling of worse.

wersh (wėrsh), a. [Also warsh, werche; a reduced form of weavish.] Insipid; tasteless; delicate; having a pale and sickly look. [Scotch.]

Wersh porridge, neither guide to fry, boil, nor sup could.
Scott, Old Mortality, ix.

werstet, n. An old spelling of worst.

wert[1] (wert). See was.

wert[2]†, n. A Middle English variant of wart[1].

Wertherian (ver-tē'ri-an), a. [< Werther, the hero of Goethe's romance, "Die Leiden des jungen Werther" ("The Sorrows of Young Werther"), a type of the sentimental young German, + -ian.] Resembling the character of Werther; characteristic of the sentiments and modes of thought exemplified by Werther.

A love born amid . . . full of imaginary sorrows and Wertherian grief. Trollope, Barchester Towers, (Hoppe.)

Wertherism (ver'te-rizm). n. < Werther (see Wertherian) + -ism.] Wertherian sentiment.

The romance of Jacobinism which thrilled in Shelley, the romance of Wertherism which glowed with sullen fire in Byron, are extinct as poetic impulses.
Edinburgh Rev., CXIII. 466.

wervelst, n. pl. An obsolete form of swivels.

werwolf, werewolf (wer'-, wer'wulf), n.; pl. werwolves, werewolves (-wulvz). [Also werwolf, werwolfe, werewolfe (-wulf), and formerly warwolf, prop. werwolf, < ME. werwolf (pl. werwolves), < AS. werwulf, also erroneously wærwulf, a werwolf (also used as an epithet of the devil); = MD. weerwolf, waerwolf, weyrwolf, weerwulf, D. waarwolf = MLG. werwulf, werwolf, warwolf = MHG. werwolf, G. werwolf; also erroneously wahrwolf = Sw. varulf = Dan. ravulv, werwolf; cf. OF. warwol, garoul, F. garou (in comp. loup garou), dial. garou, varou, etc., ML. garulphus, garulphus, < Teut. (cf. 'man-wolf': Gr. ἀνθρωπος, > ML. lycanthropus, > F. lycanthrope), < wer, man, + wulf, wolf: see wer[1] and wolf.] In old superstition, a human being turned into a wolf while retaining human intelligence. This transformation was either voluntarily assumed, through infernal aid, for the gratification of cannibalism or other beastly propensities, or inflicted by means of witchcraft, and it might be made and unmade at its subject's will in the former case, or be either temporary or permanent in the latter. A voluntary werwolf was the most dangerous of all creatures, and trials of men on charge of crimes committed while in this form took place in Europe as late as the seventeenth century. But an involuntary werwolf might retain humane feelings and sympathies, and act beneficently as the protector of persons in distress or otherwise; and many medieval legends are based upon this idea. The former belief in werwolves throughout Europe (not yet entirely extinct in regions where wolves still abound) has given the general name lycanthropy to belief in the metamorphosis of men to beasts of any kind (generally the most destructive or obnoxious of the locality), prevalent among nearly all savage and semi-civilized peoples.

Sir Marrocke, the good knight that was betrayed by his wife, for she made him wear a seven years a werwolf.
Sir T. Malory, Mort d'Arthur, III. cxxxix.

About the field religiously they went,
With hollowing charms the werwolf chance to ring,
That them and theirs awaited to betray.
Drayton, Man in the Moon.

In the old doctrine of Werwolves, not yet extinct in Europe, men who are versipelles or turnskins have the actual faculty of jumping out of their skins, to become for a time wolves. E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 77.

werwolfish, werewolfish (wėr'-, wer'wul-fish), a. [< werwolf + -ish[1].] Like a werwolf; lycanthropic; having or exhibiting the appearance or propensities attributed to werwolves.

werwolfism, werewolfism (wėr'-, wer'wul-fizm), n. [< werwolf + -ism.] Lycanthropy; also, the body of tradition and belief on that subject.

English folk-lore is singularly barren of were-wolf stories . . . The traditional belief in were-wolfism must, however, have remained long in the popular mind, . . . for the word occurs in old ballads and romances.
S. Baring-Gould, Book of Were-Wolves, viii.

werye. An old form of weary[1], warry, worry, warray.

weryanglet, n. Same as warrangle.

wesandt, n. An old spelling of weasand.

we'se (wēz). 1. A dialectal reduction of we shall. 2. A dialectal reduction of we is for we are. [Negro dialect, U. S.]

weasht, weasht. Obsolete preterits of wash.

wesheyt, n. Same as weasand.

wesil (wē'zl), n. [See weasand.] The weasand. Bacon.

Wesleyan (wes'li-an), a. and n. [< Wesley (see def.) + -an.] I. a. 1. Pertaining or relating to the English family to which John and Charles Wesley belonged, or to any of its members: as, Wesleyan genealogy or characteristics; Wesleyan hymnology. Specifically—2. Of or pertaining to John Wesley (1703–91), or the denomination founded by him: as, the Wesleyan Methodists; Wesleyan doctrine or Methodism. See Methodist.

II. n. A follower of John Wesley; a Wesleyan Methodist. See Methodist.

Wesleyanism (wes'li-an-izm), n. [< Wesleyan + -ism.] Arminian Methodism; the system of doctrines and church polity of the Wesleyan Methodists.

west (west). n. and a. [< ME. west, n., west (once west as adv.), < AS. west, adv., west, westward (cf. wester, from the west, westmest, westmost; in comp. west, a quasi-adj., as in westdæl, the west part, westende, the west end, etc.), = OFries. west = D. west, adv., n., and a. (cf. OF. west, ouest, F. ouest = Sp. Pg. oeste = It. ovest, n., west), < E.; = OHG. MHG. west- (in comp.) = Icel. vestr, n., the west. = Sw. Dan. vest, the west; orig. adv., the noun uses being developed from the older adverbial uses: (1) AS. west, adv., = D. west = LG. west (in comp.), to the west, in the west, west; (2) AS. westan = OHG. westana, MHG. G. westen, from the west; in MHG. and G. also in the west; hence the noun, MLG. westen = OHG. westan, MHG. G. westen, the west; (3) OS. wester = OFries. westa, D. wester = MLG. wester = OHG. westar, G. westen (in comp.), west; (4) AS. westrene* (in comp.), western; all from Teut. stem west* (imperfectly reflected in the first element of the LL. Visigothæ, West Goths), prob. connected with Icel. vist, abode, esp. lodging place, Goth. wisa, rest, calm of the sea, L. vesper, vespera = Gr. ἑσπερος, ἑσπερα, evening (see vesper); Gr. ἑστια, a city, Skt. vasta, a house (the term west appr. alluding to the abiding-place of the sun at night), < √ was, Skt. √ vas, dwell: see was. The forms and construction of west agree in great part with those of east, north, and south.] I. n. 1. One of the four cardinal points of the compass, opposite to the east, and lying on the left hand when one faces the north; the point in the heavens where the sun sets at the equinox, or the corresponding point on the earth; more generally, the place of sunset. Abbreviated W.

As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us. Ps. ciii. 12.

When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower. Luke xii. 54.

A certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 158.

2. The quarter or direction toward the mean point of sunset; the tendency or trend directly away from the east; the western part or side; with to, at, or on: as, that place lies to the west of this; to travel to the west; at or on the west were high mountains; Europe is bounded on the west by the Atlantic.—3. The western part or division of a region mentioned or understood: as, the west of Europe or of England; the Canadian west: he lives in the west (of a town, county, etc.). Specifically—(a) [cap.] The western part of the world, as distinguished from the East or Orient; the Occident, either as restricted to the greater part of Europe or as including also the western hemisphere, or America. See Occident, 2. (b) [cap.] In the United States, formerly, the part of the country lying west of the original thirteen States along the Atlantic seaboard, and particularly the northern part of this region; now, indefinitely, the region beyond the older seaboard and central States, or more specifically that included mainly between the Mississippi river and the Pacific Ocean, and especially the northern part of this region.

4. Eccles.: (a) The point of the compass toward which one is turned when looking from the altar or high altar toward the further end of the nave or the usual position of the main entrance of a church. See east, n., 1. (b) [cap.] In church hist., the church in the Western Empire and countries adjacent, especially on the north: the Western Church. By west, westward, toward the west: as, north by west.

> A shipman was ther, woning fer by weste
> Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 388

Empire of the West. See Western Empire, under empire.

II. a. 1. Situated in, on, or to the west; being or lying westward with reference to something else; western: as, the West Indies; West Virginia; the west bank or the west fork of a river; west longitude

> This shall be your west bordur Num. xxxiv. 6
> Go thou with her to the west end of the wood.
> Shak., T. G. of V., v. 3. 9.

2. Coming or moving from the west or western region: as, a west wind.—3. Eccles., situated in, or in the direction of, that part of a church which is furthest from the altar or high altar; opposite the ecclesiastical east. West dial. See dial. West End, the western part of London specifically the fashionable or aristocratic quarter, often used attributively west (west), adv. [See west, n.] To or toward the west; westward or westerly; specifically (eccles.), toward or in the direction of that part of a church which is furthest from the altar or high altar.

> Go west, young man, and grow up with the country
> Horace Greeley.

west (west), v. i. [< ME. westen, < west, n.] To move toward the west; turn or veer to the west. [Rare or obsolete.]

> On a bed of gold she lay to weste
> Til that the hote sonne gan to weste.
> Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 250.
>
> Twice hath he risen where he now doth West
> And vested twice where he ought rise aright.
> Spenser, F. Q., V., Ded., st. 8.

west-about (west'a-bout'), adv. Around toward the west; in a westerly direction.

westent, n. [ME., < AS. westen = OHG. westeni, westeni = OS. westinnea = OHG. wuostunna, a waste, desert, < west, waste, desert: see waste.] A waste; a desert. Old Eng. Homilies, I. 245. (Stratmann.) wester (wes'tėr), v. i. [< ME. westren, tend toward the west, < west, west: see west, n. Cf. western, westerly.] To tend or move toward the west; trend or turn westward. [Obsolete or archaic.]

> The sonne
> Gan westren faste and doun-ward for to wrye
> Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 68.
>
> The winde did Wester, so that we lay South southwest with a fawne sheete. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 447.
>
> Thy fame has journeyed westering with the sun
> O. W. Holmes, To Christian Gottfried Ehrenberg

westerling (wes'tėr-ling), n. [< westering + *-ling*¹. Cf. easterling.] A person belonging to a western country or region with reference to one regarded as eastern. [Rare.]

> I was set forth at the sole charge of foure Merchants of London; the Country being then reputed by your westerlings a great rackle, barren, desolate desart > Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 982.

westerly (wes'tėr-li), a. [< western + *-ly*¹. Cf. easterly, etc.] 1. Having a generally westward direction; proceeding or directed mainly toward the west: as, a westerly current or course; the westerly trend of a mountain-chain.—2. Situated toward the west; lying to the westward: as, the westerly parts of a country

> The Hugli is the most westerly of the network of channels by which the Ganges pours into the sea.
> Nineteenth Century, XVIII. 41.

3. Looking toward the west: as, a westerly exposure.—4. Coming from the general direction of the west; blowing from the westward, as wind: sometimes used substantively.

> The sea was crisping by a refreshing westerly breeze.
> T. B. Aldrich, Ponkapog to Pauth, p. 208.

westerly (wes'tėr-li), adv. [< westerly, a.] To the westward; in a westerly direction.

> From spire and barn looked westerly the patient weathercocks.
> Whittier, Huskers.

western (wes'tėrn), a. and n. [< ME. westerne, westren, < AS. westerne* (in comp. sudhan-westerne, southwestern) (= OS. OHG. westrōni), < west, west: see west, and cf. eastern, northern, southern.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the west, or the quarter or region of sunset; being or lying on or in the direction of the west; occidental: as, the western horizon; the western part or boundary of a country.

> Apollo each eve doth devise
> A new apparelling for western skies.
> Keats, Endymion, iii.
>
> His cheery little study, where the sunshine glimmered so pleasantly through the willow branches on the western side of the Old Manse
> Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 7.

2. Tending or directed toward the west; extending or pursued westward: as, a western course; a western voyage.—3. Belonging to or characteristic of some locality in the west, or some region specifically called the West (in the latter case often capitalized): as, western people or dialects (as in England); a Western city or railroad, or Western enterprise (as in the United States); the Western Empire.—4. Declining in the west, as the setting sun; hence, figuratively, passing toward the end; waning.

> I'm* that a gentleman of your discretion,
> Crowned with such reputation in your youth,
> Should, in your western days, lose the good opinion > Of all your friends. J. Fletcher, [& Another], v. 4.
>
> The western sun now shot a feeble ray,
> And faintly scattered the remains of day
> Addison, The Campaign

5. Coming from the west: as, a western wind. Connecticut Western Reserve. See reserve. Western barred owl, Syrnium occidentale or Strix occidentalis, discovered by J. Xantus at Fort Tejon, California. It resembles but is specifically distinct from the owl figured under Strix. Western bluebird. See bluebird, 2. (a). Western chickadee, Parus occidentalis of the Pacific coast of North America. Western chinkapin. Same as chinkapin, 2. Western Church. See church. Western cricket, the shield-backed grasshopper. See shield-backed. Western daisy, a plant, Bellis integrifolia, found from Kentucky southwestward, the only species of the true daisy genus native in the United States, differing from B. perennis (or garden species) in its whole habit, the heads, borne on slender peduncles, having pale violet-purple rays. Western dowitcher, Macrorhamphus griseus, a long-billed variety of M. griseus, perhaps a distinct species, found chiefly in western parts of North America. Western Empire. See empire. Western grasshunch, that variety of the steppe-hard which is found from the plains to the Pacific. Western grasshopper. See locust, 1. Western grebe, the largest grebe of North America. See cut under Aechmophorus. Western hemisphere. See hemisphere. Western herring gull, Larus occidentalis of Audubon, a large white-headed and dark-mantled gull common on the Pacific coast of North America. Western house wren, Troglodytes aedon (which see, under wren). Western meadow-lark, the bird figured under Sturnella. Western mudfish. Same as lake-burgher, 1. Western nonpareil, the painted bunting. Western redtail, Buteo borealis calurus or B. calurus, the commonest and most characteristic representative of the hen-hawks or red-tailed hawks of western North America from the plains to the Pacific, where it runs into several local races. Western States, formerly, the States of the American Union lying west of the Alleghanies; as the country developed, the phrase came to include all the States westward to the Pacific, and to-day the term States, although certain states have been classed both as Southern and as Western States. The phrase is very indefinite, sometimes it is restricted to the States west of the Mississippi river, including the so-called "southwest," sometimes it includes the northern part of the entire region from Ohio to California. Western wallflower. See wallflower. Western warbler. See warbler. Western yellow-rump. Same as Audubon's warbler (which see, under warbler).

II. n. 1. An inhabitant of a western region, or of the West or Occident; specifically, a member of a Western race as distinguished from the Eastern races.—2. [cap.] A member of the Latin or Western Church.

westerner (wes'tėr-nėr), n. [< western + *-er*¹.] A person belonging to the west, or to a western region; specifically [cap.], an inhabitant of the western part of the United States.

westernism (wes'tėrn-izm), n. [< western + -ism.] The peculiarities or characteristics of western people; specifically, a word, an idiom, or a manner peculiar to inhabitants of the western United States—that is, of the Northern States called Western.

A third cut-mark of Westernism is a curious use of a verb for a noun. The Independent (New York), Dec. 30, 1880.

westernmost (wes'tėrn-mōst), a. superl. [< western + -most. Cf. westmost.] Furthest to the west; most western. Cook, Second Voyage, i. 7.

West-Indian (west-in'di-an), a. and n. Of or pertaining to the West Indies; a native or inhabitant of the West Indies.

westing (wes'ting), n. [Verbal n. of west, v.] Space or distance westward; space reckoned from one point to another westward from it; specifically, in plane sailing, the distance expressed in nautical miles, which a ship makes good in a westerly direction; a ship's departure when sailing westward. See departure, 5.

westling¹ (west'ling), a. and n. [< west + *-ling*¹.] I. a. Being in or coming from the west; western, westerly. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

> Saft the westlin breezes blaw
> R. Fairnhill, Gloomy Winter's now Awa'.
>
> The fringe was red on the westlin hill. Hogg, Kilmeny.

II. n. An inhabitant of the west; one who inhabits a western country or district. [Rare.]

westling² (west'ling), adv. [< west + *-ling*².] Toward the west; westward.

westlins (west'linz), adv. [Also westlinns; for westlings*, < *westling*² + adv. gen. -s.] Same as *westling*². Ramsay, Christ's Kirk, iii. 1. [Scotch.]

Westminster Assembly. See Assembly of Divines at Westminster, under assembly.

Westminster Assembly's catechism. See catechism, 2.

westmost (west'mōst), a. superl. [< ME. westmest*, < AS. westmest, westemest, < west + -mest, a double superl. suffix: see -most.] Furthest to the west. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

Westphal balance. A form of balance used in determining the specific gravity of solutions and also of mineral fragments. In the case of fragments a "heavy solution" is first obtained, in which they just float. The balance consists of a bar supported on a fulcrum near the middle, and having one half of it, from whose extremity hangs a sinker, graduated into ten parts. The sinker is immersed in the liquid under experiment, and then there are hung at suitable points on the bar until it is brought back into a horizontal position as indicated by the fixed scale at the other end. The position and size of the riders give the means of readings at once the required specific gravity without calculation

Westphal-Erb symptom. Same as Westphal's symptom. See symptom

Westphalian (west fa'li-an), a. and n. [< Westphalia (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Westphalia, a province of Prussia, bordering on Hanover, the Rhenish Provinces, the Netherlands, etc. Westphalia was formerly a duchy, and (with larger territory) a Napoleonic kingdom from 1807 to 1813

> The Westphalian treaties, which terminated the thirty years' war, were finally signed on Oct. 24, 1648
> Amer. Cyc., XVI. 670.

Westphalian gericht. Same as femgericht.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Westphalia.

Westphal's foot-phenomenon. A series of rhythmical contractions of the calf-muscles following a sudden pushing up of the toes and ball of the foot, thereby putting the tendo Achillis on the stretch; ankle-clonus.

Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

westre, v. t. An old form of wester.

Westringia (wes-trin'ji-a), n. [NL. (Sir J. E. Smith, 1798), named after J. P. Westring, a physician of Linkoping, Sweden, who died in 1827.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiatæ and tribe Prostantheræ. It is characterized by a calyx with five equal teeth, a corolla with the upper lip flattish, and anther-cells without an appendage. There are over 11 species, all natives of extra-tropical Australia. They are shrubs with small entire leaves in whorls of three or four together, and small or short-pedicelled axillary flowers scattered in the axils of the leaves or rarely crowded in half-terminal heads. W. rosmarinæformis, the Victorian rosemary, an evergreen shrub growing about 6 feet high, is sometimes cultivated West-Virginian (west-ver-jin'i-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to West Virginia, one of the United States set apart from Virginia during the civil war and admitted to the Union in 1863.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of West Virginia.

westward (west'ward), adv. [< ME. westward, westwarde, westeward, westward, < AS. westweard, westeweard, westward, < west, west, + weard, E. -ward.] 1. Toward the west; in a westerly direction: as, to ride or sail westward.

> Westward the course of empire takes its way,
> Bp. Berkeley, Arts and Learning in America

2. Toward the ecclesiastical west. See west.

Mass is celebrated by the priest standing behind the altar with his face westward.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 166.

Westward ho! to the west: an old cry of London watermen on the Thames in hailing passengers bound westward, taken as the title of a play by Dekker and Webster and of a novel by Charles Kingsley.

Ol. Then 'bus your way due west.
Fre. Then westward ho!
Shak., T. N., iii. 4, 146.

westward (west'ward), a. [< westward, adv.] Being toward the west; bearing or tending westward: as, a westward position or course, the westward trend of the mountains.

westwardly (west'ward-li), a. [< westward + *-ly*¹.] Bearing toward or from the west; westerly. [Rare.]

On the 10th, the five [ice] packs were driven in by a westwardly wind, and . . . this open space was lead.
C. F. Hall, Polar Expeditions, p. 9.

westwardly (west'ward-li), adv. [< westward, a.] In a direction bearing toward the west; as, to pass westwardly.

westwards (west'wardz), adv. [ME. westwardes (= D. westwaarts = G. westwärts); as westward + adv. gen. -s.] Same as westward.

westy¹†, a. [ME.; also west, n.; < AS. west-ig, desert, < wēste, a desert, waste: see waste.] Waste; desert. Lagamon, I. 11 (?).

westy²†, (wes'ti), a. Dizzy; giddy. Bay, Halh. wall. [Prov. Eng.]

Whilest he lies wallowing with a westy head,
And pallish cheeke, on his brother's bed.
Sir Hall, Satires, IV. i. 158.

wet¹ (wet), a. [E. dial. and Sc. also weet and wat; < ME. wet, weet, wat, < AS. wæt = OFries. wet, weet = Icel. vøtr = Sw. våt = Dan. vaad, wet, moist; akin to AS. wæter, etc., water, and to Goth. wato, etc., water: see water.] 1. Covered with or permeated by a moist or fluid substance; charged with moisture: as, a wet sponge; wet land; wet cheeks; a wet painting (one on which the paint is still semi-fluid).

Yff the Lethe were made moyst and weet with that Water, it wolde nevere be Fryst.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 100.

I, forced to go to the office on foot, was almost wet to the skin, and spoiled my silk breeches almost.
Pepys, Diary, II. 246.

In the greenest growth of the Maythun,
I rode where the woods were wet.
Swinburne, An Interlude.

2. Filled with or containing a supply of water as, a wet dock; a wet meter. See phrases below. — 3. Consisting of water or other liquid; of a watery nature.

Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not.
Shak., Lear, iv. 7. 71.

4. Characterized by rain, rainy; drizzly; showery: as, wet weather; a wet season (used especially with reference to tropical or semi-tropical countries, in which the year is divided into wet and dry seasons).

Wet Octobers a torrent flood.
Milton, Comus, l. 930.

As to the Seasons of the Year, I cannot distinguish them there [in the torrid zone] no other way than by Wet and Dry.
Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 2.

5. Drenched or drunk with liquor; tipsy. [Colloq.]

When my lost Lover the tall Ship ascends,
With Music gay, and wet with loyal friends.
Prior, Cloe to Damon.

6. In U. S. politics, slang, opposed to prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors: as, a wet town. Compare dry, 13. A wet blanket. See blanket. A wet boat, a boat that is crank and ships water readily.

"Why don't you go forward, sir? . . . she is sure to wet us aback." . . . "I thank you, but . . . [with an heroic attempt at sea slang] I like a wet boat."
C. Reade, Love me Little, xvii.

A wet day. Same as a rainy day (which see, under rainy).

Ergo, saith the miser, "part with nothing but keep all against a wet day."
Fuller, General Worthies, xi. (Thanet).

Wet bargain. Same as Dutch bargain (which see, under bargain). Wet bob, a boy who goes in for boating in preference for cricket, foot-ball, or other land sports. [Eton College slang.]

Everything is enjoyable at Eton in the summer half. The wet-bobs [or the rivers] all their many trials of strength, . . . and the 'dry-bobs' in the playing fields, with all the excitement of their countless matches.
T. E. Pearse, Every-day Life in our Public Schools, p. 67.

Wet brain, a diffused condition of the brain and its membranes sometimes observed in post-mortem examinations of those who have died of delirium tremens. Wet-bulb thermometer. See thermometer. Wet cooper. See cooper. Wet dock, a dock or basin of a seaport furnished with gates for admitting the tidal water, so as to float vessels berthed in it at a proper level for loading and unloading. Wet goods, liquors so called in humorous allusion to dry goods. [Slang, U. S.] Wet meter, a gas-meter in which the gas to be measured passes through a body of water. The wet meter regulates the flow of gas more steadily than the dry meter, but is more difficult to keep in order. Wet plate, in photog., a plate coated with collodion and sensitized with a salt (usually the nitrate of silver): so called because it is necessary in this process, to perform all the operations of making the picture, to and including the final fixing of the plate, before the coating of collodion dries. For some thirty years from about 1850, this was by far the most important photographic process in use, but it is now almost wholly superseded by the various rapid dry-plate processes. The phrase is also used attributively, to note the process or anything connected with it: as, collodion process, under collodion. Wet port, a seaport as a place of entry for foreign goods in distinction from a dry port, or land port, a place of entry for goods to be imported by land. Encyc. Brit., VI. 729. — Wet preparation, a specimen of natural history immersed in alcohol or other preservative fluid. Wet provisions, a class of provisions furnished to a ship, including salt beef and pork, sea-gear, molasses, pickles, etc. Wet puddling. See puddling, 2. Wet Quaker†, a Quaker who does not strictly observe the rules of his society.

So Infants and Presbyterians, Quakers, and Wet Quakers or Merry-men.
T. Ward, England's Reformation, I. 213.

Wet Quakerism. See Quakerism. Wet steam. See steam and vapor, 1. Wet way, in chem., the method of qualitative and quantitative analysis and assay in which the substance to be examined is first dissolved in some liquid and then treated with liquid reagents: the opposite of fire-assay, or treatment in the dry way. In the ordinary analysis of minerals, the substance is first finely pulverized and then dissolved in an acid, after which further treatment follows. If insoluble in an acid, it is fused with potassium or sodium carbonate after which treatment the fused mass is soluble either wholly or in part, the silica of the mineral is obtained separating out and being removed by filtering, after which the process is continued the same way as when the substance is soluble without the necessity of a preliminary attack by an alkali at a high temperature. Ordinary analyses of minerals are made in the wet way, assays of ores often more frequently in the dry way. With a wet finger†, with little effort or trouble, very easily or readily: probably from the practice of wetting the finger to facilitate matters in turning over a leaf of a book, or rubbing out writing on a slate.

Walk you here, I'll buckram, you shall see I'll fetch her with a wet finger.
Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, II. 2.

wet¹ (wet), n. [E. dial. and Sc. also weet and wat; < ME. wet, wete, wate, wate, < AS. wæta, m., wæte, f., = Icel. Sw. væta = Dan. vaade), wet, moisture, < wæt, wet: see wet, a.] 1. That which makes wet, as water and other liquids; moisture; specifically, rain.

I se wel how ye swete,
Have here a cloth and wype awey the wete.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 178.

Upon whose [a river's] weeping margent she was set,
Like usury, applying wet to wet.
Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 40.

All ha'e I run your errands, Lady,
When blawin baith wind and weet.
Lady Maxwell (Child's Ballads, II. 80).

The gable end of the cottage was stained with wet.
T. Hardy, Three Strangers.

2. The act of wetting; specifically, a wetting of the throat with drink; a drink or dram of liquor; indulgence in drinking. [Slang.]

No bargain could be completed without a wet, and no friendship or quarrel forgotten without recourse to the bottle.
A. C. Gunn, Bush Life in Queensland, I. 30.

3. In U. S. politics, slang, an opponent of prohibition; one who favors the traffic in liquor. — Heavy wet. See heavy.

wet¹ (wet), v. t.; pret. and pp. wetted or wet, ppr. wetting. [< ME. weten, watten; pret. wette, watte, pp. wet, < AS. wætan, wætian, ge-wætan (= Icel. Sw. væta = Dan. vaade), wet, moisten, < wæt, wet: see wet, a.] 1. To make wet; moisten, drench, or soak with water or other fluid; dip or soak in a liquid.

Se wette hir fingres in hir sauce depe.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 129.

2. To moisten with drink; hence, figuratively, to inaugurate or celebrate by a drink or a treat of liquor: as, to wet a new hat. [Slang.]

Down came all the company together, and away! the ale-house was immediately filled with clamour, and scoring one mug to the Marquis of such a place, oil and vinegar to such an Earl, three quarts to my new Lord for wetting his title.
Steele, Spectator, No. 88.

Then we should have commissions to wet.
C. Shadwell, Humours of the Navy, ii. 3.

To wet down paper, in printing, to dip paper in water, or sprinkle it in small portions, which are laid together and left under pressure for a time to allow the moisture to spread equally through the mass. The dampness of the paper fits it for taking the ink readily and evenly in the process of printing and prevents it from sticking to the type. The finest printing, however, is done with dry paper, and [of a suitable quality for such use]. To wet one's line. See line.

I have not yet wetted my line since we met together.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 84.

To wet one's whistle. See whistle. — Wetting-out steep. Same as rotting steep (which see, under steep). Wetting the block, among English shoemakers, the act of celebrating by a convivial supper, on the last Monday in March, the cessation of work by candle-light.
Halliwell.

wet²†, v. and n. A Middle English form of wit.

wetandt†. A Middle English present participle of wit.

wetandly†, adv. A Middle English form of wittingly.

wet-bird (wet'berd), n. The chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs, whose cry is thought to foretell rain. See cut under chaffinch. [Local, Eng.]

wet-broke (wet'brōk), n. In paper-manuf., the moist and imperfectly felted stock or pulp as it leaves the wire cylinder, and before it has been smoothed out on the forwarding-blanket.
F. H. Knight.

wet-cup (wet'kup), n. A cupping-glass when used in the operation of wet-cupping. Sometimes it is hastily constructed with a lancet or scarificator which can be used to incise the skin after the cup has been applied.

wet-cupping (wet'kup-ing), n. The application of cupping-glass simultaneously with incision of the skin, by means of which a small quantity of blood is withdrawn. See cupping, 1.

wete†. A Middle English form of *wet*¹, *wit*¹.

wether (weTH'er), n. [E. dial. also weddor; < ME. wether, wethur, wedyr, < AS. wither, a wether, a castrated ram, = OS. withar, wither = D. wedder, weder = OHG. widar, MHG. wider, G. widder = Icel. vethr = Sw. vädur = Dan. vædder, vadder, a ram, = Goth. withrus, a lamb; akin to L. vitulus, a calf, Skt. vatsa, calf, young, lit. 'a yearling,' connected with Skt. vatsara and Gr. ἔτος, a year, L. vetus, aged, old: see veal and veteran.] A castrated ram.

And softer than the wolle is of a wether.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 63.

wether-hog (weTH'er-hog), n. A young wether. [Prov. Eng.]

wethewyndet, n. A Middle English form of withwind.

wetly (wet'li), adv. [< *wet*¹ + *-ly*².] In a wet state or condition; moistly.

"Love," she says, very sweetly, while, for the last time, her blue eyes wetly, dwell on his.
Phoebe Broughton, Joan, ii. 11.

wetness (wet'nes), n. The state or condition of being wet; also, the capacity for communicating moisture or making wet: as, the wetness of the atmosphere or of steam.

The wetness of the working fluid [steam] to which the action of the walls of the cylinder gives rise is essentially superficial.
Energy Brit., XXII. 488.

wet-nurse (wet'nėrs), n. A woman employed to suckle the infant of another. Compare dry-nurse.

wet-nurse (wet'nėrs), v. t. [< wet-nurse, n.] 1. To act as a wet nurse to; suckle.

Or is he a mythus . . . ancient word for 'humbug'? . . . Such as I've told about the wolf that wet-nursed Romulus and Remus?
O. W. Holmes, Professor, i.

Hence 2. To coddle as a wet nurse does; treat with the tenderness shown to an infant.

The system of watchmaking adopted by the Post Office authorities in the case of the telegraph service has not been one of uniform success.
Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXVII. 205.

wet-pack (wet'pak), n. A means of reducing the temperature in fever by wrapping the body in cloths wet with cold water, and covering these with a blanket or other dry material.

wet-press (wet'pres), n. In paper-making, the second press in which wet hand-made paper is compacted and partially dried.
E. H. Knight.

wet-salter (wet'sal'tėr), n. A salter who prepares or deals in wet provisions. See wet provisions, under *wet*¹. Compare dry-salter.

The Ex adv . . . smelt as strong about Breakfast Times as a Wet Salter's Shop at Midsummer.
Tom Brown, Works (ed. 1708), III. 88.

wet-shod (wet'shod), a. [< ME. wet-shod, wat-shod, wete-shodde; < *wet*¹ + *shod*¹.] Wet as regards the shoes; wearing wet shoes.

There in the battle men were wetshoode
Alle of Brasse & of blode.
Arthur (ed. Furnivall), l. 403.

Unless to shame his Court Flatterers who would not else be convinc't, Canute needed not to have gone wet-shod home.
Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

so he went over at last, not much above wet-shod.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

wetter (wet'ėr), n. One who wets, or practises wetting, for some purpose; specifically, in printing, a workman who wets down paper. See phrase under *wet*¹, v. t.

wetter-off (wet'ėr-ôf'), n. In glass-making, a workman who detaches formed bottles from the blowing-iron by applying a moistened tool to the neck.

wetting-machine (wet'ing-ma-shēn'), n. A mechanism that dampens paper and makes it suitable for printing. It is made in many forms, the simplest of which is a flexible and vibrating rose-nozzle attached by a pipe to a water-tank. Paper for web-presses is usually dampened by a spray of water from a perforated pipe as the paper is automatically unwound.

wettish (wet'ish), a. [< wet[1] + -ish[1].] Somewhat wet; moist; humid.

we-una. See under we.

weve[1], n. An old spelling of weave[1].

weve[2], v. t. A Middle English form of waive.

weve[3], v. See weave[2].

wevill, n. An obsolete spelling of weevil.

wext, v. An obsolete form of wax[1].

wey[1] (wā), n. [< ME. wey, waye, weie, weye, < AS. wēg = OHG. wega = Icel. vigr), a weight, < wegan, raise, lift: see weigh[1], v., and cf. weight.] 1. A unit of weight, 14 stone according to the old statute de ponderibus. But a wey of wool is 16 tods, or 15 stone, locally 20, 30½, or 31 pounds. A wey of hemp was 80 pounds in Somersetshire, 82 pounds in Dorsetshire, being 8 heads of 4 pounds, twisted and tied. A statute of 1430 declares that cheese shall not be weighed by the ounce, but by the wey of 32 cloves, each clove of 7 pounds, except in Essex where it is 256 pounds, or 36 cloves of 7½ pounds. But locally it was a hundredweight, or 416 pounds.

Hence—2. A unit of measure, properly 40 bushels. So a statute of George III makes a wey of salt one ton, which is 40 bushels. But another statute of the same monarch makes a wey of meal 48 bushels of 84 pounds each, and in Devonshire a wey of lime coals, or culm was sometimes 48 double Winchester bushels. So in South Wales a wey of coals is 9, not 5, chaldrons.

3. An amount of window-glass = 60 cases. [Eng. in all uses.]

wey[2], weyet, v. Obsolete spellings of weigh[1].

wey[3]†, n. An obsolete form of way[1].

weyeret, n. An obsolete spelling of weigher.

Weymouth pine. See pine[1].

weyvet, v. An old spelling of waive.

wezandt, n. An obsolete spelling of weasand.

W f. In printing, an abbreviation of wrong font, a mark on the margin of a proof, calling attention to the fact that the letter or letters, etc., opposite differ from the rest in size or face.

W. G. An abbreviation of Worthy Grand, prefixed to various titles of office among Freemasons and similar orders: as, W. G. C. (Worthy Grand Chaplain or Conductor).

wh-. See W, 1.

wha (hwä), pron. An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) form of who.

whaap, n. See whaup.

whack (hwak), v. [A var. of thack[2], appar. suggested by whap, whop, whip, etc., the form thwack being intermediate between thack[2] and whack.] I. trans. 1. To give a heavy or resounding blow to; thwack. [Colloq.]

> A traveller coming up, finds the missing man by whacking each of them over the shoulder.
> W. A. Clouston, Book of Noodles, ii.

2. To divide into shares; apportion; parcel out. [Slang.]

> They then, as they term it, whack the whole lot.
> Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 152.

II. intrans. 1. To strike, or continue striking, anything with smart blows. [Colloq.]—2. To make a division or settlement; square accounts; pay often in the phrase to whack up. [Slang.]

> The city has never whacked up with the gas company.
> Black Bet (Amer.), xiii. 6.

> At last Long J— and I got to quarrel about the whacking; there was cheating going on.
> Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 172.

whack (hwak), n. [< whack, v.] 1. A heavy blow; a thwack.

> Sometimes a chap will give me a lick with a stick just as I'm going over; sometimes a regular good hard whack.
> Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 364.

2. A stroke; a trial or attempt; as, to take a whack at a job. [Slang.]—3. A piece; a share; a portion. [Slang.]

> This gay young bachelor had taken his share (what he called "his whack") of pleasure.
> Thackeray, Shabby Genteel Story, v.

> My word! he did more than his whack,
> He was never a cove as would shirk.
> G. Walch, A Little Tin Plate (A Century of Australian Song, p. 509).

4. Appetite. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whacker (hwak'ėr), n. [< whack + -er[1].] Something strikingly large of its kind; a big thing; a whopper. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. vii. [Slang.]

whacking (hwak'ing), a. [Ppr. of whack, v.; cf. whopping, etc.] Very large; lusty; whopping: as, a whacking fish or falsehood. Often used adverbially: as, a whacking big fish. [Colloq.]

whahoo (hwä-hö'), n. Same as wahoo, but applied specifically to the winged elm.

whaint, whaintset. Middle English forms of quaint, quaintise.

whaisle, whaizle (hwā'zl), v. i. [A dial. freq. of whaze.] To breathe hard, as in asthma; wheeze. [Scotch.]

> But ma Scotch mikes them try't their mettle,
> An' gart them whaizle.
> Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

whake, whaker. Dialectal forms of quake, quaker.

whale[1] (hwāl), n. [< ME. hval, whal, qual, qwal, < AS. hwæl (pl. hwalas) = MD. wal = Icel. hvalr = Sw. Dan. hval, a whale, including any large fish or cetacean; also in comp. D. walvisch = OHG. walfisc, MHG. walvisch, G. wallfisch = Icel. hvalfiskr = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk, a whale (see whale-fish); cf. OHG. walira, MHG. walre, a whale; cf. also MHG. G. wels, shad. Hence ult. in comp. E. walrus, narwhal, horse-whale, ulterior origin unknown. Skeat connects whale[1], as lit. 'the roller,' with wheel[1]; others connect it with L. balæna, a whale. Both derivations are untenable.] Any member of the mammalian order Cetacea or Cete (which see), an ordinary cetacean, as distinguished from a sirenian, or so-called herbivorous cetacean: a marine mammal of fish-like form and habit, with fore limbs in the form of fin-like flippers, without external trace of hind limbs, and with a naked body tapering to a tail with flukes which are like a fish's caudal fin, but are horizontal instead of vertical; especially, a cetacean of large to the largest size, the small ones being distinctively named dolphins, porpoises, etc.: in popular use applied to any large marine mammal. (a) Whale is not less strictly applicable than universally applied to the toothless or whalebone whales, all of which are of great size and some of which are by far the largest of animals. They consist of the right whales, finner-whales, and humpbacks, composing the family Balænidæ alone, and representing well-marked genera, namely (1) Balæna proper, the right whales, without any dorsal fin and with smooth throat; (2) Neobalæna, based on B. marginata, a whalebone whale said to combine a smooth throat with presence of a dorsal fin; (3) Balænoptera, with one species, B. sibbaldii, the gray whale; (4) Megaptera, the humpbacked whales, with a dorsal fin, furrowed throat, and long flippers; and (5) Sibbaldius, the true finners, or rorquals, with dorsal fin, furrowed throat, and short flippers. It comprises at least four and probably more species. Various other genera have been named (as Acanthorhinus for certain so-called sea-whales) and the generic synonyms of these whales are probably more numerous than the actual species. (b) Whale is restricted, nearly always with a qualifying word, to most of the odontocete or toothed cetaceans, and especially to those of great size, as the sperm whale, but also to some of the smallest no larger than a dolphin as the pygmy or dwarf sperm whales of the genus Kogia, and to various forms of intermediate sizes as the pilot-whales (Globicephalus), the bottle-nosed or bottle-headed whales (Hyperoodon), the white whales (Delphinapterus), etc. Some of these whales also have distinctive names into which whale does not enter, as blackfish, beluga, bottlehead, bottle-nose, grampus, killer, etc., or they share the qualified names porpoise and dolphin with various small cetaceans not properly so called. The genera and species of toothed whales are much more numerous than those of the baleen whales. Their synonymy is very extensive and intricate, and is in some cases in a state of confusion which can only be cleared up by future research. (c) In geology some whales date back to the Eocene and a number, archæocets contrasted with odontocets and Mystocets, have been named to cover certain forms still imperfectly known from fragmentary remains (see Zeuglodon). The oldest whales like any of the living forms date from the late Eocene, and are toothed whales related to the humpbacks. Whalebone whales are not known to exist later than the Pliocene. (d) In present geographical distribution whales are found in all seas, and some of them enter rivers. Most of the species are individually wide-ranging on the high seas and attempts which have been made to discriminate similar forms from different waters have in most cases proved futile. Several of the larger forms have been the objects of systematic fisheries for centuries (see whale-fishery). The principal products are oil, both train and sperm, baleen or whalebone (particularly the former), and ambergris, the lids of some of the smaller whales offer a leather. Whales are exclusively carnivorous and feed for the most part upon a great variety of small animals which float on the surface of the sea generally known collectively as drift or whale-food. This includes various cephalopods as squids and cuttles, with other mollusks of different orders as well as several different kinds of crustaceans. Part of some kinds covers the ocean in immense areas, to which the whales resort as feeding-grounds. Some whales attack large animals, even of their own kind (see killer, threat), but nearly all are timid and inoffensive, seeking only to avoid their enemies, though capable of formidable resistance to attack. Whales bring forth their young alive like all mammals above the marsupials and suckle them; the teats are a pair, beside the vulva. They breathe only air, for which purpose they must regularly seek the surface, though capable of remaining long under water without respiring. The spouting of the whale is the act of expiration, during which the air in the lungs, loaded with watery vapor, is forcibly expelled like spray in a single stream, or in two streams, according as the blowholes are single or there are a pair of these spiracles. Some sea-water may be mixed with the breath, if the whale spouts beneath the surface, but the visible stream is chiefly condensed vapor, like that of human breath on a cold day. Whales have a naked skin, having a few bristles about the mouth, chiefly in the young; the hide is often incrusted with barnacles, or infested with other crustacean parasites. The bodily temperature is maintained in the coldest surroundings by the heavy layer of blubber which lies under the skin of the whole body, and in the sperm whale forms a special deposit on the skull, giving its singular shape to the head. The general form of the body is like that of a fish in adaptation to entirely aquatic habits and means of locomotion. It tapers behind the body cavity into a solid muscular part, the small, and ends in broad, short flukes lying horizontally and extending from side to side. This tail fin is the principal organ of locomotion, like the vertical caudal fin of a fish. The fore limbs form flippers of varying length in different species. These fins are of medium length in the right whale, short in the sperm and rorqual, and extremely long in the humpback. In all cases the pectoral fin has a skeleton composed of the same jointed segments as the fore limb of ordinary mammals, and of all the usual bones except a clavicle, but the digital phalanges are more numerous. The dorsal fin, when present, is a mere excrescence, without any bony basis. There is never any outward sign of hind limbs, but the skeleton of some whales includes certain vestigial bones of a proximal segment of the pelvic limb, entirely separate from the spinal column, and apparently only serving in the male as a suspensorium for the penis. There is consequently no sacrum, nor any break in the series of vertebræ from the hindmost that bears ribs to the end of the spinal column. The cervical vertebræ offer exceptional conditions (see cut under anteflexion). The dentition of whales is unusually diverse to furnish characters of the main divisions of cetaceans. The entire toothlessness of the baleen whales is matched by few mammals (see Edentata), the presence of teeth in the lower jaw only, as in various odontocete whales, is peculiar; the dentition of the narwhal is wholly exceptional. Teeth, when present, are always homodont (like one another) and monophyodont (there being no milk teeth). The soft palate and the larynx are specialized in adaptation to the act of spouting. The digestive organs are comparatively simple, the uterus is bicornuous, the placenta diffuse and non-deciduate, the testes are abdominal, and there is an os penis nor seminal vesicle. The circulatory system is notable for its pleasures, both arterial and venous. Notwithstanding the outward resemblance to a fish, whales belong to the highest or mammalian series of mammals, having a relatively large brain. One of the most remarkable of the many anomalies presented by this highly specialized order of mammals is the difference in size of its members, the range being far greater than that of any other Skeleton of Sperm-whale or Right Whale.

ordinal group, from 4 to about 80 feet in linear dimension. The size of the larger whales has been greatly exaggerated in many of the accounts which find popular credence. Adult right whales of different species range from 40 to 65 feet in length, only the polar whale attaining the latter dimension, the common humpback is from 40 to 50 feet long, the sperm whale reaches 60 feet; and the rorquals of several species range from 60 to 80 feet, the maximum length being reached only by the blue rorqual, which is the largest of known animals. Arctic whale, the polar whale Balæna mysticetus; that right whale which is of circumpolar distribution, as distinguished from any such whale of temperate North Atlantic or North Pacific waters, or from which the latter are sought to be distinguished, as the Atlantic, Pacific northwest, or Nicaragua whale. Atlantic whale, the right whale of temperate North Atlantic waters. It is not distinct from the southern right whale, Balæna australis (though so named), as B. cisarctica, and as B. biscayensis, the Biscay whale. Australian whale, the New Zealand whale.—Baleen whale, any whalebone whale as a right whale. See cuts under baleen and whalebone. Biscay whale, Balæna biscayensis, long the object of a special fishery by the Basques, conducted as early as the tenth century.—Black whale (a) Any baleen whale as distinguished from a sperm whale. (b) See blackfish, black whale, and Globicephalus. Blue whale, sibbaldus whale; the large rorqual. Bone whale, any baleen whale. Bottle-headed whale, a ziphioid whale; a cetacean of the family Ziphiidæ. Bottle-nosed whale. See bottlenose, 1 (b), and cut at Zyphiinæ. Bow-head whale, the polar whale, or bow-head. Bull whale, any adult male whale; a bull. Calf-whale, any young whale. California whale, the gray

California Gray Whale (Rachianectes glaucus).

whale. See Rachianectes. — Calling whale, a cetacean; a pilot-whale. — Cape whale, the southern right whale, Balæna australis. — Cow whale, any adult female whale, a dam. — Denticete whales, the toothed whales. — Digger whale, the gray whale. — Down whale, a whale under water, as in sounding. — Pinback whale, a finner whale; a rorqual; any whale of the family Balænopteridæ: see cut under rorqual. — Pin-whale or finner-whale, a finback whale; any whalebone whale with a dorsal fin as a humpback or rorqual; a furrowed whale. See Balænoptera, Megaptera, and cut under rorqual. — Furrowed whale, a whalebone whale with the skin of the throat pleated, or thrown into ridges and furrows, and a dorsal fin; distinguished from smooth whale. The humpbacks and the finners or rorquals are furrowed whales. See Balænopteridæ. — Giant sperm whale, the sperm-whale proper. See cut under sperm whale. — Gray whale, the California whale, Rachianectes glaucus, a large finner whale or rorqual of the Pacific coast of North America. It has many local names, as devil fish, graybback, hardhead, mussel digger, ripsack, etc. See Rachianectes. — Great polar whale, the polar or Greenland right whale. — Greenland whale, the right whale of the North Atlantic, the great polar whale, Balæna mysticetus. — Humpbacked whale, see humpback, and Humpback Whale (Megaptera boops).

Megaptera. — Japan or Japanese whale, Balæna japonica, a right whale of the North Pacific. — Killer whale. See killer, 3, and Orca. — Loose whale, a whale that has not been struck by the toggle-iron, or a whale that has been fastened to but has made its escape. — Mysticete whales, the toothless or baleen whales, whalebone whales. See Mysticete, Mesopteræ, balænoidæ. — New Zealand whale, Neobalæna marginata, a whalebone whale of Polynesian and Australian waters, not yet well known, having the smooth throat of the right whales, a dorsal fin, very long and slender white baleen, small flippers with only four digits, and various osteological peculiarities. It is of smallest size among the baleen whales, being only about 30 feet long. — Northwest whale, the right whale of the northwestern coast of North America, Balæna sieboldii, as distinguished from the southern right whale. Also called Pacific right whale. — Pilot-whale, same as caaing whale. — Polar whale, the right whale of the arctic Atlantic waters or Greenland whale, Balæna mysticetus, more fully called great polar whale, and by many local names, as bone-head, steeple-top, crook-jaw, sea-whal, etc. — Pygmy sperm whale, a toothed whale of the genus Kogia, a porpoise or sperm whale (which see), under sperm whale. — Right whale, a whalebone whale of the restricted genus Balæna: so called, it is said, because this is the "right" kind of whale to take. Right whales inhabit all known seas, and those of the main division of the waters of the globe have been specified by name, as the arctic, polar, or Greenland right whale, the Atlantic, the Pacific, the southern, the northwest, etc. These have received several technical names, as B. mysticetus of the Arctic ocean, B. biscayensis or cisarctica of the North Atlantic, B. australis of the South Atlantic, B. japonica of the North Pacific, B. antipodarum of the South Pacific, and others. It is not likely that more than two valid species are represented in this synonymy: (a) B. mysticetus is of circumpolar distribution in the northern hemisphere. It attains a length of from 40 to 60 feet, has no dorsal fin, flippers of medium size, and very long narrow flukes, tapering to a point and somewhat falcate. The greatest girth is about the middle whence the body tapers rapidly to the comparatively slender root of the tail. The throat is smooth, the head of great size, and the eye is situated very low down and far back, between the base of the flipper and the angle of the mouth. The profile of the mouth is strongly arched in consequence of its enormous, exceeding that of the three and dolphins together. This arch is fringed on each side with baleen, hanging from the upper jaw; the plates are 240 to 400 in each side, the longest attaining a length of from 12 to 15 feet, they are black in color and finely frayed out along the inner edge into a fringe of long elastic filament. When the jaws are closed, the baleen serves as a sieve to strain out the multitudes of small mollusks or crustaceans upon which the whale feeds, and which are gulped in with many barrels of water in the act of grazing the surface with open mouth. About one of the slabs on each side are marvelously interesting [illegible] hundredweight of bone from a whale of average size which yields also 15 tons of oil; but some large individuals render nearly twice as much of both these products. (b) The southern right whale, B. australis, differs from the polar whale in its proportionately shorter and smaller head, greater convexity of the arch of the mouth, shorter baleen, and more numerous vertebræ. It inhabits both Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in temperate latitudes, and in the former waters was the object of a fishery during the middle ages for the European supply of oil and bone. This industry gave way to the pursuit of the polar whale about the beginning of the seventeenth century. This whale has long been rare in the North Atlantic, but has occasionally stranded on the European coast, and more frequently on that of the United States. A similar if not identical right whale is hunted in temperate North Pacific waters. Right whales are rare and not pursued in tropical seas, but are objects of the chase in various parts of the south temperate ocean: see cuts above, and under Balænidæ. — Rudolphi's whale, the small finner whale or rorqual, Balænoptera rudolphii: see rorqual. — Sibbald's whale, a very large finner whale, the blue rorqual, Balænoptera sibbaldi, one of the two or three largest of all animals. See rorqual. — Siebold's whale, a right whale of the North Pacific, nominally Balæna sieboldii. See northwest whale, above. — Smooth whale, a whalebone whale having no pleats of the skin of the throat and no dorsal fin, as a right whale: distinguished from furrowed whale. See Balænidæ. — Southern right whale, Balæna australis of the South Atlantic admitted as a distinct species from the polar right whale: see Atlantic whale, above. — South Pacific whale, a southern right whale, Balæna antipodarum. — Sowerby's whale, a ziphioid whale, Mesoplodon sowerbiensis, of the Atlantic. — Spermaceti whale, the sperm whale. — Sulphur whale, sulphur-bottomed whale, same as sulphur bottom. — To bone a whale, to strike a bone, as the shoulder-blade in lancing a whale. — Toothed whale, a whale or other cetacean with true teeth in one or both jaws; any member of the division Denticete or Odontoceti, distinguished from whalebone whale. — To throw a tub to a whale: see tub. — Very like a whale, an expression of ironical assent to an assertion or a proposition regarded as preposterous, from the use of the phrase by Polonius in humoring Hamlet's supposed madness.

> Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.
> Pol. It is backed like a weasel.
> Ham. Or like a whale?
> Pol. Very like a whale. — Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2, 399.

Whalebone whale, a baleen whale, a toothless whale whose mouth contains whalebone; any member of the Balænidæ, as a right whale, humpback, or rorqual, whether furrowed or smooth. — Whale of passage, a migratory whale, or a whale during its migration. — Whale's bone, ivory, perhaps because supposed to come from the bones of the whale, at a time when the real source of the material was little known to whom most of the ivory used in western Europe consisted of the teeth of the walrus, confounded with the whale, and possibly those of the sperm whale, which, though of comparatively small size, are of fine quality. The term was in common use for several centuries.

> Her hands so white as whale's bone,
> Her fingers tipt with carnation.
> Patterson, Featherstanes, vii.

> This is the flower that smiles on every one,
> To show his teeth as white as whale's bone.
> Shak. L. L. L., v. 2, 332.

White whale, a whale of the family Delphinidæ and genus Delphinapterus, as D. leucas, a beluga. The species ranges in shoals near to and somewhat up rivers, and is prized for its fine oil and valuable skin. The latter makes a kind of leather used for mast-hats and some military accoutrements. Also called whitefish: see cut under Delphinapterus. — Ziphioid whales: see Hyperoodon, Ziphius, Ziphiidæ. — See also caaing whale, ca'ing whale, scrag-whale, sperm-whale.

whale[1] (hwāl), v. t.; pret. and pp. whaled, ppr. whaling. [< whale[1], n.] To take whales; pursue the business of whale-fishing.

> Cruising and whaling in the bays is full of excitement and anxiety. — C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 208.

whale[2] (hwāl), v. t.; pret. and pp. whaled, ppr. whaling. [A var. of wale[3], the change of initial w to wh- being perhaps due to association with whack, whap, whip, etc.] To lash with vigorous strokes; thrash or beat soundly. [Colloq.]

> I have whipped you, Antipodes (a horse), but have I whaled you? — T. Bunthrop, Canoe and Saddle, xii.

> But first I would remark, that it is not a proper plan for any scientific gent to whale his fellow-man. — Bret Harte, The Society upon the Stanislaus.

whaleback (hwāl'bak), n. 1. Same as turtle-back. — 2. A vessel of which the upper deck is rounded; generally one without upper works. Such vessels were first used on the great lakes.

whale-barnacle (hwāl'bar'na-kl), n. A cirriped of the family Coronulidæ, parasitic upon whales, as Coronula diadema. See cut under Coronula.

whale-bird (hwāl'bėrd), n. 1. One of the blue petrels of the genus Prion, several species of which inhabit the southern ocean. P. vittatus, one of the best-known, is notable for the expanse of its beak, the edges of which are beset with tooth-like processes. The name extends to several other oceanic birds which gather in multitudes when a whale has been captured, to feed upon the offal; they are chiefly of the petrel and gull families.

Whale-bird (Prion vittatus).

2. The turnstone, Strepsilas interpres. — Hoowe, [Hudson's Bay.] — 3. The red or gray phalarope, Kumlein. [Labrador.]

whale-boat (hwāl'bōt), n. A long narrow boat, sharp at both ends, and fitted for steering with an oar as well as with a rudder, used in the pursuit of whales, and, from its handy and seaworthy qualities, also for many other purposes. It is usually from 25 to 30 feet long. A pair of these boats is commonly carried by ocean passenger-steamers, in addition to their heavier boats.

whalebone (hwāl'bōn), n. and a. [< ME. whale bone, quale-bon; < whale[1] + bone[1].] I. n. 1. The elastic horny substance which grows in place of teeth in the upper jaw of whales of the family Balænidæ; hence called whalebone or bone whales), forming a series of thin parallel plates from a few inches to several feet long; baleen (which see). The term is misleading, for the substance is in no sense bone, but a kind of horn, and its trade name whale fin is equally inaccurate, for it has nothing to do with the fins of the whale. Whalebone grows in several hundred close-set parallel plates along each side of the upper jaw of the baleen whale, and thus in the situation occupied by the teeth of ordinary mammals. It is entirely shut in by the lips when the mouth is closed. Each one of the plates of both rows tapers to a strong sweep backward, and when the mouth is opened straight out, so that there is always a heavy fringe on each side of the cavity of the mouth, forming an impassable barrier to the multitudinous small creatures which the whale scoops in from the surface of the sea. The longest baleen plates are those of the polar whale, some of which may exceed 12 feet in length. The plates in different species differ in color from a dull greenish black through various streaked or mottled colorations to some what creamy white. Whalebone stands quite alone among animal substances in a peculiarly combination of lightness, toughness, flexibility, elasticity, and durability, together with such a cleavage (due to the straightness of its parallel fibers) that it may be split for its whole length to any desired thinness of strips. A sulphur-bottom whale has yielded 800 pounds of baleen of which the longest plates were 4 feet in length. In the Greenland whale the longest bone is from 14 to 16 inches long, of slight or whitish color, coarse-grained, and brittle and unevenly fringed. The baleen of a bowhead is of a light head color streaked with black, attaining a length of 7 feet 4 inches and a width of from 12 to 14 inches with a fine fringe from 2 to 4 inches long; it is somewhat ridged crosswise. That of the sharp-headed finner is entirely white, with a short thin fringe. It has been found to consist of 2 series of plates, the longest being 30 inches in length. Whalebone or baleen has been used in the manufacture of a great variety of articles.

Four plates of baleen, seen edgewise from the front.

2. Something made of whalebone or baleen; a piece of whalebone prepared for some regular use, as the whalebones of a corset. — 3. Specifically, a whalebone riding whip.

> They cock and nock they're head and heal
> They're stroke for stroke in the running;
> The whale's bone whistles the steel is red,
> No skin's neg as yet or shunning.
> A. L. Gordon, Visions in the Smoke.

4†. In the middle ages, ivory from the narwhal, walrus, or other sea-creature, or supposed to be from such a source. See whale's bone, under whale[1], n.

> The ile of hir telle that tretly were set,
> Alle qwyte as qwem as any qwalle bon.
> Destruction of Troy, l. 7, 8, 1 3055.

II. a. Made of or containing whalebone.

> Their ancient whalebone stays creaked.
> H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 398.

Whalebone whale. See I., 1 and phrase under whale[1].

whale-brit (hwāl'brit), n. Same as brit[2], 2. Compare whale[1], n., 1.

whale-built (hwāl'bilt), a. Constructed on the model of a whale-boat.

> The canadian fishing boats are whale built. — Ferley.

whale-calf (hwāl'kaf), n. The young of the whale. Also cat-whale.

whale-fin (hwāl'fin), n. In com., a plate or lamina of whalebone; whalebone collectively. [Both whale fin and whalebone are misnomers, due to original ignorance of the source and nature of the material.]

> A duty was imposed upon whale fins, which, notwithstanding the double duty on fins imported by foreigners, went far to cut the root of the Greenland trade. — S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 61.

whalefish† (hwāl'fish), n. [= D. walvisch = OHG. walfisc, MHG. walvisch, G. wallfisch = Icel. hvalfiskr = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk; as whale[1] + fish[1].] A whale.

> There be in many whalefyshes and Sythge fyshes. — R. Eden, in First Books on America (ed. Arber, p. xxviii).

whale-fisher (hwāl'fish'ėr), n. A person engaged in the whale-fishery; a whaler. — C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 211.

whale-fishery (hwāl'fish'e-ri), n. 1. The occupation or industry of taking whales; also, the men, vessels, etc., engaged in this pursuit.—2. A locality that is or may be resorted to for the taking of whales; a place where whale-fishing is conducted, or where whales abound.

whale-fishing (hwāl'fish'ing), n. The act or occupation of taking whales; whaling.

whale-flea (hwāl'flē), n. Same as whale-louse.

whale-food (hwāl'fōd), n. Same as whale-brit. See brit[2], 2, whale[1], n., and cuts under Cheme and Limacina.

whale-head (hwāl'hed), n. A remarkable grallatorial bird of Africa, related to the herons and storks: so called on account of the size of the head and monstrous shape of the beak; the whale-headed stork, or shoebill, Balæniceps rex, the only representative of the family Balænicipidæ. See cut under Balæniceps.

whale-headed (hwāl'hed'ed), a. Having a large heavy head suggestive of a whale's; noting the shoebill. See whale-head. Encyc. Brit., III. 759.

whale-hunter (hwāl'hun'tėr), n. A whaleman.

Oether . . . said that . . . he was come as far towards the north as commonly the whale-hunters use to trauell. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 4.

whale-lance (hwāl'lans), n. The lance used in striking a whale. It may be either a hand-lance or a bomb-lance, but the term is more frequently applied to the former.

whale-line (hwāl'lin'), n. Rope from 2 to 3 inches in circumference, made with great care from selected material, and used for harpoon-lines in the whale-fishery. It forms the tow-line of a whale-boat, with which a whale is made fast to the boat by means of the toggle-iron.

Whale-line is three-stranded rope, 2½ inches in circumference, composed of the finest hemp, 32 yarns per strand. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 629.

whale-louse (hwāl'lous), n. Any small external parasite of a whale; a fish-louse or epizoic crustacean infesting whales; especially, a lernæodipod of the family Cyamidæ, as Cyamus ceti and other species of this genus. See cut under Cyamus. Also whale-flea.

whaleman (hwāl'man), n.; pl. whalemen (-men). One who whales; a whaler; especially, one engaged in the actual capture of whales as distinguished from another indirectly concerned in the industry.

Hundreds of islands in the Pacific Ocean were discovered and chartered by whalemen. The Century, XL. 522.

whale-oil (hwāl'oil), n. The oil obtained from the blubber of a whale or other cetacean. (a) Common oil or train oil, is that procured from the blubber of any baleen whale, is less a tank odor, and varies in color from honey-yellow to dark brown, according to the character of the blubber and the method of trying-out. It includes several chemically different substances, the more solidifiable of which may be extracted under pressure and cold, and constitute whale-tallow, the fluid residuum being called pressed oil. (b) Sperm oil or spermaceti oil is obtained from the sperm whale and other toothed cetaceans. That from the head of the whale contains the spermaceti which is deposited at ordinary temperatures on extraction from the animal leaving the liquid oil of a clear yellow color (see spermaceti). Sperm oil when refined is much used as a lubricant for delicate machinery, and that from various cetaceans is often named from them, as grampus oil, porpoise oil, etc. Black whale-oil. (a) Oil from the baleen whales, including the conquals, train oil, etc. (b) Oil discolored in running machinery. Pressed whale-oil. See def. (a).

whaler[1] (hwā'lėr), n. [< whale[1] + -er[1].] A person or a vessel engaged in the business of capturing whales.

For a whaler's wife to have been 'round the Cape' half a dozen times, or even more, was nothing extraordinary. The Century, XL. 513.

But o' Thursday t' Resolution, first whaler back this season, came in port. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, v.

whaler[2] (hwā'lėr), n. [< whale[2] + -er[1].] Something whaling, or big or extraordinary of its kind; a whopper; a whacker. [Slang.]

whale-rind (hwāl'rind), n. The skin of a whale. It is thick, tough, and for the most part dark-colored, and overlies the blubber somewhat as the rind of a fruit covers the pulp.

whalery (hwā'lėr-i), n.; pl. whaleries (-iz). [< whale[1] + -ery.] 1. The industry of taking whales; whaling.

The whalery not being sufficiently encouraging. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 7.

2. An establishment for carrying on whale-fishery or any of its branches. [Rare.]

They set up a glass-house, a tan-yard, a saw mill and a whalery. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 12. whale's-food (hwālz'fōd), n. Whale-brit. See brit[2], 2, whale[1], n., 1, and Cheme.

whale-shark (hwāl'shärk), n. 1. A shark of the family Rhinodontidæ. Rhinodon typicus, one of the very largest sharks, and native of warm seas. See the technical names.—2. The basking-shark (which see, with cut).

whale-ship (hwāl'ship), n. A ship built for or employed in the business of whale-fishing; a whaling-ship or whaler.

Smeerenberg . . . was the grand rendezvous of the Dutch whale ships. C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 190.

whale-shot (hwāl'shot), n. [< MD. walschot, spermaceti, < wal, whale, + schot, what is cast: see whale[1] and shot.] Spermaceti or matter from the head of the whale: formerly so called by the Dutch and English whalers.

whale's-tongue (hwālz'tung), n. A misnomer of the acorn-worms, or species of Balanoglossus, mistranslating the technical generic name.

whaling[1] (hwā'ling), n. [Verbal n. of whale[1], v.] The act or business of taking whales; the pursuit of whales; whale-fishing, much used in compounds: as, a whaling-ship; a whaling-voyage; whaling grounds; bay whaling, shore whaling.—Whaling company, a company engaged in whaling, consisting of a captain, a mate, a cooper, two boat-steerers and eleven men. The stock consists of boats, whaling craft, and whaling gear and is divided into sixteen equal shares and the lay of each member of the company is the same. The captain and mate are paid a bonus of $500 or $300 for the term engagement, which is one year, and they are also exempt from all expenses of the company. C. M. Scammon.

whaling[2] (hwā'ling), p. a. [Ppr. of whale[2], v.] Big, unusual, or extraordinary of its kind; strapping; whopping; whacking: as, a whaling lie. [Slang.]

whaling-gang (hwā'ling-gang), n. The crew of a whale-boat.

whaling-gun (hwā'ling-gun), n. Any mechanical contrivance for killing whales by means of an explosive and a projectile, as the bomb-gun, swivel gun, darting-gun, and whale-rocket.

whalingman (hwā'ling-man), n. A whaleman.

whaling-master (hwā'ling-mas'tėr), n. A captain of a whaling-craft, or one who is in command of a whaling station.

whaling-port (hwā'ling-port'), n. A port of entry where whaling vessels are owned and registered.

whaling rocket (hwā'ling rok'et), n. A special form of rocket used in whaling to carry a harpoon and line, and an explosive shell into the body of a whale.

whaling-station (hwā'ling-stā'shon), n. In shore whaling, a place where the fry works are located. C. M. Scammon. [Western coast of U. S.]

whall (hwâl), n. See wall[3].

whallabee (hwol'a-bē), n. Same as wallaby.

whally[1] (hwal'i), a. [For "wally, < wall[2] + -y[1].] Having a greenish tinge, as the eye in glaucoma. Compare wall eye.

A hee-ded fode, whose rugged heare
A whalla eye (the signe of gelosy)
Like the porcn selfe whom he did feare.
Spenser, F. Q., I. ix. 24.

whaly[2] (hwā'li), a. [< whale[1] + -y[1].] Pertaining to or consisting of whales; cetaceous. [Rare.]

The ocean monarch whose fond amount,
The great ordinary of the whaly race.
Tennyson, Timbuctoo, st. 7.

whame (hwām), n. [Cf. whamp.] A fly of the genus Tabanus, a breeze or bull-fly. See breeze[1]. Dickens.

whammel (hwam'el), v. t. Same as whemmle.

whamp (hwomp), n. [Cf. whame and wasp, dial. wop or wosp.] A wasp. [Prov. Eng.]

whampee, n. Same as wampee.

whang[1] (hwang), n. [A var. of thwang, now thang: see thong.] 1. A thong, especially a leather thong.

He a targe forty and twenty braid arrows,
And bend them in a whang.
Sport Robin and Lady Margerie (Child's Ballads, II. 94).

2. A tough leather such as is used for thongs, belting, etc. It is usually made of calf's hide, but sometimes of the skin of the hide of a dog, woodchuck, raccoon, etc.

whang[2] (hwang), v. t. [Cf. whack, beat, flog, take out of large portions; prob. a var. of whack, confused with wang[2].] I. trans. 1. To beat or bang. [Hwack; whack; flog; also, to throw with violence. [Provincial or colloq.]

—2. To cut in large slices or strips; slice. [Scotch.]

My uncle set it (a cheese) to his breast,
And whang'd it down.
W. Beattie, Tales, p. 8. (Jamieson.)

II. intrans. To make or give out a banging noise.

Bang, whang, whang, goes the drum.
Browning, Up at a Villa.

whang[2] (hwang), n. [< whang[2], v.] 1. A blow or thwack; a whack; a beating or banging; a bang. [Colloq.]

The whang of the bass-drum.
C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 317.

2. A cut; a piece; a slice; a chunk.

Of other meats they men take large whanges.
Kay's Proverbs (ed. 1670), p. 228.

Wi' sweet milk cheese in mony a whang.
Burns, Holy Fair.

3†. Formerly, in Maine and some other parts of New England, a house-cleaning party; a gathering of neighbors to aid one of their number in cleaning house.

whangam (hwang'gam), n. A feigned name of some animal (probably meant for whang 'em).

A whangam that eats grasshoppers had marked . . . [this one] for its prey, and was just stretching forth to devour it. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxviii.

whang-leather (hwang'leTH'ėr), n. See leather and whang[1], 2.

whank (hwangk), v. and n. Same as whang[2]. [Scotch.]

whap, whapper, etc. See whop, etc.

whappet[1] (hwop'et), n. [< whap + -et.] A blow on the ear. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whappet[2] (hwop'et), n. [A var. of whippet, a yelping cur.] A snarling, worthless dog; a cur.

To scare the barking and bawling of a few little curres and whappets. Bent, Pathway, p. 236. (Encyc.)

As the sturdy sheep dashes out the little whappet's brains. Mrs. S. Ward, Sermons, p. 36.

wharf (hwârf), n.; pl. wharves, wharfs (hwârvz, hwârfs). [Early mod. E. also irreg. warf; < ME. wharf, a wharf, < AS. hwearf*, hwerf, a dam or bank to keep out water (cf. mere hwerf, the sea-shore), = D. werf, a wharf, yard, = Icel. hvarf, a shelter, = OSw. hwarf, Sw. varf, a ship-builder's yard, = Dan. værft, a wharf, dockyard (G. werft, a wharf, werf, a bank, wharf, < D. and Dan.); prob. orig. a dam or bank to 'turn' or keep out water, and partly identified with AS. hwearf, hwerft, a turning, exchange, a space, a crowd, = OS. hwarf, a crowd, = D. werf, turn, time, = Icel. hvarf, a turning, < OSw. hwarf, turn, time, order, layer, etc., < AS. hwearfian = Icel. hverfa = OSw. hwerfwa, turn: see wherve. Cf. whirl, from the same ult. root.] 1. A platform of timber, stone, or other material built on a support at the margin of a harbor or a navigable stream, in order that vessels may be moored alongside, as for loading or unloading, or while at rest. A wharf may be parallel with and contiguous to the margin when it is more especially called a quay, or it may project away from it, with openings underneath for the flow of water, when it is distinctively called a pier. (See cuts under pilework.) In England wharves are of two kinds: (a) legal wharves, certain wharves to all of which appointed by commission from the Court of Exchequer, or legalized by act of Parliament; and (b) sufferance wharves, places where certain goods may be landed and shipped by special sufferance granted by the Crown for that purpose. In American seaports wharves generally belong to the municipality, and are often leased to their occupants, but some are private property.

The wharves stretched out towards the centre of the harbor. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

Out upon the wharfs they came,
Knight and burgher, lord and dame.
Tennyson, Lady of Shalott, iv.

2†. The bank of a river or the shore of the sea.

Better shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf.
Shak., Hamlet, i. v. 33.

wharf (hwârf), v. i. [< wharf, n.] 1. To guard or secure by a wharf or firm wall of timber or stone. Ecclyn.—2. To place or lodge on a wharf.

wharfage (hwâr'fāj), n. [< wharf + -age.] 1. Provision of or accommodation at a wharves; berthage at a wharf: as the city had abundant wharfage, to find wharfage for a ship.—2. Charge or payment for the use of a wharf; the charges or receipts for accommodation at a wharf or at wharves. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 135.

wharf-boat (hwârf'bōt), n. 1. In the United States, a boat supporting a platform sometimes used as a wharf in rivers or in other situations where actual wharves do not exist, or where they are unsuitable from the great variation in the height of the water. Floating platforms similarly supported, called floats, are used in some European and other river ports for landing goods and passengers.—2. A boat employed about a wharf or wharves.

wharfing (hwâr'fing), n. [< wharf + -ing[1].] 1. A structure in the form of a wharf; material of which a wharf is constructed; wharves in general

A strong stone wall, which was a kind of wharfing against rivers running into it. Evelyn, Sylva, i. 2. (Latham.)

The San Marco glided into a bayou under a high wharfing of timbers, where a bearded fisherman waited Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 763.

2. In hydraulic engin., a method of facing sea-walls by the use of sheet piling anchored to the bank.

wharfinger (hwâr'fin-jėr), n. [For "wharfager (with intrusive n as in messenger, passenger, porringer, scavenger, etc.), < wharfage + *-er*¹.] A person who owns or who has charge of a wharf; one who makes a business of letting accommodation for vessels at his wharf.

wharfman (hwârf'man), n.; pl. wharfmen (-men). A man employed on or about a wharf; one performing or having charge of work on a wharf.

An organization of wharfmen, who form a species of close corporation. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 61.

wharf-master (hwârf'mas"tėr), n. A wharfinger. [Western U. S.]

wharf-rat (hwârf'rat), n. 1. The common brown or Norway rat, Mus decumanus, when living in or about a wharf considered with reference to its being in many places an imported animal first naturalized in wharves, after leaving the ship which brought it, or to the special size, ferocity, or other distinctive character it acquires under the favorable conditions of environment afforded by wharves, shipping, and storehouses. Hence 2. A fellow who loafs about or haunts wharves, making a living as best he can, without regular or ostensible occupation. [Cant.]

wharl[1] (hwârl), n. [A var. of whorl or whirl (?). wharrow.] A part of a spindle; a spindle (?). [Prov. Eng.]

[A patent for] placing tapers on wharles of machinery.
The Ironmonger, LXVII. 646.

wharl[2] (hwârl), v. t. [A var. of whirl, used in sense of whir, trill, roll; cf. burl[2].] To speak with the uvular utterance of the r, be unable to pronounce r.

All that are born there in [Carleton] have a harsh and rattling kind of uttering their words with much difficulty and wharling in their throat. Fuller, Worthies, II. 220.

wharl[3] (hwârl), n. [< wharl[2], v.] See the quotation.

The natives of this Country [Northumberland] of the antient original Race or Families are distinguished by a Shibboleth upon their Tongues in pronouncing the Letter R, which they can not utter without a hollow Jarring in the Throat, by which they are as plainly known as a Foreigner is by pronouncing the Th: this they call the Northumberland R or Wharle; and the Natives value themselves upon that Imperfection, because, forsooth, it shows the Antiquity of their Blood.
Defoe, Tour thro' Great Britain, III. 334. (Davies.)

wharle, n. A dialectal variant of quarrel[2].

With alblastors also anyt full streght,
Whappet in wharles whollit the pepull.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4744.

wharp (hwarp), n. [An erroneous form of warp.] Same as trout-sand. [Local.]

wharrow-spindle (hwar'o-spin'dl), n. In hor., a spindle represented with a small handle at the top, projecting at right angles as if intended to whirl the spindle by. Berry.

whart (hwart), v. Same as thwart[1].

Whartonian (hwâr-tō'ni-an), a. [Commemorating the English anatomist Thomas Wharton (died 1673).] Noting certain anatomical structures discovered or described by Wharton.

Whartonian duct. See duct.

Wharton's duct. See duct.

Wharton's gelatin, Wharton's jelly. See gelatin of Wharton, under gelatin.

wharves, n. Plural of wharf.

what[1] (hwot), pron. [< ME. what, whet, hat, quat, qwat, hwat, hwet (gen. whas, whos, dat. wham, whom, acc. what, whet), < AS. hwæt (gen. hwæs, dat. hwæm, hwæm, acc. hwæt) = OS. hwat, hwat = OFries. hwet = D. wat, MLG. LG. wat = OHG. hwaz, waz, MHG. waz, G. was = Icel. hvat = Dan., Sw. hvad = Goth. hwa, what (interrogative and indefinite, also interjectional): = L. quod, what (indefinite), somewhat, = Zend kad = Skt. kat; neut. of the pron. who. See who. Whose is historically the gen. of what; not less than of who, and it is still so used (namely as equivalent to of which), although many authorities object, and it is becoming less common.]

A. interrog. 1. Used absolutely as an interrogative pronoun. (a) Applied to inanimate things.

Quæ hæt thu don . . . ón Saterdai at non?
Rel. Antiq., I. 302.

Thenne asoryed they hym shete, & asked ful loude,
"What the deuel hatz thou don, doted wrech?"
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 196.

Shame then it was that drove him from the Parliament, but the shame of what?
Milton, Eikonoklastes, vi.

Folks at her House at such an Hour?
Lord! what will all the Neighbours say?
Prior, The Dove, st. 9.

I'd have they are in actual consultation upon what's for supper.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, ii. 1.

What can restrain the agony of a mother's heart?
Irving, Granada, p. 40.

(b) Applied to animals (and sometimes in contempt to persons) with the force of inquiry after the nature or kind: as, what is that running up the tree? (c) Applied to persons nearly equivalent to who, but having reference to origin or character, rather than to name or identity.

What is this woman," quod I, "so worthily attired?"
That is Mede the mayde," quod she.
Piers Ploughman (B), ii. 19.

Thise twevne come to the messagers, and hem asked what they were, and thei answerde that thei shulde wel knowe, yef it pleased hem to ben byde.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 129.

What's he that walks alone so sadly, with his hands behind him?
Beau. and Fl., Woman Hater, ii. 1.

Eminent Dolls may indeed inform who their owners are, not often what.
Ford, Perkin Warbeck, Ded.

(d) Used in various elliptical and incomplete constructions as, what! equivalent to what did you say? or what will it be? (e) Used in exclamation to express surprise, indignation, etc.

Hout! wulle ȝe this pes to breke,
And do the an kinges wunne be schame?
Owl and Nightingale, l. 1530 (Morris and Skeat, I. 191).

"What!" quod the preest to Perkyn, "Peter!" as me thinketh.
Thow art lettred a litel, who lerned the on boke."
Piers Ploughman (B), vii. 140.

But what, shall the abuse of a thing make the right use odious?
Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie (ed. Arber), p. 54.

What! are the ladies of your land so tall?
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

(f) Expressing a summons.

La Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call her forth to me.
Nurse. . . . I bade her come. What, lamb! what, lady bird!
God forbid! Where's this girl? What, Juliet!
Shak., R. and J., i. 3. 3.

Qua. [Within.] What, Simplicius!
Sim. Come, Quicksilver.
Marston, What you Will, v. 1.

Chamberlain, call in the musicians, bid the tapsters and maids come up and dance; what! we'll make a night of it.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

(g) A general introductory notion, equivalent to "well, lo," "now," etc., and constituting a mere expletive.

What, welcome be the cat, a Goddes name!
Chaucer, Com. Prol. to C. T., l. 854.

What, will you walk with me about the town?
Shak., C. of E., i. 2. 22.

2. Used adjectively and lending an interrogative force to the proposition in which it occurs. (a) Inquiring as to the individual being, character, kind, or sort of a definite thing or person.

Allas! what woman will ye of me make?
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1396.

What manner of man is this that even the wind and the sea obey him?
Mark iv. 41.

What news on the Rialto? Shak., M. of V., i. 3. 38.

What good should follow this, if this were done?
What harm, undone? Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

(b) Inquiring as to extent or quantity (equivalent to the question how much?

"What money have you got, Copperfield?" he said. . . . I told him seven shillings.
Dickens, David Copperfield, vi.

(c) Used intensively or emphatically with a force varying from the interrogative to the exclamatory, often followed by the indefinite article: as, what an idea!

What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness!
2 Pet. iii. 11.

What a piece of work is a man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty!
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 315.

What confusion and mischief do the avarice, anger, and ambition of Princes cause in the world!
Evelyn, Diary, March 24, 1672.

Oh, Amos Cottle! Phœbus! what a name,
To fill the speaking trump of future fame!
Byron, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

Oh, what a dawn of day!
How the March sun feels like May!
Browning, A Lover's Quarrel.

What an (and) if? Same as what of?

And what an if
His sorrows have so overwhelmed his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks?
Shak., Tit. And., iv. 4. 9.

What else? what else can or could be the case: an elliptical expression expecting no answer, and hence sometimes equivalent to a strong affirmation.

Lico. But can't thou blow it?
Tinderman. What else?
Lyly, Midas, iv. 3.

What . . . for? what for? what . . . as? what kind of? in such phrases as, what for a man is he? — that is, what kind of man, in looks or character? It is equivalent to the German idiom was für ein, and as reflecting that idiom is used in the English of the Pennsylvania Germans and their neighbors, being in exclamatory use equivalent to what. The earlier idiom what . . . for is now rare.

What's he for a man?
Peele, Edward I. (ed. Dyce), p. 438.

What is he for a fool that betroths himself to unquietness?
Shak., Much Ado, i. 2. 48.

What ho! an exclamatory summons or call.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!
Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 82.

What if? elliptical for what would happen if? what would you say if? what matters it if? etc.

What if this mixture do not work at all? . . .
What if it be a poison?
Shak., R. and J., iv. 2. 21.

What if he dwells on many a fact as though
Some things Heaven knew not which it ought to know? . . .
Such are the prayers his people love to hear.
O. W. Holmes, A Family Record.

What is thee? what is the matter with thee?

Lordy, what is the? . . .
Me were leffre to bee ded
Thane neo the make such chere.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 50.

What not, elliptical for what may I not say? implying "everything else, various other things, et cetera; what you will": as the table was loaded with toys, pictures, and what not. Hence what-not, n.

such as is unwholesome, and engenders melancholy, plagues, and what not.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 150.

Thou art like to meet with, in the way which thou goest, hobgoblins, satyrs, dragons, darkness, dirt, in a word, death, and what not.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

College A cannot compete with College B unless it has more scholarships, unless it changes the time of election to scholarships, or what not.
Contemporary Rev., LI. 617.

What of? (a) Elliptical for what comes of, that is, what care you (I, we, etc.)? does it matter in any way?

All this is so, but what of this, my lord?
Shak., Much Ado, iv. 1. 73.

(b) Elliptical for what say or think you of?

I ask you, but what of yesterday?
Tennyson, The Ancient Sage.

What's his (its) name? what do you call it? etc., colloquial phrases generally signifying that the speaker cannot supply a definite name for some person or thing, either because the name has escaped his memory, or because the person or thing is of so trivial consequence that he or it is not deserving of a specific name. The phrases are sometimes formed into a compound: as, tell Mr. What-a-mum-me to be off. See what d'ye call it.

Good even, good Master What ye call't.
Shak., As you Like It, iii. 3. 74.

What's to do here? See do, 4. What though? See though.

B. rel. 1. A compound relative pronoun, meaning 'that which,' or having a value including the simple relative pronoun which with the demonstrative pronoun that preceding: as, "what I have written I have written" (that is, that which I have written I have written). It is no longer used of persons, except in the anomalous phrase but what.

Mekil than to Melliora he mungerd (told) what he thought.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2578.

Loke up I seye and telle me what she is Anon, that I may gon aboute thy nede.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 862.

I am what I was born to be, your prince.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, v. 4.

A host of second-rate critics, and official critics, and what is called "the popular mind" as well.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, vi. 5.

What as strictly equivalent to the relative which, never had much vogue and has long been a vulgarism; but its genitive whose has survived, in preference to whichs, as we should have modernized the mediæval quhilkes.
F. Hall, False Philology, p. 7, note.

What was formerly and in vulgar speech is still used as a simple relative equivalent to that or which: as, if I had a donkey what wouldn't go.

Offer them peace or aught what is beside.
Peele, Edward I. (Old Plays, II. 87).

The matter what other men wrote.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 142.

I fear nothing
What can be said against me.
Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 1. 126.

What has also the value of whatever or whoever: as, come what will, I shall be there.

What in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.
Shak., Lear, v. 3. 97.

Let come what come may, I . . .
I shall have had my day.
Tennyson, Maud, xi.

2. Used adjectively, meaning 'that . . . which,' or having compound relative value: as, I know what book you mean (that is, I know that book which you mean); he makes the most of what money he has (that is, he makes the most of that money which he has): applied to persons and things. (a) That . . . who or which; those . . . who or which.

Shal nat be told for me . . .
. . . what jeweles men in the fyr the caste.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2897.

Throwe his prayer they may be clensed of synne
What tyme they entre the chappelle with-in.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 126.

Anno 1478, at what time the Switzers took their revenge upon Charles, Duke of Burgundie. Corgat, Crudities, I. 63.

And heavenly quires the hymenæan sung,
What day the genial angel to our fire
Brought her, in naked beauty.
Milton, P. L., iv 712.

Now a merchant may wear what boots he pleases Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xiii.

(c) Any who or which; whatever, whoever.

Also quod brother or anstre die, and he may noughte be broughte . . . wyt his owne catelle, he sal be broughte wyt the broderhedes. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 180.

I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind
What lady she her lord. Shak., W. T., I. 2. 44.

I never said aught but this, That what rule, or laws, or custom, or people were flat against the word of God are diametrically opposite to Christianity.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

(d) How much. [Colloq.]

When a man lets he doesn't well know what money he uses. Trollope, Last Chronicle of Barset, xxxvii.

But what, but that, but who, who or that not.

There was scarce a farmer's daughter within ten miles round but what had found him successful.
Goldsmith, Vicar iii.

Not a writer . . . that mentions his name but what tells the story of him. Bentley, Diss. on Euripides, § 4.

There are few madmen but what are observed to be afraid of the strait waistcoat.
Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, xv. 28, note.

What ast, that which.

Here I do bequeathe to thee,
In full possession, half that Kendal hath
And what as Bradford holds of me in chief Old Plays II. 47.

What dones† (what dones is literally 'what made,' dones being the genitive of don, E. done pp. of do made, used in the genitive in imitation of kunnes in what kunnes of what kind), of what sort, what kind.

And what I seighe it was so sly spying, I went To warne Pilates wyf what dones man was Ieaus,
For Iuwes hateden hym and han done hym to deth
Piers Plowman (B), xviii. 94.

What that†, whatsoever, whatever, what. Also that what.

Him ne dret (dreadeth) nogt to do penne, huet thet hit by þenk. Ayenbite of Inwit (E. E. T. S.), p. 34.

What luttes (little), that lo et Poems and Lives of Saints (ed. Furnivall), p. 386.

What schulde I telle,
And of moche other thing what that thou was?
Rob. of Brunne, Prol.

What (that a king himselfe bit obliss',
Gower, Conf. Amant., I. 4.

That what is extremely proper in one company may be highly improper in another. Chesterfield.

C. indef. (a) Something; anything; obsolete except in such colloquial phrases as I'll tell you what, (by abbreviation for what it is, what I think, or the like).

Al was us never broche ne ryngc,
Ne ellis what (var. nought and ought; fro women sept.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1741.

Wot you what, my lord?
To-day the lords you talk of are beheaded.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 2. 92.

I'll tell you what now of the devil.
Massinger and Dekker, Virgin Martyr, iii. 3.

I tell you what. Ellery Davenport lays out to marry a real angel. He ate to swear and she's to pray!
B. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 518.

(b) A thing; a portion; an amount; a bit, as, a little what.

Thanne she a lytel what amylynge seyde
Chaucer, Boethius, iv. prose 6.

Then the kynge anone called his scruaunt, that hadde but one lofe and a lytell whatte of wyne Palsgr., Chron., clxiii.

They prayd him sit and gave him for to feed
Such homely what as serves the simple clowne.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. ix. 7.

To know what's what. See know†.

what[1] (hwot), adv. and conj. [< ME. what; < what, pron.] I. adv. 1. Why?

What sholde he studie, and make himselven wood,
Upon a book in cloistre alwey to poure?
Chaucer, Oxn Prol. to C. T., l. 184.

What is the shope to blame in youre syght Whanne he is shorne of his flees & maade alle bare,
Thoughe folke of malyce for her wolfis fyght?
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 20.

Ahlas what should she fight?
Yewe women win by fight.
Gascoigne, Philomene (Steele Glas, etc., ed. Arber), p. 87.

What should I don this [imperial] robe, and trouble you?
Shak., Tit. And., I. 1. 190.

But what do we suffer misshaped and enormous prelaties, as we do, thus to blanch and varnish her deformities with the fair colours, as before of martyrdom, so now of episcopacy? Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

2. To what degree? in what respect?

world and lose himself? Luke ix. 25.

For what are men better than sheep or goats . . .
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer?
Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

3†. How; how greatly; to what an extent or degree; how remarkably: exclamatory and intensive.

O what I am fetys and fayre and fygured full fyll!
York Plays, p. 3.

What . . . what, in some measure . . . in part . . . partly by, in consequence of . . . partly . . . now followed by with indefinite and distributive in value.

Lordinges, the tyme wasteth nyght and day,
And stalketh forth as what privily slepinge,
And what thurgh necligence in our wakinge,
As doth the stream, that turneth never agayn,
Descending fro the montaigne into playn.
Chaucer, Prol. to Man of Law's Tale, l. 21.

Than wend I wele she myghte nevere fayle
For to ben holpen what at youre instaunce,
What at[1] A fare other frendes governaunce
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1441.

Than wrote Edwarde aboute to every garnyson thoughe the reame of Logres, and assembled xxxvi what oon what other. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 27.

Most men, as it happens in this world, either weakly, or falsely prejudged, what through ignorance and what through custom of license, both in discourse and writing, by what both law of late written in vulgar, have not scrupled to call in the decision of this point.
Milton, Church-government, ii. 3.

With omission of the second what (as frequently).

What for hire kynrede and hir nortelrie
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 47.

What with prize projects, and knavery, poor Peter was grown distracted. Swift, Tale of a Tub, iv.

II. conj. 1. So much as; so far as.

Ector, with tul many a bolde baroun,
Cast on a day with Grekes for to fighte,
As he was wont to greve hem what he myghte.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 30.

To helpe youre frendis what I may.
Roman of the Rose, l. 4944.

Mr. Brown being present, observed them [Indians] to be much affected, and one especially did weep very much, though covered what he could.
J. Shepard, Clear Sunshine of the Gospel, p. 30.

2. That, rel. in al-what, until (compare although, etc.).

The kinges hem wenten and hi seghen [they saw] the storie thet yede hi-fore hem al-wat hi kam over the hune wat nie hoord was. Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 97.

Thet hoard me sikth, ich ne seel by an eyre [I shall not ire at ever] al-huet ich hulde ydronke.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 51.

(b) In the phrase but what: but that, that . . . not.

The Abbot cannot be humbled but what the community must be humbled in his person. Scott, Monastery, x.

Not a thing stolen but what the man gave . . . up.
F. W. Newman.

what[2]† (hwot), a. [< ME. hwat, quat, quak, < AS. hwæt keen, sharp, bold (= OS. hwat = Icel. hvatr, keen). Cf. wheat[1].] Quick; sharp; bold.

Ther woren cokes with the whete . . . Layamon, I. 1137.

whatabouts (hwot'a bouts'), n. The matters which one is about or occupied with. [Colloq.]

You . . . know of all my goings-on, and whatabouts and what does from Henry Taylor.
Southey, To C. C. Bedford, March 3, 1830.

what-d'ye-call-it, what-d'ye-call-'em (hwot' dye kal'it, -em). A word substituted for the name of a thing, because of forgetfulness or ignorance, or in slight contempt. [Colloq.]

There is no part of the body, an' please your honour, where a wound occasions more intolerable anguish than upon the knee . . . there being so many tendons and what d'ye call-ems all about it.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, viii. 10.

whate'er (hwot ar'), pron. A contracted form of whatever.

He strikes whate'er is in his way
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 622.

whaten, whatten (hwot'n), a. [See also what an, and (with the indef. article) a what a, < what[1] + an, orig. adj. inflection.] What; what kind of. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Lord sab us! only look at him sitting asleep. Whatan a face.
Noctes Ambrosianæ, Oct., 1828.

whatever (hwot ev'er), pron. and a. [< what[1] + ever, a.] I. pron. A. indef. rel. Anything which; no matter what; any that.

To effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise Shak., Rich. II., iv. 1. 330.

The very best will variously incline
And what rewards your virtue punish mine
Whatever is right. Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 145.

The board was expected to make itself thoroughly acquainted with whatever concerned the colonies.
Prescott, Peru and Isa., ii. 9.

B. interrog. What? as, whatever shall I do? [Vulgar, but common in recent British colloquial use.]

no matter what; any or all that: applied to persons and things: as, whatever person is appointed must be satisfactory to the court.

I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.
Shak., K. John, iv. 1. 84.

The knowledge of the theory of logic has no tendency whatever to make men good reasoners.
Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

Whatever side he was on, he could always find excellent reasons for it. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 86.

what-like (hwot'lik), indef. rel. a. Of what appearance or character. [Colloq. or provincial.]

She knows Miss Abbey of old-remind her, and she knows what like the home and what like the friend is likely to turn out. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iii. 2.

Whatman paper. See paper.

whatna (hwot'na), a. Same as whatan. [Scotch.]

There was a lad was born in Kyle
But whatna day o whatna style,
I doubt it's hardly worth the while
To be sae nice wi' Robin.
Burns, There was a Lad.

whatness (hwot'nes), n. [< what[1] + -ness.] In metaph., a quiddity. [Rare.]

what-not (hwot'not), n. [< what not (see what[1]); the stand being so called as used to hold shells, photographs, bric-a-brac, "and what not"]: see under what[1].] 1. A stand or set of shelves on which to keep or display small articles of curiosity or ornament, as well as books, papers, etc.; an étagère.

What cheerfulness those works of art will give to the little parlor-nook in the country when they are set up with other shells on the what not in the corner!
C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 61.

2. Anything; no matter what; what you please. See what not, under what[1], A. [Colloq.]

I profess to be an impartial chronicler of poor Phil's fortunes, misfortunes, friendships, and what nots.
Thackeray, Philip, ix.

whatreck (hwot'rek), adv. [Short for what reck I? 'what care I?'] Nevertheless. [Scotch.]

I wot he was no slaw, man: . . .
But yet, what-reck, he, at Quebec,
Montgomery like did fa', man.
Burns, The American War.

whatsot (hwot'so), a. and pron. [< ME. whatso, whatswa, whatse, hwatse, quatt so, what so, < what[1] + so]. Cf. whoso.] I. a. Of whatever character, kind, or sort; no matter what (person or thing); an indefinite relative use.

What man so ye metes may ye sone knowe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2068.

II. pron. No matter what or who; whatsoever; whomsoever.

But if were any persone obstinat,
What-so he were, of heigh or lowe estat,
Him wolde he sotteliche chaste for the nones.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 852.

"In exitu Israel de Egypto"
Thus sang they all together in one voice,
With whatso in that Psalm is after written.
Longfellow, tr. of Dante's Purgatorio, ii.

Sometimes written as two separate words.

Quyt is she
From yow this yer, what after so befalle.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 686.

whatsoe'er (hwot so ar'), pron. A contracted form of whatsoever.

whatsoever (hwot so-ev'er), a. and pron. [< ME. whatsoever, < what[1] + so[1] + ever. Cf. whatso and whatsomever.] I. a. Of whatever nature, kind, or sort; whatever: an intensive form of whatever, still so parsable and used as a correlative phrase.

I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content. Phil. iv. 11.

Goodness guide thy actions whatsoever!
Ivan. and Ul. (c. 1570), Faithful Friends, iii. 2.

The Meridians, which are Circles passing over our heads, in what part of the World soever we be.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 60.

Marauding thieves to be destroyed by whatsoever method possible. The Academy, March 28, 1891, p. 290.

II. pron. What thing or things soever; no matter what thing or things; whatever or whoever.

I will know the truth (truth) whatso ever it costs.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 37.

Youth, whatsoever thou art thou art but a scurvy fellow.
Shak., T. N., iii. 4. 165.

For, tis a true Courage (whatsoever men say),
But Cowardize, to make ones Self away.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Trophies.

whatsomt, a. and pron. Same as whatsoever.

whatsomever (hwot'sum-ev'ėr), a. and pron. [< ME. whatsumever, whatsomever (confused with whatsoever); < what[1] + sum (< Dan. som, as so) + ever. Cf. howsomever.] Whatsoever. [Now vulgar.]

Whatsumever wise they tele,
They wol not pleyne, but concele.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 5841.

Doughtily loke that thou be woure, whatsumevere thow bitide Make not thin husbonde poore with spendinge ne with pride. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 45.

whatten, a. See whatin a.

whattie (hwot'i), n. Same as whacky.

whault, n. See wault[3].

whaup (hwâp), n. [Sc., also whaap, quhaup, quhaip, aap, said to be so called from its cry.] A curlew. [Scotch.] Great whaup, the curlew, Numenius arquata. Also called doo's whaup. Little whaup, May whaup, the whimbrel, Numenius phæopus, so called from its relative size and the time of its appearance. Also called tang whaup.

whave (hwāv), v. t.; pret. and pp. whaved, ppr. whaving. [Prob. a dial. var. of quave.] 1. To turn (pottery) when drying. [Prov. Eng.] — 2. To cover, or hang over. [Prov. Eng.]

whawl, v. i. [A var. of waul, waul.] To cry as a cat. same as waul.

The cats whawled. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 269.

whaylet, a. A corrupt Middle English spelling of hail[2], hale[2].

whay-worm (hwā'wėrm), n. [Also whey-worm, perhaps a dial. reduction of wheadworm.] 1. A pimple. Carr, Craven Gloss., p. 252. (Halliwell.) — 2. A whim. Compare mangot.

And so marched toward London, where the Essex men having wylde whay wormes in their heddes, joined them with him. Hall, Edward IV., f. 5, in (Halliwell.)

whe[1] (hwē) pron. A form of who. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whe[2], n. See wee.

wheadlet, v. An obsolete spelling of wheadle.

wheal[1] (hwēl), n. [< ME. whel, whele, whelle, a pimple, wheal (cf. dim. whelk, a little wheal), < AS. hwelca, wheal (Sommer); origin and status uncertain; cf. AS. hwelcian (hwelcian-?), wither, pine away; cf. W. chwilen, a marigold, wheal, pimple.] 1. A pimple; a pustule.

He must drie his face very well, for feare of wheales and wrinkles. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 191.

All wheales and itching pimples which are apt to breake forth. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxiii. 5.

Specifically — 2. An elevation of the skin, of varying size, usually elongated in form, caused by a stroke, as of a rod or whip, or constituting an eruption, as that of urticaria. See urticaria.

wheal[1] (hwēl), v. [< ME. whelen, < wheal[1], n.] I. trans. To produce a wheal upon.

His eyes were bloodshot, his cheeks whealed and puffed. S. Judd, Margaret, I. 7.

II. intrans. To suppurate; form a sore or pustule.

Now gins the leprous core of ulcered sins Wheale to a head. Marston, Sat. and Mel., II., v. 1.

wheal[2] (hwēl), n. [Also hwel, whee, whel, wheel, < Corn. huel, a work, a mine; cf. W. chwyl, a turn, course, while, chwalu, turn, revolve, run a course, bustle, chwel, a course, turn.] A mine. [Cornwall, Eng.]

wheal-worm (hwēl'wėrm), n. [< wheal[1] + worm.] 1. The item mite, Demodex canis. — 2. The nearctine Leptus americanus, or some similar harvest bug: so named from the wheals or pimples produced by its bite. See cut under harvest-mite.

wheaser (hwē'zėr), n. [Said to be connected with weasel.] The red-breasted merganser, Merganser serrator. [Local, New Eng.]

wheat (hwēt), n. [< ME. whete, wete, whaete, hwete, hwite, quete, < AS. hwæte, < OS. hwēti = MD. weete, D. weit = MLG. wēten, weite, LG. weten = OHG. weizi, MHG. weize, G. weizen, also OHG. weizo, MHG. weize, G. dial. weissen, hweis = Sw. hvete = Dan. hvede = Goth. hwaiteis, wheat; cf. Lith. kvietys, Lett. kwezis, wheat (prob. < Teut.), but what which is white (with ref. to the color of the grain or the needle; < AS. hwæt, etc., white; see white.] A cereal grain, the product of species of Triticum, chiefly of T. sativum (T. vulgare). The origin of the plant is not clearly known, but it is thought by many to be derived from grass, Triticum cæsium, of the Mediterranean region, now cleared as a species of Pyrenean. A wheat plant is a grass closely related to barley and rye, having a dense four-sided spike and grains longitudinally furrowed on one side, rounded on the other. In some varieties the palets bear awns, in others not; the varieties being respectively called bearded and beardless or bald. Some are planted in the spring — spring or summer wheat — others in the fall, maturing the next season — winter wheat. The product of the latter was formerly preferred, but with recent methods of manufacture spring

Wheat (Triticum sativum).

1, the angled joint of the rachis, bearing a spikelet; 2, the space of one joint of the rachis, bearing two spikelets; 3, the grain removed from the spikelet; 4, a, part of the rachis, showing the joints of the variety mutic-um; the lowest joint, bearing the seed, is the base of the segment.

wheat is equally valued. The varieties are further classified as white and red or amber, referring to the color of the grain, among winter wheats at least, the white are more esteemed. The grain is highly nutritious, containing some 6 per cent. of carbohydrates, 14 per cent. of albuminoids, together with small quantities of the mineral substances, potash, soda, etc., required by the animal system, with only 14 per cent. of water. For use it is chiefly converted into flour, the finest but not the most nutritious flour being the great pure starch. The richer elements lie next the skin, and these are secured in "Graham flour," which properly includes the whole grain, and by recent milling processes which appropriate all but the cuticle. Wheat was formerly made in England into a dish called frumenty or furmenty by boiling it entire in milk and seasoning. It is now largely used in America for the table in cracked, crushed, or rolled wheat or wheat grits. Wheat has been known from antiquity, being mentioned in Scripture. It is traceable to ancient Egypt and is recorded as introduced into China about 2700 B. C. It now furnishes the principal breadstuff among all civilized nations. It is adaptable to various conditions and widely grown in temperate regions. It is not excluded by cold winters but requires a mean summer temperature of not below that. Among the principal countries which produce it are the United States, Canada, Russia, Hungary, India, Australia, Egypt, Roumania, and Turkey. The varieties are very numerous, and there are several more or less strongly marked races, one of which is spelt.

Dis-ese of Oxnolle that ese bleliche berth bere
Jus blithely beareth barley ne hwete.
Ancrene Riwle (E. E. T. S.), p. 161.

We manna gie a wheat flour scone to a black . . . it's no that ill food, though for me being sae hearty as kindly to a Scots lowin' stomach as the earney oatmeal is.
Scott, Old Mortality, xx.

Amber wheat See def. — Arras wheat. See Polish wheat, below. China wheat, a spring wheat grown in the United States, said to have been derived from a grain found in a tea-chest. Clock wheat, a variety of the bearded wheat, Triticum hordeum. Cow-wheat, a plant of the genus Melampyrum, particularly M. arvense, with beautifully variegated flowers in a long spike. The American one is M. Americanum, an unimportant plant. Dinkel wheat, spelt. Emmer wheat, the race called T. dicoccum (or T. sativum) including the Arras wheat of Abyssinia. Its varieties flourish in poor soil, are remarkably exempt from diseases, and make excellent starch. Guinea wheat. See Turkey wheat, below. Indian wheat, an American name in England for Indian corn, Zea Mays. See cut under Zea. Japanese buckwheat, which is cultivated to some extent in the United States particularly in the northwest. Oil of wheat. See oil. One-grained or single-grained wheat, a wheat with one seed to each spikelet — Triticum monococcum — which appears to be a true species. Also called St. Peter's corn. Red wheat. See def. — Revet or rivet wheat, a variety of the race Triticum turgidum. — Rough-chaff wheat, buckwheat. Compare shirvanka. — Smooth-chaff wheat. See one-grained wheat, above. — Spring wheat, summer wheat. See def. — Tartary wheat, the buckwheat or Indian wheat, Fagopyrum Tataricum. — Tea wheat. Same as China wheat. — Turkey wheat, Turkish wheat, Indian corn, vaguely supposed to come from Turkey (compare turkey). Also called Guinea wheat and Indian wheat.

There grow in several parts of Africa, Asia, and America a kind of corn called Mays, and such as we commonly name Turkey wheat. They make bread of it which is hard of digestion, heavy in the stomach, and does not agree with any but such as are of a robust and hail constitution.
I. Lemery, Treatise on Foods (1704), p. 73. (Davies.)

We saw a great many fields of Indian corn, which grows to the height of six or seven feet. It is made into flour for the use of the common people and goes by the name of Turkey wheat. Smollett, Travels, viii.

Wheat-aphid or -aphis, a wheat plant-louse (see below). Wheat bulb-fly, Hylemyza arctica, a European fly of the family Anthomyidæ, whose larva infests the stems of wheat. Wheat bulb-worm, the larva of an owlet-moth, Mamestra americana, which affects the stems of wheat in the United States and Canada, stunting the ears and prematurely ripening the kernels. — Wheat-cutworm, the larva of an American noctuid moth, Euphygma fumiferalis. Also called grass worm and fall army worm. See Euphyma. C. V. Riley. Wheat-dampening machine, a machine for washing grain to free it from smut and dirt and afterward drying it. E. H. Knight. Wheat eel-worm, a vinegar-eel worm of the family Anguillulidæ, Tylenchus tritici, which causes the disease known as ear-cockle, purples, or false ergot in wheat in Europe. It produces round dark-colored distorted grains in the ear of wheat. Also called wheat-worm.

Wheat Bulb-worm (Mamestra americana).

b, wheat stalk, showing larva at work; c, larva; cr, pupa (lines show natural size).

Wheat gall-fly, the adult of the wheat-joint worm. See Isosoma, 1, gentilis, and cut under wheat-fly. Wheat-head army-worm, the larva of an American noctuid moth, Leucania albilinea. See Leucania. Wheat plant louse, one of several aphids, or Aphidida, which infest wheat, as Siphonophora avenæ and Toxoptera graminum. Wheat straw worm, the wheat-joint worm. See wheat-fly. Wheat whisky, see whisky. Wheat-wireworm, see wireworm. White wheat, see def. Winter wheat, see def. (See also macaroni wheat, p. 1 (wheat).)

wheat-bird (hwēt'bėrd), n. The chaffinch or whitetail bird. [Local, British.]

wheat-brush (hwēt'brush), n. In milling, a grain-scouring machine. It consists essentially of two brushes, one a conical disk placed close together in a hopper, the brush remaining stationary, and the other revolving rapidly so that grain is delivered between them. The grain is acted on by the periphery of the brushes by centrifugal force, and falls into a chamber beneath, whence the dust is removed by a suction-blast. E. H. Knight.

wheat-bug (hwēt'bug), n. Either one of two bugs, Micrelytra fossularum and Microhabrus gibbosus, found commonly on wheat in England. Curtis, Farm Insects.

wheat-caterpillar (hwēt'kat'ėr-pil-ėr), n. A small caterpillar which eats the kernels of wheat in the field; supposed to be Isopteryx cursoria. T. H. Harris.

wheat-chafer (hwēt'chā'fėr), n. A beetle, Anisoplia australis, which does great damage to European wheat-fields, particularly those of Russia.

wheat-cracker (hwēt'krak'ėr), n. A mill for cracking wheat to make grits.

wheat-drill (hwēt'dril), n. See drill[1], n., 3.

wheat-duck (hwēt'duk), n. The American widgeon, Mareca americana, found in large flocks in wheat-fields. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Oregon.]

wheat-ear (hwēt'ēr), n. [< wheat + ear[2].] An ear of wheat.

Gold flashed out from the wheat-ear brown,
And flame from the poppy's deal. Rhoda Cook.

Wheat-ear stitch, in embroidery, a fancy stitch; a variety of chain-stitch by which is produced a pattern somewhat like two nibbling ears of grain with stiff beard.

wheatear (hwēt'ēr), n. [A corruption, simulating wheat + ear[2], also used in the form whiteear, with the first element unaltered), of whiteare, or rather of its earlier form whiterse* (taken as a plural, whence the supposed singular wheatear) — so called from its white rump, < white + arse. The name is equiv. to whitetail, formerly whittail, and the F. name cul blanc.] A chat of the genus Saxicola, Saxicola œnanthe, the stonechat, fallow finch, or whitetail, an oscine passerine bird abundant in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and found sparingly in North America. The wheatear is 6¼ inches long, and 12¾ in extent; it varies much in plumage with sex, age, and season. The adult male in summer has the upper parts French gray, with conspicuous white rump and white base of the black tail; the under parts are buff shade of buff, often whitish;

the wings are blackish; a broad glossy-black bar on the side of the head includes the eyes, and is surmounted by a white stripe; the bill and feet are black, the eyes dark-brown. The female is brownish darkest on the upper parts, with wings and tail like those of the male; the young resemble the female, but are spotty. The nest is made on the ground, the eggs are four to seven, green ish-blue, usually spotless sometimes faintly speckled. The wheatear shares with both the British species of Pratincola the name stonechat, which is more appropriate to this bird than to either of the fruitchats. It is more fully specified as white-rumped stonechat, and also called white rump, whitetail, stone-clatter (from its Gaelic name clacha ean, which survives in Scotland and in books), fallow finch, and by other local names.

Wheatear (Saxicola œnanthe)

What cook of any spirit would lose her time in picking larks, wheat-ears, and other small birds?
Swift, Directions to Servants (Cook).

Although the wheatear's colors are somewhat chaste, still their bold contrast and the manner in which they are distributed, make the bird a very pretty one.
Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I. 301.

wheat-eel (hwēt'ēl), n. [Appar. < wheat + eel, but perhaps a dial. form of wheat-evil*, < wheat + evil.] Ear-cockle or purples, a disease of wheat caused by the eel worm, Tylenchus tritici.

wheaten (hwē'tn), a. [< ME. whetten, hweten, hwæten, < AS. hwæten (= MD. weten, D. weede (meel) = G. weizen (brod)), < hwæte, wheat, + -en, E. *-en*².] Of, pertaining to, or made from wheat: as, wheaten straw. Specifically (a) Made of the stalks straw or husks of wheat.

There wayted summer naked starke all sane a wheaten hat.
Gotfoot (tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., i).

Peace should still her wheaten garland wear.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 61.

(b) Made of the grain or flour of wheat.

More hi uyat smok [she finds more relish] in ane zoure epple thanne in ane hwetene [brown] loaf.
Ancrene Riwle (E. E. T. S.), p. 82.

Of wheaten flour shall thou make them [cakes and wafers].
Ex. xxix. 2.

His diet was of wheaten bread.
Cowper, Epitaph on a Hare.

wheat-field (hwēt'fēld), n. A field of wheat.

wheat-fly (hwēt'flī), n. 1. Any one of several flies of the family Oscinidæ, common upon wheat in Europe and North America, as Oscinis frit, Chlorops taniopus, and C. lineata.—2. The Hessian fly.—3. The wheat-midge.—4. Improperly, a wheat plant louse in the winged form. Compare greenfly, 2.—5. The wheat gall-

Wheat Gall-fly (Isosoma hordei)

a, wheat stalks with galls; b, female fly; c, one of the larvæ. All enlarged.

fly, a variety of Isosoma hordei, whose larva is the wheat joint-worm. See joint-worm, 2.

wheat-grader (hwēt'grā'dėr), n. In milling, a machine for cleaning, separating, and grading wheat according to the size and shape of the grains; a grain- or wheat-separator. E. H. Knight.

wheat-grass (hwēt'gras), n. The couch- or quitch-grass, Agropyrum repens; also, any wild grass of the genus Agropyrum or Triticum.

wheatland (hwēt'land), n. Land sown with wheat.

Beyond the wheatlands in the northern plains.
A. Lang man, The Academy, Nov. 22, 1890, p. 395.

wheat-maggot (hwēt'mag'ot), n. The larva of any one of the dipterous insects affecting the wheat-plant.

wheat-midge (hwēt'mij), n. 1. A dipterous insect of the family Cecidomyidæ, Diplosis tritici, which lays its eggs in the flowers of wheat-heads, and whose minute reddish larvæ devour the kernels. It is originally a European insect, but has been imported into the United States and Canada. The larva is known in England as the red maggot.—2. A dipterous insect, Lasioptera obfuscata Lucas, Dict.

wheat-mildew (hwēt'mil'dū), n. A name applied in England to the common rust (Puccinia graminis), found on various grasses, and especially on wheat and oats. In the United States it is applied to Erysiphe graminis, a true powdery mildew.

wheat-mite (hwēt'mīt), n. Same as flour-mite.

wheat-moth (hwēt'môth), n. One of several small moths whose larvæ devour stored wheat, as the Angoumois grain-moth (Sitotroga cerealella), the Indian meal moth (Ephestia interpunctella), the Mediterranean flour-moth (Ephestia kühniella), or the wolf-moth (Tinea granella).

wheat-pest (hwēt'pest), n. A dipterous insect, the fruit fly, Oscinis vastator.

wheat-riddle (hwēt'rid'l), n. A grain- or wheat-separator.

wheat-rust (hwēt'rust), n. Same as red rust and black rust: see both, under rust.

wheat-scourer (hwēt'skour'ėr), n. In milling, a cleaning-machine which receives the grain as passed from the smutter, and removes any hairs or loose parts of the outer bran. The bran consists of a stiff brush with a grooved burrstone revolving against it below, the wheat passing between the two. E. H. Knight.

wheatsel-bird (hwēt'sel-bėrd), n. The chaffinch, Fringilla cœlebs: so called from its congregating in autumn about the time of sowing wheat. J. H. Gurney. See cut under chaffinch. [Norfolk, Eng.]

wheat-separator (hwēt'sep'a-rā-tor), n. An apparatus for freeing wheat from mustard-seed, cockle-grass-seed, etc. The grain is made to pass over a series of inclined plates pierced with holes which allow the passage of the smaller seeds but retain the wheat. E. H. Knight.

Wheatstone bridge. See resistance, 3.

wheat-thief (hwēt'thēf), n. The corn-gromwell or bastard alkanet, Lithospermum arvense, a grain-field weed of Europe and parts of Asia, introduced in North America.

wheat-thrips (hwēt'thrips), n. Any one of several species of thrips found abundantly upon wheat, and commonly supposed to injure the wheat-ands as Thrips cerealium of Europe, and Limothrips cerealium and L. graminum of the United States.

wheat weevil (hwēt'wē'vl), n. 1. The grain-weevil.—2. The rice-weevil. See also Calandra, 2, and weevil.

wheat-worm (hwēt'wėrm), n. Same as wheat eelworm (which see, under wheat).

wheaze, v. An old spelling of wheeze.

wheder, pron. An old spelling of whether.

wheedle (hwē'dl), v.; pret. and pp. wheedled, ppr. wheedling. [Formerly wheadle; perhaps for needle*, < G. wedeln, wag the tail, fan (hence fawn, flatter?), < wedel, a fan, tail, brush, MHG. wedelwadel, OHG. wedilwadal, fan, winnowing-fan, fig. instrument for blowing, with formative -del-thalo-, < OHG. wehan, MHG. G. wehen, blow: see *wind*¹. Similar processes occur with Dan. bøire, wag the tail also fawn upon one; with Icel. fatra, wag the tail, fawn upon, with (f)eastr, wag the tail, etc. It is not clear how a G. word of this kind could get into E., but the German wave of the 14th century brought in a number of words and this may have been taken up as a slang term. Some refer wheedle to W. chwedlu, talk, gossip, < chwedl, a fable, story, discourse, but the resemblance is superficial.] I. trans. 1. To entice, cajole, or coax by soft words, gain over by cozening and flattery, engage by any flattery, humor, or fondness.

I ate up the Impudent . . . Coxcomb never Have had the Face to have wheadled the poor Knight so, . . . there, or, the Would I'd She could, . . .

And so go to bed, began the cunning quean wheedle her, jest with her, and to better acquaintance with the other.
Richardson, Pamela, Wife, II. 3.

I am not the first that he has wheadled with his dissembling Tongue.
Congreve, Way of the World, v. 1.

It is probably the best Conduct not to hear away Questioning, till you have wheedled the Enemy into your Wake.
W. Hamilton, Seaman's Vade Mecum (ed. 1761), p. 120.

2. To gain or procure by flattery or coaxing.

I have . . . a deed of settlement of the best part of her estate, which I wheedled out of her.
Congreve, Way of the World, iii.

II. intrans. To flatter; coax.

His business was to pamp and wheedle.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. iii. 333.

If that wheedling Villain has wrought upon Foible to betray me, I'm ruined.
Congreve, Way of the World, iii. 4.

In a fawning, wheedling tone.
C. Kingsley, Hypatia, iv.

wheedle (hwē'dl), n. [< wheedle, v.] 1. One who wheedles; a cajoling or coaxing person.

Hyp. Methinks you might believe me without an oath. You saw I could discourse with my father, why should you think I could not with you?
Ger. So young a wheedle!
Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing-Master, iv. 1.

2. A piece of cajolery; a flattering or coaxing speech; a hoax.

Why hast thou lost all Sense of Modesty?
Dost thou think to pass these gross wheedles on me too?
Otway, She Would it She Could, I. 1.

wheedler (hwē'dler), n. [< wheedle + *-er*¹.] One who wheedles.

wheedlesome (hwē'dl-sum), a. [< wheedle + -some.] Coaxing; cajoling. [Rare.]

Anything more irresistibly a wheedlesome I never saw.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, etc., p. 88.

wheedling (hwē'dling), n. [Verbal n. of wheedle, v.] The act or art of coaxing, cajoling, or deluding by flattery.

He wrote several small pieces, viz. "The English Rogue," "The Art of Wheedling," &c.
Aubrey, Lives (Marlton).

wheel¹ (hwēl), n. [< ME. wheel, whele, whel, whoel, quel, huel, hwe[e]l, hweol, < AS. hweol, hwéol, contr. of hweowol, hweohl (= MD. weel, wiel, D. wiel = LG. wevel, wel = Icel. hvél = OSw. hiul, Sw. hjul = Dan. hjul, a wheel); Teut. appar. hwehwla*, hwehwlo*, perhaps < Gr. κύκλος, a wheel, circle: see cycle.] The leel, heel, orb, disk, can hardly be related.] 1. A circular frame or solid disk turning on an axis. Wheels, as applied to vehicles, usually consist of a nave, into which are inserted spokes or radii connecting it with the periphery or circular rim. (See car wheel (with cut), also cuts under carriage and felly.) Wheels are most important agents in machinery, being employed in a variety of forms and combinations for a great variety of purposes as for transmitting motion, regulating velocity, converting one species of motion into another, reducing friction, equalizing the effect of forces applied in an intermittent or irregular manner, etc.

The carter over-ryden with his carte,
Under the whel ful lowe he lay adoun.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale (ed. Morris), I. 1165.

Sir, I went the whip round, went the wheels,
Were never folks so glad;
The stones did rattle underneath,
As if Cheapside were mad.
Cowper, John Gilpin.

2. Any instrument, apparatus, machine, or other object shaped like a wheel, or the essential feature of which is a wheel: as, a mill-wheel, a spinning-wheel, or a potters' wheel.

Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.
Jer. xviii. 3.

Thus, in lower life whilst the wheel, the needle, &c., imploy her, the plough of some trade perhaps demands the muscles and hardiness of him.
W. Wollaston, Religion of Nature, viii. 1.

Turn, turn, my wheel! This earthen jar
A touch can make, a touch can mar.
Longfellow, Keramos.

The mealsacks on the whitened floor,
The dark round of the dripping wheel.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

(a) Naut., a circular frame with handles projecting from the periphery, and an axle on which are wound the ropes or chains which connect with the rudder for steering a ship: a steering-wheel. Where a ship is steered by steam, to place one or more small wheels on board, by turning which steam is admitted to the engines which turn the barrel on which the wheel-rope is wound. (b) An instrument of torture. See to break on the wheel, under break.

He lifted me the agonizing wheel, . . .
Like a bent crown, and bruised a head of steel.
Goldsmith, Traveller, l. 433.

(c) A firework of a circular shape which revolves on an axis, while bursting by the reaction of the escaping gases. See catharine wheel, and pinwheel, 2. (d) Figuratively, a carriage; a chariot. [Poetical.]

How now, quoth Pompey! What, at the wheels of Cæsar? art thou led in triumph?
Shak., M. for M., III. 2. 97.

Earth, heaven, Jove! Hence empty courts,
And thee returning on thy silver wheels.
Tennyson, Tithonus.

(e) One of the attributes of Fortune, the emblem of mutability.

Because the heedful lap-dog of fortune hath hire hue of it's wont turned to the maime.
Ancrene Riwle (E. E. T. S.), p. 24.

Now am my vertie Fortunes wheele,
My heedie forsaken me Euerychon.
Hymne to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 73.

The next turn of the wheel gave the victory to Edward IV.
J. Gairdner, Richard III., I.

(f) A bicycle or a tricycle. [Colloq.]

A plucky long man with a fifty-six inch wheel, who crowned his effort with the difficult performance of bringing his machine to a stand still before dismounting, and holding it so for several minutes. The Century, XLI. 464

(g) In zool. (1) The characteristic organ of a wheel-animalcule, the frontal disk of a rotifer, a wheel-organ (which see). See cuts under Rotifer, Rotifera, and trochal. (2) Some discoid or wheel-shaped calcareous or siliceous concretion, as of an echinoderm or a sponge, a wheel-spicule.

3. A circular course or motion; a whirling round; a revolution; rotation; also, a wheeling, turning, or bending.

The heed, withouten fayle,
Is lo, the metal of Saturne,
That hath a ful large wheel to turne
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 943.

Satan, bowing low
Throws his steep flight in many an aery wheel
Milton, P. L., iii. 41.

4. A motive power; in the plural, machinery; hence, a principle of life or motion.

The wheels of weary life at last stood still Dryden and Lee, Œdipus, iv. 1.

That power who bids the ocean ebb and flow,
Bids life on death, or change on change bestow,
And gives the eternal wheels to know their rounds
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 168.

When ... the heart is sick
And all the wheels of Being slow Tennyson, In Memoriam, I.

5†. The burden of a song; a refrain; perhaps in allusion to its regular recurrence. Shak.

Oph. [Sings.] You must sing a-down a-down,
An you call him a-down-a.
O, how the wheel becomes it!
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5, 177.

6. A factory for grinding cutlery. [Prov. Eng.]

This branch of trade [cutlery grinding] is, in Sheffield, conducted in distinct establishments called wheels.
Encyc. Brit., VI. 631.

7. A dollar. Farts. [Thieves' jargon.] 8. In embroidery and fancy needlework, an opening, not necessarily circular, filled with radiating bars or bridles of thread. It is a common form of decoration for collars and similar washable garments. Sometimes the radiating lines are interspersed with loops festoons, and the like, or are of different lengths, so that a part of the opening will be filled with more bands than another part, producing diversity of pattern.

9. See wind[5], 11. Adhesion of wheels to rails. See adhesion. Aerohydrodynamic wheel. See aero-hydrodynamic. Bastard wheel. See bastard. Big wheel. Same as drag-wheel. See spanning wheel. Blank wheel, a wheel having no teeth. Cardiac wheel. See cardiac. Center-discharge wheel, a turbine in which the water enters from the chute to the periphery of the buckets, passes inward, and is discharged at the center, about the axis. Chilled wheel. See chill. Eccentric wheel. See eccentric. Elliptical wheel. Same as elliptical gearing (which see, under gearing). Engaged wheels. See engaged. Epicycloidal wheel. See epicycloidal, with cut. Fifth wheel. (a) In mech. See fifth. (b) Figuratively, something superfluous or useless. Foundling wheel, a cylindrical box revolving on an upright axis, placed in an aperture in the door or wall of a foundling asylum. It enables any person to confide an infant to the care of the asylum without being seen.

The custom of tour [turn] à roue still exists in [some] of the communes being frequent in the Neapolitan provinces and Sicily. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 449, note.

Impulse-wheel, a form of turbine-wheel which delivers by the impulse of a jet. Intermittent, internal, lapidary wheel. See the adjectives. Large wheel. See spinning-wheel. Long wheel, a workman's name for a grindstone driven by a belt and a hand-wheel, and used in dilute acid. Mansell wheel, a rubber wheel in which the hub is composed of two wrought-iron rings bolted together. Car Builder's Dict. Middle shot wheel, in hydraul., a breast-wheel which receives the water at about the middle of its height. See cut under breast-wheel. Multiple wheel, a toothed wheel. Multiplying wheel, a form of multiplying screw-gear, a spiral wheel for converting slower motion of and more rapid movement. Compare cut under friction-gear. Mutilated wheel. See mutilated, with cut. Non-circular wheel, a wheel having a portion which is not circular, but is elliptical, scroll-shaped, lopsided, etc. Two such wheels are employed to transmit the varying velocity of a simple rotation between a pair of parallel axes. E. H. Knight. Persian wheel, a water-lifting wheel; a bucket-wheel or noria; an apparatus in which buckets pass over a chamber and are emptied by a radial pouring-out trough. A large wheel, which by its revolution dips the buckets in the water, fills them, and raises each in turn to empty it and on another level. Used especially for irrigating. Compare cut under noria. Pitch back wheel, a form of water-wheel in which the water before descending over the buckets is received at an angle with forward motion in the flume, a bucket or vessel in which the water supplies to the top of the wheel. Potters' wheel. See potter[1], with cut. Savart's wheel, an acoustical instrument consisting of a toothed wheel which can be rapidly rotated so as to strike as many as 8,000 puffs per second, the velocity and number of which can be accurately determined from the number of the revolutions. (The wheel compare even (with cut). Saxon wheel. See spinning-wheel. Skew wheel. See skew, 8. Small wheel. See spinning-wheel. Spiral wheels, in mech., a form of gearing in which the teeth are formed upon the circumference of cylinders of the required diameter at an angle with their respective axes. By this construction the teeth become in fact small parts of screws or spirals winding round the cylinders (whence the name). Wheels of this kind are often used when the two shafts require to pass each other. When two shafts are in the same plane bevel-wheels are employed. Split wheel. See split gear, under split. Sun-and-planet wheels. See sun[1]. To break a butterfly (fly, etc.) upon a (the) wheel, to subject one to a punishment out of all proportion to the gravity of the offense and the importance of the offender; hence, to employ great means or exertions for the attainment of trifling ends.

Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel,
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 308.

He was sorry ... for the excellent people, and deplored the necessity of breaking a butterfly upon the wheel.
Dickens, Little Dorrit, II. 21.

To break upon the wheel. See break. Toothed wheels. See toothed. To put a spoke in one's wheel. See spoke[1]. To put one's shoulder to the wheel. See shoulder. To slack over the wheel. See slack[1]. To steer a trick at the wheel. See steer[1]. Undershot wheel. See undershot. Variable-speed wheels. See crumble. Waved wheel, in mech., a friction-wheel having a waved or convoluted surface, and imparting a reciprocating motion to a cam or lever pressing against its side. E. H. Knight. Wheel and axle, one of the mechanical powers, consisting in its primary form of a cylindrical axle on which a wheel concentric with the axle, is firmly fastened. A rope is usually attached to the wheel, the axle is turned by means of a lever, and the rope acts on the pulley; that is, also upon the principle of the lever. Wheel barometer, a modification of the siphon barometer. See barometer. Wheel couching. See couching[1]. Wheel crossbow, a crossbow in which the bow is bent by the revolutions of a wheel acting as a windlass. See cut under windlass. Wheel-cutting machine. (a) A gear-cutting machine. (b) A device for dividing a circle into any number of equal parts. E. H. Knight. Wheel-facing machine, a machine with adjustable cutters and rolls for facing the sides of wheels, making the felloes of uniform thickness and forming a bevel. E. H. Knight. Wheel-finishing machine, a form of slotting machine for planing off the inner face of locomotive-wheel tires. The cutter is carried at the end of a vibrating lever. Wheel of life. See zoetrope. Wheel press, in the manufacture of locomotives and railway cars, a powerful screw-press or hydraulic press by which wheels are forced on to turned bearings of axles with a frictional binding stress sufficient to hold them in place firmly without keys, set-screws, or other holding devices. Wheels within wheels, a complication of circumstances, motives, influences, etc. Compare Ezek. i. 16.

It was notorious that after this secretary retired, the king's affairs went backwards . . . wheels within wheels took place.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 62.

Wheel tax. See tax. Wire wheel, a brush-wheel made of wire instead of bristles, used for cleaning and scratching metals preparatory to gilding or silvering. E. H. Knight. See also breast-wheel, bull-wheel, catharine-wheel, cog-wheel, crown-wheel, dial-wheel, flame-wheel, measuring-wheel, punch-wheel, etc.

wheel[1] (hwēl), v. [< ME. whelen, wheolen, hweolen, < wheel[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To cause to turn, or to move in a circle; make to rotate, revolve, or change direction.

So had he seen, in fair Castile
The youth in gilded sandals start
Suddenly the flying jennet wheel,
And hurl the unexpected dart.
Scott, L. of L. M., ii. 8.

He . . . gradually wheeled his broad desk down into the west.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 458.

The Sun thus forward to his brother Sun,
The dark Earth follows wheel'd in her ellipse,
And hand in hand on noiseless axles flown
Move onward, leading up the golden year.
Tennyson, Golden Year.

. . . to wheel the wild scamper of the cattle at the yard.
With a running fire of cock-whips and a fiery run of hoofs.
Contemporary Rev., LII. 405.

2. To convey on wheels or in a vehicle mounted on wheels.

You shall . . . not be ride a-pesta-horse, . . . wheel her down to Stratford.
Thomas Jenkins, Wife.

. . . Mr. Rochester . . . said her ladyship . . . "They will [have to] . . . wheel her again, a-bed," her way from the house to the carriage, a-dozen.
R. C. de Morgan, Weaker Vessel, xxviii.

3. To make or perform in a circle; give a circular direction or form to.

Now I see you're all her glory alone, and rolled Her necessities as the great first Mover a hand
. . . wheel'd them on.
Walter, P. I., viii. 93.

The silvered kite
In many a whistling circle wheels her flight.
Wordsworth, An Evening Walk.

4. To provide with a wheel or wheels: as, to wheel a cart. Imp. Dict. — 5. To cause to move or go as on wheels; rotate; cause to turn: as, to wheel a rank of soldiers.

Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round.
Cowper, Task, iv. 37.

6†. To turn on a wheel.

Fortune on lofte
And under eft gan new to wheelen lothe.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 139.

7. In tanning, to submit to the action of a pin-wheel. See pinwheel, 2.

The skins next go into the England wheel vat . . . and are wheeled.
C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 530.

8. To shape by means of the wheel, as in pottery. See potters' wheel (under potter[1]), and throw[1], v. t., 2. — 9. To break upon the wheel. See break.

II. intrans. 1. To turn on or as on an axis or about a center; rotate; revolve.

His glory found
Then first Mobile,
Which mak'st all wheel
In circle round.
Howell, Letters, I. v. 11.

The moon . . . not once wheeling upon her own center.
Bentley.

2. To change direction of course, as if moving on a pivot or center.

As he to flight his wheeling car address'd,
The speedy javelin drove from back to breast.
Pope, Iliad, v. 36.

Steady! steady! the masses of men
Wheel and fall in, and wheel again,
Softly as circles drawn with pen.
Leigh Hunt, Captain Sword and Captain Pen, ii.

3. To move in a circular or spiral course.

Then wheeling down the steep of heaven he flies.
Pope.

The pass-gold fish eternally wheeling round his crystal wall.
De Quincey, Secret Societies, ii.

The swallow wheeled above high up in air.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 15.

4. To take a circular course; return upon one's steps; hence, to wander; go out of the straight way.

Spies of the Volsces Held me for a man that I was forced to wheel
Three or four miles about: else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.
Shak., Cor., I. 6. 19.

5. To travel smoothly; go at a round pace; trundle along; roll forward.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend the Egyptian sky
And wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls.
Milton, P. L., xii. 183.

Through the rough copse wheel thou with hasty stride;
I choose to wander over the grassy plain.
Wordsworth, River Duddon, xxx.

6. To move on wheels; specifically, to ride a bicycle or tricycle; travel by means of a bicycle or tricycle. [Colloq.]

The sun, bold not to the sweet air shone on the fields and woods, on the ugly barracks and pretty cottages by which we wheel'd.
A. and J. Powell, Canterbury Pilgrimage on a [Tricycle.

7. To change or reverse one's opinion or course of action; frequently with about.

Being able to advance no further, they are in a fair way to wheel about to the other extreme.
South.

Flat and Aristocrat were at a losse,
And wheel'd about again, to spell Christ Crosse.
G. Herbert, The Temple, The Church Militant.

wheel[1], n. An old spelling of wheal[1].

wheel[2], n. See wheal[2].

wheel[3], (hwēl), n. An erroneous dialectal form of weir.

wheelage (hwē'laj), n. [< wheel[1] + -age.] A duty or toll paid for carts, etc., passing over certain ground.

wheel-animal (hwēl'an'i-mal), n. A wheel-animalcule.

wheel-animalcule (hwēl'an-i-mal'kūl), n. A rotifer. See Rotifera (with cut), also cuts under Lecanidæ, Rotifer, and trochal.

wheel-band (hwēl'band), n. The tire of a wheel.

The chariot-tree was drowned in blood and th' arches by the coast
Impair'd from the horses' heads and from the wheel-bands.
Chapman, Iliad, xi. 606.

wheel-barometer (hwēl'ba-rom'e-tėr), n. See barometer.

wheelbarrow (hwēl'bar'ō), n. [< ME. wheelbarwe, < wheel[1] + barrow[2].] A barrow with one wheel, or more, on which it runs. The most common kind has one wheel in front and two legs at the rear, on which it rests, and two handles by which a person lifts it from the ground and carries a part of the load, while in pushes forward the vehicle on the wheel. Especial railroad barrows have two and often three or four wheels, only a small part of the load or none of it being carried by the person using the barrow, or truck, as it is more commonly called. Barrows of this class are commonly made with the wheels toward the middle and handles at each end for convenience in using on narrow steamboat-landings and station-platforms.

A carrela . . . a wheel-barrow.
Florio.

My author saith he saw some sixteen or twenty carpenters at work upon an engine, or carriage, for six muskets, manageable by one man, and to be crowded before him like a wheelbarrow upon wheels.
Court and Times of Charles I., II. 87.

wheel-base (hwēl'bās), n. In locomotives and railway-cars, the distance between the points of contact of the front and back wheels with the rail.

The distance between the supporting wheels is four feet, which thus forms the rigid wheel-base of the truck.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXI. 201.

wheel-bearer (hwēl'bār'ėr), n. A rotifer or wheel-animalcule.

The little wheel-bearer, Rotifer vulgaris.
Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 302.

wheel-bird (hwēl'bėrd), n. The night-jar or goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus: so named from its chirring cry, likened to the noise of a spinning-wheel. Also spinner and wheeler. Compare like use of reeler, 2, and see cuts under goatsucker and night-jar. [Local, Scotland.]

wheel-boat (hwēl'bōt), n. A boat with wheels, to be used either on water or upon inclined planes or railways.

wheel-box (hwēl'boks), n. A box inclosing a wheel, either to lessen the noise of its action or for purposes of safety.

wheel-bug (hwēl'bug), n. A large reduvioid bug, Prionidus cristatus, common throughout the southern United States, having a semicircular toothed thoracic crest like a cogged wheel. It is predaceous, and destroys great numbers of injurious insects, such as willow slugs, web-worms, cut-worms, and cotton-caterpillars. Also called devil's riding-horse.

Wheel bug (Prionidus cristatus; female, natural size)

wheel-carriage (hwēl'kar'āj), n. A carriage moved on wheels, as a coach, chaise, gig, railway-car, wagon, cart, etc.

wheel-case (hwēl'kās), n. In pyrotechnics, a case made of stout paper, filled with a composition, and tied to the rim of a wheel or other revolving pyrotechnic device, to which it gives a rapid movement of rotation while it burns with a brilliant flame.

wheel-chain (hwēl'chān), n. A chain used for the same purpose as a wheel-rope.

wheel-chair (hwēl'chār), n. A chair or chair-like structure mounted on wheels; a Bath chair; an invalid's chair.

wheel-colter (hwēl'kōl'tėr), n. See colter.

wheel-cross (hwēl'krôs), n. A variety of the ring-cross, in which a small circle occupies the center of the larger one, the arms of the cross radiating from it. The name wheel cross has been founded upon a supposed intentional resemblance to a wheel, and the sun-carriage. Worsaae, Danish Arts, p. 92.

wheel-cultivator (hwēl'kul'ti-vā-tor), n. In agri., a form of cultivator supported on wheels.

wheel-cut (hwēl'kut), a. Cut, as glass, by the ordinary process of glass-cutting, which leaves a perfectly polished and perfectly transparent surface. Car-Builder's Dict.

wheel-cutting (hwēl'kut'ing), n. The process or operation of cutting teeth in the wheels used by watch- and clock makers and for other mechanical purposes.

wheel-draft (hwēl'draft), n. In steam-engines, a continuous draft or current of smoke and hot air passing around in one direction, as distinguished from a direct, a reverting, or a split draft.

wheeled (hwēld), a. [< *wheel*1 + *-ed*2.] Furnished with a wheel or wheels, or with any rotating disk, rosette, or the like, as a spur of the modern type.

The wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Cæsar.
Shak. A. and C., iv. 14. 72.

The knights appear to have rejected with particular obstinacy the innovation of the wheeled spur.
Hewitt, Ancient Armour, I. p. xxii.

wheel-engraving (hwēl'en-grā'ving), n. In glass-manuf., same as glass-engraving.

wheeler (hwē'lėr), n. [< *wheel*1 + *-er*1. Hence the surname Wheeler.] 1. One who wheels.

Each gang is composed of one member, one wheeler, and one boy called an off-bearer.
C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 108.

2. A maker of wheels; a wheelwright.—3. A wheel-horse, or other animal driven in the place of one.

We saw the vehicle turn over altogether, one of the wheelers down with its rider, and the leaders kicking.
Thackeray, Philip, xiii.

4. A worker of wheelwork on sewed muslin. Imp. Dict.—5. That which is provided with a wheel or wheels: used in composition: as, a stern-wheeler; a side-wheeler.

The fast eight-wheelers have the Westinghouse automatic brake on drivers and tender.
The Engineer, LXIX. 389.

6. Same as wheel-lord. [Prov. Eng.]—Near (or nigh) wheeler, the horse (or mule) on the left-hand side (often ridden). Off wheeler, the horse (or mule) on the right-hand side, that one which the driver never rides.

wheelerite (hwē'lėr-īt), n. [Named after Lieut. G. M. Wheeler, U. S. A.] A fossil resin found in New Mexico.

wheel-fire (hwēl'fīr), n. In chem., a fire which encompasses a crucible without touching it.

wheel-fixing (hwēl'fik'sing), n. See fixing, 3.

wheel-guard (hwēl'gärd), n. 1. A circular guard for a sword or dagger. Hewitt, Ancient Armour, II. 258.—2. In a vehicle, a hood to protect the axle from mud, and prevent mud from entering between the axle-box and the spindle; a cutter-plate, dirt-board, or round-robin.—Wheel-guard plate, in a vehicle and also on an artillery carriage one of the iron plates fixed on either side of the box or the stock to prevent chafing by the wheels in turning: a rub-iron. E. H. Knight. See cut under gun-carriage.

wheel-head (hwēl'hed), n. In seal-engraving, the little head of a seal engravers' engine.

wheel-hoe (hwēl'hō), n. A form of hand cultivator consisting of a frame mounted on wheels, and carrying one or a number of blades serving as hoes.

wheel-horse (hwēl'hôrs), n. A horse harnessed next to the fore wheel of a vehicle—that is, attached to the pole or shafts—as in a four-in-hand or a tandem; hence, figuratively, a person who bears the brunt, or on whom the burden mostly rests.

In the next room Postman and Kilbanns and Rapheles guns pushed like wheel-horses in dragging obscure texts out of the muddy roads in which copyists and compositors had left them. The Century, XXXVI. 945.

When next . . . offices are to be filled, we desire such men as he, and not old political hacks and wheel-horses should fill them. The Nation, XIII. 76.

wheel house (hwēl'hous), n. Naut., same as pilot-house.

Wheelhouse's operation for stricture. See operation.

wheeling (hwē'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wheel, v.] 1. The act of traveling or of conveying a load on wheels, or in a wheeled vehicle.

The sleighing is not as good as it was, and the state of the streets admits a wheeling. Upper Ten Thousand, II.

2. Specifically, the act or practice of riding on a bicycle or a tricycle. [Colloq.]

Wheeling bridge cable. See cable.

wheel-jack (hwēl'jak), n. 1. A lifting jack having a projection to catch under the tire of a wheel.—2. An apparatus of which the lifting bar is a cogged rack, worked by a pinion and hand-crank.

wheel jointer (hwēl'join'tėr), n. A machine for truing joints of staves, heading, etc. L. H. Knight.

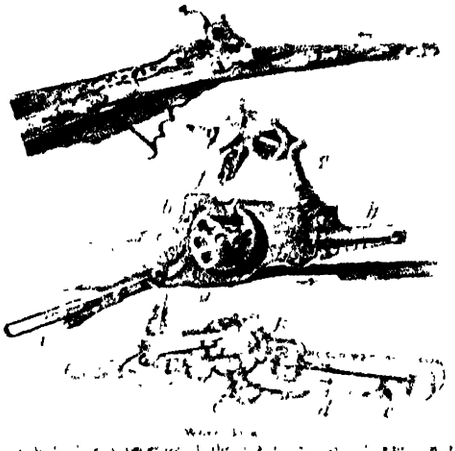
wheel-lathe (hwēl'lāтн), n. A power lathe for turning railway-wheels and similar large work.

Double wheel lathe, a wheel lathe so made that it can work upon a pair of wheels without removing them from the axle.



Wheel-lathe.

a, a, the wheels; b, b, the axle; c, c, the bearings; d, d, the ways; e, e, the slides; f, f, the tool-posts; g, g, the tools; h, the face-plate; i, the driving-pulley; k, the fast pulley; l, the loose pulley; m, the driving-belt; n, the shifting-lever; o, the feed-motion; p, the feed-screw; q, the feed-nut; r, the feed-rod; s, the feed-lever; t, the feed-pulley; u, the feed-belt; v, the feed-cone; w, the feed-cone belt; x, the screw-cutting gear; y, the screw-cutting belt; z, the screw-cutting cone.

wheel-lock (hwēl'lok), n. 1. A lock for firing a gun by means of the friction of a small steel wheel against a piece of sulphuret of iron (pyrites). The wheel was turned by a spring, which was released by a trigger, or tricker, and wound up again by means of a spanner. See cut in preceding column, and cut under pistol.

2. A combination lock or letter-lock.—3. A form of brake; a wagon-lock.

wheelman (hwēl'man), n.; pl. wheelmen (-men). 1. The man at the wheel of a vessel; a steersman.—2. One who uses a bicycle, tricycle, or similar conveyance. [Recent.]

In the parades the costumes of the wheelmen seemed not so much out of place. The Century, XIX. 498.

wheel-ore (hwēl'ōr), n. A variety of bournonite in compound crystals resembling a cog-wheel.

wheel-organ (hwēl'ôr'gan), n. The characteristic organ of the wheel animalcules or rotifers, formed by the anterior part of the body: so called from the movement of its cilia. It represents the prostomium, in the adult of a primitive circlet of cilia of embryonic worms, etc. (See trochosphere, trochosphere and cuts under Rotifera, Rotifera, trochal, and velum.

wheel-pit (hwēl'pit), n. 1. A pit inclosed by the piers which support a large fly-wheel or driving-wheel, affording the requisite space for the motion of the wheel.—2. A whirlpool. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wheel-plate (hwēl'plāt), n. In a plate car-wheel of the web, or the part uniting the rim and the hub.

wheel-plow (hwēl'plou), n. See plow.

wheel-race (hwēl'rās), n. The part of a race in which a water-wheel is fixed.

wheel-rib (hwēl'rib), n. A projection cast usually on the inner side of plate car-wheels to strengthen them. Car Builder's Dict.

wheel-rope (hwēl'rōp), n. A rope leading from the wheel or steering engine to the tiller, by which motion is given by the helmsman to the tiller and consequently to the rudder. Chains are sometimes used for this purpose.

wheel-seat (hwēl'sēt), n. The part of an axle which fits into the hub of a wheel; the spindle.

wheelseed (hwēl'sēd), n. See Trachomitra.

wheel shaped (hwēl'shāpt), a. Shaped like a wheel. Specifically (a) In bot. expanding into a flat border at the top, with scarcely any tube: rotate: as, a wheel-shaped corolla. See cuts under rotate and Stapelia. (b) In zoöl. rotate: rotular: discoid: as, the wheel-shaped spicules of holothurians. Wheel shaped bodies, plates, or spicula, certain calcareous formations in the skin of many echinoderms, wheel spicules. They are circular disks with the appearance of spokes radiating from a hub to the rim. See cut under Holothuroidea.

wheelsman (hwēlz'man), n.; pl. wheelsmen (-men). A steersman or helmsman.

The wheelsman of a steamer. Sci. Amer. Supp., LIV. 9[illegible].

wheel-spicule (hwēl'spik'ūl), n. One of the wheel-shaped calcareous concretions in the skin of a holothurian. Lucas, Brit.

wheel-stitch (hwēl'stich), n. In embroidery, a stitch used in making a pattern of radiating lines crossed by an interlacing thread, etc., which begins at the center and extends as far, or nearly as far, as the ends of the radiating lines.

wheelstone (hwēl'stōn), n. A screw-stone; an entrochite, or joint of the stem of a stone-lily.

wheel swarf (hwēl'swärf), n. The material worn off the surface of a grindstone and that of the articles which are being ground in the manufactures of all kinds of cutlery, especially at Sheffield, England. It consists of siliceous particles mixed with those of more or less oxidized steel. Wheel-swarf is used in the manufacture of blister-steel, the surface of the bars of iron in the cementation pots being coated with it. The whole is heated partly fused, and [illegible] by the burning to the charcoal and bars of iron beneath.

wheel tire (hwēl'tīr), n. The iron band that [illegible] a wooden wheel. See tire.

wheel-tooth (hwēl'tōth), n. A cog.

Some persons have a mistaken impression that the object of [illegible] wheel-teeth is to make them [illegible] so as to reduce the amount of rubbing friction [illegible]. Ure Dict., in Weisbach and Bella, p. 274.

wheel tree (hwēl'trē), n. Same as paddle-wood.

wheel urchin (hwēl'ėr-chin), n. A flat sea-urchin, a cake-urchin, a sand-dollar.

wheelway (hwēl'wā), n. A road or space for the passage of wheeled vehicles.

Square the wheelways and upon the outer edges of the public road, where the plowshare never disputes their rights, the wall grew a parked bangle of wild flowers.
The Century, XXXVIII. 876.

wheel-window (hwēl'win'dō), n. A large circular window with tracery radiating from the middle, so that the form of a wheel is more or less closely suggested. It is practically the same as rose-window though the attempt is sometimes made to re strict the name wheel-window to examples in which straight spokes are particularly suggested. Also called catharine wheel.

Wheel-window in the north transept of Lincoln Cathedral, France (12th century)

The transept façade has sometimes a wheel window at the clerestory level as at Lincoln and sometimes it has such a window in the gable as at York and Beverley.
C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 190.

wheelwork (hwēl'wėrk), n. A combination of wheels, as in watches and clocks, in embroidery, etc.

wheel-worn (hwēl'wōrn), a. Worn by the action of moving wheels.

The chariots abounding in but wheel-worn streets.
Cowper, Expostulation, l. 74.

wheelwright (hwēl'rīt), n. [< ME. wheleriht, qwelwri, &c.; < wheel + wright.] A person who works at or with a wheel, specifically, a man whose occupation is to make wheels, wheeled carriages, etc.

A wilman of so much myȝth,
So wonder a whelwry th,
Soȝ I never with syȝth.
MS. Land. 108, fol. 236 (Rel. Antiq., II. 88).

The basket maker peeling his willow wands in the sunshine, the wheelwright putting the last touch to a blue cart with red wheels.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, Int.

Wheelwrights' machine, an adjustable machine for doing some of the various operations by which a wagon wheel is made, as boring the hubs and fellies and tenoning the spokes.

wheely (hwē'li), a. [< *wheel*1 + *-y*1.] Circular; suitable to rotation.

Give a wheely form
To the expected grinder.
J. Philips, Cider, ii.

wheen1 (hwēn), n. [Also whin, < ME. whene*, < AS. hwēne, hwene; secondary form of ME. whon, qwon, hoan, hwon, wan, < AS. hwon, adv., a little, somewhat.] A little (originally used adverbially); a small number, hence, a quantity. [Scotch.]

There will be a wheen little gowks coming to glower at the hole as lang as it is daylight.
Scott, Antiquary, xxiv.

wheen2 (hwēn), n. A dialectal form of *quean*1.

That on called the wheene of Amazonnes
Undyr whose powere that folk wonnes.
Hampole (Halliwell).

wheen-cat (hwēn'kat), n. [< *wheen*2 + *cat*1.] A queen or female cat. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wheeze (hwēz), v. t.; pret. and pp. wheezed, ppr. wheezing. [Formerly also whoze, < ME. hwesen, < AS. hwesan (pret. hwes), wheeze; perhaps akin to Icel. hvæsa = Sw. hväsa = Dan. hvæse, hiss, wheeze, and to the imitative E. words whisper, whistle. Cf. Skt. √ śvas, puff, breathe, L. queri (pp. questus), complain: see *quest*1, querulous. For the alleged connection with weasand, see weasand.] To breathe hard; puff and blow; breathe with difficulty and audibly.

Catarrhs, . . . wheezing lungs.
Sydd., I. and C., v. 1. 24.

The patient is asthmatic . . . begins to wheeze during sleep, and pants at meal when the dyspnœa becomes severe.
Quain, Med. Dict., p. 91.

wheeze (hwēz), n. [< wheeze, v.] A puffing or blowing, especially as in labored breathing.

The fat old dog on the portico gave a gentle wheeze of recognition.
The Atlantic, LXVI. 180.

wheezily (hwē'zi-li), adv. In a wheezing manner; as if with difficulty of breathing.

"The postman was a-listening," he said, wheezily; "I could see it by the way he eld 'is 'ed."
D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, xii.

wheezy (hwē'zi), a. [< wheeze + *-y*1.] Affected with or characterized by wheezing.

Fred was gratified with nearly an hour's practice of favorite airs from his "Instructor on the Flute" — a wheezy performance, into which he threw much ambition and an overpowering hopefulness.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xl.

wheft (hweft), n. Naut., an erroneous form of weft.

whelk1 (hwelk), n. [< ME. whelke, qwelke, dim. of whealk.] A wheal; a pustule; a swelling or protuberance, as on the body.

Boras, cruce, ne ollé of tartre noon,
Ne oynement that wolde clense and byte,
That him myghte helpen of his whelkes whyte.
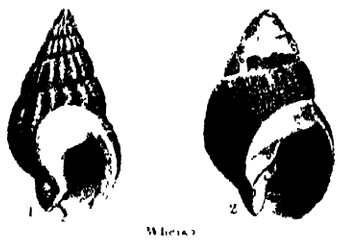
Chaucer, tr. Prol. to C. T., l. 632.

Out, Randolph, if your majesty know the man, his face is all bubukles, and whelks and knobs and flames o' fire.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 6. 108.

whelk2 (hwelk), n. [An erroneous modern form of *welk*3, < ME. welk, wilk, wylke (> Of. welke), < AS. wiloc, later weoloc, weluc, a mollusk with a spiral or convoluted shell, prob. orig. "wilc," wrælcan, roll, walk: see walk, v.] A gastropod of the family Buccinoida in a broad sense; a buccinid, or some similar univalve with a spi



Whelks.
1, Sand-collar whelk; 2, Netted whelk. (Both natural size.)

ral gibbous shell whose aperture forms a kind of spout, and whose whorls are more or less varicose or whelked. A very common whelk to which the name may have originally or especially applied is Buccinum undatum. See also cuts under Buccinum, canaliculated, ornamental, ribbon, and Sphonostomata. Also welk.

A dead table, on which are exposed . . . oysters, and divers specimens of a species of small cockles, we think they are called, floating in a somewhat bilious looking green liquid.
Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, xii.

Hot whelks, the lips' beard dripping fresh,
As if they still the water's lisp heard.
Browning, Popularity.

The whelk and barnacle are clinging to the hardened sand.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii.

Reversed whelk, Fulgur perversa. Ribbon whelk, one of the large whelks which spin out a ribbon or ruffle of egg cases, as Fulgur or Busycon carica and Sycotypus canaliculatus. Rough whelk, Urosalpinx cinerea, the borer or drill. See cut under Urosalpinx. (See also dog whelk.)

whelked (hwelkt), a. [An erroneous form of welked, early mod. E. wealked, < *whelk*2, *welk*3, + *-ed*2.] Formed like a whelk; hence, marked or covered with ridges like those of a whelk.

Horns whelk'd and wealk'd and waved like the enridged sea.
Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 71.

Look upon its (the tree's) towering expanse of branches, observe its whelked and furrowed body, and try to clasp it round.
C. S. Palmer, Word Hunter's Note-Book, iv.

whelk-tingle (hwelk'ting'gl), n. A kind of dog-whelk, Nassa reticulata, common on the English coast. See cut under dog whelk. [Eng.]

whelky1 (hwel'ki), a. [< *whelk*1 + *-y*1.] Abounding in whelks, pustules, or blisters.

Black . . . stood sunk to his chin in the snow, and laughed as heartily as any of them, his shining bald pate and whelky red face streaming with moisture and shaking with merriment.
S. Judd Margaret, I. 17.

whelky2 (hwel'ki), a. [Prop. welky, < *whelk*2, + *-y*1.] Formed like a whelk; hence, knobby; rounded.

No ought the whelky pearles esteemeth hee,
Which are from Indian seas brought far away.
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, l. 108.

whelm (hwelm), v. [< ME. whelmen, an altered form due to the influence of the different word welve, or a lost noun, whelm* for whelfm*) of whelfren, turn, overturn, cover by something turned over, overwhelm, = OS. be-hwelmian = D. welven = MHG. welben, G. wölben, arch over, cover, = Icel. hvelfa, holfa, turn upside down, = Sw. hvälfva = Dan. hvælve, arch over; associated with AS. hwealf, arched, convex, hwealf, a vault, = Icel. hvalf, holf, a vault, arch, = Sw. hvalf = Dan. hvalv, a vault, arch; cf. Gr. κόλπος, bosom, gulf (see gulf).] I. trans. 1. To throw over so as to cover. [Prov. Eng.]

I whelme an hollowe thyng over an other thyng. Jo met domus. . . . Whelme a platter upon it, to save it from flyes.
Palsgrave, p. 760.

Hill upon hill whelmed upon it [the church], nay, [it lay] like a grain of corn between the upper and lower mill-stone, ground to dust between tyrants and heretics.
Donne, Sermons, xvii.

2. To engulf; submerge; cover by immersion in something that envelops on all sides; overwhelm.

She is my prize, or ocean whelm them all.
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 148.

We perish'd, each alone,
But I beneath a rougher sea,
And whelm'd in deeper gulfs than he.
Cowper, The Cast-away.

Drawn thro' either chasm . . .
Roll'd a sea haze, and whelm'd the world in gray.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

3. Hence, to crush, ruin, or destroy by some sudden overpowering disaster.

Grievous mischiefes which a wicked Fay
Had wrought, and many whelmed in deadly paine.
Spenser, F. Q., II. ii. 43.

To whelm
All of them in one massacre.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

II. intrans. To pass or roll over so as to cover or submerge.

The waves whelm'd over him.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, I. 1.

whelp (hwelp), n. [< ME. whelp, welp, hwelp, hwelp, < AS. hwelp. OS. hwelp = D. welp = LG. welp = OHG. hwelf, welf, MHG. welf = Icel. hvelpr = OSw. hwalp, Sw. valp = Dan. hvalp, a whelp, the young of dogs, wolves, lions, and other beasts.] 1. The young of the dog, wolf, lion, tiger, bear, seal, etc., but especially of the dog; a cub: sometimes applied to the whole canine species, whether young or old.

The Lion of Iuda . . . Pride [hath] awrthe monie hwelpes.
Ancren Riwle, p. 148.

Youre rede colera, parde
Which causeth folk to traunen in here dremes . . .
Of grete beres, that they wol hem byte,
Of contek, and of whelpes grete and lyte.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 112.

A bear robbed of her whelps.
? Sam. xvii. 8.

The sow of Albani that she did litter here,
A freckled-whelp hag-born.
Shak., Tempest, I. 2. 283.

Both mongrel, puppy, whelp, and hound,
And curs of low degree.
Goldsmith, Elegy on Death of a Mad Dog.

2. A youth; a cub; a puppy: a term of contempt.

On one of the back benches . . . sat the villainous whelp sulks to the last, whom he had the misery to call his son.
Dickens, Hard Times, III. 7.

3†. A kind of ship.

2 July, 1637. About six hour I went aboard one of the king's ships called the ninth whelp, which is in the king's books 21 ton and tonnage in king's books. She carries sixteen pieces of ordinance. . . . This ship is manned with sixty men.
Brereton, Travels, p. 164. (Davies.)

Four of the king's ships and six merchant ships are to go for the coast of Ireland, to beat the Turks thence. And the occasion was this: Captain Plumley was sent thither with one of the ships royal and two whelps to seek out Nutt the pirate.
Court and Times of Charles I., II. 186.

4. Naut., one of several longitudinal projections from the barrel of a capstan, windlass, or winch, provided to take the strain of the chain or rope which is being hove upon, and afford a firm e hold.—5. One of the teeth of a sprocket-wheel. F. H. Knight.

whelp (hwelp), v. [Also Sc. whalp; < ME. whelpen, hwelpen, hwelpen; < whelp, n.] I. intrans. To bring forth young, as the female of the dog and various beasts of prey.

They [sharks] spawne not, but whelp, like the Dogge or Wolfe and at night or towardes stormes receaue their young into their mouthes for safetie.
Purchas Pilgrimage, p. 902.

It is a Bitch-otter, and she has lately whelp'd.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 60.

II. trans. To bring forth, as a bitch, lioness, and many beasts of prey: hence, to give birth to; originate: used in contempt.

Then said Lycurgus, you are witnesses that these two dogges were whelpt in one day . . . of one syre and dam.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Bellowes, 1577), p. 22.

Did thy foul fancy whelp so foul a scheme
Of hopes abortive?
Young, Night Thoughts, vii. 901.

He was nane o' Scotland's dogs,
But whelpit some place far abroad,
Where sailors gang to fish for cod.
Burns, The Twa Dogs.

whomet, a. and n. An obsolete variant of queme.

whommel, whemmle (hwem'l), v. t. [Also whammel, Sc. quhemle, whamle, whommel, a freq. (or perhaps orig. transposed) form of whelm.] To whelm. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

whemmel, whemmle (hwem'l), n. An overturn; an overthrow. [Scotch.]

Nae doubt – ay, ay – it's an awfu' whemmle – and for one that held his head nae high, too. Scott, Rob Roy, xxii when (hwen), adv. and conj. [< ME. when, whan, whon, quan, quen, quam, wan, won, hwen, whenne, whanne, hwenne, hwanne, hwonne, wenne, wanne, wonne, wane, wone, < AS. hwænne, hwonne, when, = OS. hwan = OFries. hwenne = MD. wan = OHG. MHG. wanne, hwanne, G. wann, when, wenn, when, if, = Goth. hwan, when; orig. a case of the interrog. pron. (cf. Goth. hwana, asc. masc.), Goth. hwas = AS. hwa, etc., who? see who. Cf. L. quam, quam, when, unrelated to L. quis, who? Gr. πότε, when? from same pron. base. Hence ult. *whenne*², whence.] I. interrog. adv. At what time? at which time?

When shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming? Mat. xxiv. 3.

One [window] to the west and counter to it,
And blank; and who shall blazon it? when and how?
Tennyson, Holy Grail

When was formerly used exclamatorily, like what, to express impatience.

Why, when, I say? . . .
Off with my boots, you rogues! you villains, when! . .
Out, you rogue! you pluck my foot away.
Shak., 1 of the S., iv. 1. 140.

Why when! begin, sir. I must stay your leisure.
Middleton, More Dissemblers besides Women, v. 1

Set, parson, set the dice down in my hand
When, parson, when! what can you find me more?
Munday and others, Sir John Oldcastle, iv. 1

II. rel. conj. 1. At the or any time that; at or just after the moment that; as soon as.

When Gawain saugh hem come he sedde now may we a-bide to longe. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 587.

When the broken arches are black in night,
And each shatter'd oriel glimmers white, . . .
Then view St. David's ruin'd pile
Scott, L. of L. M., iii. 1

2. At which time.

I am at London only to provide for Monday when I shall use that favour which my Lady Bedford hath afforded me, of giving her name to my daughter.
Donne, Letters, xiii

The Moors fought valiantly for a short time, until the alcaydes of Marratella and Cesares were slain, when they gave way and fled for the next guard.
Irving, Granada, p. 75.

A time when the bloom of the market place are more devoutly worshipped than ever Diana of the Ephesians was.
Lowell, Harvard Anniversary.

When in this sense is sometimes used with ellipsis of the time preceding.

I know when seven justices could not take up a quarrel.
Shak., As you Like it, v. 4. 100.

They were apprehended and expected ever when to be put to death. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. cv.

3. At the same time that; whereas; while on the contrary: used adversatively, to denote contrast or incompatibility.

You rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.
Shak., Tempest, II. 1. 139.

How shall I please thee, how deserve thy smiles,
When I am only rich in misery?
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 2.

How then can any man be as a Witness, when every man is made the Accuser?
Selden, Table-Talk, I. 6.

When was formerly followed by as and that used redundantly. See whenas.

When that Aprille with his shoures soote
The droughte of Marche hath perced to the roote.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 1.

Quene that the kynge Arthur by conqueste hade wonnyne castelles and kyngdoms and contrees many.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 29.

When is often used as a quasi-pronoun, meaning which time, introducing a dependent clause after since, till, or similar connective denoting time.

Shortly I'll resolve you . . .
These happen'd accidents till when be cheerful.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. Epi.

Since when, his brain that had before been dry,
Became the well-spring of all poetry.
Sir J. Davies, Dancing.

Thy steeds will pause at even till when, farewell.
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, III. 2.

When all comes to all. See all.

whenas (hwen-az'), conj. [< when + as.] 1. When. [Archaic.]

Come, give me now a bag for my bread, . . .
And one for a penny, whenas I get ars.
Little John and the Four Beggars (Child's Ballads, V. 226).

Whenas in silks my Julia goes,
Then, methinks, how sweetly flows
That liquefaction of her clothes!
Herrick, Upon Julia's Clothes.

2. Whereas; while. [Rare.]

Whenas, if they would enquire into themselves, they would find no such matter.
Burrow.

Fit professors indeed are they like to be to teach others that godliness with content is great gaine, whenas their godliness of teaching had not been but for worldly gaine.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

whence (hwens), adv. and conj. [< ME. whens, whennes, whannes, hannes, with adv. gen. -es, < whenne, whence: see *whenne*².] I. interrog. adv. From what place? from what source, origin, or antecedents?

First Outlaw. Whence came you?
Lal. From Milan.
Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 1. 18.

II. rel. conj. From what place; from which place or source.

Thus gost spirit him seeweth hust he is, . . . and hannes he comth, and hannes he geth.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 113.

I wot wel what ye ar & whennes ye come.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3122.

Look note the rock whence we are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence we are digged.
Isa. li. 1.

Now were may persevere the root of his hatred whence it springs.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, iv.

We know not whence we live
Or why, or how.
Shelley, Revolt of Islam, lx. 58.

Here was square keep, there turret high, . . .
Whence oft the Warder could descry
The gathering ocean storm.
Scott, Marmion, v. 33.

From whence, whence: a common pleonasm.

From whence come wars and fightings among you?
Jas. iv. 1.

A place
From whence himself stores fly.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 2. 8.

O, how unlike the place from whence they fell!
Milton, P. L., i. 75.

Of whence, whence: a pleonasm. [Rare.]

He asked his airy guide,
What and Of whence was he, who pressed the heroic side.
Bryden, Cymon, vi. 1103.

whence-ever (hwens-ev'er), conj. [< whence + ever.] Whencesoever. Prior. (Worcester.) [Rare.]

whenceforth (hwens-forth'), conj. [< whence + forth.] Forth from which place; whence. [Rare.]

Before them stands the God of Seas in place, . . .
And strikes the rocks with his three-forked mace,
Whence with issues a warlike steed in sight.
Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 316.

whencesoever (hwens-so-ev'er), conj. [Early mod. E. whencesomever, < whence + soe + ever.] From what place soever; from what cause or source soever.

His city of Jerusalem is in a have-enjoyment place, for it standeth upon such a grounds, as from whencesoever a man cometh thither he must come ascend.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 7.

And so, whencesoever we have it.
Locke.

whene'er (hwen-ar'), conj. A contracted form of whenever.

whenever (hwen-ev'er), conj. [< ME. whenever, -ever, < when + ever.] At whatever time; at what time soever.

Set, on to his leagying
Whenever it please you. I shall be your gyde;
For the se here by upon the Rymery side.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1246.

Whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well.
Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2. 17.

whenne†, adv. An obsolete form of when.

whenne†, adv. and conj. [< ME. whenne, hwenne, hwanne, whanne, wonne, wanne, hwenne, etc. < AS. hwanan, hwanon (< OS. hwanen, hwanan < OHG., wanana, wannan, MHG. G. wannen, who see; with adv. formative -an, < hwanne, etc., who: see when. Cf. hence, thence, with similarly formed.] I. interrog. adv. Whence?

II. rel. conj. Whence.

or me ȝwet art tha and hwenne art hwa the liðer wrecche.
St. Juliana (E. E. T. S.), p. 26.

whennes†, adv. and conj. A Middle English form of whence.

whenso (hwen-so'), adv. [< ME. whenso, hwenne; < when + so.] When, whenever. Old Eng. Homilies, ii. 69. Morris, I. 55. [Archaic.]

Ingeld off, to the dwelling whenso they all at home.
W. Morris, transl. in The Academy, Feb. 9, 1895, p. 95.

whensoever (hwen-so-ev'er), conj. [< when + so + ever.] At what time soever, at whatever time.

Mercifully assist our prayers which we make before thee in all our troubles and adversities whensoever they oppress us.
Book of Common Prayer, Litany.

wher†, adv. and conj. See where.

wher²†, conj. See *where*².

where¹ (hwar), adv. and conj. [< ME. wher, whar, whær, ware, war, wor, hwere, hware, hwar, hwær, < AS. hwær, hwar = OS. hwar, hwer = OFries. hwer = D. waar = MLG. wor, wôr, LG. waar, woor = OHG. wâr, hwar, MHG. wâr-, G. wa- in comp., as in war-um, wo-rin), also reduced, OHG. MHG. wa, G. wo = Icel. Sw. hvar = Dan. hvor = Goth. hwar, where?; cf. Lith. kur, where? L. cur, Gr. ποῦ, sometimes πῶ (usually explained as a contraction of quō vei), why? Skt. kuha, at what time? when?; from the pronominal base represented by who, what: see who, what. Cf. there, as related to the, that.] I. interrog. adv. 1. At or in what place? in what position, situation, or circumstances?

Hwer seoth ȝwuch ȝwuch, we wulleth ȝwiðer finden!
Owl & Night, Hwer (ed. Morris), l. 241.

If there were no opposition, where were the triall of an unfained goodnesse and magnanimity?
Milton, Church-government, i. 7.

Where sooner than here, where louder than here may we expect a patriotic voice to be raised?
D. Webster, Speech, New York, March 10, 1831.

2. To which place? whither?

Where is become Conay that leode was of al,
Or the riche man clothid in purpur & in pal?
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 86.

Where runn'st thou so fast?
Shak., 1 of K., iii. 2. 71.

3. From what source? whence?

Where have thy this mettle?
Is not thou climate foggy, raw and dull?
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 6. 15.

Where away? (naut.) a query from the officer of the deck as to the direction of any object reported by the lookout.

II. rel. conj. 1. At or in which place, or the place in which; in which case, position, circumstance, etc.

Asketh him thwat bee cradre and hwer he ifinde in holi write religiun openliker described.
Ancren Riwle, p. 8.

He enforces hym to seke thesu in the joy of the worlde, where none he will be founden.
Hampole, Pricke of Conscience (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

Bare ruin'd choirs where late the sweet birds sang.
Shak., Sonnets, lxxiii.

2. To which place; whither; to a place such that.

Oh, cousin, thou hast led me where I never Shall see day more.
Shirley, The Wedding, ii. 2.

3. Wherever.

Where the bodies and chief men was soe barbarous and bastardlike, what shall be hoped of the peasantes?
Spenser, State of Ireland.

Where your treasure is there will your heart be also.
Mat. vi. 21.

Now where nothing is, there nothing can come to be.
J. Behme, Aurora, xix. 138.

4. Whereas.

His [Augustus's] wealth doth warrant a liberal dower, Where Scipio's sister will receive thanks give.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 5. 47.

It was observed that those who were born after the beginning of this Mortality [the plague] had but twenty eight Teeth, where before they had two and thirty.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 181.

Where, frequently having the force or function of a relative or other pronoun (which, what, etc.), is often used in composition with a following preposition: as, whereby, 'by what,' 'by which'; wherewith, 'with what,' 'with which.' It was also formerly used after certain adverbs or adjectives in a general sense, as it still is in everywhere, somewhere (which see). Middle English wydere, wher (astray, at random), to form a compounding to similar compounds of there (see there).

Thus I wente wydere, wher, I cowde to eche.
Piers Plowman (A), ix. 88.

where†† (hwar), n. [Formerly also whence; < where], adv., as used in everywhere, somewhere.] Whereabout; situation, place.

Finding the Nymph asleepe in secret where Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 19.

Pid them farewell. Cordelia, though unkind
Be a loved heir, is still a where to find.
Shak., Lear, i. 1. 264.

where²†, conj. [< ME. wher, where, contraction of whether, E. whether.] A contracted form of whether.

Wher he [the subject] be other rest or other, ouȝth to playe.
Piers Plowman (C), i. 180.

Of his liuage requested he nothing,
Where she be of due or of unskilde be,
Forsoth I wyll her haue me to be pleasyng.
Lion of Portenus (E. E. T. S.), l. 660.

I know not wher I am or can speak,
Or whether there do lean me.
B. Jonson, New Inn, v. 1.

whereabout (hwar'a-bout') adv. and conj. [< *where*¹ + about.] I. interrog. adv. About what? concerning what? near what or which place? as, whereabout did you drop the coin?

II. rel. conj. About which; concerning which; or what purpose.

Let me once know something of the business whereabout I went then.
1 Sam. xxi. 2.

I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 3. 106.

whereabout (hwâr'a-bout'), n. [< whereabout, adv.] The place where one is; one's present place.

Thou firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
Thy very stones prate of my whereabout
Shak., Macbeth, II. 1. 58

From a rifted crag or ivy tod . .
Thou giv'st for pastime's sake, by shriek or shout,
A puzzling notice of thy whereabout
Wordsworth, Evening Voluntaries, vii whereabouts (hwar'a-bouts'), adv. and conj. [< whereabout + adv. gen. -s.] Same as where about.

whereabouts (hwâr'a-bouts'), n. [< where + abouts, adv.] The place where one or where anything is; location; locality.

I feel as if it were merely due to indicate the whereabouts of the château of the obliging young man I had met on the way from Nîmes, I must content myself with saying that it nestled in an enchanting valley
H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 141

whereagainst (hwar'a-genst'), conj. [< where[1] + against.] Against which

Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, whereagainst
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke Shak., Cor., iv. 5. 113.

whereas (hwar-az'), conj. [< where[1] + as[1].] 1. The thing being so that; considering that things are so: implying an admission of facts, sometimes followed by a different statement, and sometimes by inference or something consequent, as in the preamble to a law or a resolution

Whereas, A consistent and faithful adherence to the principles of administrative reform . . . is absolutely essential to the vitality and success of the . . . party . . .
Resolved, That . . . the character, record, and associations of its candidates . . . should be such as to warrant entire confidence
Quoted in Appleton's Annual Cyc., 1884, p. 767

2. While on the contrary; the fact or case really being that; when in fact

Whereas before our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 7. 37

If I were wise only to mine own ends, I would certainly take such a subject as of itself might catch applause; whereas this hath all the disadvantages on the contrary Milton, Church Government, II., Pref.

3†. Where.

Soone he came where as the Tiliaresse
Was striving with faire Cynthia for her seat
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vi. 17

He, spying her, bounced in whereas he stood.
Shak., Passionate Pilgrim, i. 84.

whereat (hwar-at'), adv. and conj. [< where[1] + at.] I. interrog. adv. At what? at, what at are you offended? Johnson.

II. rel. conj. At which.

Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1096

He now prepared
To speak, whereat their doubled ranks they bend
From wing to wing, and half inclose him round
Milton, P. L., i. 616

Whereat erewhile I wept, I laugh. Cercene, Song.

whereby (hwâr-bi'), adv. and conj. [< ME. whar bi (= D. waarby = G. wobei); < where[1] + by[1].] I. interrog. adv. By what? how? why?

If Karle seistow [sayest thou] so?
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2354

Whereby shall I know this Luke i. 18.

II. rel. conj. By which, in any sense of the word by.

You take my life
When you do take the means whereby I live
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 377

But this word Werowance, which we call and construe for a king, is a common word, whereby they call all commanders. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 14.

The mind . . . has a power to abstract its ideas and so they become essences, general essences, whereby the sorts of things are distinguished
Locke, Human Understanding, III. viii. 1

Fear
Stared in her eyes, and chalk'd her face, and whipt
Her transit to the throne, whereby she fell Delivering sealed dispatches . . . Tennyson, Princess, iv.

where'er (hwar-âr'), adv. A contracted form of wherever.

wherefore (hwâr'fôr), adv. and conj. [Early mod. E. wherefore, < ME. wherfore, wherfor, wherfore (= D. waarvoor = G. wofür = Sw. hvarför = Dan. hvorfor); < where[1] + for[1].] I. interrog. adv. For what reason, thing, or purpose? what for? why?

Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster
Shak., Rich. II., ii. 3. 122.

If Princes need no palliations, as he tells his Son, wherefore is it that he himself hath so oft'n us'd them?
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xxvii.

II. rel. conj. For which cause or reason; in consequence of which; consequently.

Judee the ruf mak the cause ther-on be,
Off the lordes yifte the eschesun may se,
Wher for he lif yaf, and for wat reason
Roma of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 658.

He pardoneth and absolveth all those who truly repent. Wherefore let us beseech him to grant us true repentance Book of Common Prayer, Absolution.

The night was as troublesome to him as the day, wherefore, instead of sleeping, he spent it in sighs and tears.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

To do wherefore†, to make a return; give or furnish an equivalent

Ne wolle manegere ne merman, ne may habbe no stal in the heye stret of Wynchestre, bote he do war-fore.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 343

Syn. Therefore, Wherefore, Accordingly, etc. See therefore.

wherefore (hwâr'fôr), n. [< wherefore, adv.] The reason or cause. [Colloq.]

Disputes learnedly the whys and wherefores
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1

The way and the wherefore of it all Who knoweth? Jean Ingelow.

wherefrom (hwâr-from'), conj. [= Sw. hvarifrån = Dan. hvorfra; as where[1] + from.] From which; whence.

In each a squared lawn, wherefrom
The golden gorge of dragons spouted forth
A flood of fountain foam Tennyson, Palace of Art.

A larger surface wherefrom material can be washed into the lagoon. Nature, XLII. 118.

wherehence†, conj. [< where[1] + hence.] Whence. [Rare.]

He had lived two years at Compostella, . . . wherehence he then came. Coryat, Crudities, I. 80.

wherein (hwar-in'), adv. and conj. [< ME. wherin, hwerinne (= D. waarin = G. worin = Sw. hvari = Dan. hvori), whereon, < where[1] + in[1].] I. interrog. adv. In what? in what thing, time, respect, etc.?

But yet say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings Mal. iii. 8.

How looked he? Wherein [that is, in what clothes] went he? Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2. 324.

II. rel. conj. 1. In or within which or what, in which thing, time, respect, etc.

This zenne [sin] is the dyeules panne of helle, huerinne he maketh his fringes [frylings]
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 98

You naked trees, whose shady leaves are lost
Wherein the byrds were wont to build their bowre Spenser, Shep. Cal., January.

The Alfantica is also a place of note, because it is environed with a great wall, wherein lye the goods of all the Merchants securely guarded
Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 4.

Milton seems to have known perfectly well wherein his strength lay Addison, Spectator, No. 315.

2. In that in which; in whatever

If wherein it doth impair the seeing sense
It pays the hearing double recompense.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 180.

whereinsoever (hwar-in-so-ev'er), conj. In whatever place, point, or respect

Wherein soever ye shall perceive yourselves to have offended, there to bewail your own sinfulness Book of Common Prayer, Communion office, Exhortation.

whereinto (hwâr-in'tö or in-tö'), adv. [< where[1] + into.] I. interrog. adv. Into what?

II. rel. conj. Into which

Where's that palace wherein to foul things
Sometimes intrude not? Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 137

I watched my opportunitie to get a shore in their Boat, wherunto the darke night I secretly got.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 212.

whereinto†, conj. [< ME. wherinnil, hwerinnil, werinnil (= D. waarinnede = G. worein = Sw. hvarinnan = Dan. hvorinnen); < where[1] + inn[2] + til[2].] Wherewith

Nothing he ne founde in al the nigte
Wer-inne his honger aquenche mighte
Rel. Antiq., II. 274.

That is the dyeules pent huerinnide he bayth (buyeth)
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 71.

whereness (hwâr'nes), n. [< where[1] + -ness.] The state or property of having place or position; ubiety.

A point hath no dimensions, but only a whereness, and is next to nothing N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, I. 1. 1. 1. 1.

Ubiation or whereness Whewell.

whereof (hwar-ov'), adv. and conj. [< ME. wher of, wharof, wrof, hwerof (= Sw. hvaraf = Dan. hvoraf), < where[1] + of.] I. interrog. adv. Of what? from what?

Qwerof art thou so ferd?
Hit is a litil wynne
MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 82. (Halliwell.)

Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes this?
Shak., Lear, I. 4. 313.

II. rel. conj. Of which; of whom.

For lente neuere was lyf, but lyflode (means of livelihood) were shapen,
Wher-of or wherfore or where-by to lybbe.
Piers Ploughman (B), xiv. 60.

The days are made on a loom whereof the warp and woof are past and future time.
Emerson, Works and Days.

whereon (hwar-on'), adv. and conj. [< ME. wherron, hwerun (= D. waarop = G. worauf); < where[1] + on[1].] I. interrog. adv. On what? on whom?

Queen. Wherron do you look?
Ham. On him, on him! Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 124.

II. rel. conj. On which.

O fair foundation laid whereon to build Their ruin! Milton, P. L., iv. 521.

How He who bore in Heav'n the second name
Had not on earth whereon to lay His head Burns, Cotter's Saturday Night.

whereout (hwâr-out'), conj. [= D. waaruit; as where[1] + out.] Out of which.

That I may give the local wound a name
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flew.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 245.

The cleft whereout the lightning breaketh. Holland.

whereover (hwâr-ō'ver), conj. Over which. [Rare.]

A gyre of gulf . . . whereover neither Dives nor Abraham, nor yet Moses himself, can pass
F. Parker, on the Death of Daniel Webster, p. 7.

whereso (hwar'sō), conj. [< ME. whereso; < where[1] + so. Cf. AS. swa hwær swā.] Wheresoever.

Of ble as he bere flour here so the bare scheweed (showed)
But ofte wayz the contrayre of her (their) cler ygon
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 790.

Furnished with deadly instruments she went
Of every sort to wound whereso she meant.
Drayton, Barons' Wars, ii. 5.

wheresoe'er (hwâr-so-ar'), conj. A contracted form of wheresoever.

wheresoever (hwar-so-ev'er), conj. [< where[1] + so + ever.] 1. In what place soever; in whatsoever place

Wheresoever I am sung or told
In after time, this also shall be known.
Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

2†. Wherever.

Here is some token and I must take out the work? . . . Wheresoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't Shak., Othello, iv. 1. 160.

3. Whithersoever, to what place soever.

The more pursuer me wheresoever I go.
Dryden, Aurengzebe, v. 1.

wherethorough† (hwâr-thur'ō), conj. [< ME. wherthoru, hwerthurh, hwerthurh, < where[1] + thorough (see thorough and through[1]).] Same as wherethrough.

wherethrough (hwâr-thrö'), conj. [Also wherethorough, < ME. wherthrough, < where[1] + through[1]. Cf. wherethorough.] Through which, in any sense of the word through

He . . . hath beaute, wher-through he is Worthy of love to have the blis.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 3793.

A way without impediment, . . . wherethrough all the people went Wisdom xix. 8.

There is no weakness left in me wherethrough I may look back Scott.

Yet all experience is an arch wherethro'
Gleams that untravell'd world, whose margin fades
For ever and for ever when I move.
Tennyson, Ulysses.

whereto (hwâr-to'), adv. and conj. [< ME. hwarto, hwerte, war to, hwerto (= D. waartoe = G. wozu), < where[1] + to[1].] I. interrog. adv. To what place, point, end, etc.?

Wherto bouwet ye to batell in your bright geire,
Who thur worship to wyn, or willfully shame?
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6565.

Lysander, wherto tends all this?
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 256.

II. rel. conj. To which; to whom; whither.

They may by his direction, be employed principally in such profession wherto their nature doth most conforme.
Book of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), I. 5.

Purposing to be of that Religion wherto they should addict themselves. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 66.

This battle in the west Wherto we move Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

whereunder (hwâr-un'der), conj. [< ME. hwerunder (= D. waaronder = G. worunter = Sw. hvarunder = Dan. hvorunder); < where[1] + under.] Under which.

The wild grape vines . . . wherunder we had slept.
Gentleman's Mag., LX. 555.

Shone resurgent, a sunbright sign,
Through shapes whereunder the strong soul glows.
Swinburne, Death of W. Bell Scott.

whereuntil (hwār-un-til'), conj. [< where[1] + until.] Whereunto. [Obsolete or provincial.]

We know whereuntil it doth amount.
Shak., T. L. L., v. 2. 403.

whereunto (hwār-un'tō or -un-tō'), adv. and conj. [< where[1] + unto.] I. interrog. adv. Unto what or whom? whereto?

Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God?
Mark iv. 30.

II. rel. conj. To which or whom; unto what; for what end or purpose.

Now when Andrew heard whereunto Christ was come he forsook his master John, and came to Christ Latimer.

The next whereunto Hooker.

whereupon (hwār-u-pon'), adv. and conj. [< ME. whereupon; < where[1] + upon.] I. interrog. adv. Upon what place, ground, cause, etc.? wherein?

II. rel. conj. Upon which or whom; whereon.

There [at the Mount of Olives] is Also the stone whereupon the Angell stood comfortyng hym the same tyme Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 28.

The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such hold hostility Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 42.

This was cast upon the board . . . whereupon
Rose feud, with question unto whom it were due Tennyson, Œnone.

wherever (hwār-ev'ėr), conj. [< ME. wherever, < where[1] + ever.] At whatever place.

He hathe alwaye 3 Wifes with him where that ever he be. Mandeville, Travels, p. 218.

They courted merit, wherever it was to be found Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II. 98.

wherewith (hwār-with'), adv. and conj. [< ME. wherewith, wharwith, hwerwith; < where[1] + with.] I. interrog. adv. With what or whom?

O my Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel? Judges vi. 15.

II. rel. conj. With which; also, as compound relative, that with which.

And bisily gan for the soules preye [pray]
Of hem that yaf him wherewith to scolaye [study].
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 302.

Wherewith he fil his eyen
Vppon her fearefull face
Gawayne Phillomene's Sleeue (1593), quoted in Arber, p. lxv.

The love wherewith thou hast loved me John xvii. 26.

Reverence is that wherewith princes are girt from God
Bacon, Seditions and Troubles (ed. 1887).

Was I in a desert I would find out wherewith in it to call forth my affections Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 77.

[Wherewith is colloquially used as a noun in the phrase the wherewith (compare the common equivalent phrase the wherewithal) — that is, what is necessary or required means.

His [the Esquimaux's] digestive system, heavily taxed in providing the wherewith to meet excessive loss by radiation, supplies less material for other purposes
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 54.]

wherewithal (hwār-with-awl'), adv. and conj. [< where[1] + withal.] Same as wherewith.

Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?
Ps. cxix. 9.

We our selves have not wherewithal who shall bear the Charges of our Journey? Milton, Touching Hirelings.

The wherewithal. Same as the wherewith: see note under wherewith. [Colloq.]

For the wherewithal
To give his babes a better bringing up
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

wherr (hwėr), a. [Prob. < W. chwerw, bitter, sharp, severe; cf. chwerwon, bitters, chwerwi, become bitter. Cf. wherry[2].] Very sour. [Prov. Eng.]

wherret, wherrit (hwer'et, hwer'it), n. and v. See wherret.

wherry[1] (hwer'i), n.; pl. wherries (-iz). [Early mod. E. also whery, wharrie, whyrry; origin unknown. According to Skeat, < Icel. hverfr, shifty, crank (said of ships) (= Norw. hverr, crank, unsteady; also swift), < hverfa (pret. hvarf), turn: see wharf.] 1. A light shallow rowboat, having seats for passengers, and plying on rivers and harbors. It resembles the dory.

A wherry, boate, ponto Lerons Manip. Vocab., p. 106.

What sights of fine folks he oft row'd in his wherry,
Twas clean'd out so nice, and so painted within!
C. Dibdin, The Waterman.

2. A light half-decked fishing-vessel used in different parts of Great Britain and Ireland.

wherry[2] (hwer'i), n. [Cf. wherr.] A liquor made from the pulp of crab-apples after the verjuice is expressed. Sometimes called crab-wherry. [Prov. Eng.]

wherryman (hwer'i-man), n.; pl. wherrymen (-men). One who rows a wherry.

He that is an excellent wherryman looketh towards the bridge when he pulleth towards Westminster. Bacon.

whersot, adv. or pron. [< ME. whersoe, contracted form of whetherso.] Same as whetherso.

Al is yliche good to me,
Joye or sorowe, whersoe it be Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 16.

wherve, v. t. [< ME. wherven, whervien, hwervien, < AS. hwerfan, hwyrfan (pret. hwyrfde) = OHG. hwerban, hwarbon, werban, werben, MHG. werben = Icel. hverfa, tr. cause to turn, turn, intr. turn, revolve; a weak verb, causative of early ME. hverfen* (in comp. a-hwerfen), < AS. hweorfan (pret. hwearf, pl. hwurfon, pp. hworfen), turn, turn about, go, = OS. hwerbhan = OFries. hwerva, werva, warfa = OHG. hwerbhan, werbhan, werran, werben, MHG. werben, werren = Icel. hverfa = Goth. hwairbhan, turn, go about. This verb, lost in early ME., survives only in the derivatives wharve, n., wharf, wharl, whorl, etc.] To turn; change.

Alfred . . . what tha lagen on Englis, . . .
And wherfde hir mone on his and lerede the name in his dal, c . . . Layamon, I. 6319.

wherve, n. [Also wharve, < wherve, v.] 1. A round piece of wood put on a spindle to receive the thread

Wouldst thou . . . blunt the spindles, join the wharves, slander the spinning quills . . . of the weird Sister Parcæ? Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, III. 28.

So fine so round and even a thread she [the spider] spinnes, hanging there unto her wharle, and using the weight of her own bodie instead of a wharve
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xi. 24.

The spindle and wharve are rigidly attached to each other, and the upper section of the wharve is hollowed out to form a chamber capable of containing quite a quantity of oil Sci. Amer., N. S., LXI. 242.

2. A joint. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whet (hwet), v. t.; pret. and pp. whetted or whet, ppr. whetting. [< ME. whetten, < AS. hwettan (= D. dial. wetten = OHG. wezzen, MHG. G. wetzen = Icel. hvetja = Sw. hvässa = Dan. hvæsse), sharpen, whet, < hwæt sharp: see what[2].] 1. To make sharp; sharpen an edged or pointed tool or weapon) by rubbing it on a stone, or with an implement of stone or other material

Assaying how his sperre weren whette
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1520.

I whette a knyf, or any weapon or tool, to make it sharpe. I have better whettynge of knyves after a good sorte than whettynge of swordes and billes
Palsgrave, p. 760.

And Beauty walked up and down,
With bow in hand and arrows whet
Lord Lovat (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 75).

And the mower whets his sithe. Milton, L'Allegro, l. 59.

2. To make sharp, keen, or eager; excite, stimulate; as, to whet the appetite.

Since Cæsar first did whet me against Cæsar,
I have not slept Shak., J. C., iv. 1. 61.

The fury-spirit of this fatal war,
Whose example did more sharply whet
Drayton, Barons' Wars, iv. 50.

It hurt the very stomach, which is too sharp set already Middleton, Chaste Maid, I. 1.

Malice whets her gland your tongue
Cowper, Love Increased by Suffering.

3. To rub; scratch. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

After a great time . . . has been used for a time to sharpen a chorle, the surface gets a dark metallic glaze, and the stone will not then bite the steel. To remove this glaze the stone was whetted or sharpened (both terms were used by mixing it with sand and water, the rubbing medium being a piece of stone harder . . . and of coarser grain) Ure and Q., 7th ser., XI. 173.

4. To prune or preen; train. [Rare.]

There like a cord it rolls and sings
Then whets and claps its silver wings
Marvell, The Garden.

5. To cut with a knife. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

To whet on or whet forward, to urge on; instigate.

I prithee, peace, good queen
And whet me not forward to these furious jeers
Shak., Cymb., V. 5. 1. 24.

To whet one's whistle. Same as to wet one's whistle (a confusion of wet and whet): see whistle.

Here's a boy some drink there. Ego
What's now a whistle Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iii. 1.

Let's set my grace, and turn to the fire, drink up the other cup to whet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 87.

whet (hwet), n. [< whet, v.] The act of sharpening by friction; hence, something that provokes or stimulates; especially, something that whets the appetite, as a dram.

You are cloy'd with the Preparative, and what you meant for a Whet turns the Edge of your jaunty stomachs Congreve, Old Bachelor, I. 4.

He had assisted at four hundred bowls of punch, not to mention sips, drams, and whets without number Addison, Spectator.

Mr. Mayor gives a whet (a light luncheon) to-day after church, when he hopes you will attend Quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., XI. 55.

whether[1] (hwe*TH*'ėr), a. and pron. [Formerly also contr. whether, where < ME. whether, whather, whathes, wether, wather, hwether, hwather, qwether, also contr. whes < AS. hwæther, hwether = OS. hwethar = OFries. hweder, hether, hader = MLG. weder, wedder, LG. wedder, were = OHG. hwedar, hwedr, wedar, which of two. MHG. G. weder = Icel. hvaðarr, contr. hvarr, hvárr = Goth. hwathar, which of two; = OHulg. Russ. kotoryi, which. L. uter (for cuter*) (Gr. πότερος, πότερος = Skt. katara, which (of two)); with compar. suffix ther (cter, ter, etc.), from the base hwa of the pron. who: see who, and cf. whatl, etc. Cf. either.] I. a. A. interrog. Which (of two)? which one?

B. rel. (always in compound relative use, or with the antecedent implied, not expressed). Which (of two, or, less exactly, of more than two).

When the father him bethought,
And sighe [saw] to whether side it drough.
Gower, Conf. Amant., ii.

I would gladly know in whether booke you have read moste, which is to wit, in Vegetius, which contenteth of matters of warre, or in S. Augustine his booke of Christian doctrine concerning [Letters (1580, by Hellowes, 1577), p. 396.

But to whether side fortune would have been partial could not be determined. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

II. pron. A. interrog. Which (of two, or of the two)? which one (of two)?

Whether of them [the R. V.] twain did the will of his father? Mat. xxi. 31.

B. rel. Which (of two); which one (of two); also, more indefinitely, whichever.

Well, I will hear, or sleep, I care not whether
Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 2.

It may be a question among men of noble sentiments, whether of those unfortunate persons had the greater soul.
Steele, Tatler, No. 8.

"Chuse now," quoth she, "one of this thirteen twyve . . . Now chese your selven whether that you liketh."
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 871.

Both the younge Caddie, whether go he,
In cruste name good cheer ge make Hymns to Venus, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 39.

To waxen or to wanien, whether God lyketh Piers Plowman (A), viii. 59.

whether[1] (hwe*TH*'ėr), adv. and conj. [< ME. whether, wheder, wether, hwether, contr. wher, wer, < AS. hwæther, hwether = OS. hwethar = OFries. hweder = MLG. weder, wedder = OHG. hwedar, wedar, MHG. G. weder = Icel. hvárr, whether; orig. neut. of the pron. whether: see whether, a. and pron.] I. interrog. adv. 1. Introducing the first of two direct (alternative) questions, the second being introduced by or (the latter, which of these two things (is true)?).

Whether is Herod or that Youngling king?
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 181.

2†. Introducing a single direct question, the alternative being unexpressed, and sometimes only dimly implied.

Whether is not this the sone of the carpenter? Whether his moodir is not seid [called] Marie? Wyclif, Mat. xiii. 55.

Well then, if God will not allow a king too much, whether will he allow a subject too much?
Latimer, 1st Sermon before Edw. VI., 1549.

What authority have you mete to be given him? whether will ye ride we him to prelate to safe conduct, and to have matchall lawe as they are accustomed?
Spenser, State of Ireland.

II. rel. conj. 1. Introducing the first of two (or more) alternatives, the second being introduced by or or or whether.

Whether a man upon of pouerte or of prelate the lawe, Ben to answere him lawe ge to doute Piers Plowman (A), xi. 292.

Whether the tyranny be in his place
Or in his eminence that fills it up
Shak., M. for M., I. 2. 167.

Then shall speak my words unto them, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear Ezek. iii. 7.

But whether thou do as things or whether not,
Whether the sun, predominant in heaven,
Rise on the earth, or whether on the sun . . .
Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid Milton, P. L., viii. 159.

The Water whether wounded or slain were thrown headlong without the walls Irving, Granada, p. 54.

Laws may be received as to the stringency of the disciplinary of the ruler whether he be good or bad
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II. 25.

There are moments in life when the lip and the eye
Try the question of whether to smile or to cry
Whittier, The Quaker Alumni.

So long as men had slender means whether of keeping cool or of combating it with artificial heat, Winter was an unwelcome guest, especially in the country.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 80.

Sometimes the correlative clause is formed simply by a particle of negation.

Whether one Nym . . had the chain or no
Shak., M. W. of W., iv, n. 33.

This obscure thorn-eater of malice and detraction as well as of Quodlibets and sophisms, knowes not whether it were illegall or not Milton, An Apology, et

His solomon's) are left disputable to this day, whether he ever recovered by repentance or no Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. ii.

Whether we are in Danger or no at present, I were Presumption in me to judge Howell, Letters, I. vi. 19

To that frere wyll I go
And bring him to you,
Whether he wyl or no
Playe of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 420).

2. Introducing a single alternative, the other being implied: as, I do not know whether he is yet gone [or not].

God woot whether he was like a manly knyghte
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1265.

You shall demand of him whether one Captain Bunch be i' the camp. Shak., All's Well, iv. 1. 20.

These are but winds and flaws to try the temper of our faith whether it be sound or not Milton, Church-Government, i.

These dark doctrines and puzzling passages were inserted to be the test of meekness, of sincere and well disposed minds, to see whether what we were once satisfied that a book came from God, as would experience in every thing confirm it Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ix.

Whether or no. See no.

He would be so likely to believe me guilty as not What would he do, whether or no?
Dickens, Bleak House, III.

whether[2]†, adv. An obsolete form of whither.

whethering (hwe*TH*'ėr-ing), n. [Origin obscure.] The retention of the afterbirth in cows. Gardner.

whethersot† (hwe*TH*'ėr-sot), indef. pron. [ME.; < whether[1] + sot.] Whichever of two, or of the two.

Warne alle the compaignye that longen to this fraternite, man and woman, that is with inne the toune, to come to the exequies of hym or of his that I deede, whether so it be English Gilds (ed. T. F. & P.), p. 24.

whetile (hwe'til), n. [Imitative; cf. quiffle.] The green woodpecker, Geocinus viridis. See cut under popinjay.

whet-slate (hwet'slāt), n. A very fine grained hard siliceous rock, suitable for making whetstones and hones. Also called novaculite and honestone.

whetstone (hwet'stōn), n. [Early mod. E. also whetstone, < ME. whetston, wetston, watston, weston, < AS. hwetstan (= MD. wetsteen = MLG. wetstein, wetsten = OHG. wetzistein, MHG. wetzestein, wetzsten, G. wetzstein), a whetstone, < hwettan, whet, + stan, stone.] 1. A stone for sharpening cutlery or tools by friction. Whetstones are made of various kinds of stone, the finer kinds being a soft igneous rock, and when used are moistened with oil or water.

[It] goes to the understanding as the whetstone to the razor South.

Whetstones or scythestones used to be made solely by hand in large quantities at stone quarries in Derbyshire. N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. 153.

2. Figuratively, that which sharpens, stimulates, or excites the faculties or appetites.

I assure you, there is no such a whetstone to sharpen a good wittie and encourage a will to learning as is praise. Ascham, The Schole-master, p. 91.

Let them read Shakespeare's sonnets, taking the place A whetstone for their dull wits to be Shelley, To his Grocer.

To give, deserve, or win the whetstone†, old phrases (in which a whetstone appears as the proverbial prize for lying) confirmed liars or slanderers were sometimes publicly exhibited with a whetstone fastened to them. Compare the following allusions:

If Mother Hubbard, in the vein of Chaucer, happened to tell one a merrie tale, father Elderton and his son Garnesie, in the vein of Skelton or Scoggin, will counterfeit an hundred dogged fables, libels, slanderous slanders, for the whetstone, what not G. Harvey, Four Letters.

The whetstone is a knave that all men know,
Yet many on him doe much cost bestowe,
He's us'd almost in every shoppe but whyte
As verie most needefull for sale commodity.
Quoted in Chambers's Book of Days, II. 40.

This will explain a smart repartee of Sir Francis Bacon's before king James, to which an Sir Kenelm Digby's saying that he [Bacon] was in the true philosopher's stone in the possession of the cunning man in Italy, and when the king was very curious to understand what sort of stone it was, and Sir Kenelm much puzzled in describing it, Sir Fr. Bacon interposed, and said, "Perhaps it was a whetstone."
J. Gee.

whetstone-slate (hwet'stōn-slāt), n. Same as whet-slate.

whetten† (hwet'n), v. t. [< whet + -en[1].] To whet. [Rare.]

My mynd was greedelye whetted
Too parle with the Regent Stanihurst, Æneid iii.

whetter (hwet'ėr), n. [< whet + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which whets or sharpens.

Love, like other sweet things, is no whetter of the stomach. Fielding, Joseph Andrews. (Latham.)

2†. Specifically, one who indulges in whets or drams; a dram-drinker; a tippler.

There are in and about the Royal-Exchange a sort of people commonly known by the name of Whetters, who drink themselves into an intermediate state of being neither drunk nor sober before the hours of Exchange or business. Steele, Tatler, No. 158.

The Whetter obliged to refresh himself every moment with a liquor as the snuff-taker with a powder.
Steele, Tatler, No. 161.

wheugh, interj. A variant of wheu.

whew[1] (hwū), interj. [Sometimes also wheugh, formerly also whu; an exclamation or imitation of whistling; cf. Icel. hvissa! Cf. whoot for hoot.] An exclamation, uttered with a whistling sound, expressing astonishment or dismay.

In a cold morning, whu at a lord's gate
How you have let the porter let me wait!
Vanbrugh, Confederacy, Prol.

He sweares by the Rood Whew!
Tennyson, Queen Mary, I. 1.

whew[1] (hwū), n. [Sometimes also wheugh, formerly also whu, whuo, whuoo, interj. or v.] 1. A whistling sound, usually noting astonishment.

The fryer set his fist to his mouth,
And whistled whews three.
Robin Hood and the Curtoll Fryer (Child's Ballads, V. 276).

Behind them lay two long, low, ugly-looking craft, at sight of which Yeo gave a long wheugh.
Kingsley, Westward Ho, xix.

I feel suppressed a whew.
Hannay, Singleton Fontenoy, ix.

2. Same as whewer.

Wigeon (French Vigeon, from the Latin Vipio), also called locally "Whewer" and "Whew," names imitative of the whistling call-note of the male.
Newton, Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 561.

whew[1] (hwū), v. i. [< whew[1], interj.] To utter the interjection whew or a sound like it; whistle with a shrill pipe, as a plover or duck.

I had often been wondering how they [the plovers] stand sae lang on the heights that year, for I heard them aye whewing even an' morn. Hogg, Brownie, iii.

whew[2] (hwū), v. i. [Origin obscure.] 1. To fly hastily, make great speed. Also whave. Brockett; Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] —2. To hurry or bustle about; work tempestuously. [New Eng.]

Her father . . had married a smart second wife 'to look after matters.' . . Nothing ever got ahead of her; she whewed round, when she was whewing she neither wanted fuel to under nor help.
Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, The Other Girls, vii. 112.

whew[3] (hwū), n. [< whew[2], v.] A sudden vanishing away. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whew-duck (hwū'duk), n. [< whew[1] + duck[1]; cf. whewer.] The pandle whew, whewer, or widgeon, Mareca penelope, among whose names are canard siffleur and faux fistularis. [Local, British.]

In some parts of England it [the widgeon] is called the Whew-duck and Whewer.
Lubbock, British Birds (ed. 4), IV. 400. (Encyc. Dict.)

whewellite (hwū'el-īt), n. [Named after W. Whewell, master of Trinity College, Cambridge.] Native calcium oxalate, a rare mineral occurring in monoclinic crystals, colorless or white with brilliant luster.

whewer (hwū'ėr), n. [< whew[1] + -er[1].] The whew-duck. [Prov. Eng.]

In Norfolk, according to Ray, whewers.
C. Swainson, Brit. Birds (1885), p. 155.

whey[1] (hwā), n. [Early mod. E. also whay; also dial. wear, < ME. whig, whei, hwei, < AS. hwæg = Fries. weg = MD. weg, D. wei, also MD. kay, hey, hai = LG. wei, weige, kei, hei, whey; root unknown. Cf. W. chwyd, whey fermented with sour herbs; chwyn, sour, fermented.] The serum of milk; that part of milk which remains fluid after the profounds have been coagulated by rennet as in cheese-making, or by an acid as in the natural souring of milk. Whey is often mixed with wine, or flavored with herbs, spices, etc., and used as a cooling beverage.

The pined Fisher or poor Dairy Rentor
That lines of whay for forfeiting Indenture
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

Down to the milke house, and drank three glasses of whey.
Pepys, Diary, II. 300.

Alum whey, the whey formed by the coagulation of milk by powdered alum. Whey cure, the treatment of certain diseases by means of the internal administration of quantities of whey, sometimes combined with baths in the same liquid. This 'cure' is usually practised in connection with drinking and bathing in mineral waters at European spas. Wine whey, See wine.

whey[2]†, n. An obsolete form of quey.

5 wheyes (4 years old), £5.
H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, App. I.

whey-beard (hwā'bērd), n. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea. Macgillivray; Montagu. See cut under whitethroat. [Local, British.]

wheyey (hwā'i), a. [< whey[1] + -ey for -y[1].] Partaking of the nature of whey; containing or resembling whey. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 43.

whey-face (hwā'fās), n. [< whey[1] + face[1].] A face white or pale, as from fear; also, a person having a white or pale face, or looking pale from fright.

to prick thy face, and over red thy fear,
. . . What soldiers, whey face!
Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 17.

whey-faced (hwā'fāst), a. [< whey[1] + face[1] + ed[2]. Cf. cream faced.] Having a white or pale face; pallid.

All this You made me quit, to follow
That sneaking, Whey-faced God Apollo.
Prior, To Fleetwood Shephard (1689).

wheyish (hwā'ish), a. [< whey[1] + -ish[1].] Having the qualities of whey; thin; watery.

If it be fresh and sweet butter, but say it be sour and wheyish. B. Jonson, Staple of News, II. 1.

A diet of Asses or other Wheyish Milk.
G. Harvey, Vanities of Philosophy and Physick (ed. 1702), xi.

wheyishness (hwā'ish-nes), n. The state or quality of being wheyish. Southey. (Worcester.)

whey-whig (hwā'hwig), n. A pleasant and sharp beverage, made by infusing mint or sage in buttermilk whey. Halliwell.

whey-worm, n. See whay-worm.

whf. An abbreviation of wharf.

which[1] (hwich), pron. [< ME. which, whuch, hwuch (also unassibilated hwu), a reduced form, with loss of orig. l, of whulch, whulch, wilche, hwilch, wulch, hulch, assibilated forms of whilk, whilc, whuic, hwuic (> Sc. whilk, quhilk), < AS. hwile, hwyle, hwelc = OS. hwilik = OFries. hwelik, hwell, hwil = D. welk = MLG. LG. welk = OHG. hwelih, welih, welich, welch, welich, MHG. welch, welch, G. welcher, which, = Icel. hvilikr, of what kind, = Sw. Dan. hvilken, m., hvilket, neut., = Goth. hwileiks, which; < hwa, the stem of AS. hwa, etc., who, + AS. lic, etc., a formative seen also in such, which is closely parallel phonetically to whach, each, etc.] A. interrog. What one of a certain implied number or set? indicating a general knowledge of a certain group of individuals, and seeking for a selection of one or more from that number: thus, which do you want? implying a limitation which is absent from the question what do you want?

Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me? John x. 32.

Who is it that says most? which can say more Than this rich praise, that you alone are you?
Shak., Sonnets, lxxxiv.

Are any of these charges admitted to be true by the friends of the Administration and, if any, which?
D. Webster, Speech in Senate, June 27, 1834.

But which is it to be? Fight or make friends? "Why," says he, "I think it will be the best manner to spin a coin for it."
R. L. Stevenson, Master of Ballantrae, ii.

Used adjectively, with a selective and interrogative force, to limit a noun.

Which from my lord to my lady?
Iras. From which lord to which lady?
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 1. 105.

Me miserable! which way shall I fly Infinite wrath and infinite despair?
Milton, P. L., iv. 73.

In an old exclamatory use, what!

"Lo!" saith holy letterure, "which lordes beth this shrewes, are these wretches," Buthe that god moste gyueth, leste good thei deleth.
Piers Plowman (B), x. 27.

Nay the steward . . . dide as a noble knyght, for the thre Princes seide, "Mercy god, whiche a steward is this!"
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 661.

Which is which? which is the one, which the other? a common phrase implying inability to distinguish between two or more things. Used relatively as well as interrogatively: see the quotation.

The whole mass of buildings is jammed together in a manner that from certain points of view makes it far from apparent which feature is which.
H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 158.

B. rel. 1. As a simple relative pronoun: (a) Who or whom. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Now that I see my lady bright
Which I have loved with all my might.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 970.

The younger sone was Aball was his name,
a Whiche of his enmys had but litill drede.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1922.

Our Father which art in heaven. Matt. vi. 9.

(b) Used with reference to things, and to creatures not persons: the antecedent may also be a phrase or a clause: as, the rain washed away the track, which delayed the train.

This rede pennell ye shall here hym also,
Whiche I myself entrowdred.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 3253.

I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand 1 Cor. xv. 1.

Next to the Guilt with which you wou'd asperse me I scorn you most. Congreve, Way of the World, ii. 3.

There is one likeness without which my gallery of Custom-House portraits would be strangely incomplete
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 21.

Unto her face
She lifts her hand, which rests there, still a space,
Then slowly falls R. W. Gilder, After the Italian.

2. As a compound relative pronoun, having the value of both antecedent and relative: as, you can determine which is better (that is, you can determine that, or the one, which is better).

My nevew shal my bane be,
But which I noot [know not], wherefore I wol be siker.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2060

Are not you
Which is above all joys, my constant friend?
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iii. 2.

Even a casual reading of the statistics given above will show, it is believed, which is the more probable Amer. Jour. Philol., X. 339.

Which* is used adjectively (a) With the sense of 'what sort of.'

Had thei wist witterli whiche help god hem sente,
Al hire gref in-to game gayuli schold haue turned.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2766.

But herkeneth me, and stinteth now a lyte
Which a miracle ther bifel anon.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1817.

(b) As indicating one of a number of known or specified things: as, be careful which way you turn Never to unfold to any one Which casket 'twas I chose

Shak., M. of V., ii. 9. 11.

[Which was formerly used as a clause connective, along with a personal pronoun which took its place as subject or object, and rendered it redundant save as to its relative value: as, which . . . he = who, which . . . his = whose.

Lo! this is he,
Which that myn uncle which he moot be dede,
But I on hym have mercy and pite
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 634

The Kynges dere sone,
The goode, wyse, worthy, fresshe, and free,
Which alwey for to don wel is his woone
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 318.

He that will mould a modern Bishop into a primitive must yeeld him to be elected by the popular voyce in a diocesse, unreveal'd, unlorded, and leave him nothing but brotherly equality, matchless temperance, frequent fasting, incessant prayer, and preaching continual watchings, and labours in his Ministery, which what a rich bootie it would be what a plump endowment to the many benefice-gaping mouth of a Prelate!
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

A relic of this construction survives in the vulgar use of which as a general introductory word.

"That noble young fellow," says my general; "that noble, noble Philip Firmin!" Which noble his conduct I own it has been.
Thackeray, Philip, xvi.

Which I wish to remark
That for ways that are dark
The heathen Chinee is peculiar.
Which the same I would rise to explain.
Bret Harte, Plain Language from Truthful James.

Which* was formerly often followed by that or as, having the effect of giving emphasis or definiteness.

This is not which that was no holy man Chaucer.)

The which. (a) Who or whom

Quod she ageyn to Mirabell here mayde
"The same is he, the whiche I love so well."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2712.

(b) Redundant for which

Lo herte myne! as wolde the excellence
Of love ageyn the whiche that no man may Ne ought ek goodly maken resistence
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1703

What is the cause of this great arising of the sands and shelves here about this haven, the which stop it up that no ships can arrive here
Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550 which†† (hwich), n. [< ME. whiche, whyche, whuche, var. of huche, etc.: see hutch.] 1. A chest. Halliwell.

"Rede me not," quod Reson, "reuthe to Lane.
Til herdes and fulles loues alle treuthe,
And Fernelee portyl be put in heore whuche."
Piers Plowman (A), iv. 102.

2. Specifically, a movable wagon-box.

In this case the which is the movable box belonging to the tumbrel, which was separated from it, and, when required, was placed upon the tumbrel, to carry dung or such other materials as could not be hauled upon a mere skeleton of wheels and shafts. N. and Q., 7th ser., X. 475.

whichever (hwich-ev'er), pron. [< which[1] + ever.] Whether one or the other; no matter which.

Which-ever of the Notions be true, the Unity of Milton's Action is preserved according to either of them.
Addison, Spectator, No. 327.

Whichever of his children might become the popular choice was to inherit the whole kingdom, under the same superiority of the head of the family Hallam.

whichsoever (hwich-so-ev'er), pron. [< which[1] + soever.] Same as whichever

New torments I behold and new tormented Around me, whichsoever way I move,
And whichsoever way I turn, and gaze Longfellow, tr. of Dante's Inferno, vi. 5.

whick (hwik), a. A dialectal variant of quick.

whickfaw (hwik'fâ), n. [A dial. var. of "quickflaw, < quick, the living, sensitive flesh, as under the nails (cf. kvika, kvikva, the flesh under the nails, and in animals under the hoofs), + flaw, a crack, breach: see quick and flaw[1]. Hence, by corruption, whitflaw, whitlow: see whitlow.] A swelling or inflammation about the nails or ends of the fingers; paronychia; whitlow. See whitlow. [Prov. Eng.]

whid[1] (hwid), n. [So also quhid, quhyd: cf. W. chwid, a quick turn, chwidio, jerk. Cf. also AS. hwiðe, a breeze, cr. Icel. hviða, a puff.] A quick motion; a rapid, noiseless movement. [Scotch.]

And jinkin' hares, in amorous whids, Their loves enjoy Burns, To W. Simpson.

whid[1] (hwid), v. t.; pret. and pp. whidded, ppr. whidding. [Cf. whid, n.] 1. To whisk; send; move nimbly, as a hare or other small animal.

Ye mauking whiddin thro' the glade
Burns, Elegy on Capt. Matthew Henderson.

That creature whids about frae place to place, like a hen on a hot girdle. Saxon and Gael, III. 106. (Jamieson.)

2. To filch; lift. [Scotch in both uses.]

whid[2] (hwid), n. [Perhaps a dial. form, alt. < AS. cwide, a saying, < cwe'than, say: see quethe.] 1. A word. Harman, Caveat for Cursetors, p. 116. [Thieves' and Gipsies' cant.] —2. A lie; a fib. [Scotch.]

A rousing whid at times to vend,
And nail't wi' Scripture!
Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook.

3. A dispute; a quarrel. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

To cut bene (or boon) whids, to speak good words.

"Pease, I pray thee, good Wayland!" said the host; "credit me, the swaggering vein will not pass here; you must cut boon whids."
Scott, Kenilworth, x.

whid[3] (hwid), v. t.; pret. and pp. whidded, ppr. whidding. [< whid[2], n.] To lie, fib. [Scotch.]

whidah (hwid'ä), n. [Also whydah, whidaw, whydaw; short for whidah-bird; < Whidah, Whydah, the chief seaport of Dahomey, West Africa.] Same as whidah bird. Whidah thrush See thrush.

whidah-bird (hwid'ä-bėrd), n. [Also whydah-bird, widow bird; < Whidah, a locality in Dahomey, where the birds abound. See whidah, and widow-bird.] An obscure passerine bird of Africa, belonging to the family Ploceidæ or weaver-birds, and subfamily Viduinæ in a strict sense, and especially to the genus Vidua, or one of two or three closely related genera. They are small birds, about as large as a canary, of which they have several features; the tail in most of the species is lengthened and variously shaped, there being a double or single feather, or a pair of them, so elongated as to be twice or thrice the length of the body. Any one of them is also called whidah finch, whidah widow-bird, and simply whidah or widow as well as in the fuller compounds. The cock in breeding-plumage is variously colored and figured, the hen usually dull-colored and streaked. See Vidua, and cut under Penthetria. The king whidah bird is Coliuspasser procne; the paradise whidah bird is Steganura paradisea; the pin-tailed whidah bird is Vidua principalis; the yellow-winged whidah bird is Vidua serena; the long-tailed whidah bird is Coliuspasser ardens, the male of which is 12 inches long, with a tail of 8½, and has the plumage nearly uniform black normally varied with a scarlet (sometimes orange) necklace or collar on the fore-neck. The female is quite different, and only 4½ inches long. This bird has been known for more than a century.

Paradise Whidah bird (Steganura paradisea), male.

and has acquired an extensive and intricate synonymy, chiefly of worthless New Latin names. The other whidah here figured is also South African, and has in the male a train of several long tail-feathers resembling in development and in general effect the upper tail-coverts of the paradise-trogon, it is also very large, the male being about 19 inches long. This is Chera procne, the epaulet whidah, so called from the scarlet shoulders, in translation of a French name. Its original technical name was Emberiza procne of Boddaert 1783, whence Chera procne of most modern writers) and it used to be called Emberiza or Fringilla or Vidua longicauda, and Linota or Fringilla or Chera cafra, but it is a monotype whose synonymy presents no serious difficulty. It inhabits from Cape Colony to Natal and the Transvaal and also to Benguela. Other whidah birds are noted under Vidua (which see).

whidah-finch (hwid'ä finch), n. A whidah-bird. Also widow finch.

whidder (hwid'er), v. t. [Cf. whid[1].] 1. To shake; tremble. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To whid; whizz. [Scotch.]

He heard the bows that baudly ring,
And arrows whidderin hym near hi Song o' the Outlaw Murray (Child's Ballads, VI. 251).

whiew, v. t. See whew, 1.

whiff[1] (hwif), n. [Cf. W. chwiff, a whiff, puff, chwiffio, puff, chwyff, a gust; Dan. vift, a puff, gust. Cf. also waff[1], puff, puff, G. piff, paff, similar imitative words. Hence whiffle.] 1. A slight blast or gust of air, especially, a puff of air conveying some smell.

Perdus at Drum drives in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unseen'd father falls. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 495.

For when it (my nose) does get hold of a pleasant whiff of air . . . it's generally from somebody else's dinner, a-coming home from the bakehouse. Dickens, Chimes, i.

2†. A quick inhalation of air, and especially of smoke; a drawing or drinking in of smoke; also, a draught or drink as of wine or liquid.

To entertain the most gentlemanlike use of tobacco; the very corollary and practice of the Cuban ebullition, curipus and whiff.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 1.

Whiff indeed seems to be a dull, prosing account of tobacco in the Queen's Arcadia from which (as well as from what our author says elsewhere) it would seem to be either a swallowing of the smoke or a retaining it in the throat for a given space of time.
Gifford, Note to the above passage.

Then he blew short his several takes, taking it [tobacco] as the whiff, the ring, &c., for these are compliments that gain gentlemen's acceptance.
Decker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 129.

I will yet go drink one whiff more.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 6.

3. A sudden expulsion of an smoke or the like from the mouth; a puff.

Four Pipes after Dinner he constantly smokes,
And as soon as he Whiffs with ingenious Jokes.
From Epigram.

The skipper he blew a whiff from his pipe.
Longfellow, Wreck of the Hesperus.

4. A hasty view, a glimpse; a glift. [Prov. Eng.]—5. At Oxford and other places on the Thames, a light kind of outrigger boat. It is rowed both throughout Christ-Church, which is a racing boat usually of cedar, and covered with canvas for some distance at the bow and stern. Encyc. Dict.

The whiff is a vessel which recommends itself to few save the nobility's freshmen. It combines the disadvantages of a dingey and a skiff, with the excellences of neither. Dickens's Dict. Oxford, p. 19.

Oral whiff = Drummond's whiff. See oral.

whiff[1] (hwif), v. [See whiff[1], n.] I. intrans. 1. To puff; blow; produce or emit a puff or whiff.

When, through their green boughs whiffing winds do whirl,
With wanton puffe the ir waving locks to curl
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 2.

2. To drink. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To puff; puff out; exhale; blow: as to whiff out rings of smoke.—2. To carry as by a slight blast or whiff of wind.

Old Empedocles a way, who, when he leapt into Ætna having a dry scur body, and light, the smoke took him and whift him up into the moon
B. Jonson, World in the Moon

How was it scornfully whiffed aside!
Carlyle, French Rev., I. v. 7

3†. To draw in; imbibe; inhale: said of air or smoke, and frequently of liquids also.

Every skull
And skip-lacke now will have his pipe of smoke,
And whiff it bravely till he choke to choke Times Whistle, l. 1. 8, p. 71

In this season we might press and make the wine and in winter whiff it up Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, I. 25.

whiff[2] (hwif), n. [Origin obscure.] An anacanthine or malacopterygious fish of the family Pleuronectidæ, a kind of flatfish or flounder, the Cynicoglossus microcephalus, found in British waters; the smear-dab, sail-fluke, or mary-sole.

whiff[3] (hwif), v. t. [An error for whip, v. t., 2.] To fish, as for mackerel, with a hand-line. See whiffing, n.

One might as well argue that, because bits of red flannel or of tobacco-pipe are highly successful baits in whiffing for Mackerel, therefore those substances form a "favourite food" of this fish Nature, XLI. 38 whiffer (hwif'ėr), n. [< whiff[1] + -er[1].] One who whiffs.

Great tobacco whiffers,
They would go near to rob with a pipe in their mouths
Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, iv. 1

whiffet (hwif'et), n. [< whiff[1] + -et.] 1. A little whiff. Imp. Dict. [Rare.] 2. A whipper-snapper; a whipster; any insignificant or worthless person. [U. S.]

The sneaks, whiffets, and surface rats Philadelphia Times, Aug. 1, 1883.

whiffing (hwif'ing), n. [Verbal n. of whiff[3], v.] 1. Surface fishing with a hand line.

Whiffing, the process of slowly towing the bait (sculling or pulling in the known haunts of the fish).
Field, Dec. 26 1885 (Encyc. Dict.)

It [the whiffing] is often caught by whiffing, when it gives good sport. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 273.

2. A kind of hand line used for taking mackerel, pollack, and the like.

whiffing-tackle (hwif'ing-tak'l), n. The tackle used in whiffing; surface tackle.

whiffle (hwif'l), v.; pret. and pp. whiffled, ppr. whiffling. [Freq. of whiff[1]; perhaps confused with waffle, waver.] I. intrans. 1. To blow in gusts; hence, to veer about, as the wind.

Two days before this storm began, the Wind whiffled about to the South, and back again to the East, and blew very faintly Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 98

Seizing a shovel, he went by the back door to the front of the house, at a spot where the whiffling winds had left the earth nearly bare [of snow], and commenced his subnivean work. S. Judd, Margaret, I. 17.

2. To change from one opinion or course to another; use evasions; prevaricate; be fickle or unsteady; waver.

A person of a whiffling and unsteady turn of mind, who cannot keep close to a point of a controversy
Watts, Improvement of the Mind, I. ix. § 7

3. To trifle; talk idly. Phillips, 1706; Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

I am not like those officious and importunate sots who, by force, outrage, and violence constrain an easy, good natured fellow to whiffle, quaff, carouse, and what is worse. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, iii. 1. Pref.

II. trans. 1. To disperse with a puff; blow away; scatter.

Such as would whiffle away all these truths by resolving them into a mere moral allegory
Dr. H. More, Epistles to the Seven Churches, iv. in Enthus.

2. To cause to change, as from one opinion or course to another.

Every man ought to be stedfast and unmoveable in Credit (the main things of religion), and not suffer himself to be whiffled out of them by an insignificant noise about the infallibility of a visible church Fuller, Holy War, v. 15.

3. To shake or wave quickly. Dunton.

whiffler (hwif'ler), n. [< whiffle, v., in sense of orig. verb.] A fife.

Whiffler, . . . one that plays on a Whiffle or Fife Bailey, 1727.

whiffler (hwif'ler), n. [< whiffle + -er[1].] 1†. A piper or fifer.

His former vocation was in the faire about the Jugglers now he is at the Pageants among the Whifflers.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

2†. A herald or usher: a person who leads the way, or prepares the way, for another: probably so called because the pipers (see piper[1], 1) usually led the procession.

The deep mouth'd sea,
Which like a mighty whiffler fore the king
Seems to prepare his way.
Shak., Hen. V., v., cho., l. 12

The term [whiffler] is undoubtedly borrowed from whiffle, another name for a fife or small flute; for whifflers were originally those who preceded armies or processions as fifers or pipers. F. Douce, Illus. of Shakespeare, p. 311

I can go in no corner but I meet with some of my whiffler's in their accoutrements
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, iii. 1

The Whifflers of your inferior and Chiefe companies cheere the ways before him
Dekker, Seven Deadly Sins, p. 43

Before the dame, and round about,
March'd whifflers and staffiers on foot.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. 620.

3. One who whiffles, one who changes frequently his opinion or course; one who uses shifts and evasions in argument; a fickle or unsteady person.

Your right whiffler indeed hangs himself in Saint Martin's, and not in Cheapside
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1

Every whiffler in a laced coat . . . shall talk of the constitution. Swift.

4. A puffer of tobacco; a whiffer. Halliwell.—5. The whistle-wing, or goldeneye duck. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Maryland.]

whifflery (hwif'lėr-i), n. The characteristics or habits of a whiffler; trifling; levity.

Life is no frivolity, or hypothetical coquetry or whifflery Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, iii.

whiffletree (hwif'l-trē), n. [< whiffle, turn, + tree. Cf. whippletree, swingletree.] Same as swingletree.

whift (hwift), n. [Var. of whiff[1].] A whiff or waft; a breath; a snatch. [Rare.]

A sweep of lutestrings, laughs, and whifts of song.
Browning, Fra Lippo Lippi

whig[1] (hwig), n. 1. Sour whey. Brockett. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

With green cheese, clouted cream, with flawns and custard stored, Whig cider, and with whey I domineer a lord
Drayton, Muses' Elysium, vi.

Drinke Whig and sowre Milke, whilest I rince my Throat
With Burdeaux and Canarie
Heywood, English Traveller (ed. Pearson), I. 2.

2. Buttermilk. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whig[2] (hwig), v.; pret. and pp. whigged, ppr. whigging. [Cf. Sc. whaggle, var. of waggle: see waggle.] I. intrans. To move at an easy and steady pace; jog. [Scotch.]

The Solemn League and Covenant
Came whigging up the hills, man.
Battle of Killiecrankie (Child's Ballads, VII. 155).

To whig awa' wi', to drive briskly on with. Jamieson.

I remember hearing a Highland farmer in Eskdale, after giving minute directions to those who drove the hearse of his wife how they were to cross some boggy land, concluded, "Now, lads, whig awa' wi' her!"
Scott. (Jamieson.)

II. trans. To urge forward, as a horse. [Scotch.]

whig[3] (hwig), n. and a. [Formerly also whigg, prob. short for whiggamore, q. v.] I. n. 1. One of the adherents of the Presbyterian cause in Scotland about the middle of the seventeenth century: a name given in derision.

When to the teeth they dard our Whigs,
An' covenant true blues, man
Burns, Battle of Sheriff Muir.

I doubt I'll hae to tak the hills wi the wild whigs as they ca them, and be shot down like a mawkin at some dyke-side Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

2. [cap.] A member of one of the two great political parties of Great Britain, the other being the Tories (after the Conservatives). The Whigs were the successors of the Roundheads of the Civil War and the Country party of the Restoration. The name was given to them as early as 1679 as a reproach by their opponents, the Court party, through a desire to confound them with the rebel Whigs of Scotland (see whig[3], 1). The Whigs favored the Revolution of 1688–9, and governed Great Britain for a long period in the eighteenth century. In general they may be called the party of progress, one of their principal achievements was the passage of the Reform Bill in 1832. About the same time the name Whig began to be replaced by Liberal, though still retained to denote the more conservative members of the Liberal party: see Liberal Party.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom, even enough to serve them round the year. And . . . those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith (the stores that come from the north). And from a word, Whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whiggamors, and shorter the Whigs. Now in that year, after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the Ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh. And they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argile and his party came and headed them, they being about 6,000. This was called the Whiggamor's inroad. And ever after that all that opposed the Court came in contempt to be called Whiggs. And from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, I. 56.

I hate a Whig so much that I'll throw my Husband out of his Election, or throw myself out of the World! a Parcel of canting Rogues; they have always Moderation in their Mouths, rank Resistance in their Hearts—and hate Obedience even to their lawful Wives.
Mrs. Centlivre, Gotham Election, I. 1.

The prejudice of the Tory is for establishment; the prejudice of the Whig is for innovation. "A Tory does not wish to give more real power to Government, but that Government should have more reverence. Then they differ as to the Church. The Tory is not for giving more legal power to the Clergy, but wishes they should have a considerable influence, founded on the opinion of mankind; the Whig is for limiting and watching them with a narrow jealousy.
Johnson, in Boswell, an. 1781.

3. [cap.] In Amer. hist.: (a) A member of the patriotic party during the revolutionary period.

The Hessians and other foreigners, looking upon that as the right of war, plunder wherever they go, from both Whigs and Tories, without distinction.
Robert Morris, Dec. 21, 1776, quoted in Lecky's Eng. in [18th Cent., xiv.

(b) One of a political party in the United States which grew up, in opposition to the Democratic party, out of the National Republican party. It was first called the Whig party in 1834. Its original principles were extension of nationalizing tendencies, and support of the United States Bank, of a protective tariff, and of a system of internal improvements at national expense. It won the presidential elections of 1840 and 1848, but soon after divided upon the slavery question. It lost its last national election in 1852, and soon after many of its members became temporarily members of the American and Constitutional Union parties but eventually most of its northern members became Republicans, most of its southern members Democrats. Conscience-Whig, in U. S. hist., in the last days of the Whig party, one of those northern Whigs who were disposed to regard the compromise of 1850 as a final settlement of the slavery question, so called from their conscientious objections to such compromises with slavery. Cotton-Whig, in U. S. hist., in the last days of the Whig party, one of those northern Whigs who were disposed to regard the compromise of 1850 as a final settlement of the slavery question, so called from their supposed partiality to the cotton interest.

II. a. Relating to or composed of Whigs, in any use of that word; whiggish: as, Whig measures; a Whig ministry.

The hope that America would supply the main materials for the suppression of the revolt [the American Revolution] proved wholly chimerical. One of the first acts of the Whig party in every colony was to disarm Tories.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv.

The Whig party was always opposed to slavery. But there was a broad and well understood distinction between Whig opponents of slavery and the fanatical Abolitionists. T. W. Barnes, Thurlow Weed, p. 508.

whig[4] (hwig), n. A variant of wig[2]. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

A cook whose recipes were hopelessly old-fashioned, and who had an exasperating belief in the sufficiency of buttered whigs and home-made marmalade for all requirements. Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, ii.

whiggamore (hwig'a-mōr), n. [Also whiggamor, whigamore, according to Burnet, derived from whiggam, as used by the men orig. called whiggamores (def. 1) in driving their horses; whiggam is a dubious word, appar. connected with whig[2], jog: see whig[2]. In the glossary to the Waverley novels whiggamore is defined "a great whig," appar. implying a derivation < whig[3] + Gael. mor, great; whereas the evidence indicates that whig[4] is an abbr. of whiggamore. No Gael. form that could be the base of whiggamore appears; but it may be a perverted form from an original not now obvious.] 1. A person who came from the west and southwest of Scotland to Leith to buy corn. See the quotation from Bishop Burnet, under Whig[3], 2.—2. One of the people of the west of Scotland who marched to Edinburgh in 1648, their expedition being called the whiggamores' inroad (see the quotation referred to in def. 1). Hence—3. A Scotch Presbyterian; one of the party opposed to the court; a whig.

There at Rothwell Brigg was he and that sour whiggamore they ca'ed Burley. Scott, Old Mortality, xxxvii.

whiggarchy (hwig'är-ki), n. [< whig[3] + Gr. -αρχία, rule.] Government by Whigs. [Rare.]

They will not recognise any other government in Great Britain but whiggarchy only.
Swift, App. to Conduct of the Allies.

whiggery (hwig'ėr-i), n. [< whig[3] + -ery.] The principles or practices of Whigs: first applied to the Scottish Presbyterian doctrine, and generally used as a term of contempt.

whiggery I'll hae nae whiggery in the barony of Tillietudlem — the finest thing we'd be to set up a conventicle in my very withdrawing room. Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

Our friend was a hearty toper in the days of his Whiggery, but no sooner turned one of the tantest of Tories than he took to the teapot. It seems a thing against nature. Noctes Ambrosianæ, Sept., 1832.

whiggification (hwig'i-fi-ka'shen), n. [< whig[3] + -ification.] A making or becoming whiggish. [Humorous.]

We were all along against the whiggification of the Tory system. Noctes Ambrosianæ, Sept., 1832.

whiggish (hwig'ish), a. [< whig[3] + -ish[1].] Of or pertaining to whigs, in any application of the name; partaking of the principles of whigs.

To the shame and grief of every whiggish, loyal, and true Protestant heart. Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

whiggishly (hwig'ish-li), adv. In a whiggish manner.

Being whiggishly inclined, [Thomas Cox] was deprived of that Office in Oct., 1683. Wood, Fasti Oxon., II. 54.

whiggishness (hwig'ish-nes), n. The character of being whiggish; whiggery.

Mr Walpole has himself that trait of Whiggishness which peculiarly fits him to paint the portrait of the chief of the Whigs. The Academy, Nov. 16, 1889, p. 311.

whiggism (hwig'izm), n. [< whig[3] + -ism.] The principles of the whigs; whiggery.

As if whiggism were an admirable cordial in the mass, though the several ingredients are rank poisons. Dryden, Vind. of Duke of Guise.

whigling (hwig'ling), n. [< whig[3] + -ling[1].] A whig, in any sense; used in contempt. Spectator. (Imp. Dict.) whigmaleerie, whigmeleerie (hwig-ma-, hwig-me-lē'ri), n. [Also whigmaleery; origin obscure; appar. a fantastic name.] Any fantastical ornament; a trinket; a knickknack; also, a whim or crotchet. Also used attributively. [Scotch.]

Some fewer whigmaleeries in your noddle. Burns, Brigs of Ayr.

Ah! it 's a brave kirk — nane o' yare whigmaleeries and curliewurlies and open-steek hems about it — a solid, weel jointed mason work. Scott, Rob Roy, xix.

I met ane very honest, fair-spoken, weel put on gentle man, . . . that was in the whigmaleery man's [silversmith's] back shop. Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, iii.

whigship (hwig'ship), n. [< whig[3] + -ship.] Whiggism. [Rare.]

People of your cast in politics are fond of vilifying our country. Is this your Whigship? Landor, Imag. Conv., Johnson and John Horne (Tooke).

while[1] (hwīl), n. [< ME. while, whil, whyle, quile, wile, hwile, < AS. hwil, a time, = OS. hwila = OFries. hwile, wile = D. wijl = MG. wile = OHG. wila, MHG. wile, G. weile, time, period or point of time, hour, = Icel. hvila, place of rest, bed, = Sw. hvila = Dan. hvile, rest, = Goth. hweila, a time, season; perhaps akin to OBulg. počiti, rest, L. quies, rest: see quiet.] 1. A time; a space of time; especially, a short space of time during which something happens or is to happen or be done.

Many a tyme he layd hym downe,
And shot another whyle
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 9).

Yes, signior, thou art even he we speak of all this while.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 1.

In the primeval age a dateless while
The vacant Shepherd wander'd with his flock.
Coleridge, Religious Musings.

2. Time spent upon anything; expenditure of time, and hence of pains or labor; trouble: as, to do it is not worth one's while.

A clerk hadde litherly biset (evilly spent) his whyle,
But if he koude a carpenter bigyle.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 119.

If Jehosaie doth thee payne,
Quyte hym his while thou agayne.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4592.

Woe the while
That brought such wanderer to our isle!
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 15.

What Cambridge saw not strikes us yet
As scarcely worth one's while to see.
Lowell, To Holmes.

Alas the while. See alas. Every once in a while. See every. In the mean while. See mean[3], 3. The while, the whiles[1], during the time something else is going on; in the mean time, from this expression the conjunctive use is derived.

So the body spekе so Right as hit wonеd was to do.
The whylе that it was on lyve?
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 161.

The whiles with hollow throates,
The Choristers the joyous Anthems sing.
Spenser, Epithalamion, l. 220.

If you'll sit down,
I'll bear your logs the while.
Shak., Tempest, iii. 1. 24.

Worth while, worth the time which it requires; worth the time and pains, worth the trouble and expense. See def. 2, above.

What fate has disposed of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.

Hen. don't you think it worth while to agree in the lie? Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

while[1] (hwīl), conj. and adv. [< ME. while, whil, whyl, hwile, etc. (= MHG. wile, G. weil, because); abbr. of the orig. phrase the while that, < AS. thet hwile the (MHG. die wile, G. die weil), 'the while that,' where hwile is acc. of hwil, while, time (other constructions also being used; cf. D. terwijl, G. derweil, while, orig. genitive): see while, n.] I. conj. 1. During or in the time that; as long as.

While I have tyme and space, . . .
Me thynketh it accordaunt to reason
To telle you. Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 35.

While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home.
Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 178.

While you were catering for Mirabell I have been Broker for you. Congreve, Way of the World, v. 1.

While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand.
Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 145.

2. At the same time that: often used adversatively.

He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 3. 6.

While we condemn the politics, we cannot but respect the principles of the man. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 25.

3. Till; until. [Now prov. Eng. and U. S.]

We will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone; while then, God be with you!
Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 44.

A younger brother, but in some disgrace
Now with my friends, and want some little means
To keep me upright, while things be reconciled.
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, i. 2.

At Maltby there lived, some years ago, a retired druggist. The boys' Sunday school was confided to his management, and he had a way of appealing to them when they were disorderly which is still quoted by those who often heard it. "Now, boys, I can't do nothing while you are quiet." J. Eagle.

Syn. 2. While, Though. While implies less of contrast in the parallel than though, sometimes, indeed, implying no contrast at all. Thus we say, "While I admire his bravery, I esteem his moderation," but "though I admire his courage I detest his cruelty."

II. † adv. At times; sometimes; now and then: used in correlation as while . . . while. Compare whiles, adv.

Gode wrake cumeth on this worold to wrekende on sinfulle men here guiltes, . . . hinnett hem hwile over cattle, . . . hwile here hele (health). (Ureisun of Wrenches, in Old Eng. Misc., p. 179.

while[2] (hwīl), v.; pret. and pp. whiled, ppr. whiling. [< ME. hwilen, in comp. thwilen = OHG. wilon, MHG. wilen, sojourn, stay, rest, G. weilen, linger, loiter, stay, = Icel. hvila = Sw. hvila = Dan. hvile, rest, = Goth. hweilan, pause a while, cease: from the noun, in the orig. sense as in Goth. weila, pause, rest: see while[1].] I. trans. 1. To cause to pass; spend; consume; kill, said of time: usually followed by away.

So do I beg this slender inch to while
The time away. Quarles, Emblems, iii. 12.

And all the day
The weaver plies his shuttle, and whiles away
The peaceful hours with songs of battles past.
R. H. Stoddard, History.

2†. To occupy the time of; busy; detain.

Still lakes, the sea-woods, and varieties of Continent do sometimes have thus long whiled us. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 707.

II. intrans. To pass; elapse, as time. [Rare.]

They . . . must necessarily fly to new acquisitions of beauty to pass away the whiling moments and intervals of life; for with them every hour is heavy that is not joyful. Steele, Spectator, No. 532.

whilear, conj. [< while[1] + ar[1].] While.

But Lara, on not his grief assuage, whilear his days en dureth.

† see the Changes of this Age which day and time procureth.
Nicholas Burne, in Roxburghe Ballads (ed. Ebsworth), VI. 600.

whilemeal†, adv. [ME. whilmele < while[1] + -meal as in piecemeal, steadmeal: see -meal.] By turns; by courses, as in time.

Be ordeyn to wende hem into the west, ten thousand to ese at ones, whilmele so that two myrthe whilmele thei weren [were] to-geder. Wyclif, 1 Kings, i. 14.

whilend†, a. Passing; transient, transitory. Compare whilere, a.

For that hwilende lust There to ne-delen pine [pain].
Hali Meidenhad (ed. L.), p. 25.

This world fareth hwilynde
Hweome on cumeth other geth.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 94.

whilenest, n. [ME. whilenes; < while[3] + -ness.] Time as vicissitude; transitoriness; change. [Rare.]

Anentis whom is not mercechaungingo, nether schadowing of whilenes, or tyme [L. necvarietatis obumbratio].
Wyclif, Jas. i. 17.

Though cure might & cure wonhed matutene to gedur?
What whilenes, or wanspede, with vice [overpower] our nende?
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2927.

whilere† (hwīl'ār'), adv. [Early mod. E. also whilere, whylere, < ME. while er, whyl ere (whil[1] + ere[1].] A little while ago; hitherto; some time ago; erewhile.

Whil ere thu had I shuld rede the thy shuld,
And now me think thu hast nede of on,
For neyther spere ne shuld that thu may weld.
Gawayne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2361.

Whose learned Muse thou cherisht most whilere.
J. Bryskett (After's Eng. Garner, I. 279).

whiles (hwīlz), conj. and adv. [< ME. whiles, whyles, quyles, etc., adverbial gen. of hwil (reg. gen. hwile), while: see while[1]. Cf. whilst.] I.† conj. While; during the time that; as long as; at the same time that.

Withowttene chaungynge in chace, thise ware the chefe armes
Of Arthure the avenaunt, quyhylles he in erthe lengede.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3504.

Whiles they are weake, bettimes with them contend.
Spenser, F. Q., II. iv. 34.

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him. Mat. v. 25.

II. adv. At times. [Scotch.]

I tuk his body on my back,
And whiles I gaed, and whiles I satt.
The Lament of the Border Widows (Child's Ballads, III. 87).

Many a time I hae helped Jenny Deuchars out o' the winnock, forbye creeping in whiles myself.
Scott, Old Mortality, xxv.

whilesast, conj. [< whiles + as[1].] Same as whileas. [Rare.]

Whose noble acts renowned were Whilesas he lived everywhere.
Ford, Fame's Memorial, Epitaphs.

whilk[1], n. Another form of whelk[2], properly welk, wilk.

whilk[2] (hwilk), pron. and a. An obsolete or Scotch form of which[1].

"What, whilk way is he gone?" he gan to crie.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 162.

whilk[3] (hwilk), n. The scoter, Œdemia nigra, Montagu. See cut under scoter. [Local, Brit.]

whilly (hwil'i), v. t.; pret. and pp. whillied, ppr. whillying. [A dial. form, perhaps a mixture of wile[1] with wheedle.] To cajole by wheedling; whilly wha. [Scotch.]

Those baptised Idols of theirs brought pike-staves and sandalled shoon from all the four winds and whillied the old women out of their corn and their candle ends.
Scott, Abbot, xvi.

whilly-wha, whilly-whaw (hwil'i hwâ), v. [Appar. a mere extension of whilly.] I. intrans. To use cajolery or make wheedling speeches. [Scotch.]

What, man! the life of a king and many thousands besides is not to be weighed with the chance of two young things whilly-whawing in ilk other's ears for a minute.
Scott, Quentin Durward, xxxi.

II. trans. To cajole; wheedle; delude with specious pretenses. [Scotch.]

Wylie Mactrickit the writer . . . canna whilli-wha me as he 's done mony a ane. Scott, Old Mortality, xl.

whilly-wha, whilly-whaw (hwil'i-hwâ), n. and a. [< whilly-wha, v.] I. n. A wheedling speech; cajolery.

I wish ye binna beginning to learn the way of blawing in a woman's lug, wi' a your whilly-whaws!
Scott, Old Mortality, v.

II. a. Cajoling, wheedling; smooth-tongued. [Scotch.]

Because he 's a whilly-whaw body and has a plausible tongue of his own, they have made him Provost!
Scott, Redgauntlet, xii.

whilom (hwī'lom), adv. and conj. [Early mod. E. also whilome, whylome, < ME. whilom, whilome, whylom, whilum, whilon, hwilum, whilen, hwilen, wilen, < AS. hwilum, at times, sometimes (hwilum . . . hwilum, now . . . then), dat. or instr. pl. of hwil, time, point of time.] I. adv. 1. At times; by times.

Anciently to the Lepe that Illyne Le-gedere Whilome Arthure over and other wilde undyre.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1145.

2. Once; formerly; once upon a time.

Whylom as olde stories tellen us,
Ther was a duk that highte Theseus.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1.

Here is Imperonde also, whilome bearing the proude name of an Empire. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 339.

For see Apollo, with outwearied hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate.
Milton, Death of a Fair Infant.

Whilome thou camest with the morning mist.
Tennyson, Memory.

Sometimes used adjectively.

The fickle queen caused her whilom favorite to be beheaded. W. S. Gregg, Irish Hist. for Eng. Readers, p. 50.

II.† conj. While.

At last he cals to minde a man of fashion,
With whom his father held much conversation
Whilome he livde
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 121.

whilst (hwilst), conj. and adv. [Formerly also whilest, < whiles + t excrescent after s as in amidst, amongst, betwixt, etc.] Same as while[1], or whiles, in all its senses.

I could soon . . . reckon up such a rabble of shoulders, that he named here and there in poets, as would hold us talking whilst to-morrow
Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 74.

To him one of the other twins was bound Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.
Shak., C. of E., I. 1. 63.

Whilest the Grape lasteth they drinke wine
Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 84.

We find ourselves unable to avoid joining in the merriment of our friends, whilst unaware of Its cause
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 115.

The whilst†. (a) While

If he steal aught the whilst this play is playing Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2. 98.

(b) In the mean time

I'll call Sir Toby the whilst.
Shak. T. N., iv. 2. 4.

And watch'd, the whilst, with visage pale
And throbbing heart, the struggling sail Scott, L. of L. M., vi. 21.

whim[1] (hwim), v.; pret. and pp. whimmed, ppr. whimming. [< Icel. hvima, wander with the eyes, as a silly person does, = Norw. kvima, whisk or flutter about, trifle, play the fool; cf. Sw. dial. hvimmer-kantig, dizzy, swimming in the head; cf. also W. chwimial, be in motion, chwimlo, move briskly; MHG. wimmen (= G. wimmeln), move.] I. intrans. To turn round; be seized with a whim: also with an indefinite it.

My Head begins to whim it about Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 9.

II. trans. To turn; cause to turn; turn off or away.

He complained that he had for a long season been in as good a way as he could almost wish, but he knew not how he came to be whimmed off from it, as his expression was
R. Ward, Life of Dr. H. More. (Latham)

whim[1] (hwim), n. [< whim[1], v. Cf. Icel. rim, giddiness, folly. Cf. also whimsy.] 1. An unexpected or surprising turn; a startling outcome, development, or proceeding; a prank or freak.

One told a Gentleman
His son should be a man killer, and hang'd for't,
Who, after proved a great and rich Physician,
And with great Fame th' University
Hang'd up in Picture for a grave example.
There was the whim of that. Quite contrary!
Brome, Jovial Crew, i.

2. A sudden turn or inclination of the mind; a fancy; a caprice.

If You have these Whims of Apartments and Gardens,
From twice fifty Acres you'll ne'er see five Farthings.
Prior, Down Hall, st. 42.

Ichabod, on the contrary, had to win his way to the heart of a country coquette, beset with a labyrinth of whims and caprices, which were for ever presenting new difficulties and impediments. Irving, Sketch Book, p. 430.

3. A simple machine for raising ore from mines of moderate depth. It consists of a vertical shaft carrying a drum, with arms to which horses may be attached and by which it may be turned. The hoisting rope, passing over pulleys, is wound or unwound on the drum, according to the direction of the horse's motion. Also whim-gin, whim-jin, and, in England, gin.

Whim.

a, frame; b, shaft; c, arm; d, drum; e, pulley; f, hoisting rope.

4. Hence, a mine, as, Tully Whim, in the Isle of Purbeck, England. 5. A round table that turns round upon a screw. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] = Syn. 1 and 2. Freak, etc. (see freak[2]). 3. humor, crotchet, quirk, whimsy, vagary.

whim[2] (hwim), v. [Origin obscure.] The brow of a hill. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whim[3] (hwim), n. [Cf. whimbrel, whimmer.] The widgeon or whewer, Mareca penelope. See whew, duck. Montagu. [Prov. Eng.]

whimbrel (hwim'brel), n. [Also wimbrel; perhaps for "whimmerel, so called with ref. to its peculiar cry, < whimmer + -el.] The jack-curlew or half-curlew of Europe, Numenius phæopus, smaller than the curlew proper, N. arquatus, and very closely related to the Hudsonian curlew of North America, N. hudsonicus. Also called tang-whaup, May whaup, and little whaup (which see, under whaup).

whim-gin (hwim'jin), n. [< whim[1] + gin[4].] Same as whim[1], 3.

whimling† (hwim'ling), n. [Also corruptly whimlen, < whim[1] + -ling[1].] A person full of whims.

Go whimling, and fetch two or three grating-loaves out of the kitchen, to make gingerbread of. 'Tis such an untoward thing'
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, iv. 7.

whimmer (hwim'ėr), v. i. [Var. of whimper; cf. G. wimmern, moan.] Same as whimper. [Scotch.]

whimmy (hwim'i), a. [< whim[1] + -y[1].] Full of whims; whimsical.

The study of Rabbinical literature either finds a man whimmy or makes him so Coleridge.

whimp† (hwimp), v. i. Same as whimper.

St. Paul said, there shall be intractables, that will whimp and whine
Latimer, 3d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

whimper (hwim'per), v. [Also (Sc.) whimmer, = LG. wemmern = G. wimmern, whimper; cf. MHG. wimmer, n., whining, gewammer, whining; perhaps ult. connected with whine.] I. intrans. 1. To cry with a low, whining, broken voice; make a low, complaining sound.

Speak, whimpring Younglings, and make known
The reason why
Ye droop and weep
Herrick, To Primroses fill'd with Morning Dew.

The little brook that whimpered by his school-house
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 424.

2. To tell tales. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To utter in a low, whining, or crying tone.

Poverty with most who whimper forth
Their long complaints, is self-inflicted woe.
Cowper, Task, iv. 429.

whimper (hwim'per), n. [< whimper, v. Cf. MHG. wimmer, whimper, crying, whining.] A low, peevish, broken cry; a whine.

The loved caresses of the maid
The dogs with crouch and whimper paid.
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 24.

To be on the whimper, to be in a peevish, crying state. [Colloq.]

Mrs. Mountain is constantly on the whimper when George's name is mentioned Thackeray, Virginians, xii.

whimperer (hwim'pėr-ėr), n. [< whimper + -er[1].] One who whimpers.

No effeminate knight, no whimperer, like his brother.
Jarvis, tr. of Don Quixote, I. i.

whimpering (hwim'per-ing), n. [Verbal n. of whimper, v.] A low, whining cry; a whimper.

Like to pulling and whimpering & heavines of hert.
Sir T. Wyer, Works, p. 181.

He will not be put off with solemn whimperings, hypocritical confessions, rueful faces
Dr. H. More, Mystery of Godliness (1660), p. 500. (Latham) whimperingly (hwim'per-ing-li), adv. In a whimpering or whining manner.

"T was n't my fault!" he whimperingly declared.
St. Nicholas, XVIII. 176.

whimple (hwim'pl), n. and v. An erroneous form of wimple.

whimsey, n., a., and v. See whimsy.

whimsey-shaft (hwim'zi-shäft), n. Same as whim-shaft.

whim-shaft (hwim'shäft), n. In mining, a shaft at which there is a whim for hoisting the ore. In shallow mines and in regions where fuel is very scarce (as in Mexico) most of the hoisting is done by horse-power and the use of the whim: called in Derbyshire, England, where this mode of raising the ore was formerly almost exclusively used, a horse-engine shaft. See cut under whim[1].

whimsical (hwim'zi-kal), a. [< whims(y) + -ic + -al.] 1. Full of whims; freakish; having odd fancies or peculiar notions; capricious.

There is another circumstance in which I am particular, or as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds. . . . I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests.
Addison, Spectator, No. 477.

How humoursome, how whimsical soever we may appear, there 's one fixed principle that runs through almost the whole race of us Vanbrugh, Esop, V. i.

2. Odd; fantastic.

In one of the chambers is a whimsical chayre, which folded into so many varieties as to turn into a bed, a bolster, a table or a couch.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 29, 1644.

The gentry now dispersed, the whimsical misfortune which had befallen the gens d'armerie of Tillietudlem furnishing them with huge entertainment on their road homeward.
Scott, Old Mortality, iii.

= Syn. 1. Singular, Odd, etc. (see eccentric), notional, crotchety. — 2. Fanciful, grotesque.

whimsicality (hwim-zi-kal'i-ti), n. [< whimsical + -ity.] 1. The state or character of being whimsical; whimsicalness.

The whimsicality of my father's brain was so far from having the whole honor of this as it had of almost all his other strange notions.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iii. 23.

2. Oddity; strangeness; fantasticalness.

It was a new position for Mr. Lyon to find his prospective rank seemingly an obstacle to anything he desired. For a moment the whimsicality of it interrupted the current of his feeling.
C. D. Warner, Little Journey in the World, v.

3. Pl. whimsicalities (-tiz). That which exhibits whimsical or fanciful qualities; a whimsical thought, saying, or action.

To pass from these sparkling whimsicalities to the almost Quaker like gravity, decorum, and restraint of the essay "On the Life and Writings of Mr. Isaac Disraeli" is an almost bewildering transition.
The Academy, April 25, 1891, p. 389.

whimsically (hwim'zi-kal-i), adv. In a whimsical manner; freakishly.

There is not . . . a more whimsically dismal figure in nature than a man of real modesty who assumes an air of impudence.
Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 1.

whimsicalness (hwim'zi-kal-nes), n. The state or character of being whimsical; whimsicality; freakishness; whimsical disposition; odd temper.
Pope, Letter to Miss Blount.

whimsy, whimsey (hwim'zi), n. and a. [Appar. from an unrecorded verb whimse, be unsteady, < Norw. kvimsa, skip, whisk, jump from one thing to another, = Sw. dial. kvimsa, be unsteady, giddy, or dizzy, = Dan. vimse, skip, jump, etc.: see whim[1].] I. n.; pl. whimsies, whimseys (-ziz). 1. A whim; a freak; a capricious notion.

I cannot but smile at this man's preposterous whimsies.
Milton, Ans. to Salmasius, iii.

I court others in Verse, but I love thee in Prose;
And they have my Whimsies but thou hast my Heart.
Prior, Better Answer to Cloe Jealous, st. 4.

Wearing out life in his religious whim
Till his religious whimsey wears out him.
Cowper, Truth, l. 80.

2. Same as whim[1], 3; also, a small warehouse-crane for lifting goods to the upper stories. E. H. Knight. — 3. See the quotation.

The table of crown-glass, as it is now called, is carried off, laid flat upon a support called a whimsey.
Glass-making, p. 124.

II. a. Full of whims or fancies; whimsical; changeable.

Jeer on, my whimsy lady.
Shirley, Hyde Park, ii. 2.

Yet reveries are fleeting things
That come and go on whimsy wings.
F. Locker, Arcadia.

whimsy†, whimsey† (hwim'zi), v. t. [< whimsy, n.] To fill with whimsies.

Jewels, and plate, and fooleries molest me,
To have a man's brains whimsied with his wealth!
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, ii. 2.

whimsy-board† (hwim'zi-bord), n. A board or tray on which different objects were carried about for sale.

I am sometimes a small retainer to a billiard-table, and sometimes when the master of it is sick earn a penny by a whimsy-board.
Tom Brown, Works, II. 17. (Davies.)

Then pippins did in wheel-barrows abound,
And cream-cakes in whimsy-boards went round;
But they first found it troublesome to bawl,
And therefore placed their cherries on a stall.
W. King, Art of Cookery, l. 242.

whimwham (hwim'hwam), n. [A varied reduplication of whim[1]. Cf. flimflam.] A plaything; a toy; a freak or whim; an odd device.

Nay, not that way;
They'll pull you all to pieces for your whim-whams,
Your garters, and your gloves.
Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, i. 5.

Your studied chim whams, and your fine set faces —
What have these got ye? proud and harsh opinions.
Fletcher, Wild-Goose Chase, iii. 1.

whin[1] (hwin), n. [Early mod. E. whynne; < ME. whynne, quyn, gorse, furze, < W. chwyn, weeds, a weed; cf. Bret. chouenno, weed.] 1. A plant of the genus Ulex, the furze or gorse, chiefly U. Europæus and U. nanus. See furze, 1, and cut under Ulex.

With thornes, breres, and moni a quyn.
Yvain and Gawain, l. 159. (Skeat.)

Whynnes or bothe = brutene.
Palsgrave, p. 226.

Blackford! on whose uncultured breast,
Among the broom, and thorn and whin,
A truant-boy I sought the nest.
Scott, Marmion, iv. 24.

2. Same as rent-harrow, 1. — Cammock-whin. Same as cammock[1]. — Cat-whin, the dogrose (Rosa canina). [In bennet-rose (R. spinosissima), and rarely some other plants. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—Heather-whin. Same as moor-whin.—Lady-whin, a Scotch name of the land whin.—Land-whin, the rest-harrow, Ononis arvensis: so named as infesting the cultivated field, as distinguished from the furze growing only along the margin. Britten and Holland. (Prov. Eng.)—Moor-whin, a species of broom, Genista Anglica, growing on bleak heaths and moors: from its sharp spines commonly called needle-furze or -whin. Compare petty whin.—Petty whin, a name originally invented by Turner for the rest-harrow, Ononis arvensis, but later applied in books to the moor-whin. Prior, Pop. Names of British Plants.

whin[2] (hwin), n. [Short for whinstone.] A name given in the north of England and in Wales to various rocks, chiefly to basalt, but also to any unusually hard quartzose sandstone. The latter is sometimes called white or gray whin, the basalt blue whin. See whin-sill.

whin[3] (hwin), n. An erroneous form of whem[1], 3. E. H. Knight.

whin[4] (hwin), n. Same as wheen[1]. [Scotch.]

whin-ax (hwin'aks), n. An instrument used for extirpating whin from land.

whinberry (hwin'ber'i), n.; pl. whinberries (-iz). An erroneous form of winberry.

Here is a heap of moss-clad boulder, there a patch of whinberry shrub covered with purple fruit.
The Portfolio, 1880, p. 108.

whin-bruiser (hwin'brö'zėr), n. A machine for cutting and bruising furze or whins for fodder for cattle. Simmonds.

whin-bushchat (hwin'büsh'chat), n. The whinchat. Macgillivray.

whinchacker, whincheck (hwin'chak'ėr, -chek), n. Same as whinchat. Also whin-clockarel. [Prov. Eng.]

whinchat (hwin'chat), n. [< whin[1] + chat[2].] An oscine passerine bird of the genus Pratincola, P. rubetra, closely related to the stonechat, and less nearly to the wheatear. Compare cuts under stonechat and wheatear. This is one of the bushchats, specified as the whin-bushchat. It is also called grasschat and furzechat, and shares the name stonechat with its congener P. rubicola. It is a common British bird, whose range includes nearly the whole of Europe much of Africa, and a little of western Asia. The whinchat is 5¼ inches long and 9¼ in extent; the upper parts are variegated with blackish brown shaft spots and yellowish brown edgings of the feathers, lightest on the rump, the under parts are uniform rich rufous; a long superciliary stripe, a streak below the eye and blackish auriculars, a patch on the wing, and the concealed bases of the tail-feathers are white or whitish, the eyes are brown and the bill and feet black. The whinchat haunts lowland pastures as well as upland wastes, nests on the ground, and lays four to six greenish blue eggs, with faint reddish-brown spots usually zoned about the larger end. It is an expert flycatcher, and also feeds largely on the destructive wire-worm. During May and June the male has a melodious song. The whinchat has an oriental representative, P. macrorhynchus of India, and several other species are described.

Whinchat (Pratincola rubetra).

The bird is commonly seen in the large gorse-coverts, from which it receives its name of Whin or Furze-chat.
H. Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I. 312

whincow (hwin'kou), n. A bush of furze. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whindle (hwin'dl), v. i.; pret. and pp. whindled, ppr. whindling. [Also whinnel; freq. of whine.] To whimper or whine. Phillips, 1706. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

A whindling bastard. B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 2.

To whindle or whinnel, 'to cry peevishly to whimper' (used of a child), is very common in East Tennessee. Wright has whindle, whinnel, and whinnel all meaning to whine; so Halliwell whinnel.
Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass. XVII. 47.

whine (hwin), v.; pret. and pp. whined, ppr. whining. [< ME. whinen, hwinen, < AS. hwinan, whine, = Icel. hvina, whizz, whir, = Sw hvina, whistle, = Dan. hvine, whistle, whine; cf. Icel. hveina, wail, Goth. hwainôn, mourn, Skt. √ kvan, buzz.] I. intrans. 1. To utter a plaintive protracted sound expressive of distress or complaint; moan as a dog, or in a childish fashion.

I whine, as a chylde dothe, or a dogge. . . . Whyne you woure, do you lokke your peace, or I shall make you.
Palsgrave, p. 781.

1st witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
2d witch. Thrice, and once the hedge-pig whin'd.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1. 2.

2. To complain in a puerile, feeble, or undignified way; bemoan one's self weakly.

For, had you kneel'd, and whin'd, and shew'd a base
And low dejected mind, I had despis'd you.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, v. 1.

Thou look at that I should whine and beg compassion
Ford, Broken Heart, iv. 4.

I am not for whining at the depravity of the times.
Goldsmith, English Clergy.

He never whines, although he is not more deficient in sensibility than many authors who do little else.
Whipple, Ess. and Rev., I. 29.

II. trans. To utter in a plaintive, querulous, drawling manner: usually with out.

Fool as I was, to sigh, and weep, and whine
Out long complaints, and pine myself away.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 224.

A parson shall whine out God bless me, and give me not a farthing. Farquhar, Love and a Bottle, i. 1.

whine (hwin), n. [< whine, v.] 1. A drawling, plaintive utterance or tone, as the whinny of a dog; also, the nasal puerile tone of mean complaint; mean or affected complaint.

Philip bent down his head over the dog, and as it jumped on him, with little bleats, and whines, and innocent caresses, he broke out into a sob. Thackeray, Philip.

The bees keep their tiresome whine round the resinous firs on the hill. Browning, Pippa Passes.

2. In hunting, the noise made by an otter at rutting-time. Halliwell (under hunting).

whiner (hwī'nėr), n. [< whine + -er[1].] One who or an animal that whines.

One pitiful whiner. Melpomene.
Gayton, Festivous Notes on Don Quixote, p. 242. (Latham.)

The grumblers are of two sorts: the healthful toned and the whiners. C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 141.

whinge (hwinj), v. t.; pret. and pp. whinged, ppr. whinging. [Sc. also whenge, formerly quhynge, whine; cf. OHG. winson, MHG. winsen, mourn, G. winseln, whine, whimper; with orig. verb-formative -s, from the root of whine.] To whine.

If any whiggish, whingin' sot
To blame poor Matthew dare.
Burns, Epitaph on Capt. Matthew Henderson.

whinger (hwing'ėr), n. [Also whangar, prob. a perversion of hanger for hanker (cf. hang for hank), < hang, v.] A dirk or long knife.

Had bugle horn, or sign of war been seen,
Whingers, now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.
Scott, L. of L. M., v. 7.

whin-gray (hwin'grā), n. The common linnet, or whin-linnet. [North of Ireland.]

whinidest, n. A corrupt form found only in the folio editions of Shakspere's "Troilus and Cressid," II. 1. 15. See innard.

whiningly (hwī'ning-li), adv. In a whining manner.

whin-linnet (hwin'lin'et), n. The common linnet, Linota cannabina. See cut under linnet. [Stirling, Scotland.]

whin-lintie (hwin'lin'ti), n. Same as whinchat. C. Swainson. [Aberdeen, Scotland.]

whinner (hwin'ėr), v. and n. A variant of whinny[1]. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

whinnock (hwin'ok), n. [Perhaps < whine + dim. -ock[1]; or < whin[4] wheen, a small quantity or number.] 1. The lowest twig in a litter; the runt. Halliwell.—2. A milk-pail. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng. in both senses.]

whinny[1] (hwin'i), a. [< whin[3] + -y[1].] Abounding in whins or whin-bushes.

The ox-moor . . . was a fine large, whinny moderated, unimproved common. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 31.

whinny[2] (hwin'i), n. [< whin[2] + -y[1].] Abounding in or resembling whinstone.

whinny[3] (hwin'i), v. i.; pret. and pp. whinnied, ppr. whinnying. [A dim. or freq. of whine. The word horny, < L. hinnire, neigh, is different: both are felt to be imitative.] To utter the cry of a horse; neigh.

Up Pichard's colt came whinnying and staring round the intruders. Kingsley, Westward Ho, v.

whinny[4] (hwin'i), n.; pl. whinnies (-iz). [< whinny[3], v.] The act of whinnying; a neigh.

With colt like whinny and with boggish whine
They burst my prayer. Tennyson, St. Simeon Stylites.

whinock, n. Same as whinnock.

whin-rock (hwin'rok), n. Same as whin[2].

I might as weel ha'e tried a quarry
O' hard whin rock.
Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook.

whin-sill (hwin'sil), n. The basaltic rock which, in the form of intrusive sheets, is intercalated in the Carboniferous limestone series in the north of England: so called by the miners of that region. Whin, whinstone, whin-sill, and toadstone are all names used somewhat indiscriminately by writers on the geology of Derbyshire, Northumberland, Durham, and Yorkshire (toadstone however belongs rather to Derbyshire, and whin-sill to the other counties mentioned).

whinstone (hwin'stōn), n. [Also Sc. quhinstane; said to be a corruption of "whern-stone, a dial. var. of quern-stone, in sense of 'stone suitable for making querns': see quern, quern-stone.] Same as whin[2].

As for gratitude, you will as soon get milk from a whinstone. R. L. Stevenson, Master of Ballantrae, p. 27.

He found . . . that the dark trap rocks, or whinstones of Scotland, were likewise of igneous origin.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, xii.

The following names have been applied to the Toadstones in Derbyshire: amygdaloid, black clay, basalte, boulder stones, brown stone, cat dirt, channel, chirt, clay, dunstone fertilite, fiery dragon, freestone, jewelstone, ragstone, trap, tuffstone, whinstone, secondary trap, and others. R. Hunt, British Mining, p. 243.

whintaint (hwin'tān), n. An obsolete form of quintain.

whinyard (hwin'yārd), n. [Also whinniard, whinnyard, also whingeard; prob. a variant, simulating yard[1], of whinger, q. v.] A sword or hanger.

His pistol neat he cock'd anew,
And out his nut-brown whinyard drew.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 480.

And how will you encounter St. George on Horseback, in his Cuirassiers Arms, his Sword, and his Whin-yard?
A. Hasley, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, II. 6.

whip (hwip), v.; pret. and pp. whipped, whipt, ppr. whipping. [< ME. whippen, whappen, not found in AS. (the alleged AS. hwecap*, a whip, hwecapan*, whip, scourge, in Somner, being unauthenticated); prob. a variant of wippen, < MD. wippen, shake, wag, D. wippen, skip, hasten, also give the strappado (cf. wip, a swipe, the strappado), = MLG. wippen, LG. keppen, weppen, move up and down (> G. keppen, move up and down, balance, see-saw, rock, draw up on a gibbet and drop suddenly, give the strappado), = Sw. vippa, wag, jerk, give the strappado, = Dan. vippe, see-saw, rock, bob; a secondary verb, connected with OHG. wipfi, MHG. wipf, swinging, quick motion, and MHG. G. weifen, cause to swing, move, wind, or turn; causative of MHG. waifen, swing; akin to L. vibrare, vibrate, Skt. √ vip, tremble: see vibrate. The Gael. cuip, a whip, and the W. chwip, a quick turn, chwipio, move briskly or nimbly, are prob. < E.: see quip. In defs. 7, etc., the verb is from the noun. For the change from wip (ME. wippen) to whip, cf. whap, wap[1].] I. intrans. 1. To move suddenly and nimbly; start (in, out, away, etc.) with sudden quickness: as, to whip round the corner and disappear.

Whip to our tents, as roes run o'er land.
Shak., T. and C., v. 7. 309.

You two shall be the chorus behind the arras, and whip out between the acts and speak. B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 2.

I saw her hold up her fan to a hackney coach at a distance, who immediately came up to her, and she whipped into it with great nimbleness, pulled the door with a bowing mien. Steele, Spectator, No. 303.

In my wakeful mood I was a good deal annoyed by a little rabbit that kept whipping in at our dilapidated door and nibbling at our bread and bed-tick.
J. Burroughs, The Century, XXXVI. 614.

She whipped behind one of the large pillars, gave her dress a little shake at the sides and behind, ran her hands over her hair, and appeared before the caller cool, calm and collected. The Century, XXXVII. 778.

2. In angling, to cast the line or the fly by means of the rod with a motion like that of using a whip; make a cast.

There is no better sport than whipping for Bleaks in a boat in a summer's even, with a hazle top about five or six foot long, and a line twice the length of the rod.
I. Walton, Complete Angler (ed. 1653), p. 206.

II. trans. 1. To move, throw, put, pull, carry, or the like, with a sudden, quick motion; snatch: usually followed by some preposition or adverb, as away, from, in, into, off, on, out, up, etc.: as, to whip out a sword or a revolver.

I whipt me behind the arras. Shak., Much Ado, i. 2. 66.

He came Gloss.
The old lame beggar, and whipt up Master Goswin
Under his arm away with him.
Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, v. 1.

She then whipped off her dressing, and threw it over Mrs. Atkinson. Fielding, Amelia, x. 2.

2. To overlay, as a cord, rope, etc., with a cord, twine, or thread going round and round it; inwrap; seize; serve with twine, thread, or the like wound closely and tightly round and round: generally with about, around, over, etc.

Whipped over either with gold thread, silver, or silk Stubbes (Imp. Dict.)

The same stringes, being by the Archers themselves with fine thread well whipt, did also verie seldom breake
Sir J. Smyth, Discourses on Weapons, etc., quoted in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 54

Its string is firmly whipped about with small gut
Moxon, Mechanical Exercises

3. To lay regularly on; serve in regular circles round and round.

Whip your silk twice or thrice about the root-end of the feather, hook, and towght.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 21.

4. To sew with an over and over stitch, as two pieces of cloth whose edges are laid or stitched together; overcast: as, to whip a seam. 5. To gather by a kind of combination running and overhand stitch: as, to whip a ruffle.

In half whipt muslin needle's such as he,
And shuttle corks across the counter fly
Gay, Trivia, ii. 339.

6. Naut., to hoist or purchase by means of a rope passed through a single pulley. 7. To strike with a whip or lash, or with anything tough and flexible; lash; use a whip upon: as, to whip a horse.

At night, the lights put out and company removed, they whipped themselves in their Chappell on Mount Calvary
Sandys, Travailes, p. 132.

It blew so violently before they recovered the House that the boughs of the Trees whipt them sufficiently before they got thither, and it rained as hard as before
Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 69

8. To punish with a whip, scourge, birch, or the like; flog: as, to whip a vagrant; to whip a perverse boy.

Fough! body of Jove! I'll have the slave whipt one of these days
B. Jonson, Poetaster, iv. 1

A country scholler in England should be whipped for speaking the like.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 70

I was never carted but in harvest, never whipt but at school.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3

9. To outdo; overcome; beat: as, to whip creation. [Colloq.]

A man without a particle of Greek whipped (to speak Kentuckian) whole crowds of sleeping drones who had more than they could turn to any good account
De Quincey, Herodotus

10. To drive with lashes.

Consideration, like an angel, came
And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him
Shak., Hen. V., i. 1. 29.

This said, the scourge his forward horses drave
Through ev'ry order, and, with him, all whipp'd their chariots on All threat'ningly, out thund'ring shouts as earth were overthrown.
Chapman, Iliad, xv. 319

11. To lash, in a figurative sense; treat with cutting severity, as with sarcasm or abuse.

Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men?
Shak., T. of A., v. 1. 40

I look'd and read, and saw how finely Wit
Had whipp'd itself, and then grew friends with it
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 62.

12. To cause to spin or rotate by lashing with a whip or scourge stuck, said of a top.

Since I plucked geese, played truant and whipped top Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 22.

He was whipt like a top
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 4

13. To thrash; beat out, as grain by striking: as, to whip wheat. Imp. Dict. — 14. To beat into a froth, as eggs, cream, etc., with a whisk, fork, spoon, or other implement.

To make Clouted cream and whipt Sillabubs Shadwell, The Scowrers.

15. To fish upon with a fly or other bait; draw a fly or other bait along the surface of: as, to whip a stream.

He shot with the pistol, he fenced, he whipped the front stream, . . . but somehow everything went amiss with him.
Lever, Davenport Dunn, xxiii.

16. To bring or keep together as a party whip does: as, to whip a party into line. See whip, n., 3 (b).

Lord Essex was there, . . . whipping up for a dinner party, cursing and swearing at all his friends for being out of town Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. v.

The only bond of cohesion is the caucus which holds a socially whips a party together for cooperative action against the time for casting its vote upon some critical question.
B. Wilson, Cong. Gov., ii.

To whip in, to keep from straying, as hounds in a hunt. To bring or keep the members of a party together, as in a legislative assembly. To whip off, to drive (hounds) off a scent.

The difficult nature of the covert, and the fact that they were running in view, prevented hounds being whipped off at the outset.
The Field, April 4, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

To whip the cat. (a) To practise the most pinching parsimony. Forby. [Prov. Eng.] (b) To go from house to house to work, as a tailor or other workman. Compare whip cat. (Scotch and prov. Eng. and U. S.)

Mr. Hart . . . made shoes, a trade he prosecuted in an itinerating manner from house to house, whipping the cat, as it was termed
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 3.

(c) To get tipsy. Halliwell. — To whip the devil around the stump, see devil.

whip (hwip), n. [< ME. whippe, quippe = MD. wippe, a whip, D. wip, a swipe, strappado, mocnut: see whip, v.] 1. An instrument for flagellation, whether in driving animals or in punishing human beings; a scourge. In its typical form it is composed of a lash of some kind fastened upon a handle more or less rigid, the common form of horse-whip has little or no lash, being a long, tapering, and very pliant switch-like rod of wood, whalebone, or other material, usually wound or braided over with thread.

And alle the folk of the Contree ryden comounly with ontes Spores, but thei beren alle weys a lytille Whippe in hire Hondes, for to chacen with hire Hors.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 240.

The dwarf
Struck at him with his whip, and cut his cheek.
Tennyson, Geraint.

2. One who handles a whip, as in driving a coach or carriage; a driver: as, an expert whip.

What the devil do you do with a wig, Thomas? none of the London whips of any degree of ton wear wigs now Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 1.

That is the famous coaching baronet, than whom no better whip has ever been seen upon the road
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 50.

3. A whipper-in. Specifically — (a) In hunting, the person who manages the hounds.

After these the body of the pack . . . the parson of the parish, and a hard riding cornet at home on leave, then the huntsman, the first whip, nearly a quorum of magistrates, etc.
White Melville, White Rose, II. xv.

(b) In English parliamentary usage, a member who performs certain non-official but important duties in looking after the interests of his party, especially the securing of the attendance of as many members as possible at important divisions: as, the Liberal whip, the Conservative whip. See the quotation.

The whip's duties are (1) to inform every member belonging to the party when an important division may be expected, and, if he sees the member in or about the House, to keep him there until the division is called; (2) to direct the members of his own party how to vote; (3) to obtain pairs for them if they cannot be present to vote; (4) to "tell," i. e., count the members in every party division; (5) to "keep touch" of opinion within the party, and convey to the leader a faithful impression of that opinion, from which the latter can judge how far he may count on the support of his whole party in any course he proposes to take.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 199.

4. A call made upon the members of a party to be in their places at a certain time: as, both parties have issued a rigorous whip in view of the expected division. [Eng.] — 5. A contrivance for hoisting, consisting of a rope and pulley and usually a snatch-block, and worked by one or more horses which in hoisting walk away from the thing hoisted. In mining usually called whip-and-derry. See cut under cable-laid. — 6. One of the radii or arms of a windmill, to which the sails are attached; also, the length of the arm reckoned from the shaft.

The arm, or whip, of one of the sails Rankine, Steam Engine, § 188.

7. In angling, the leader of an angler's cast with its flies attached. The fly at the end is the dragon-fly, tail fly, or stretcher, those above are the dropflies, droppers, or bobbers. More fully called a whip of flies.

8. A vibrating spring used as an electric circuit-closer for testing capacity. The spring is permanently connected to one plate of the condenser or cable, and vibrates between two studs, contact with one of which closes a battery circuit, and with the other a galvanometer circuit. The condenser is thus in rapid succession charged from the battery and discharged through the galvanometer. The indications of the latter are thus proportional to the rate of vibration and the capacity of the condenser.

9. A slender rod or flexible pole used instead of stakes to mark the bounds of oyster-beds. — 10. The common black swift, Cypselus apus. [Prov. Eng.] — 11. A preparation of cream, eggs, etc., beaten to a froth.

There were "whips" and "floating islands" and jellies to compound
The Century, XXXVII. 841.

Crack-the-whip, same as snap-the-whip. Six-stringed whip or the whip with six strings, the Six Articles. See article, 5. Snap-the-whip, a game played in running or skating. A number of persons join hands and move rapidly forward in line; those at one end stop suddenly and swing the rest sharply around, the contest is to see whether any of the outer part of the line can thus be thrown down or made to break their hold. Also called crack-the-whip. To drink or lick on (upon) the whip, to have a taste of the whip, get a thrashing.

In fayth and for youre love I swynge
Ye shal lik on the whip.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 33.

Comes naked needle? and chance to do scathe?
He shal be sure, to drinke vpon the whippe.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 39.

Whip and spur, making use of both whip and spur in riding; hence, with the utmost haste.

Came whip and spur, and dash'd through thick and thin.
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 397.

whip (hwip), adv. [An elliptical use of whip, v. Cf. LG. wips! quickly, = Sw. Dan. vips! pop! quick!] With a sudden change; at once; quick.

You are no sooner chose in but whip! you are as proud as the devil
Mrs. Centlivre, Gotham Election, i. 4.

When I came, whip was the key turned upon the girls.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, VIII. 267. (Davies.)

whip-and-derry (hwip'and-der'i), n. The simplest form of machinery, with the exception of the windlass, for hoisting. It consists of a rope passing over a pulley, and is worked by a horse or horses. It is rarely used in mining, except in very shallow mines. Sometimes called simply whip, and sometimes whipsey-derry.

whipcant (hwip'kan), n. [< whip, v., + obj. cant[2].] A hard drinker.

He would prove an especial good fellow, and singular whip-cant
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 8. (Davies.)

whipcat (hwip'kat), n. and a. [< whip, v., + obj. cat.] I. n. A tailor or other workman who "whips the cat." See to whip the cat (b), under whip. [Colloq.]

A tailor who "whipped the cat" (or went out to work at his customers' houses) would occupy a day, at easy labour, at a cost of 1*s.* 6*d.* (or less) in money, and the whip-cat's meals . . . included.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 414.

II.† a. Drunken.

With whip-cat bowling they kept a merry carousing.
Stanihurst, Æneid, iii.

whip-cord (hwip'kôrd), n. 1. A strong twisted hempen cord, so called because lashes or snappers of whips are made from it.

Let's step into this shop and buy a pennyworth of whip-cord to spin my top.
Kingsley, Westward Ho, iii.

2. A cord or string of catgut.

In order to produce a cord known as whipcord from these intestines, they are sewn together by means of the ligature before mentioned, the joints being cut salant to make them smoother and stronger.
Spons Encyc. Manuf., I. 909.

3. A seaweed, Chorda filum, having a very long, slender, whip-like frond. See Chorda, 2. — Whip-cord couching, embroidery in which a heavy whip cord is laid upon the material and is covered by the silk couching which is afterward sewed closely down upon the background on each side of the whip-cord, so as to leave a decided ridge. — Whip-cord willow. See willow.

whip-cordy (hwip'kôr'di), a. [< whip-cord + -y[1].] Like whip-cord; sinewy; muscular. [Rare.]

The bishop [of Exeter was] wonderfully hale and whip-cordy
Lip Wilberforce, in Life, II. 336. (Encyc. Dict.) whip-crane (hwip'krān), n. A simple and rapid-working form of crane, used in unloading vessels.

E. H. Knight.

whip-crop (hwip'krop), n. A name given to the whitebeam (Pyrus Aria), to the wayfaring-tree (Viburnum Lantana), and to the guelder-rose (V. Opulus), from the use of their stems for whip-stocks.
Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

whip-fish (hwip'fish), n. A chætodont fish, Heniochus macrolepidotus, having one of the spines of the dorsal fin produced into a long filament like a whip-lash.

whip-gin (hwip'jin), n. A simple tackle-block with a hoisting-rope running over it: same as gun-block.

whip-graft (hwip'grâft), v. t. To graft by cutting the scion and stock in a sloping direction, so as to fit each other, and by inserting a tongue on the scion into a slit in the stock.

whip-grass (hwip'gras), n. An American species of cat-grass, Scleria triglomerata.

whip-hand (hwip'hand), n. 1. The hand that holds the whip in riding or driving — that is, the right hand.

Mr. Tulliver was a peremptory man, and, as he said, would never let anybody get hold of his whip-hand
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 5.

2. An advantage, or advantageous position.

The archangel . . . has the whip-hand of her.
Dryden.

Now, what say you, Mr. Plametre? I shall have the whip-hand of you presently.
Farnbrugh, Æsop, v. 1.

whiphandle (hwip'han'dl), n. 1. The handle of a whip. See whip-hand, 2, and compare whip-rein. — 2†. See the quotation.

These fifth ends of men and dandiprats (whom in Scotland they call whiphandles [manches d'estrilles], and knots of a tar-barrel) are commonly very testy and choleric.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, ii. 278

To have or to keep the whiphandle, to have the advantage.

Why, what matter? They know that we shall keep the whip-handle.
The Century, XXXVIII. 882

whip-hanger (hwip'hang'ėr), n. A device for holding carriage-whips in a harness-room; a whip-rack.

whip-hem (hwip'hem), n. A hem formed by whipping an edge, as of a ruffle, etc. See whip, v. t., 4.

Bits of ruffling peeping out from the folds, with their edges in almost invisible whip hems.
Mrs Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite i.

whipjack (hwip'jak), n. A vagabond who begs for alms as a distressed seaman; hence a general term of reproach or contempt.

A mere whip-jack, and that is, in the commonwealth of rogues, a slave that can talk of sea fight, . . . yet indeed all his service is by land, and that is to rob a fair, or some such venturous exploit.
Middleton and Dekker, Roaring Girl, v. 1.

Albeit one Boner (a bare whippe Jacke) for lucre of money take vpon him to be thy father, and than to marry thy mother, yet thou wast persone Savage's bastarde.
Bp. Ponet (Maitland on Reformation, p. 74). (Davies) whip-king† (hwip'king), n. [< whip, v., + obs. *king*¹.] A ruler of kings; a king-maker.

Richard Nevill, that whip-king (as some termed him), . . . going about . . . to turn and translate sceptres at his pleasure.
Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 571. (Davies)

whip-lash (hwip'lash), n. The lash, or pliant part, of a whip.

If I had not put that snapper on the end of my whip-lash, I might have got off without the ill temper which my antithesis provoked.
O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 667.

whip-maker (hwip'mā'kėr), n. One who makes whips.

whip-master† (hwip'mas'tėr), n. A flogger.

Woe to our back-sides' he's a greater whip master than Busby himself.
Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 74.

whip-net (hwip'net), n. A simple form of net-work fabric produced in a loom by a systematic crossing of the warps.
E. H. Knight.

whippel-tree, n. [ME., also whippil-, whipil-, whippil-, wyppil-, wyppil-tre, prop. "wippel-tre, < "wippel = MLG. "wipel (in wipel-bom), also wipken (wipken-bom, wepeken (wepeken-bome), wepeke, dim. of wepe, also wepen-dorn, wepdorn, wpdorn, the cornel-tree; connected with MD. wepelen, waver, MD. MLG. weppen, waver: see whip.] The cornel tree.

Mapul, thorn, beech, hasel ew, whippetre.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2930.

whipper (hwip'ėr), n. [< whip + *-er*¹.] 1. One who whips; particularly, an officer who inflicts punishment by legal whipping.

They therefore reward the whipper, and esteeme the whip (which I enuie not to them) sacred.
Purchas Pilgrimage, p. 250.

2. A flagellant.

A brood of mad heretics which arose in the Church, whom they called Flagellantes, "the whippers", which went about . . . lashing themselves to blood.
Bp. Hall, Women's Vail, § 1.

3†. Something that surpasses or beats all; a "whopper."

Mark well thys, thys reitke here is a whipper,
My freendes unfayned, here is a slipper
Of one of the seven slepers, be sure.
Heywood, Four P's (Dodsley's Old Plays, I. 75).

4. One who raises coals with a whip from a ship's hold: same as coal-whipper. — 5. In spinning, a simple kind of willow.

whipperee (hwip-e-rē'), n. [A corruption of whip-ray, like stingaree for sting-ray.] Same as whip-ray.

whipper-in (hwip'ėr-in'), n.; pl. whippers-in (hwip'ėrz-in'). 1. In hunting, one who keeps the hounds from wandering, and whips them in, if necessary, to the line of chase.

The master of the hounds and the whippers-in wore the traditional pink coats, as did a few of the other riders.
T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 179.

2. In the game of hare and hounds, one who leads the hounds, sets the pace, etc. — 3. Hence, in British Parliament, same as whip, 3 (b). — 4. In racing slang, a horse that finishes last, or near the last, in a race.
Krik's Guide to the Turf.

whipper-snapper (hwip'ėr-snap'ėr), n. [Prob. a balanced form of whip-snapper, 'one who has nothing to do but snap or crack the whip.'] A shallow, insignificant person: a whipster: also used attributively.

A parcel of whipper-snapper sparks.
Fielding, Joseph Andrews, iv. 6.

Much as he had ingratiated himself with his aunt, she had never yet invited him to stay under her roof, and here was a young whipper snapper who at first sight was made welcome there.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxiv.

whippet (hwip'et), n. [Cf. whiffet.] A kind of dog, in breed between a greyhound and a spaniel.
Halliwell.

In the shapes and formes of dogges; of all which there are but two sorts that are usefull for mans profit, which two are the mastiffe, and the little curre, whippet, or house-dogge: all the rest are for pleasure and recreation.
John Taylor, Works. (Nares)

whippincrust†, n. A variety of wine (?).

I'll give thee white wine, red wine, claret wine, sack, muskadine, malmsey and whippincrust.
Marlowe, Faustus, ii. 3.

whipping (hwip'ing), n. [Verbal n. of whip, v.] 1. A beating; flagellation.

Use every man after his desert, and who should 'scape whipping?
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2, 550.

No nuns nor monks, no fakeers, take whippings more kindly than some devotees of the world.
Thackeray, Philip, iv.

2. A defeat; a beating: as, the enemy got a good whipping. See whip, v., 9. [Colloq.] — 3. Naut., a piece of twine or small cord wound round the end of a rope to keep it from unlaying. — 4. In bookbinding, the sewing of the raw edges of single leaves in sections by overcasting the thread [Eng.]: known in the United States as whip stitching. — 5. In weaving, same as overcasting, 2. — 6. The act or method of casting the fly in angling; casting.

whipping-boy (hwip'ing-boi), n. A boy formerly educated with a prince and punished in his stead.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., II. 342.

whipping-cheer† (hwip'ing-chēr'), n. Flogging; chastisement.

She shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 4, 8.

Your workes of supererrogation,
Your idle crossings or your wearing hatbe
Next to your skin, or all your whipping cheer.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 18.

whipping-hoist (hwip'ing-hoist), n. A steam hoist working with a whip.

whipping-post (hwip'ing post), n. The post to which are tied persons condemned to punishment by whipping; hence, the punishment itself, frequently employed for certain offenses, and still retained in some communities.

He dares out dare stocks, whipping-posts or cage.
John Taylor, Works. (Nares)

The laws of New England allowed masters to correct their apprentices, and teachers their pupils, and even the public whipping-post was an institution. In New England towns.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 127.

whipping-snapping (hwip'ing, snap'ing), a. [< whipping + snapping: adapted from whipper-snapper.] Insignificant; diminutive.

All sorts of whipping-snapping Tom Thumbs.
Thackeray, Roundabout Papers, Ogres.

whipping-top (hwip'ing-top), n. Same as whip-top.

whippletree (hwip'l-trē), n. Same as whiffle-tree.

whippoorwill (hwip'pör-wil'), n. [Formerly also whippoorwilt, -poor-will; an imitative word, from the sound or cry made by the bird, as if 'whip poor Will.'] An American caprimulgine bird, Antrostomus vociferus, related to the chuck-will's-widow, A. carolinensis, and resembling the European goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus. It is 9 to 10 inches long and 17 to 18 in extent of wings; its legs are much smaller than the chuck-

Whippoorwill (Antrostomus vociferus).

will's-widow, and lacks the lateral filaments of the rictal bristles. The colorati on is intricately variegated with gray, black, white, and tawny, giving a prevailing grayish central tone, somewhat frosted or hoary in high-plumaged males, ordinarily more brownish; there are sharp black streaks on the head and back, the wings and their coverts are barred with rufous spots; the lateral tail-feathers are black, with a large terminal area white in the male, tawny in the female; and there is a throat-bar white in the male, tawny in the female. The bill is extremely small, but the mouth is deeply cleft, and as wide from one corner to the other as the whole length of the rictus (as figured under Antrostomus). There has been some popular confusion between the whippoorwill and the night-hawk; they are not only distinct species, but belong to different genera, and their dissimilarity appears at a glance. Unlike the night-hawk, the whippoorwill is entirely nocturnal, it flies with noiseless wings, like the owl, and is often heard than seen. The notes which have given the name are trisyllabic (to compare voce-a-bili), and rapidly reiterated, with a strong accent on the last syllable; a click of the beak and some low muffled sounds may also be heard when the bird is very near. The eggs are two in number, are laid on the ground or on a fallen log or stump, without any nest; they are cream-white heavily clouded and marked with brown and neutral tints, nearly equal ended, and 1.25 by 0.90 inch in size. The young are covered with fluffy down. The whippoorwill inhabits the eastern half of the United States and British provinces; it breeds near it throughout its range, but winters extralimitally. A western variety is sometimes specified as the Arizona whippoorwill, but the place of whippoorwills is mostly taken in the west by the poor will, as Nuttall's. Several other species of Antrostomus are found in Mexico and Central and South America.

The moan of the whip poor-will from the hillside; the boding cry of the tree toad, that harbinger of storm; the dreary hooting of the screech owl.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 424.

whip-post† (hwip'pōst), n. Same as whipping-post.

If the stocks and whip-post cannot stay their extravagance, there remains only the jail house.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 18.

whippowill†, n. Same as whippoorwill.

whippy (hwip'i), a. and n. [Also whappy; < whip + *-y*¹.] I. a. Active; nimble; forward; pert.
Jamieson.

II. n.; pl. whippies (-iz). A girl or young woman; especially, a malapert young woman.
Elw. Hamilton. [Scotch in both uses.]

whip-ray (hwip'rā), n. [Also, corruptly, whipperee; < whip + *ray*².] A sting ray; any member of the family Trygonidæ, any ray with a long, slender, flexible tail like a whip-lash, as a member of the Myliobatidæ. See cuts under sting-ray and Trygon.

whip-rod (hwip'rod), n. A whipped rod; an angling rod wound with small twine from tip to butt, like a whip.

whip-roll (hwip'rol), n. In weaving, a roller or bar over which the yarn passes from the yarn-beam to the reed, the pressure of the yarn on the whip-roll serving to control the let-off mechanism.
E. H. Knight.

whip row (hwip'rō), n. In agri., the row easiest to hoe; hence, the inside track; any advantage: as, to have the whip row of a person (to have an advantage over him). [Colloq., U. S.]

whip-saw (hwip'sâ), n. A frame-saw with a narrow blade, used to cut curved kerfs. See cut under saw.

whip-saw (hwip'sâ), v. t. [< whip-saw, n.] 1. To cut with a whip-saw.

The great redwoods that were hewn in the Sonoma forests were whip-sawed by hand for the plank required.
The Century, XLI. 887.

2. To have or take the advantage of (an adversary), whatever he does or may be able to do; particularly, in gamblers' slang, to win at faro, at one turn two bets made by the same person, one of which is played open, the other being coppered; beat (a player) in two ways at once.

whip-sawing (hwip'sâ'ing), n. [Verbal n. of whip-saw, v.] The acceptance of fees or bribes from two opposing persons or parties. Mag. of Amer. Hist., XIII. 496. [Political slang.]

whip-scorpion (hwip'skôr'pi-on), n. A false scorpion of the family Thelyphonida, having a long, slender abdomen like the lash of a whip, as Thelyphonus caudatus, of the southern United States, also there called grampus, mule-killer, and vinegarroon. The name is sometimes extended to the species of the related family Tarantulæ, and thus to the whole of the suborder Pedipalpi. See the technical names and cut under Pedipalpi.

whipsey derry (hwip'si-der'i), n. Same as whip and derry.

whip-shaped (hwip'shāpt), a. Shaped like the lash of a whip: specifically, in bot., applied to stems, etc., long and slender like flagellate or flagelliform; said of any one long slender part or give-mess.

whip-snake (hwip'snāk), n. One of various serpents of long, slender form, likened to that of a whip-lash. In the United States it is applied to various species of the genus Masticophis as M. flagellum, more fully called coach-whip snake, a harmless serpent 6 or 7 feet long. The emerald whip-snake is Phibalura viridissima, of a lovely green color, inhabiting Brazil: see also Passerida (with cut).

He wished it had been a whip-snake instead of a magpie.
C. Kingsley, Geoffry Hamlyn, xxvii.

whip-socket (hwip'sok"et), n. A socket attached to the dashboard of a vehicle, to receive the butt of the whip.

whip-staff (hwip'staf), n. 1. A whiphandle.—2. Naut., a bar by which the rudder is turned: an old name for the tiller in small vessels. Falconbr.

whip-stalk (hwip'stâk), n. Same as whip-stock.

whipster (hwip'stėr), n. [< whip + -ster.] 1. Same as whipper-snapper.

> Every puny whipster gets my sword
> Shak., Othello, v. 2. 244.
>
> That young liquorish whipster Heartfree.
> Vanbrugh, Provoked Wife, v. 3.

2†. A sharper. Bailey, 1731.

whip-stick (hwip'stik), n. Same as whip-stock.

Whip-stick palm. See *palm*2.

whip-stitch (hwip'stich), v. t. 1. To sew over and over: especially used in bookbinding. Compare whip, v. t., 4.—2. In agric., to half plow or rafter. Imp. Dict. [Local, Eng.]

whip-stitch (hwip'stich), n. [< whip-stitch, v.] 1. In agri., a sort of half plowing, otherwise called raftering. [Local, Eng.]—2. A hasty composition. Dryden. [Rare.]—3. A particle; the smallest piece. [Colloq.]—4. A tailor: used in contempt.

whip-stitching (hwip'stich'ing), n. See whipping, 4.

whip-stock (hwip'stok), n. The stuff rod, or handle to which the lash of a whip is secured. Also whip-stalk, whip-stick.

> Out, carter,
> House, dirty whipstock, hence, you foul clown
> Be gone T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, iv. 4.
>
> Phœbus, when
> He broke his whipstock, and exclaimed against
> The horses of the sun
> Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2.

whip-tail, whip-tailed (hwip'tal, -tāld), a. Having a long, slender tail like a whip-lash: as, the whip-tail scorpion. See whip-scorpion.

whip-tom-kelly (hwip'tom-kel'i), n. The black-whiskered vireo or greenlet of Cuba, the Bahamas, and Florida, Vireo barbatulus: so called in imitation of its note. It closely resembles the common red-eyed vireo of the United States, but has black mystacial stripes. Compare cut under greenlet.

whip-top (hwip'top), n. A top which is spun by whipping. Also whipping top.

> We have hitherto been speaking of the whip top, for the peg top, I believe, must be ranked among the modern inventions, and probably originated from the te totums and whirligigs. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 402.

whip-worm (hwip'werm), n. A nematoid parasitic worm, Trichocephalus dispar, or another of this genus, as T. affinis, the cæcum worm of sheep. They have a long, slender anterior part and a short, stout posterior part, like a whip lash joined to a whip stock.

whir (hwėr), v.; pret. and pp. whirred, ppr. whirring. [Also whirr, and formerly whur. prob. < Dan. hvirre, whirl, twirl. = Sw. dial. hwirra, whirl, cf. G. schwirren, whir, buzz. Cf. whirl.] I. intrans. To fly, dart, revolve, or otherwise move quickly with a whizzing or buzzing sound; whizz.

> When the stone sprung back again, and smote > Earth like a whirlwind, hath'ring dust with whirring fiercely round.
> For fervour of his unspent strength, in settling on the ground Chapman, Iliad, xiv. 501.
>
> The lark
> Whirred from among the fern beneath our feet
> Wordsworth, The Borderers, iii.
>
> The blue blaze whirred up the chimney and flashed into the room S. Judd, Margaret, i. 11.
>
> And the whirring sail [of the windmill] goes round
> Tennyson, The Owl, i.

II. trans. To hurry away with a whizzing sound.

> This world to me is like a lasting storm,
> Whirring me from my friends
> Shak., Pericles, iv. 1. 21.

whir (hwėr), n. [Also whirr; < whir, v.] 1. The buzzing or whirring sound made by a quickly revolving wheel, a partridge's wings, etc.

> As my lord's brougham drives up, . . . the ladies, who know the whirr of the wheels, and may be quarrelling in the drawing-room, call a truce to the fight
> Thackeray, Philip, ii.

2†. A turn; commotion.

> They flapt the door full in my face, and gave me on 't a whurr here. Taylor, Journey to London, ii. 1.

whirl (hwėrl), v. [Formerly also whorl, whurl; < ME. whirlen, whirlien, contr. from whirrelen = MD. werrelen, whirl, = G. wirbeln, whirl, = Icel. hvirfla, = Sw. hvirfla = Dan. hvirvle, whirl; freq. of the verb represented by AS. hwerfan, etc., turn: see wharve, and of wirble. The E. verb is perhaps due to the Scand.; it depends in part on the noun.] I. trans. 1. To swing or turn rapidly round; rotate, or cause to revolve rapidly.

> A bowte the whirlitde a whele with her whitte hondes.
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3261.
>
> My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel.
> Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 5. 19.
>
> With that his faulchion he whirled about.
> Robin Hood and the Stranger (Child's Ballads, V. 416).

2. To cast with a twirling or twisting motion; throw with a rapid whirl.

> And proudest Turrets to the ground hath whurld > Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 6.
>
> First Amphidus whirl'd his weighty lance.
> Pope, Iliad, xvi. 585.

3. To carry swiftly away with or as if with a revolving or wheeling motion.

> See, see the chariot, and those rushing wheels,
> That whirl'd the Prophet up at Chebar flood.
> Milton, The Passion, l. 37.
>
> The last red leaf is whirl'd away.
> Tennyson, In Memoriam, xv.
>
> Uplifted by the blast, and whirled
> Along the highway of the world
> Longfellow, Golden Legend, ii.

=Syn. 1. To twirl, spin, revolve, rotate.

II. intrans. 1. To turn rapidly; move round with velocity; revolve or rotate swiftly.

> Four [moons] fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
> The other four Shak., K. John, iv. 2. 183.
>
> This slippery globe of life whirls of itself.
> Lowell, Parting of the Ways.

2. To pass or move with a rapid whirling motion, or as if on wheels.

> I'll come and be thy waggoner,
> And whirl along with thee about the globe.
> Shak., Tit. And., v. 2. 49.
>
> What thoughts of horror and madness whirl
> Through the burning brain
> Whittier, Mogg Megone, i.

The supply of material in the world is practically constant; nothing drops off of it as we whirl through space, and the only thing added is some stray meteorite, insignificant except in the way of a sign or wonder.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXX. 88.

Whirling chair, an apparatus formerly used to subdue intractable patients in retreats for the insane. After the victim had been strapped in, the chair was made to revolve very rapidly. Whirling dervish. See dervish. Whirling plant. Same as telegraph-plant.

whirl (hwėrl), n. [< ME. whirl (in comp.) = MD. werrel, worrel, a whirl, peg, a spinning-wheel, = OHG. wirbil, wirfil, a whirlwind, MHG. G. wirbel, a whirl, the crown of the head, = Icel. hvirfill, a circle, ring, the crown of the head: see whirl, v., and of whirl†, whorl.] 1†. The whorl of a spindle.

> A whirle, . . . a round Piece of Wood put on the spindle of a spinning wheel Bailey, 1731.
>
> Medle you with your spyndle and your whirle
> Udall, Roister Doister, i. 3.

2. A reel or hook used in rope-making for twisting strands of hemp or gut.—3. A rope-winch.—4. In bot. and conch. See whorl.—5. A rapid circling motion or movement, as that of a revolving body; rapid rotation, gyration, or circumvolution: literally and figuratively: as, the whirl of a top or of a wheel; the whirls of fancy.

> Thus I would prove the vicissitudes and whirl of pleasures about and again B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.
>
> Now with sprightly
> Wheel downward come they into fresher skies,
> Still downward with capacious whirl they glide
> Keats, Sleep and Poetry.

6. Something that whirls, or moves with a rapid circling motion; the circling eddy of a whirlpool, a whirlwind, or the like.

> What flaws, and whirls of weather
> Or rather storms have been aloft these three days!
> Fletcher, Pilgrim, iii. 6.
>
> Upon the whirl, where sank the ship,
> The boat spun round and round.
> Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, vii.

whirl-about (hwėrl'a-bout'), n. 1. Something that whirls with velocity; a whirligig.—2†. A great fish of the whale kind; a whirl whale.

> The monstrous Whirl-about,
> Which in the sea another Sea doth spout,
> Where-with huge Vessels (if they happen nigh)
> Are over whelm'd and sunken suddenly
> Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 5.

whirlbat (hwėrl'bat), n. [Also, by confusion, hurlbat, < whirl + *bat*1.] The ancient cestus, a kind of boxing-glove used by Greek and Roman athletes. See cuts under *cestus*1, 2.

> Your shoulders must not undergo the churlish whirlbat's fall
> Wrestling is past you; strife in darts the foot a celerity;
> Harsh age in his years fetters you, and honour sets you down. Chapman, Iliad, xxiii. 538.
>
> He rejected them, as fairies did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Eutelius.
> Dryden, Pref. to Fables.

whirlblast (hwėrl'blast), n. A whirling blast of wind; a whirlwind.

> The whirl-blast comes, the desert sands rise up.
> Coleridge, Night-Scene.
>
> A whirl-blast from behind the hill
> Rushed o'er the wood with startling sound.
> Wordsworth, Poems of Fancy, iii.
>
> Were this bitter whirl-blast fanged with flame,
> To me 'twere summer we being side by side.
> Lowell, Paolo to Francesca.

whirlbone (hwėrl'bon), n. [Early mod. E. also whyrlebone, < ME. whirlbon, whyrlebone, whorlebone (= MD. werrelbeen); < whirl + *bone*1. Hence, by confusion, hurlbone.] 1†. The bone of a ball-and-socket joint, as in the hip.

> The whirlebones of their hips, about which their huckle bones turne Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxviii. 11.

2. The patella; the kneepan or stifle-bone.

> Patella. . . . La palette du genouil The whirlebone of the knee Nomenclator. (Nares.)

whirler (hwėr'lėr), n. [< whirl + *-er*1.] 1. One who or that which whirls.—2. In rope-manuf., one of the revolving hooks to which the hemp is fastened in the operations of twisting it into rope-yarn or small rope.

whirl-fire† (hwėrl'fir), n. Lightning.

> The smoaking storms the whirl-fires crackling clash,
> And deafening Thunders > Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawe.

whirlgig (hwėrl'gig), n. Same as whirligig, 4.

whirlicote† (hwėr'li-kot), n. [Appar. for whirlcote (cf. whirlpig for whirligig), < whirl + *cote*1.] A wheel-carriage.

> Of old time, Coaches were not known in this Iland, but Chariots or Whirlecotes, then so called, and they onely used for Princes or great Estates, such as had their footmen about them. Stow, Survey of London (ed. 1633), p. 70.

whirligig (hwėr'li-gig), n. and a. [Early mod. E. whirlygyg, whyrlygygge; also whirlgig (in def. 4, with a var. whirlygigge); < ME. whyrlegygge; < whirl + *gig*1.] I. n. 1. Any toy or trivial object to which a rapid whirling motion is imparted. Especially (a) A tee-totum, or a top.

> I tryll a whirlygyg rounde aboute. Je pirouette. . . . I holde the a peny that I wyll tryll my whirlygyg longer about than thou shalte do thyne Palsgrave, p. 762.

(b) A toy which children spin in the hand by means of string. (c) A carrousel or merry go-round. (d) A toy resembling a miniature windmill which children cause to spin or whirl round by moving it through the air.

2. Hence, anything that revolves or spins like a whirling; also, spinning rotation; revolving or recurring course.

> The whirligig of time brings in his revenges.
> Shak., T. N., v. 1. 386.

3. In mild. astiq., an instrument for punishing petty offenders, as a kind of wooden cage turning on a pivot, in which the offender was whirled round with great velocity.—4. In entom., any one of numerous species of water-beetles of the family Gyrinidæ, as Gyrinus natator, usually seen in large numbers on the surface of the water, circling rapidly about, and diving only to escape danger. When caught, many exude a milky liquid having an odor of apples. They abound in fresh water ponds, pools, and ditches. The larvæ are aquatic, and breathe by means of ciliate branchiæ. The American whirligigs belong to the genera Gyrinus, Dineutes, and Gyretes. See cut under Gyrinoidea. Also whirligig-beetle, whirligig, and whirligig-bettle.

II.† a. Whirling.

> Thrice to her bed sliding shee quayls, with whirligig eyesight
> Up to the sky staring Stanihurst, Æneid, iv.
>
> And so continuing their whirle-pegg-devotions with contortuall trumpes. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 307.

whirling-table, whirling-machine (hwėr'ling-ta'bl, -ma-shēn'), n. 1. A machine contrived for the purpose of exhibiting the principal effects of centripetal or centrifugal forces, when bodies revolve in the circumferences of circles or on an axis.—2. In pottery, a potters' lathe for holding a plaster mold in which is laid a thin mass of clay, to form a plate or other circular piece. The mold shapes the inside of the piece and a templet approached to the revolving mold forms the outside. See potters wheel, under *potter*1.

3. A horizontal arm mounted for rotation about a vertical axis, used in experiments in aërodynamics, in determining the constants of anemometers, or for other purposes for which high velocities are desired under conditions thus attainable.

whirl-pillar (hwėrl'pil'ėr), n. A waterspout; a dust-whirl.

whirlpit (hwėrl'pit), n. [< whirl + *pit*¹.] A whirlpool.

> The deepest whirl-pit of the rav'nous sea.
> B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 2.
>
> This whirle-pit is said to have thrown up her wrecks neer Tsurumenia. Sandys, Travailes, p. 192.

whirlpool (hwėrl'pōl), n. [Early mod. E. whirlpoole, whirlpole; < whirl + *pool*¹.] 1. A circular eddy or current in a river or the sea produced by the configuration of the channel, by meeting currents, by winds meeting tides, etc. The celebrated whirlpool of Charybdis between Sicily and Italy, and the Maelstrom off the coast of Norway, are not whirlpools in the strict sense, but merely superficial commotions caused by winds meeting tidal currents, and in calm weather are free from danger. Instances of vertical motion, however, do occur, as in the whirlpool of Corryvreckan in the Hebrides, between Jura and Scarba, and in some eddies among the Orkneys.

> Greedy Whirl-poole, ever wheeling round,
> Suck in, at once, Oars, Sails, and Ships to ground
> Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Battle of Ivry.

2†. Some huge sea-monster of the whale kind; a whirl-whale; a whirl-about.

> The Indian Sea breedeth the most and the biggest fishes that are; among which the whales and whirlpools called balænæ, take up in length as much as four acres or arpens of land. Holland, tr. of Pliny, I. 235. (Trench.) whirl-puff† (hwėrl'puf), n. [< ME. whirlpuff; < whirl + puff.] A whirlwind. Wyclif.

> A whirle-puffe or ghust called Typhon.
> Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 48.

whirlwater† (hwėrl'wâ'tėr), n. An old name for a waterspout.

> There was no other water fell over the duke's water-gate than what came of the breaking there of the whirlwater, or, as some call it, the water pillar.
> Court and Times of Charles I., I. 114.

whirl-whale† (hwėrl'hwāl), n. A monster of the whale kind; a whirl-about; a whirlpool.

> Another, swallowed in a Whirl-Whales womb
> Is laid alive within a living Tomb > Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawes.

whirlwig (hwėrl'wig), n. [A var. of whirligig, perhaps simulating -wig in curwig.] Same as whirligig, 4.

whirlwind (hwėrl'wind), n. [< ME. whyrle wynde, qwerl-wind, a whirling wind, = D. werrel wind = G. wirbelwind = Icel. hvirfilvindr = Sw. hvirfvelvind = Dan. hvirvelvind, a whirlwind; as whirl + *wind*², n.] 1. A wind moving in a circumscribed circular path; a mass of air, of which the height is generally very great in comparison with its width, rotating rapidly round a vertical or slightly inclined axis, this axis having at the same time a progressive motion over the surface of the land or sea. Whirlwinds vary greatly in dimensions and intensity, the term including the miniature eddy that circles in the dusty street, the towering sand pillars of the tropical deserts, the waterspout formed over bodies of water, and the destructive tornado of the United States. They arise when the atmosphere is in a condition of instability, and are one of the processes by which a stable condition is regained.

> The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind.
> Job xxxviii. 1.

2. Figuratively, any wild circling rush resembling a whirlwind.

> There the companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
> With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire.
> He soon discerns. Milton, P. L., i. 77.
>
> What a whirlwind is her head! Byron.

The deer was flying through the park, followed by the whirlwind of hounds and hunters.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xii.

To sow the wind and reap the whirlwind. See *sow*².

whirl-worm (hwėrl'wėrm), n. A turbellarian; any member of the Turbellaria.

whirly-bat† (hwėr'li-bat), n. Same as whirl-bat.

> Very true, and he also propos'd the fighting with Whirly bats too: and I don't like that Sport.
> N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 84.

whirret† (hwir'et), n. [Perhaps from whir.] A slap; a blow. Also written wherret, whirrel, whirrick.

> And in a fome gave Furius
> A whirret on the eare.
> Kendall, Flowers of Epigrams (1577). (Nares.)
>
> I forthwith went he following me at my heels, and now and then giving me a whirret on the ear, which, the way to my chamber lying through the hall where John Kaunce was he, poor man, might see and be sorry for as I doubt not that he was, but could not help me.
> T. Ellwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 222.
>
> Then there's your sonse, your wherrit, and your dowst,
> Tags on the hair, your bob o' the lips, a whelp on't!
> I'm'er could find much difference.
> Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iii. 2.

whirret† (hwir'et), v. t. [Also wherret, etc.; cf. wherret, n.] 1. To hurry; trouble; tease. Beck-waitaff, Love in a Village, i. 5.—2. To give a box on the ear to. Brom. and Fl.

whirrick (hwir'ik), n. A variant of whirret.

> Harry . . . gave master such a whirrick!
> R. Brooke, Fool of Quality, I. 21. (Davies.)

whirrit†, n. and v. See whirret.

whirry (hwėr'i), v. [A dial. form of whir or of hurry.] I. intrans. To fly rapidly with noise; whir; hurry.

II. trans. To hurry. [Scotch in both uses.]

whirtle (hwėr'tl), n. [Origin obscure.] A perforated steel plate through which pipe or wire is drawn to reduce its diameter. E. H. Knight.

whish¹ (hwish), v. i. [Imitative; cf. whiz and swish.] To move with the whirring or whizzing sound of rapid motion.

> The scenery of a long tragic drama flashed through his mind as the lightning-express (train whishes by a station).
> O. W. Holmes, Professor, vi.

whish²† (hwish), interj. [Var. of hush.] Hush.

> What means this peevish babe? Whish, lullaby.
> What ails my babe, what ails my babe to cry?
> Quarles, Emblems, ii. 8.

whish³† (hwish), a. [Var. of hush.] Silent: same as hush, whisht, *whist*¹.

> You took my answer well, and all was whish.
> Sir J. Harington, Epig., i. 27.

whishey, whishie (hwish'i), n. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea. Macgillivray. Also whittie.

whisht† (hwisht), interj. and v. [Var. of husht.] Same as husht, *whist*¹.

> When they perceived that Solomon, by the advice of his father was annointed king, by and by there was all whisht. Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

whisk¹ (hwisk), n. [Prop. wesk*; < Icel. visk, a wisp of hay, something to wipe with, a rubber, = Sw. viska, a whisk, small broom, = Dan. viske, a wisp, rubber, = D. wisch = OHG. wisc, MHG. G. wisch, a whisk, clout, prob. connected with wash. The verb is from the orig. noun; but the noun in the later senses ('act of whisking,' etc.) is from the verb.] 1. A wisp or small bunch, as of grass, hair, or straw; specifically, such a wisp used as a brush, broom, or besom, and especially in modern usage one made of the ripened panicle of broom-corn (see broom-corn and Sorghum), used for brushing the dust off clothes, etc.

> If you happen to break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle tree or the cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift, Advice to Servants (Chamber-maids).
>
> The ceiling was divided by whisks of flowers, with a cartouche of honeysuckles. S. Judd, Margaret, II. 11.

2. An instrument used for whipping, agitating, or beating certain articles of food, as cream or eggs. 3. A coopers' plane for leveling the chimes of casks. 4. A neckerchief worn by women in the seventeenth century. Also called falling whisk, apparently in distinction from the ruff.

> My wife in her new lace whiske, which indeed is very noble, and I am much pleased with it.
> Pepys, Diary, II. 217.
>
> Oh, whisks of lawn, by grandams worn,
> In Case contempt of tish-ja sleeves.
> Hudibras Redivivus (1708). (Nares.)

5. A brief, rapid sweeping motion as of something light; a sudden stroke, whiff, puff, or gust.

> This first and whisk
> Takes off thy dukedom, thou art but an earl.
> Fletcher and another, Noble Gentleman, v.

He turned with an angry whisk on his heel, and swaggered with long strides out of the gate.
J. S. Le Fanu, Dragon Volant, ix.

If a whisk of hate a broom sharp your cobweb scrambles.
Lowell, Rhodora, ii.

6†. A servant. [Contemptuous.]

> She is the proud tyrannous whiske.
> Brome, Novella.

7. An implement of fellow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] Mexican or French whisk. Same as broom-root.

whisk¹ (hwisk), v. [Prop. wesk (as in dial. uses, < Sw. viska, wipe, sponge, also wag the tail, = Dan. viske, wipe, rub, sponge, = OHG. wischen, MHG. G. wischen, wipe, rub; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To sweep or brush with a light, rapid motion; as, to whisk the dust from a table.

> She advanced to the fire, rearranged the wood, picked up stray bacon, and whisked the coals with a brush.
> H. B. Stowe, Oldtown Folks.

2. To agitate or mix with a light, rapid motion; beat: as, to whisk eggs. 3. To move with a quick, sweeping motion or flourish; move briskly.

> His papers light fly diverse, tossed in air
> Songs, sonnets, epigrams the winds uplift,
> And whisk 'em back to Evans, Young, and Swift.
> Pope, Imitations, ii. 116.

4. To flourish about.

> Who? he that walks in grey, whisking his riding-rod?
> Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, ii. 1.

5. To carry suddenly and rapidly; whirl.

> The outsiders (in open railway-carriages), who experienced the inconvenience of the smoke as well as the cold atmosphere through which they were whisked.
> Quoted in First Year of a Silken Reign, p. 180.

II. intrans. To move with a quick, sweeping motion; move nimbly and swiftly: as, to whisk away.

> Then ill bested of counsel rageth she (the Queen),
> And whisketh through the town. Surrey, Æneid, iv.
>
> I wish you would one day whisk over and look at Harley House. Walpole, Letters, II. 44.

whisk²† (hwisk), v. [< *whist*¹, v., referring, in the orig. form of the game called "whist and swabbers," to the rapid action and the whisking or sweeping of the cards from the table as the tricks were won. There are various other card terms having reference to quick, sweeping action: e. g., 'sweep the stakes,' slam, etc. The name whisk, having no very obvious significance after its first application, came to be called whist. See *whist*².] The game of whist.

> He plays at whisk and smokes his pipe eight and forty hours together sometimes.
> Farquhar, Beaux' Stratagem, I. 1.
>
> He played at whisk till one in the morning.
> Walpole, Letters, II. 417.

Whisk and swabbers. See swabber.

whisker (hwis'kėr), n. [Formerly also (Sc.) whisper, whisker; < *whisk*¹ + *-er*¹.] 1. One who or that which whisks, or moves with a quick, sweeping motion.—2. A switch or rod. [Old slang.]

> A whip is a whisker that will wrest out blood
> Of back and of body, beaten right well.
> Harman, Caveat for Cursetors, p. 128.

3. A bunch of feathers for sweeping anything. Jamieson. 4. In zoöl.: (a) One of the long, stiff, bristly hairs which grow on the upper lip of the cat and many other animals; a vibrissa; a feeler; also, the set of such hairs on either side of the mouth. See vibrissa, and cuts under Platyrhynchus and tapir. (b) pl. Any similar formation of hairs, feathers, etc., about an animal's mouth; also, color marks suggestive of whiskers, as mystacial or maxillary stripes. See whiskered. (c) In entom., a long fringe of hairs on the clypeus, overhanging the mouth, as in flies of the genus Asilus.—5. The hair of the face, especially that on the sides of the face or cheeks of a man as distinguished from that which grows on the upper lip (called the mustache) and that on the chin (called the beard), but the word was formerly also used for the hair on the upper lip: commonly in the plural. Compare side whiskers.

> His face not very great, ample forehead, yellowish reddish whiskers which naturally turned up: below he was shaved close, except a little tip under his lip.
> Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Hobbes).
>
> His whiskers curled and shoe-strings tied,
> A new Toledo by his side. Addison, Rosamond, ii. 2.
>
> He had a beard too, and whiskers turned upwards on his upper lip, as long as Bardolph's. Scott, Antiquary, ix.
>
> The Czar looked, I own, was much brighter and briskier,
> But then he is sadly deficient in whiskers.
> Byron, Fragment of Epistle to Thomas Moore.

6. In ships, an outrigger of wood or iron extending laterally from each side of the bowsprit-cap, serving to support the jib and flying jib guys.—7. Something great or extraordinary; a whopper: a big lie. Phrontis unto Euphues (1604), p. 36. (Davies.)—8. A blusterer. [Scotch.]

> March whisker was never a good fisher.
> Scotch proverbs (Kelly's Proverbs (1876), p. 335).

whiskerando (hwis-ke-ran'dō), n. [So called in allusion to Don Leucio Whiskerandos, a burlesque character in Sheridan's play, "The Critic": a name formed, with a Spanish-looking termination, < whisker.] A whiskered or bearded person. [Burlesque.]

> The disagreeably square-shouldered squinting, carroty whiskerandos of a waiter who was laying about him so savagely. Thackeray, Philip, xiii.

whiskerandoed† (hwis-ke-ran'dōd), a. [As whiskerando + *-ed*².] Whiskered.

> To what follies and what extravagancies would the whiskerandoed mountains of Regent Street and St. James's proceed, if it had been ever more worn, instead of the neckcloth, to "make the man"! Southey, The Doctor, clvi.

whiskered (hwis'kėrd), a. [< whisker + *-ed*².] 1. Wearing whiskers; having whiskers, in any sense.

> The whisker'd vermin race. Grainger, Sugar-Cane, ii.
>
> Again the whiskered Spaniard all the land with terror smote. Longfellow, Belfry of Bruges.

2. Formed into whiskers.

Preferring sense from chin that's bare
To nonsense thron'd in whisker'd hair.
M. Green, The Spleen.

Black-whiskered greenlet or vireo. See vireo and whip tom-kelly. Whiskered auk or auklet, Simorhynchus pygmæus, a small auk found in the North Pacific, of a dark color, having long white feathers like whiskers on each side of the head. It closely resembles the bird figured at auklet. Whiskered bat, Vespertilio mystacinus, a small brown bat widely distributed in Europe and Asia. Whiskered tern. See tern.

whiskery (hwis'kėr-i), a. [< whisker + -y[1].] Having or wearing whiskers. [Humorous.]

The old lady is as ugly as any woman in the parish, and as tall and whiskery as a Grenadier.
Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xii.

whisket (hwis'ket), n. [Also wisket, < whist[1] + -et.] 1. A basket; especially, a straw basket in which provender is given to cattle. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A small lathe for turning wooden pins. It has a hollow chuck to hold the pin while being turned. E. H. Knight.

whiskey, whiskeyfied. See whisky, whiskyfied.

whiskified, whiskeyfied (hwis'ki-fid), a. [< whisky[2] + -fy + -ed[2].] Intoxicated, or partly intoxicated, as with whisky. [Humorous.]

The two whiskeyfied gentlemen are up with her.
Thackeray, Virginians, xxxviii.

This person was a sort of whiskified Old Mortality who claimed to have cut all manner of tombstones standing around. W. Black, Phaeton, xxviii. (Davies.) whiskin[†] (hwis'kin), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. A kind of drinking vessel.

And wee will han a whiskin at every rush-bearing, a wassel cup at yule, a seed-cake at lastens.
The Two Lancashire Lovers (1640), p. 19. (Halliwell.)

2. A low menial of either sex. Ford's Fancies, i. 3, note.

whisking (hwis'king), p. a. 1. Sweeping along lightly; moving nimbly.

With whisking broom they brush and sweep
The cloudy Curtains of Heav'ns stages steep.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

The whisking winds. Purchas.

2. Great; large. Bailey, 1731. [Prov. Eng.]

whisky[1], whiskey[1] (hwis'ki), n. [< whisk[1] + -y[1], because it whisks along rapidly.] A kind of light gig or one-horse chaise. Sometimes called tom whisky.

Whiskeys and gigs and curricles. Crabbe, Works, II. 174.

The increased taxation of the curricle had the effect of bringing into existence the less expensive gig, a development or imitation of a class of two-wheeled carriage known in the country as a whisky.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, III. 227.

whisky[2], whiskey[2] (hwis'ki), n. [Also Sc. whuskey, prob. short for "whiskybaugh or some similar form, var. of usquebaugh, < Gael. and Ir. usgebeatha, whisky, lit. (like F. eau de vie, brandy) 'water of life,' < usge, water, + beatha, life (cf. L. vita, life, Gr. βίος, life). It does not seem probable that E. whisky was taken from Gael. Ir. usge simply.] An ardent spirit, distilled chiefly from grain. The term was originally applied to the spirit obtained from malt in Ireland, Scotland, etc., in which sense whisky is synonymous with usquebaugh. Irish whisky and Scotch whisky are still made from malt, and are known by numerous names, as peteen, mountain dew, etc. In the United States whisky is commonly made either from Indian corn (corn whisky) or from rye (rye whisky). The name wheat whisky has, however, been appropriated to certain brands, and wheat is probably used in the making of many different kinds or qualities. Whisky cocktail, a cocktail in which whisky is the principal ingredient. It consists of whisky and water flavored with bitters, usually also with the peel of orange or lemon, and sweetened with sugar. Whisky Insurrection or Rebellion. See insurrection. Whisky ring, a combination of United States revenue officers and distillers to defraud the government of a part of the internal revenue tax on distilled spirits. It was formed in St. Louis about 1872, extended to other western cities, and secretly acquired great influence in the government, but was broken up in 1875. Whisky smash, a beverage of which the principal ingredient is whisky flavored with mint which is bruised or smashed in the liquor, and usually also with orange, lemon, pineapple, or other fruit; a whisk sour with the addition of mint. Whisky sour, a beverage consisting chiefly of whisky and water, modulated with lemon juice. Whisky toddy, toddy of which whisky is the principal ingredient; a beverage consisting of hot water and whisky, sweetened or spiced.

whisky-frisky (hwis'ki-fris'ki), a. Flighty. [Colloq.]

As to talking in such a whisky-frisky manner that nobody can understand him, why it's tantamount to not talking at all. Miss Burney, Cecilia, ix. 1.

whisky-jack (hwis'ki-jak), n. [An altered form, by substitution of the familiar Jack for John, of whisky-john.] The gray jay common in northern sections and western mountainous parts of North America; the Canada jay, Perisoreus canadensis, related to P. infaustus of northern Europe; the moose bird. See cut under Perisoreus.

The Canada Jay, or Whisky-Jack (the corruption probably of a Cree name). Encyc. Brit., XIII. 811.

whisky-john (hwis'ki-jon), n. [A corruption of the Cree Ind. name, rendered whiskae-shaweecsh by Sir John Richardson, but commonly spelled wiskachon, < Cree Ind. wiss-ka-tjan. Cf. whisky-jack.] Same as whisky-jack.

whisky-liver (hwis'ki-liv'ėr), n. Cirrhosis of the liver, resulting from chronic alcohol-poisoning.

whisp (hwisp), n. An erroneous form of wisp, 4, like the erroneous form, now established, whisk for wisk.

whisper (hwis'pėr), v. [< ME. whisperen, whysperen, whaspren, hwaspren, whisper, < AS. (ONorth.) hwæspran, whisper, murmur, = MD. wispelen, D. wispelen, whisper, = OHG. wispalon, hwispalon, MHG. G. wispeln, whisper; cf. recent G. wispern, whisper; allied to Icel. hviskra = Sw. hviska = Dan. hviske, whisper; imitative words, like whistle, whittle, AS. hwistlian and hwæstrian, whistle, alt. from the sibilant base hwis-. Cf. whistle.] I. intrans. 1. To speak without uttering voice or sonant breath; speak with a low, rustling voice; speak softly or under the breath; converse in whispers: often implying plotting, evil speaking, and the like.

I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Shak., All's Well, iv. 3. 329.

When David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead. 2 Sam. xii. 19.

All that hate me whisper together against me. Ps. xli. 7.

The hawthorn-bush, with seats beneath the shade—
For talking age and whispering lovers made!
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 14.

Alas! they had been friends in youth,
But whispering tongues can poison truth.
Coleridge, Christabel, ii.

2. To make a low, rustling sound, like that of a whisper.

Soft zephyrs whispering through the trees.
Thomson, Country Life.

The trees began to whisper and the wind began to roll.
Tennyson, May Queen, Conclusion.

Smooth as our Charles (River), when, fearing lest he wrong
The new moon's mirrored skiff, he slides along,
Full without noise, and whispers in his reeds.
Lowell, To H. W. L. on his Birthday.

Whispered bronchophony, bronchophony elicited by the whispering of the patient.

II. trans. 1. To utter in a low non-vocal tone; say under the breath; state or communicate in whispers: often implying plotting, slanderous talk, etc.

She whispers in his ears a heavy tale.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1125.

Fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it to the woods.
Milton, P. L., viii. 516.

I know that 's a Secret, for it is whisper'd every where.
Congreve, Love for Love, iii. 3.

2. To address or inform in a whisper or low voice, especially with the view of avoiding publicity: elliptical for whisper to.

He did rest whisper the man in the ear, that such a man should think of such a card. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 940.

He came
To whisper Wolsey.
Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 1. 179.

You saw her whisper me erewhile.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, iv. 2.

He whisper'd the bonnie lassie herself,
And has her favour won.
Katharine Janjarie (Child's Ballads, IV. 309).

At the same time he whispered me in the ear to take notice of a tabby cat that sat in the chimney corner.
Addison, Spectator, No. 117.

whisper (hwis'pėr), n. [< whisper, v.] 1. The utterance of words with the breath not made vocal; a low, soft, rustling voice.

The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death.
Shak., Pericles, III. i. 9.

The inward voice or whisper can never give a tone.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 174.

2. A whispered word, remark, or conversation.

Full well the busy whisper circling round,
Convey'd the dismal tidings when he frown'd.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 303.

Upon his first rising the court was hushed, and a general whisper ran among the country people that Sir Roger was up.
Addison, Spectator, No. 122.

No sound broke the stillness of the night save now and then a low whisper from the men who were standing motionless in the ranks. Cornhill Mag., Oct., 1888, p. 384.

3. A secret hint, suggestion, or insinuation.

At least, the whisper goes so. Shak., Hamlet, i. 1. 80.

Princes,
Though they be sometime subject to loose whispers,
Yet wear they two-edg'd swords for open censures.
Fletcher, Valentinian, iii. 1.

I heard many whispers against the other, as a whimsical sort of a fellow. Steele, Tatler, No. 82.

4. A low, rustling sound of whispering, or a similar sound, as of the wind.

In whispers like the whispers of the leaves
That tremble round a nightingale.
Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

5. Specifically, in med., the sound of the whispering voice transmitted to the ear of the auscultator placed against the chest-wall.—Cavernous whisper. See cavernous.—Pig's whisper. See pig[1].

whisperer (hwis'pėr-ėr), n. [< whisper + -er[1].] 1. One who whispers, or speaks in a low, soft, rustling voice, or under the breath.—2. One who tells secrets, or makes secret and mischievous communications; a talebearer; an informer.

A whisperer separateth chief friends. Prov. xvi. 28.

Whisperers, backbiters, haters of God. Rom. i. 29.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers than good magistrates and officers. Bacon, Deformity (ed. 1887).

They are directly under the conduct of their whisperer, and think they are in a state of freedom while they can prate with one of these attendants of all men in general, and still avoid the man they must like.
Steele, Spectator, No. 118.

whisperhood (hwis'pėr-hud), n. [< whisper + -hood.] The state of being a whisper; the initial condition of a rumor — that is, a mere whisper or insinuation. [Rare.]

I know a lie that now disturbs half the kingdom with its noise, which although too proud and great at present to own its parents, I can remember its whisperhood.
Swift, Examiner, No. 14.

whispering (hwis'pėr-ing), n. [Verbal n. of whisper, v.] 1. Whispered talk or conversation; a whisper, or whispers collectively.

Ther was nothing but private meetings and whisperings amongst them, they feeding themselves & others with what they should bring to pass in England.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 173.

Even the whisperings ceased, and nothing broke the stillness but the plashing of the waves without.
F. L. Bonner, Bagum's Daughter, xxii.

2. Talebearing, hint, or insinuation.

Lest there be . . . whisperings. 2 Cor. xii. 20.

Foul whisperings are abroad. Shak., Macbeth, v. 1. 79.

whispering (hwis'pėr-ing), p. a. [Ppr. of whisper, v.] 1. Like a whisper; low and non-vocal.

The passing of all these hundreds of naked feet makes a great whispering sound over the burning pavements.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 224.

2. Emitting, making, or characterized by a low sound to semblance a whisper.

The watch-dog's voice that bay'd the whispering wind.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 121.

To Roxy Brook, to cut long whispering reeds which grew there, to make pan-pipes of.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 3.

I waded and floundered a couple of miles through the whispering night. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 40.

whispering gallery (hwis'pėr-ing-gal'ė-ri), n. See gallery.

whisperingly (hwis'pėr-ing-li), adv. In a whispering manner; in a low voice.

The pool in the corner where the grasses were dank and trees leaned whisperingly.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xii.

whisperously (hwis'pėr-us-li), adv. [< "whisperous (< whisper + -ous) + -ly[2].] In a whisper; whisperingly. [Rare.]

The Duchess in awe of Carr Vipont sinks her voice, and gabbles on whisperously.
Bulwer, What will he do with it? v. 8.

whist[1] (hwist), interj. [< ME. whist! hush! cf. whisht, hest[1], husht, husk, etc. These are all variations of the utterance st, consisting of a sibilant or low hiss stopped abruptly by the stop-consonant t. This utterance is especially suited to call the attention of one near, and by the lowness of the sound to suggest silence. Cf. whisper, whistle.] Silence! hush! be still!

whist[1] (hwist), a. [Also whisht; < whist[1], interj.] Hushed; silent; mute; still: chiefly used predicatively.

When all were whist, King Edward thus bespake.
Peele, Honour of the Garter.

Far from the town (where all is whist and still).
Marlowe, Hero and Leander, i.

The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kist.
Milton, Nativity, l. 64.

whist[1]† (hwist), v. [< whist[1], a. Cf. hist[1], hush, etc.] I. trans. To silence; still.

So was the Titanesse put downe and whist.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 30.

II. intrans. To become silent.

> In silence then, enshrouding him from sight,
> But days twice five he whisted; and refused,
> To death, by speech to further any wight.
> Surrey, Æneid, ii.

> Th' other sipt so nie
> That whist I could not.
> Mic. for Magt., p. 67.

whist[2] (hwist), n. [A later form of whisk[2]. The change from whist[2], a word of no very obvious significance after its first application, was prob. orig. accidental, or due to an unthinking conformity to whist[1]. The notion that the game was called whist "because the parties playing have to be whist or silent," etymologically improbable in itself, is based on the erroneous assumption that whist is the orig. name. The rule of silence, so far as it exists, is appar. founded, however, in part on the false etymology.] A game played with cards by four persons, two of them as partners in opposition to the other two, also partners. Partnership is determined by agreement or by cutting: if by agreement, two players, one on each side, cut for deal; if by cutting the two who cut the lowest cards are partners, and the original deal belongs to the player who cuts the lowest card. The ace is the lowest card in cutting. Previous to play, the cards (a full pack) are shuffled. The player on the right of the dealer cuts, and the dealer, beginning with the player on his left, distributes in regular order to all the players, one at a time, the cards face downward, except the last card, which he turns face upward upon the table, at his right hand, where it must remain until his turn to play. This is the trump card, and the suit to which it belongs is the trump suit; the other three suits are plain suits. The leader is the dealer's left-hand player, who begins the play by throwing one of his thirteen cards face upward upon the center of the table. Second hand, the leader's left hand player, follows with a card of the same suit if he holds one; if he does not hold one, with a card of a plain suit as discard or with a trump; third and fourth hands similarly follow, and the highest card or the highest trump played takes the trick. The trick is gathered by the partner of the winner, the four cards are made by him into a packet, and placed face downward, at his left hand, on the table. The winner becomes the leader, and the routine is continued until all the cards held are played. Tricks above six in number count a point each upon the score. The score is the record kept of the number of points made. In play the ace is highest, the king, queen, knave, 10, and 9 are also high cards, the 8 is the middle card, and the 7 to the 2 inclusive are low cards. The rank of the cards is in the above order: the queen will take the knave, the 9 will take the 8. The ace, king, queen and knave of the trump suit are the honors. Any trump will take any plain suit card. The usual practice is to play with two packs of cards, one of these being shuffled or "made up" by the partner of the dealer during the deal, and afterward placed by him on the left hand of the next dealer. The dealer has the privilege of shuffling before the cards are cut. The play is conducted with reference to combinations of cards held. By the system used the cards are made conversational. In English or short whist the table is complete with six candidates. When a rubber has been played by four of these (elected by cutting), the other two have right of entry. The game is of five points made by tricks and by honors as counted. Four honors held by a player or in conjunction with his partner, count four points; three honors similarly held count two points. The winners of a game score a point (a single) if the adversaries have three or four points up; two points (a double) against one or two points up, and three points (a treble) against no score. A rubber (two games won in succession, or two won out of three) is always played. Two points for the rubber are added to the score of the rubber-winners. When three games are played, the value of the opponents' score is deducted from the winners' total. Exposed cards (cards seen when they should not be played) must be left face upward on the table, liable to an adversary's call; a card led out of turn may be called or, instead a card of another suit: cards played upon a trick may by any player be ordered to be placed before their respective players; a player may ask his partner if he holds a card of a suit in which he renounces; and any player may demand to see the last trick that has been turned. In American or standard whist four players form a table. These may agree upon or cut for partners. The game is of seven points, made of tricks and penalties. Credit for all points made by both sides is given, the winner of a rubber scoring the entire number of points made against the entire number made by the opponents. Cards are not called, a trick turned cannot be shown, honors are not counted, and conversation during play is not permitted. Penalties for speaking or demonstration, exposure of cards, or leading out of turn, and for revoking are payable in points after the last card of a hand is played and before the cards are cut for the next deal.

> I affirm against Aristotle that cold and rain congregate homogenes, for they gather together you and your crew, at whist, punch, and claret.
> Swift To Mr. Sheridan, Jan. 25, 1727.

> At Whist there is a constant endeavor on the part of one side to arrive at the maximum result for their hands by the use of observation, memory, inference, and judgment, their play being dependent from trick to trick on the inferred position of the unknown from observation of the known.
> Cavendish, Card Essays, p. 6.

> American Whist is recreative work, enjoyable labor, paradoxical as that may seem: its riddle is fascination; its practice is intelligent employment; its play is mathematical induction; its result is intellectual gain.
> American Whist Illus., p. 279.

Bridge whist, a game resembling dummy whist, but differing from it in many details. — Double-dummy whist. See double dummy, under dummy. — Dummy whist. See dummy, 3. — Duplicate whist, a modification of the game of whist in which by an arrangement of boards, indicators, and counters hands are preserved after having been once played, enabling them to be replayed by the opposing partners. — Fancy whist, any form of play that introduces unauthorized methods. — Five-point whist, a game without counting honors, usually played under such short-whist laws as may be applied to it. — Long whist, a game of ten points with honors counting. This was the game of the eighteenth century, played at the English clubs until that of five points with honors counting, called by Clay short whist, was introduced.

> In the author's opinion long whist (ten up) is a far finer game than short whist (five up). Short whist, however, has taken such a hold that there is no chance of our reverting to the former game.
> Cavendish, On Whist, p. xi.

Mongrel whist, a game played in accordance with laws or regulations selected from the two authorized methods. whistert (hwis'tėr), v. i. [A var. of whesper, simulating whist[1].] To whisper; recite in a low voice.

> Then returneth she home unto the sicke party, . . . and whistereth a certaine odde prator with a False Nostes into his eare. Holland, tr. of Camden, II. 14. (Davies.)

> Oft fine whistring noise shall bring sweete sleepe to thy sences. W. Webbe, Eng. Poetry (ed. Arber), p. 75. (Davies.)

whistersnefett, whisternivet, n. [Origin obscure.] A hard blow; a buffet. [Slang.]

> A good whistersnefett, mantle pated on his care.
> Vault, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 112.

whistle (hwis'l), v.; pret. and pp. whistled, ppr. whistling. [< ME. whistlen, whistelen, whystelen, < AS. hwistlian* (as seen in AS. hwistlere, a piper, whistler, < Icel. hvesla, whisper, = Sw. hvissla, whistle, = Dan. hvisle, whistle, also hiss; freq. from an imitative base hwis*; see whisper.] I. intrans. 1. To utter a kind of musical sound by forcing the breath through a small orifice formed by contracting the lips.

> Ri[t] as capones in a court cometh to mennes whistlynge to mengynge after mete. Piers Ploweman (B), xv. 466.

> A moon as thei were with drawen. Merlin whistled loude. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 666.

> Now give me leve to whistell my fyll.
> Pleasaunt Narracyons of Robyn Hoode (Child's Ballads, V. 424).

> Just saddle your horse, young John Forsyth,
> And whistle, and I'll come soon.
> Lyon Morris (Child's Ballads, VI. 203).

> Whistle then to me
> As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
> Shak., R. and J., v. 3.

2. To emit a warbling or sharp, chirping sound or song, as a bird.

> Latin was no more difficile
> Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle.
> S. Butler, Hudibras, I. i. 54.

> Hedge-cricketts sing; and now with treble soft
> The redbreast whistles from a garden-croft
> And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.
> Keats, To Autumn.

3. To sound shrill or sharp; move or rush with shrill or whizzing sound.

> The southern wind
> Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
> And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
> Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.
> Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1.

> A ball . . . whistled o'er his head. Byron, The Giaour.

4. To emit a whistle or similar wind- or steam-instrument: as, locomotives whistle at cross-ings. — 5. To give information by whistling: hence, to be entire informer.

> I kept days between him and her, for fear she had whistled.
> Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxiii.

To go whistle, a milder expression for to go to the deuce, or the like.

> This being done, let the law go whistle.
> Shak., W. T., iv. 4.

> Your fame is secure, bid the critics go whistle.
> Shenstone, The Fool and the Dog.

To whistle down the wind, to talk to no purpose; hold an idle or futile argument. To whistle for, to summon by whistling. To whistle for a wind, a superstitious practice among old seamen of whistling during a calm to obtain a breeze; such men will not whistle during a storm.

> Because I desire to be free? "I desire" say that I do, but I may whistle for that wind long enough before it will blow."
> Johnston, Chrysal, II. 181. (Davies.)

Whistling coot, the American black scoter, Oidemia americana. (Coues, Key.) See cut under Oidemia. Whistling dick. (a) Same as whistling thrush. [Local, Eng.] (b) An Australian bird, Colluricincla (or Collyriocincla) harmonica, the harmonic thrush of Latham, usually placed in the family Laniadæ, now in the Pycnonotidæ, or another of this genus, as the Tasmanian C. rectirostris (C. selbyi). The species named are 9½ to 10 inches long, chiefly of a gray color varied with brown and white. — Whistling duck. (a) The whistler or widgeon, a duck. (b) Same as whistling swan. (c) Same as whistling teal. Whistling eagle, whistling hawk, Haliaetus sphenurus, one of whose former names was Haliaetus cantorus. Vigors and Horsfield, 1827, a small eagle or large hawk 22 inches long, inhabiting the whole of Australia and New Caledonia. It is a congener of the wide-spread Pondicherry eagle, H. indus. Whistling marmot, the hoary marmot. See cut under whistler, 1 (c). — Whistling plover. See plover. — Whistling rule, a blast rule. See dog rule, under rule. — Whistling snipe. (a) Same as greenshank. (b) See snipe, 1 (c). — Whistling swan. (a) The hooper, elk, or whooping swan. See swan, 1. (b) In the United States, the common American swan, Cygnus americanus or columbianus, as distinguished from the trumpeter, C. (Olor) buccinator. — Whistling thrush, the song-thrush, Turdus musicus. See cut under thrush. [Local, Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To form, utter, or modulate by whistling: as, to whistle a tune or air.

> Pines . . . that he heard the carmen whistle.
> Shak., 2 Hen. IV., III. 2. 342.

> I might as well . . . have whistled ope to a mile stone.
> W. Collins, Memoirs, 221.

2. To call, direct, or signal by or as by a whistle.

> He cast off his friends, as a huntsman his pack,
> For he knew when he pleased he could whistle them back.
> Goldsmith, Retaliation.

> The first blue bird of spring whistled them back to the woods.
> Lowell, Harvard Anniversary.

3†. To send with a whistling sound.

> The Spaniards, who lay as yet at a good distance from them behind the Bushes, as secure of their Prey, began to whistle now and then a shot among them.
> Dampier, Voyages, I. 117.

To whistle off, to send off by a whistle; send from the fist in pursuit of prey: a term in falconry; hence, to dismiss or send away generally; turn loose. Narrowremarks, on the quotation from Shakspere, that the hawk seems to have been usually cast off in this way against the wind when sent in pursuit of prey, with it, or down the wind, when turned loose or abandoned.

> If I do prove her haggard,
> Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
> I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
> To prey at fortune.
> Shak., Othello, III. 3. 262.

> This is he,
> Left to fill up your triumph, he that basely
> Whistled his honour off to the wind.
> Fletcher, Bonduca, iv. 3.

whistle (hwis'l), n. [< ME. whistle, whestel, whystyl, wastle, < AS. hwistle, a whistle, a piper; see whistle, v.] 1. A more or less piercing or sharp sound produced by forcing the breath through a small orifice formed by contracting the lips: as, the merry whistle of a boy. — 2. Any similar sound. Especially (a) The shrill note of a bird.

> The great plover's human whistle.
> Tennyson, Geraint.

(b) A sound of this kind produced on an instrument, especially one of the instruments called whistles. See def. 2.

> Ship-boys . . .
> Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give,
> Sometimes the whistle of a mariner,
> And all alseke the rough curbe of the ocean back.
> Marston, What You Will, v. 1.

(c) A sound made by the wind blowing through branches of trees, the rigging of a vessel, etc., or by a flying missile. (d) A call or signal made by whistling.

> Such a high calling therefore as this sends not for those drossy spirits that need the lure and whistle of earthly preferment, like those animals that fetch and carry for a morsell.
> Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

> They [of Scio] have now no domestic partridges that come at a whistle, but great plenty of wild ones of the red sort.
> Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 9.

3. An instrument or apparatus for producing a whistling sound. Whistles are of various shapes and sizes, but they all utilize the principle of the divert flute or flageolet — that of a stream of air so directed through a tube as to impinge on a sharp edge.

> With quaffes & quwes, & other qwaint gere,
> Melody of mowthe myrthe for to here.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6061.

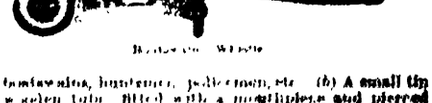
A whistle seems to have been a badge of high command in the navy in the sixteenth century. One is mentioned in the will of Sir Edward Howard (1513) as hung from a rich chain.
Fairholt.

Specifically — (a) The small pipe used in signaling, etc.,



Boatswain's Whistle.

by boatswains, huntsmen, policemen, etc. (b) A small tin or wooden tube fitted with a mouthpiece and pierced generally with six holes, used as a musical toy. Often called a penny whistle. See flageolet. (c) An instrument sounded by escaping steam, used for giving signals, alarms, etc., on railway engines, steamships, etc. See cuts under steam-whistle and passenger engine. — At one's whistle, at one's call.

> Ready at his whistle to array themselves round him in arms against the commander in chief.
> Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xiii.

Galton's whistle, an instrument for testing the power to hear shrill notes. — To pay for one's whistle, or to pay dear for one's whistle, to pay a high price for something one fancies, pay dearly for indulging one's whim, caprice, fancy, or the like. The allusion is to the story Benjamin Franklin tells (Works, ed. 1836, II. 169) of his setting his mind upon a common whistle and buying it for four times its real value

If a man likes to do it, he must pay for his whistle.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxxv. (Davies.)

To wet one's whistle, to take a drink of liquor, perhaps with reference to the wetting of a wooden whistle to improve the tone, perhaps merely in comparison of the throat and vocal organs with a musical instrument. Sometimes, erroneously, to whet one's whistle. [Colloquial and jocose.]

As any jay she light was and joly,
So was hir joly whistle wel ywet
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 235

I wete my whystell, as good drinkers do. Jo croeque la pie. Wyll you wete your whystell? Palsgrave, p. 749.

Worth the whistle, worth the trouble or pains of calling for.

I have been worth the whistle. Shak., Lear, iv. 2. 29.

whistle-belly (hwis'l-bel"i), a. That causes rumbling or whistling in the belly. [Slang.]

"I thought you wouldn't appreciate the widow's tap," said East, watching him with a grin. "Regular whistle belly vengeance, and no mistake!"
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. xviii.

whistle-cup (hwis'l-kup), n. A drinking-cup having a whistle appended, awarded, as a prize in a drinking-bout, to the last person able to blow it.

whistle-drunk (hwis'l-drungk), a. Too drunk to whistle; very drunk. [Slang.]

He was indeed, according to the vulgar phrase, whistle-drunk; for, before he had swallowed the third bottle he became so entirely overpowered that, though he was not carried off to bed till long after, the parson considered him as absent. Fielding, Tom Jones, xii. 3. (Davies.) whistle-duck (hwis'l-duk), n. 1. Same as whistler, 1 (c).—2. Same as whistle-wing.

whistle-fish (hwis'l-fish), n. A rockling; specifically, the three-bearded rockling: same as sea-loach. Also weasel-fish.

I believe . . . that, while preserving the sound of the name, the term has been changed, and a very different word substituted, and that for whistle fish we ought to read weasel fish. Both the Three and Five bearded Rocklings were called mustela from the days of Pliny to those of Rondelet, and thence to the present time.
Farrell, British Fishes, II. 272.

whistler (hwis'lėr), n. [< ME. whistlere, hwistlare, < AS. hwistlere, a whistler, piper, < hwistlian, whistle: see whistle.] 1. One who or that which whistles.

One guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 474.

Specifically—(a) The hoary marmot, Arctomys pruinosus, a large marmot found in northerly and western mountainous parts of North America, related to the wood chuck, a translation of the Canadian French name sifflear. (b) The whistlewing. [U. S.] (c) The widgeon, Mareca penelope (see whew-duck). (d) The ring ouzel, Merula torquata. See cut under ouzel. [Local, Eng.] (e) The green plover or lapwing; the pewit.

The screech-owl, and the whistler shrill. Webster.

Whistler (Arctomys pruinosus).

2. A broken-winded horse; a roarer.

The latter of whom is spoken of as a non-stayer and a whistler. The Field, Aug. 7, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

3†. A piper; one who plays on the pipes. Piers Plowman (B), xv. 475.—4. The keeper of a shebeen, or unlicensed spirit-shop. [Slang.]

The turnkeys knows beforehand, and gives the word to the watters, and you may wistle for it when you go to look.
Dickens, Pickwick, xlv.

whistlewing (hwis'l-wing), n. The golden-eyed duck, Clangula glaucion. Also whistle-duck, whistling duck.

whistle-wood (hwis'l-wud), n. The striped maple, Acer Pennsylvanicum, thus named because used by boys to make whistles, the bark easily separating from a section of the stem in spring. The name is also given to the basswood, Tilia Americana, having the same property, and in Great Britain is locally applied to the mountain-ash, Pyrus aucuparia, and to the common and sycamore maples, Acer campestre and A. Pseudo-platanus.

whistling (hwis'ling), p. a. Sounding like a whistle; as, a whistling sound.

whistling-arrow (hwis'ling-ar'o), n. An arrow whose head was so formed that the air rushing through it in its flight produced a whistling sound: a toy in use in the sixteenth century.

whistling-buoy (hwis'ling-boi), n. See buoy, 1 (with cut).

whistlingly (hwis'ling-li), adv. In a whistling manner; with a sibilant or shrill sound. Stormonth.

whistling-shop (hwis'ling-shop), n. A spirit-shop, especially a secret and illicit one. In the quotation, the place referred to is a room in a prison for debtors where spirits are sold secretly. [Slang.]

"Bless your heart no, sir," replied Job; "a whistling shop, sir, is where they sell spirits."
Dickens, Pickwick, xlv.

whistly† (hwist'li), adv. [< whist[1] + -ly[2]. Cf. wistly.] Silently.

whist-play (hwist'plā), n. Play in the game of whist.

The fact is that all rules of whist-play depend upon and are referable to general principles.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 544.

whist-player (hwist'plā'ėr), n. One who plays whist.

About 1850 some of the best French whist-players, with Deschapelles at their head, modified and improved the old-fashioned system. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 543.

whit[1] (hwit), n. [A var. of wit*, a var. of wight, < ME. wiht, wht, sometimes with, < AS. wiht: see wight[1]. The change of initial w- to wh- is perhaps due in this case to emphasis (so want[1] is sometimes pronounced emphatically whont). The notion that whit is derived by metathesis from AS. wht is erroneous.] The smallest part, particle, bit, or degree; a little; a jot, tittle, or iota: often used adverbially, and generally with a negative.

A meruelous case, that Ientlemen should so be ashamed of good learning, and neuer a whit ashamed of ill maners.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 69.

Nor is the freedom of the will of God any whit abated, let, or hindered. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. 2.

And Samuel told him every whit. 1 Sam. iii. 18.

Are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day? John vii. 23.

But all your threats I do not fear,
Nor yet regard one whit
The Cruel Black (Child's Ballads, III. 370).

Why, man, you don't seem one whit the happier at this.
Sheridan, The Rivals, iv. 3.

whit[2] (hwit), a. An obsolete or dialectal form (surviving especially in old compounds, as whit-leather, Whitsun, etc.) of white.

whit-bee (hwit'bē), n. See Portland stone, under stone.

white[1] (hwit), a. and n. [< ME. whit, whyt, qwit, hwit, < AS. hwīt = OS. hwīt = OFries. hwit = D. wit = LG. wit = OHG. MHG. wīz, G. weiss = Icel. hvītr = Sw. hvit = Dan. hvid = Goth. hweits, white; akin to Skt. çveta, white, < √ çvit, be white, shine: cf. çvitra, çvitna, white. OBulg. svietŭ, light, světlŭ, shine, give light, Russ. svetu, light, etc. Hence ult. wheat, whitster, whittle[1], whiting[1], etc.] I. a. 1. Of the color of pure snow or any powder of material transmitting all visible rays without sensible absorption; transmitting and so reflecting to the eye all the rays of the spectrum combined in the same proportions as in the impinging light, and thus, as seen in sunlight, conveying the same impression to the eye as sunlight of moderate intensity; not tinged or tinted with any of the proper colors or their compounds; snowy: the opposite of black or dark.

Amiddes a tree fordrye, as whyte as chalk, . . .
Ther sat a faucon over hir hed ful hye.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 401.

Frassho lampraye bake; open ye pasty, than take whyte brede, and cut it thynne, & lay it in a dysshe.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 251.

A head
So old and white as this. Shak., Lear, iii. 2. 24.

Nor ever falls the least white star of snow.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

2. Pale; pallid; bloodless, as from fear or cowardice.

To turn white and swoon at tragic shows.
Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 308.

Or whispering with white lips. "The foe! they come!"
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 25.

3. Free from spot or guilt; pure; clean; stainless.

Calumny
The whitest virtue strikes.
Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 198.

In thy white way of virtue and true valour
You have been a pilgrim long.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 5.

4†. Fair; beautiful.

"Ye, ywis," quod fresshe Antigone the white.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 887.

Y was stalworthe & white.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 19.

5†. Dear; favorite; darling. See whitely, 2.

He is great Prince of Walis; . . .
Then ware what is done,
For he is Henry's white son.
Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (Works, ed. Dyce), [I. 178].

6. Square; honorable; reliable: as, a white man. [Slang, U. S.]

Why, Miss, he's a friend worth havin', and don't you forget it. There ain't a whiter man than Lemuale Jacks from the Wind River Mountains down to Santa Fé.
The Century, XXXIX. 861.

7†. Gracious; specious; fair-seeming.

"Ye caused al this fare,
Trow I," quod she, "for al your wordes white."
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1068.

8. Gracious; friendly; favorable; auspicious: as, a white witch.

Thou, Minerva the whyte,
Gif thou me wit my letre to devyse.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1003.

Till this white hour, these walls were never proud
T' inclose a guest. Shirley, Grateful Servant, ii. 1.

The Thanksgiving festival of that year is particularly impressed on my mind as a white day.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 338.

9†. Silver: as, white money.

Let but the host be search'd, I'll pawn my life
There's yet the tailor's bill in one o' the pockets,
And a white thimble that I found i' moonlight.
Middleton (and others), The Widow, iv. 2.

10. In musical notation, of a note, having an open head: as, whole notes and half notes are white. See note.—11. In her., an epithet used instead of argent to note certain furs which are supposed to be represented not in silver but in dead white. It is a modern fanciful variation, and not good heraldry.—12. In silversmithing, chased or roughened with the tool, so as to retain a slightly granulated and therefore white surface, as distinguished from that of burnished silver.—13. Bright and clean; burnished without ornament, and in no way colored or stained: said of armor of steel or iron.—14. In ceram., noting the biscuit when dry and ready for firing, because in that state it has grown much lighter in color than it was when first molded, and full of moisture.—15. Transparent and colorless, as glass or water; also, with reference to wine, light-colored, whitish or yellowish, as opposed to red: sometimes used to note wine of even a deep-amber color.

White glass is introduced here and there [in a stained-glass window] to heighten the effect in draperies and in ornaments. C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 308.

16. Belonging or pertaining to the Carmelites or other orders of monks for whose dress white is the prescribed color: as, the white friars.

At the fourth day after evensong hee came to a white (Augustinian) abbey.
Sir T. Malory, Morte d'Arthure, III. xxxviii.

May Day we went to Seynt Elyn and offerd ther, She lith in a fayer place of religion of whith monks.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 7.

17. In bot. and zoöl., the compounds of white with participial adjectives are numberless, as white-flowered, white-headed, white-winged. Only a few of these are given below.—Great white egret, little white egret. See egret.—Order of the White Eagle, of the White Elephant, of the White Falcon. See eagle, etc.—To mark with a white stone. See stone.—White admiral. See admiral, 5.—White agaric. Same as purging-agaric.—White agate. Same as chalcedony.—White alder. See Clethra and Platylophus.—White ale. (a) A liquor made in Devonshire said to be made of malt and hops, with flour, spices, and perhaps an unknown ingredient called grout (which see) or ripening. It is drunk new, and does not improve with age. Pickerdyke. (b) A drink made in the south of England, said to consist of common ale to which flour and eggs have been added.—White amber, spermaceti.—White amphisbæna, Amphisbæna alba, a large light-colored species of amphisbæna.—White ant, a termite, any member of the genus Termes or family Termitidæ (see the technical names, and cut under Termes). Though thus qualified as ants, these insects are not hymenopterous, but neuropterous, their strong resemblance to ants being deceptive, though it is exhibited not only in their general appearance but also in their social life and their works.—White antimony. See antimony.—White arsenic. Same as arsenious acid. See arsenious.—White art. See black art, under art[2].—White ash. See ash[1], 1, and Platylophus, 3.—White-ash breeze, the action or the force of rowing: so called because oars are generally made of white ash. [Humorous.]—White asp. See asp[1].—White atrophy of the optic nerve, a form of secondary optic nerve atrophy.—White bait. See whitebait.—White balsam, a substance expressed from the fruit of the quinquino: sometimes confounded with the balsam of Tolu.—White baneberry. See Actæa.—White bass. See white-bass.—White basswood. See Tilia.—White bath. (a) See bath[1]. (b) See Trillium, 1.—White bay. See Magnolia.—White bear. (a) The polar bear, Ursus or Thalarctos maritimus. The cubs are quite white, but the adults acquire a dingy-yellowish or pale brownish-white color. See coin under bear[2] and Kentucky. (b) An unusually light-colored specimen of Ursus horribilis, the grizzly bear of the Rocky Mountains; so named by Lewis and Clarke (1814). Compare first cut under bear[2]. — White bedstraw, beefwood, beet, behen. See the nouns. — White beech, the common American beech, Fagus ferruginea. — White Bengal fire. See fire. — White beat. See redtop. — White bezant. See bezant. — White birch, the common birch of Europe, Betula alba, in the variety populifolia (sometimes called gray birch or old field birch) also common in eastern North America; also, sometimes, the canoe-birch, B. papyrifera. See birch and canoe-birch. — White bitter-wood. See bitter-wood. — White-blood disease. Same as leucemia. — White brant, bream, bronze, bully-tree. See the nouns. — White bryony, the common bryony, Bryonia dioica, or sometimes B. alba. — White butterflies, the pieridine butterflies collectively. — White buttonwood. See but tonwood, 1. — White cabbage-butterfly, any one of several white butterflies of the genus Pieris, whose larvæ feed on the cabbage, as P. rapæ of Europe and North America, P. oleracea of the United States and Canada, P. monuste of the southern United States, and P. napi of Europe. See cabbage-butterfly, Pieris, and rape-butterfly. — White cabbage-tree, a small stout composite tree, Senecio Pladaroxylon (Pladaroxylon Leucadendron) of St. Helena. — White campion. See campion. White candlewood. Same as lance-tree. — White Canon. Same as Pennsylvanian. — White Cape hyacinth. See Hyacinthus. — White caterpillar, the larva of the magpie-moth. — White cedar, a name applied to numerous chiefly coniferous trees, for which see Chamæcyparis, ginger pine (under pine[1]), Libocedrus, Thuya, Melia, Pentaceras, Frodesia. — White Chalk, the name sometimes given by English geologists to a division of the Cretaceous series, to distinguish it from the Gray Chalk and the Chalk Marl. The latter is the lowest division of the whole Chalk series; above this is the Gray Chalk, and higher still the "Lower White Chalk without flints" (the Turonian), followed by the "Upper White Chalk with flints" (the Senonian). — White chameleon, charlock, cinnamon, clergy, clover. See the nouns. — White club-flower. See Leucocoryne. — White coal, a name sometimes given to tasmanite. — White coat. See white-coat. — White cochin, cohosh. See the nouns. — White colon, a British noctuid moth, Mamestra albicolon. — White cooper. See cooper. — White copper, one of the many names of German silver: a literal translation of the German Weisskupfer. [Little used.] — White copperas, zinc vitriol, or goslarite. — White corpuscles of the blood, leucocytes; colorless protoplasmic nucleated cells having amœboid movements: one of the normal constituents of the blood. See cut under blood. — White Crag, in Eng geol., a division of the Pliocene. See crag[1], 2. — White crane. (a) Of America, the whooping crane, Grus americana. (b) Of India, Grus leucogeranus. See crane[1] and Grus. — White cricket, the snowy cricket. See cut under tree-cricket. — White crop. See crop. — White crottles. See crottle[2]. — White crow, an albino crow. The crow being naturally lustrous black, and "black as a crow" being proverbial, "a white crow" is sometimes said of any great rarity, or of an apparent impossibility or contradiction in terms which is nevertheless a fact. See the quotation under black swan, under swan[1]. — White currant. See currant[2], 2. — White cypress. See Taxodium. — White daisy, the oxeye daisy, or whiteweed. — White dammar-resin, white dammar-tree. See dammar-resin and Vateria. — White damp, in coal-mining, carbonic oxid: not an inflammable but a very poisonous gas, sometimes (although rarely) met with in coal-mines, probably always, or nearly always, in the after-damp. — White dead-nettle. See dead-nettle. — White deal. See Norway spruce, under spruce[3]. — White decoction, a mixture of burnt hartshorn in mucilage and water. — White diarrhea, diarrhea in which there is a large amount of thin mucus in the stools. — White dock. See dock[1], 1. — White dogwood. See Piscidia and Viburnum. — White doyenné. Same as ex-goleuse. — White dysentery, dysentery, occurring sometimes as an epidemic, in which there is no admixture of blood in the stools. — White elder. See elder[2]. — White elephant. (a) The elephant as affected with albinism to a degree or extent which makes it more or less of a dingy-whitish color, or at least notably pale. Such individuals are rare, but have been recorded from remote antiquity. They are highly esteemed, and in some places even venerated especially in Siam, thence called "the country of the white elephant", the animal also marks the Siamese flag. (b) See elephant. — White elm. See elm. — White ermine. (a) The ermine, Putorius erminea; the stoat in winter. See cut under ermine. (b) In entom., a British arctiid moth, Spilosoma menthastri, expanding 1¾ inches, having the wings white or whitish and spotted with black, and the body yellow with black spots. The larva is a hairy black caterpillar which feeds on various plants. — White eye. See white-eye. — White feather, film, fisch, fish-glue, flag, fly. See the nouns. — White flux. See flux, 7. — White friar. See friar. — White frost. See frost. — White gangrene, a rare form of gangrene in which the tissues become dry and parchment-like and turn a dirty-white color instead of black. — White garnet. See garnet[1]. — White glasswort. See Suæda. — White goby, a small gobioid fish of Europe, Latrunculus pellucidus, of a pale translucent color. — White gourd, white gourd-melon. Same as benincasa. — White grouse, sgrouse which turns white in winter or a grouse in that condition; a ptarmigan. See Lagopus, and cut under ptarmigan. — White grunt. Same as capæuna. — White gull, the kittiwake gull. See kittiwake (with cut). — White guava. See guava. — White gum, a name applied to some dozen species of Eucalyptus in Australia and Tasmania, as E. stellulata, E. pauciflora, E. amygdalina, etc., referring sometimes or always to the color of the bark. — White gunpowder, haubark, heat, hellebore, heron, herring. See the nouns. — White-heart cherry. See bigarreau. — White-heart or white-hearted hickory. Same as mockernut. — White heath. See brier-root. — White hearhound. See hearhound. — White honeysuckle. See honeysuckle, 2. — White hoop-withe. See Psoralea. — White horse. (a) See white-horse. (b) A white-topped wave.

> The bay is now curling and writhing in white horses under a smoking south wester. Kingsley, Life, viii.

— White House, the name popularly given to the official residence of the President of the United States, at Washington, from its color. Its official designation is Executive Mansion. — White Huns. See Hun[1]. — White ipecacuanha. See ipecacuanha. — White iron, pig-iron in which the carbon is almost entirely in chemical combination with the iron: such iron is very hard, of light color, and breaks with a coarse granular or crystalline structure. White iron containing a large amount of manganese is called spiegeleisen. The white irons generally contain a high percentage of carbon. The French name for tin plate (fer blanc) is sometimes (incorrectly) translated "white iron." — White ironbark-tree. See ironbark-tree. — White iron pyrites. Same as marcasite, 2. — White ironwood. See ironwood. White jasmine. See Jasminum. — White jaundice, a name formerly applied to chlorosis. — White kidney, a kidney which has undergone lardaceous or waxy degeneration. — White Jura, in geol., according to the nomenclature of the German geologists, the uppermost division of the Jurassic: called sometimes the Malm. It takes the name of white from the lighter color of the rocks of which it is made up, as contrasted with the darker tints of the underlying rocks. See Malm, 2. — White lark, lead, leather. See the nouns. — White laurel. See Magnolia. — White League, a name sometimes given to the Kuklux Klan, but especially to a nearly contemporary military organization formed in Louisiana to secure the political ascendancy of the whites. — White leprosy, elephantiasis Græcorum. The name was applied at one time to various affections in which there were white patches on the skin, such as leucoderma and some forms of psoriasis. — White lettuce. See lettuce. — White Lias, in Eng geol., the uppermost division of the Rhætic Lias or Infra-Lias, as that formation is developed in southwestern England. — White lie, light, lignum-vitæ, lime, line, lupine, magic, mahogany, manganese, mangrove, etc. See the nouns. — White mace, the mace obtained from the Santa Fé nutmeg. Myristica Otoba. — White man's footprint, a name given by the American Indians to the common plantain, Plantago major, supposed to appear wherever white men settle. — White man's weed. See whiteweed. — White maple. See silver maple, under maple. — White meat. (a) Food made of milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and the like.

> How cleanly he wipes his spoon at every spoonful of any whitemeat he eats!
>
> B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 1.

> Look you, sir, the northern man loves white meats, the southern man sallads.
>
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.

(b) Certain delicate flesh used for food, as poultry, rabbits, veal and pork.

> Fish was enormously consumed, and so, too, were white meat and dairy produce.
>
> H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, vi.

(c) Same as light meat. See meat[1]. — White mellilot. See Melilotus. — White metal, mignonette, money. See the nouns. — White Moors, the Gnaoua. See the quotation.

> It is proverbially said there are in Genoa Mountaines without wood, Sea without fish, Women without shame, and Men without conscience, which makes them to be termed the White Moores.
>
> Howell, Forty-nine Travell-ed. Arber, p. 41.

White mouse. (a) One of a fancy breed of the common house mouse, an albino of Mus musculus. The albinism originates by chance, like that of many other animals, but may be perfected and perpetuated by methodical selection. When it is perfect, the mice are snow-white, with pink eyes, nose, ears, paws, and tail. (b) The lemming of Hudson's Bay, Cuniculus torquatus; the snow-mouse which turns pure white in winter. — White mulberry, mullen, mustard. See the nouns. — White nettle, the white dead-nettle, Lamium album. — White nickel, nickel diarsenid, the mineral rammelsbergite. — White nighthawk Same as mutton bird. — White noddy, the white tern. See cut under Gygis. — White nosegay-tree. See nosegay-tree. — White note. See def. 10 and note[1]. — White nun, the snawy, Mergellus albellus. See cut under smew. — White oak. See oak (with cut). — White oakum. See oakum, 2. — White olive. See Hallerna. — White owl. See snowy owl. — White pearwood, a South African tree, Pterocelastrus rostratus, of the Celastraceæ. It has a height of about 20 feet, and yields a heavy, strong, and durable wood, much used for wagon-work. — White pepper. See pepper. — White perch, a very common food-fish of eastern North America, Morone americana, of the family Labracidæ. It is thus not a true perch, or member of the fam-

White Perch (Morone americana)

cidæ (for an example of which see first cut under perch[1]), but is most nearly related to the brass bass or yellow bass, Morone interrupta, and next to the striped bass, Roccus lineatus and white-bass, R. chrysops. It scarcely attains the length of a foot, and is usually smaller than this; the color is olivaceous, silvery-white on the sides, with faint light streaks, but without any of the dark stripes which mark its near relatives. It abounds coastwise from Cape Cod to Florida, ascending all streams, and makes an excellent pan-fish. — White pine. See pine. — White-pine weevil. See Pissodes (with cut) and weevil. — White pitch. See Burgundy pitch, under pitch[1]. — White point, a British noctuid moth, Leucania albipuncta. — White pond-lily, poplar, poppy, potato, precipitate. See the nouns. — White post. See post[1], 6. — White pot-herb. See Valerianella. — White prominent, a British prominent moth, Notodonta trilophus, with white wings, the fore wings spotted with black. — White quebracho. See quebracho. — White-rag worm, the lung. — White rent, (a) In Devon and Cornwall, a rent or duty of eight pence, payable yearly by every tinner to the Duke of Cornwall, as lord of the soil. Imp. Dict. (b) See rent[2], 2 (a). — White rhinoceros, the African keitloa, Rhinoceros simus. — White ribbon, a ribbon worn to signify that the wearer is a member of some organization for the promotion of moral purity.

White robin-snipe, rocket, rodwood, rope, rose, rot, rubber, Russian, sage, salmon, salt, sandalwood, sanicle, sapphire. See the nouns. — White sapote, a small Mexican tree, Casimiroa edulis, of the Rutaceæ. It bears a nearly globose pulpy edible fruit, for which it is cultivated. — White satin, Leparoa or Stilpnosia salicis, a British moth with satiny-white wings expanding two inches. — White scale. (a) Aspidiotus nerii, a small white bark-louse or scale-insect found commonly on citrus-trees and fruits and upon the oleander, magnolia, ivy, and many other plants. (b) The cushion-scale, or fluted scale, Icerya purchasi. See cushion-scale. (c) The rose-scale, Diaspis rosæ, a very white cosmopolitan species occurring on the twigs and leaves of the rose. — White schorl, sea-bass, seam. See the nouns. — White Sennaar gum. See gum arabic, under gum[2]. — White shark, skin, snail, snakeroot. See the nouns. — White softening of the brain. See softening. — White spruce, squall, stopper, stork, stringy-bark, stuff, sultan. See the nouns. — White sumac. Same as smooth sumac (which see, under sumac). — White swallowwort, sweetwood, swelling, sycamore, tallow, tansy, teak, tea-tree, thorn. See the nouns. — White tern, any tern of the genus Gygis, when adult of pure white plumage with black bill. — White tincture. Same as lesser elixir (which see, under elixir, 1). — White-topped aster. See Sericocarpus. — White trash, vervain, vine, vitriol, wagtail, walnut, wash, water, water-lily, wavey, wax, whale, wheat, widgeon, willow, wine, witch, wolf, etc. See the nouns. — White trout. See Microperus. — White woolly currant-scale, Pulvinaria ribis, a large bark louse with a white egg-sac, which ogures on currant bushes in Europe. [Eng.] — White wren, yam, etc. See the nouns. — Syn. 2. White, Fair, Blond, Clear. As to complexion, white expresses that which has too little color for naturalness or health; that is fair which agreeably approaches white; that is clear which is free from blotch; there is a clear brown or olive as well as a clear blood. Blond is fair in distinctive application to the color of the human skin — properly to that of females.

II. n. [< ME., hwite, the white, whiteness, fairness; cf. OHG. wīz, feel. hvīt.] 1. A highly luminous color, devoid of chroma, and therefore indeterminate in hue. But a white intensely illuminated has a yellow effect, and very deeply shaded takes on the bluish look of gray. A derangement of the proportions of light in pure white to the extent of 3 per cent. of the red, 6 per cent. of the green, or 5 per cent. of the blue, is readily perceived by direct comparison, but quite considerable admixtures of chroma are compatible with the color's retaining the name of white.

> My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies, > Finely attired in a robe of white.
>
> Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 4. 72.

2. A pigment of this color. — 3. Something, or a part of something, having the color of snow. Specifically: (a) The central part in the butt in archery, which was formerly painted white: the center or mark at which an arrow or other missile is aimed; hence, the thing or point aimed at.

> Virtue is the white we shoote at, not vanitie.
>
> Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 245.

> 'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white,
>
> Shak., T. of the S., v. 2. 180.

Thus Geneva Lake swallowed up the Episcopal See, and Church Lands were made secular, which was the White they level'd at. Howell, Letters, III. 8.

(b) The albumen of an egg, or that pellucid viscous fluid which surrounds the yolk; also, sometimes, the corresponding part of a seed, or the farinaceous matter surrounding the embryo. (c) That part of the ball of the eye which surrounds the iris of colored part.

> And he, poor heart, no sooner heard my news,
> But turns me up his whites, and falls flat down.
>
> Grim the Collier, iii. (Davies.)

Ay, and I turned up the whites of my eyes till the strings nearest cracked again. Macklin, Man of the World, iii. 1.

(d) pl. In printing, blank spaces. (e) pl. A white fabric otherwise called linen cloth.

> The Indians dow bring fine whites, which the Tartars do all roll about their heads, & all other kinds of whites, which serue for apparell. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 332.

Salisbury has . . . long cloths for the Turkey trade, called Salisbury Whites.

Defoe, Tour thro' Great Britain, I. 334. (Davies.)

(f) White clothing or drapery.

> You clothe Christ with your blacks on earth, he will clothe you with his glorious whites in heaven.
>
> Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 174.

(g) A member of the white race of mankind as, the "poor whites" of the southern United States.

4. pl. In med., leucorrhea. — Body white. See flake white. — China white, a very pure variety of white lead, usually in small drops. Also silver-white. — Chinese white. Same as zinc white. — Clichy white, a kind of white lead made at Clichy, in France. — Constant white, an artificially prepared sulphate of barium. See blanc fix, under blanc. — Cremnitz white. See Kremnitz white. — Dutch white, an adulterated white lead: a book-name. — Faenza white, a name given to the fine white enamel of some varieties of majolica. It is thought, however, that the discovery is due to the factory of Ferrara. — Flake white. See flake-white. — Forest whitest. Same as pentisme. — French white, a variety of white lead; same as China white. Also called blanc d'argent. — In black and white. See black. — Indophenol white. Same as leuco- iodophenol. — Kremnitz white, London white, white lead. Paris white. See whiting. — Pattison's white, the hydrated oxychlorid of lead. — Pearl white, the basic nitrate of bismuth used as a cosmetic. — Permanent white. Same as constant white. — Roman white, white lead: a book-name. Silver white. Same as French white. — Spanish white. See whiting. — The white and the red†, silver and gold.

They shulle forgon the whyte and ek the rede.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1384

Thin white, in gilding, the first priming of hot size and whiting. This is followed by several layers of greater consistence, called thick white. Two thick whites laid on, one almost immediately after the other, are called double opening white. — To spit white. See spit[2]. Venice white, an adulterated white lead: a book-name. Zinc white, impure oxid of zinc.

white[1] (hwīt), v.; pret. and pp. whited, ppr. whiting. [(a) < ME. whiten, hwiten, < AS. hwitian = OHG. wīzen, MHG. wīzen = Goth. hveitjan, become white; also AS. gehwitian = D. witten = G. weissen = Goth. gahveitjan, make white; from the adj.: see white[1], a.] I.† intrans. To grow white; whiten.

He . . . laueth hem in the lauandrie . . .
And with warme water of hire eyen weketh hit til hit white.
Piers Plowman (C.), xvii. 334.

II. trans. To make white. Specifically (a) To whiten, whitewash; hence, to gloss over.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.
Mark ix. 3.

Then bring at his virtues nob-ep, and stay at the wheel
Both of his reason and judgment, that they move not,
Whit'ed over all his vices.
Fletcher (and others), Bloody Brother, iv. 1.

He was as scrupulously whited as any sepulchre in the whole bills of mortality.
Thackeray, Newcomes, viii.

(b) To make pale or pallid.

Your passion hath suffi ently whited your face.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 3.

=Syn. See whiten.

white[2] (hwīt), v. t. A dialectal form of thwite. Compare whittle[2] from "thwittle.

white-alloy (hwīt'a-loi'), n. One of various cheap alloys used to imitate silver. Most of them contain copper and tin, with some arsenic.

white-armed (hwīt'ärmd), a. Having white arms. — White-armed sea-anemone, an actinia, Sagartia leucolæna.

white-arse (hwīt'ärs), n. The wheatear.

whiteback (hwīt'bak), n. 1. The canvasback duck. See cut under canvasback. Alex. Wilson, 1814. [Potomac river, U. S.] — 2. The white poplar, Populus alba. [Prov. Eng.]

white-backed (hwīt'bakt), a. Having the back more or less white. White-backed bushbuck. See bushbuck. White-backed colie, the South African Colius capensis, marked with a black-and-white line on each side of the back. It is small bodied, but a foot or more long owing to the development of the tail. White-backed skunk, the conepate. See cut under Conepatus. White-backed woodpecker, a three-toed woodpecker of North America, Picoides dorsalis of Baird, having a long white stripe down the middle of the black back.

whitebait (hwīt'bāt), n. 1. A small clupeoid fish, prized as a delicacy in England. Whitebait are fishes then from 2 or 3 inches long, but retain the name up to a size of 4 or 5 inches. They abound in the estuary of the Thames and in other similar British localities at certain seasons. The fishing begins in April, and lasts through the summer, the fishes are taken in bag-nets. They are chiefly of a silvery-white color including to a pale-greenish on the back. Some places in England, as especially Greenwich, are famous for their whitebait dinners. The fish are usually fried till they are crisp. The identity of whitebait has been much discussed and disputed. They have been supposed to be a distinct species, named Clupea alba and even placed in a genus framed for their reception as Rogenia alba. They have been more generally recognized as the fry of certain clupeoids, as the sprat (Clupea sprattus), the herring (C. harengus), and the shad (of one or another of the British species). But careful examinations of great quantities of whitebait made in different localities at different times, have shown these opinions to be more or less erroneous. Whitebait consists in fact of the fry of several different clupeoid fishes, mainly the sprat and the herring, with occasionally a small percentage of yet other fishes, and the relative quantity of the different species represented varies, moreover, according to season and locality.

Our wives (without whose sanction no good man would surely ever look a whitebait in the face) gave us permission to attend this entertainment. Thackeray, Pall Mall Gaz., xl.

2. A Chinese salmonoid fish, Salanx sinensis. See Salanx.

white-baker (hwīt'bā-kėr), n. The beam-bird, Muscicapa grisola, the spotted flycatcher. Also whitewall, white-bird.

white-barred (hwīt'bärd), a. Having one or more white bars, as an animal: specifying a British hawk moth, Sesia sphegiformis or Trochilium sphegiformis.

white-bass (hwīt'bas), n. A fresh-water food-fish of the United States, Roccus chrysops, found chiefly in the Mississippi basin and the Great Lake region, of the same genus as the striped bass (R. lineatus), which it much resembles, but quite different from the black-bass s (which are centrarchoids). The color is silvery, tinged with yellow below, and marked along the sides with several blackish lines.

white-beaked (hwīt'bēkt), a. Having a white beak. (a) White-billed, as a bird. (b) Having the snout or rostrum white, as a skunk-porpoise of the genus Lagenorhynchus (which see).

whitebeam, whitebeam-tree (hwīt'bēm, -trē), n. A small Old World tree, Pyrus Aria, having the under side of its foliage, as well as the young twigs and inflorescence, clothed with silvery down. See beam-tree.

white-beard (hwīt'bērd), n. [< ME. whyteberd; < white + beard.] A man having a white or gray beard; a graybeard; an old man.

And yff they wolle not dredde, ne obey that, then they shall be quyt by Blackberd or Whyteberd.
Paston Letters, I. 131.

White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps Against thy majesty.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 2. 112.

white-bearded (hwīt'bēr'ded), a. Having a white or gray beard.

One White bearded Patriarchs died.
Byron, Heaven and Earth, i. 3.

White-bearded monkey, Semnopithecus nestor, of Ceylon.

white-bellied (hwīt'bel'id), a. Having the belly white: specifying many birds and other animals. — White-bellied murrelet, Brachyrhamphus hypoleucus, a bird of the auk family, found on the coast of Southern and Lower California. — White-bellied nuthatch. See nuthatch (with cut). — White-bellied petrel, Fregetta grallaria, a kind of stilt-petrel. — White-bellied rat. See black rat, under rat. — White-bellied sea-eagle, Haliaetus leucogaster, of Asia, Australia, etc. White-bellied seal, the monk-seal, Monachus albiventer. White-bellied snipe. See snipe. — White-bellied swallow, Tachycineta or Iridoprocne bicolor, having the under parts pure-white, the upper dark lustrous green. It is one of the most beautiful as well as most abundant swallows of North America, sometimes known as tree swallow. See cut under swallow. White-bellied water-mouse, the Australian Hydromys leucogaster. White-bellied wren. See wren.

whitebelly (hwīt'bel'i), n. 1. The common sharp-tailed grouse of the United States, whose under parts appear white in comparison with those of the pinnated grouse. See cut under Pediœcetes. — 2. The American widgeon, Mareca americana. See cut under widgeon. [New Eng.]

whitebill (hwīt'bil), n. The common American coot, Fulica americana. [New Jersey.]

white-billed (hwīt'bild), a. Having a white bill, as a bird: specifying various species: as, the white-billed toxter. See cut under Textor.

white-bird (hwīt'bėrd), n. Same as white-baker.

white-blaze (hwīt'blāz), n. Same as white-face.

white-blow (hwīt'blō), n. Either of two early flowers, Saxifraga tridactylites and Erophila vulgaris (Draba verna), both also named whitlow-grass: an old name in England.

white-bonnet (hwīt'bon'et), n. A fictitious bidder at sales by auction: same as puffer, 2.

whitebottle (hwīt'bot'l), n. The bladder-campion, Silene Cucubalus (S. inflata). See Silene.

whiteboy (hwīt'boi), n. 1†. An old term of endearment applied to a favorite son, dependent, or the like, a darling. See white[1], a., 5.

'I know," quoth I, "I am his white-boy, and will not be guiled."
Ford, 'Tis Pity, i. 4.

His first address was an humble Remonstrance by a dutifull son of the Church, almost as if he had said her white boy.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

2. [cap.] A member of an illegal agrarian association formed in Ireland about the year 1761, whose object was "to do justice to the poor by restoring the ancient commons and redressing other grievances" (Lecky). The members of the association assembled at night with white frocks over their other clothes (whence the name), threw down fences, and leveled inclosures (being hence also called levelers), destroyed the property of harsh landlords or their agents, the Protestant clergy, the tithe-collectors, and any others who had made themselves obnoxious to the association. Also used attributively.

Unlike ordinary crime, the White-boy outrages were systematically, skilfully, and often very successfully directed to the enforcement of certain rules of conduct.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

Whiteboyism (hwīt'boi-izm), n. [< Whiteboy + -ism.] The principles or practices of the Whiteboys.

The Catholic bishop of Cloyne, in March, 1762, issued a pastoral urging those of his diocese to use all the spiritual censures at their disposal for the purpose of repressing Whiteboyism.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

white-brass (hwīt'brās), n. An alloy of copper and zinc, in which the proportion of copper is comparatively small. With less than 45 per cent. of copper the color of brass ceases to be yellow, and as the percentage of zinc is increased the color of the alloy passes from silver-white to gray and bluish-gray. Such alloys are brittle, and have but a limited use. Some of these white-brasses are sold under the trade-names of "Birmingham platinum" and "platinum lead." These are chiefly used for buttons, which are made by first casting and then carefully pressing so as to bring out the ornamental figures on the surface.

white-breasted (hwīt'bres'ted), a. 1. Having a white breast or bosom.

White-breasted like a star
Fronting the dawn he moved.
Tennyson, Œnone.

2. Having the breast more or less white: specifying numerous animals. See cut under squirrel-hawk.

white-brindled (hwīt'brin'dled), a. Brindled with white: specifying a British moth, Bolya ulvalis.

white-browed (hwīt'broud), a. In ornith., having a white superciliary streak: as, the white-browed sparrow, Zonotrichia leucophrys.

whitebug (hwīt'bug), n. A bug which injures vines and other plants, as a white scale (which see, under white[1]).

whitecap (hwīt'kap), n. 1. The male redstart, a bird, Ruticilla phœnicura. See first cut under redstart. [Shropshire, Eng.] — 2. The tree- or mountain-sparrow, Passer montanus. Imp. Dict. — 3. pl. The common mushroom, Agaricus campestris. — 4. Naut., a wave with a broken crest showing as a white patch; a white horse. — 5. [cap.] One of a self-constituted body or committee of persons, who, generally under the guise of rendering service or protection to the community in which they dwell, commit various outrages and lawless acts.

Whitechapel cart. See cart.

whitecoat (hwīt'kōt), n. A young harp-seal; any seal-pup or very young seal whose coat is white. [Newfoundland.]

The phenomenon so carefully described by him was simply a whitecoat, or young six-weeks-old seal.
Blackwood's Mag., July, 1873, p. 54. (Encyc. Dict.)

white-crested (hwīt'kres'ted), a. Having a white crest, as a bird or other animal: as, the white-crested turakoo (see turakoo); the great white-crested cockatoo, Cacatua cristata; the white-crested black Polish fowl; the white-crested spiny rat (see Loncheres).

white-crowned (hwīt'kround), a. Having the crown or top of the head white, as a bird. The white-crowned pigeon is Columba leucocephala, with the whole top of the head pure white, inhabiting the West

White-crowned Pigeon (Columba leucocephala).

Indies and parts of Florida. This is a large stout-bodied and dark-colored pigeon, notable as one of the few American forms which most authors continue to regard as congeneric with the Old World species of Columba proper. The white-crowned sparrow is Zonotrichia leucophrys, one of the crown-sparrows, closely related to the white-throated, common in eastern parts of North America, having in the adult the top and sides of the head striped with ashy-white and black.

white-ear[1] (hwīt'ēr), n. A shell of the family Vanikoridæ; a vanikoro.

white-ear[2] (hwīt'ēr), n. [See wheatear.] The wheatear or fallow-finch, Saxicola œnanthe. See cut under wheatear.

white-eared (hwīt'ērd), a. Having white ears: (a) as a bird whose auricular feathers are white; (b) as poultry with large white ear-lobes. — White-eared thrush. See thrush[1].

white-eye (hwīt'ī), n. 1. In Great Britain, the white-eyed duck, Nyroca ferruginea or N. leucophthalma. See cut under Nyroca. — 2. In the United States, the white-eyed vireo or greenlet, Vireo noveboracensis. See cut under Vireo. — 3. Any bird of the genus Zosterops; a silver-eye: as, the Indian white-eye, Z. palpebrosus. See cut under Zosterops.

By most English-speaking people in various parts of the world the prevalent species of Zosterops is commonly called "White-eye" or "Silver-eye" from the feature before mentioned.

A. Hamilton, Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 834, note.

white-eyed (hwīt'īd), a. Having white eyes—that is, eyes in which the iris is white or colorless.—White-eyed pochard. See cut under Nyroca.—White-eyed shad. Same as mud-shad.—White-eyed towhee, a variety of the common towhee bunting, found in Florida.—Pipilo erythrophthalmus alleni. Compare cut under Pipilo.—White-eyed vireo or greenlet. See Vireo (with cut).—White-eyed warbler. See warbler.

white-faced (hwīt'fāst), a. 1. Having a white or pale face, as from fear or illness.—2. Having a white front or surface.

That pale, that white-faced shore,
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 23.

On a rickety chair, tilted against the white-faced wall, sat a young man, wearing a suit of exceedingly cheap and shabby store-clothes. The Atlantic, LXI. 670.

3. Marked with white on the front of the head, as a bird or other animal.—White-faced black Spanish fowl. See Spanish fowl, under Spanish.—White-faced duck. (a) The female scaup-duck, Fuligula marila, which has a white band about the base of the bill. See cut under scaup. (b) The blue-winged teal. See cut under teal.—White-faced goose. See goose.—White-faced hornet. See Vespa.—White-faced ibis, Ibis guarauna, related to the glossy ibis, but having the parts about the bill white, found in western parts of the United States.—White-faced type. See type, 8.

white-favored (hwīt'fā'vord), a. Wearing white favors, as in connection with a wedding.

But they must go, the time draws on,
And those white-favour'd horses wait
Tennyson, In Memoriam, Conclusion.

Whitefieldian (hwit-fel'di-an), n. [< Whitefield (see def.) + -ian.] A follower of George Whitefield, after his separation from the Wesleys; same as Huntingdonian.

whitefish (hwīt'fish), n. A general name of fishes and other aquatic animals which are white, or nearly so; variously applied. (a) A fish of such kind as the whiting, haddock, or menhaden. (b) Any fish of the genus Coregonus. These are important food-fishes of both American and European waters, representing a division (Coregoninæ) of the family Salmonidæ.

Whitefish (Coregonus clupeiformis).

Most of the species have their distinctive names for which see Coregonus and Coregonus. See also cuts under cisco and shadwaiter. (c) Any fish of the genus Leuciscus. (d) Any white whale, or beluga. See beluga 2, and cut under Delphinapterus. (e) Same as blanquillo 2.—Whitefish-mullet. See mullet.

whitefla† (hwīt'flā), n. [A var. of whickflaw, simulating *white*1.] A whitlow.

A cock is offered (at least was wont to be) to St. Christopher in Touraine for a certaine sore, which useth to be in the end of men's fingers, the white-flaw.
World of Wonders, p. 238. (Quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., [A. 511.)

The nails fain off by Whit flawes.
Herrick, Oberon's Palace.

white-flesher (hwīt'flesh'ėr), n. The ruffed grouse, Bonasa umbellus: so called in distinctions from grouse with dark meat. Sir John Richardson, 1831. [Canada.]

white-flowered (hwīt'flou'ėrd), a. Noting numerous plants with white flowers: as, white-flowered azalea, broom, cinquefoil, etc.

white-footed (hwīt'fūt'ed), a. Having white feet: as, the white-footed hapalote, Hapalotis albipes, of New South Wales.—White-footed mouse, Vesperimus americanus, the commonest vesper-mouse of North America, with snowy paws and under parts—features shared by most of the mice of the genus Vesperimus. See Vesperimus, and cut under deer-mouse.

white-fronted (hwīt'frun'ted), a. Having the front or forehead white, as a bird. The white-fronted dove is Engyptila albifrons, found in Texas and Mexico. The white-fronted goose is Anser albifrons of Europe, a variety of which, A. albifrons gambeli, inhabits North America, and is known in some parts as the speckle-belly. The white-fronted lemur of Madagascar is a species or variety which has been named Lemur albifrons. The white-fronted capuchin is Cebus albifrons, a South American monkey.

white-grass (hwīt'gras), n. See Leersia.

white-grub (hwīt'grub), n. The large white earth-inhabiting larva of any one of a number of scarabæid beetles. The common white-grub of Europe is the larva of the cockchafer, Melolontha vulgaris; that of the more northern United States is the larva of the May-beetle, Lachnosterna fusca, and congeneric dor-bugs; and that of the southern United States is usually the larva of the June-bug, Allorhina nitida. All feed upon the roots of grass and other vegetation, and at times are serious pests. See Allorhina (with cut), cockchafer, dor-bug (with cut), June-bug (with cut), Lachnosterna, Maybeetle, and Melolontha.

white-gum (hwīt'gum), n. In med., an eruption of whitish spots surrounded by a red areola, occurring about the neck and arms of infants; strophulus albidus.

white-handed (hwīt'han'ded), a. 1. Having white hands.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 230.

2. Having pure, unstained hands; not tainted with guilt.

O, welcome, pure-eyed Faith; white-handed Hope,
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings!
Milton, Comus, l. 213.

3. In zool., having the fore paws white: as, the white-handed gibbon, Hylobates lar. See cut under gibbon.

white-hass (hwīt'has), n. A white-pudding, stuffed with oatmeal and suet. [Scotch.]

There is black-pudding and white-hass (try whilk ye like best).
Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xii.

whitehause (hwīt'hâz), n. [< white + hause, var. of *halse*1.] The shagreen ray, Raia fullonica, a batoid fish common in British waters. [Local, Eng.]

whitehead (hwīt'hed), n. 1. The white-headed scoter or surf scoter, a duck, Œdemia perspicillata. See cut under Pelionetta. [Long Island.]—2. A breed of domestic pigeons with the head and tail white; a white-tailed monk.—3. The blue wavey, or blue-winged snow-goose, Chen cærulescens. See goose.—4. The broom-bush, Parthenium Hysterophorus. Also called bastard feverfew and West Indian mugwort. [West Indies.]

white-headed (hwīt'hed'ed), a. Having the head more or less entirely white; specifying many animals. White-headed duck, Erismatura leucocephala, a rudder-tailed or stiff-tailed duck of Europe and Africa. White-headed eagle, the common bald eagle or sea eagle of North America, Haliaëtus leucocephalus. See eagle. White-headed goose, gull, shrike, etc. See the nouns. White-headed harpy. See harpy, 3 (b). White-headed tern, Sterna trudeani, a South American species of tern. White-headed titmouse, a variety of the long-tailed titmouse, Acredula caudata vagans, whose head is whiter than usual. It inhabits northerly continental Europe. White-headed woodpecker, Picus or Xenopicus albolarvatus, a woodpecker with a black body, white head, scarlet nuchal band in the male, and white wing patch, found in the forests, chiefly of conifers, of the Pacific slope of the United States. See cut under Xenopicus.

Whitehead's operations. See operation.

white-horse (hwīt'hôrs), n. 1. An extremely tough and sinewy substance resembling blubber, but destitute of oil, which lies between the upper jaw and the junk of a sperm-whale. C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 312.—2. A West Indian rubiaceous shrub, Portlandia grandiflora, having whitish flowers 3 to 8 inches long.

white hot (hwīt'hot), a. Heated to full incandescence so as to emit all the rays of the visible spectrum, and hence appear a dazzling white to the eye. See radiation and spectrum, and red heat, white heat (under heat).

White hot iron we are familiar with, but white-hot silver is what we do not often look upon.
O. W. Holmes, Emerson, ix.

white-leg (hwīt'leg), n. The disease phlegmasia dolens; milk-leg. See phlegmasia.

white-limed (hwīt'līmd), a. [< ME. whitlymed; < *white*1 + limed.] Whitewashed.

Yperite . . . lay lihned in Latyn to a lothliche dounghe p. That were by snowe al with snow and snakes withynne. Or to a wal whit lymed and were bluk with lime.
Piers Plowman (C.), xvii. 267.

white-line (hwīt'līn), a. White-lined. White-line dart, a British noctuid moth, Agrotis tritici.

white-lined (hwīt'līnd), a. Having a white line or lines. White-lined morning-sphinx, a common North American sphingid moth, Deilephila lineata. See sphinx (with cut).

white-lipped (hwīt'lipt), a. Having white lips; having a white lip or aperture, as a shell. White-lipped peccary, Dicotyles labiatus. White-lipped snail, the common garden-snail, girdled snail, or brown snail, Helix nemoralis (including H. hortensis and H. hybrida). Also called white-mouthed snail.

white-listed (hwīt'lis'ted), a. Having white stripes or lists on a darker ground (the tree in the quotation having been torn with lightning).

He raised his eyes and saw
The tree that shone white-listed thro the gloom.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

white-livered (hwīt'liv'ėrd), a. Having (according to an old notion) a light-colored liver supposed to be due to lack of bile or gall, and hence a pale look—an indication of cowardice; hence, cowardly.

For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof 'a faces it out, but fights not.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 2. 34.

As I live, they stay not here, white-liver'd wretches!
Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, iv. 3.

When they come in swaggering company, and will pocket up anything, may they not properly be said to be white-liver'd?
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

whitely† (hwīt'li), a. [< *white*1 + *-ly*1.] White; pale.

A whitly wanton, with a velvet brow,
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 108 (folio 1623).

Could I those whitely Stars go nigh
Which make the Milky Way in Sky,
Herrick, Letters, ii. 22 (song).

white-marked (hwīt'märkt), a. Marked with white, as various animals. White-marked moth, Tæniocampa leucographa, a British noctuid. White-marked tussock-moth, a common North American vaporer, Orgyia leucostigma. See tussock moth, and cut under Orgyia, 2.

white-meat (hwīt'mēt), n. [< ME. whitmete; < *white*1 + meat.] See white meat, under *white*1.

white-mouthed (hwīt'mouthd), a. In conch., white-lipped.

whiten (hwī'tn), v. [< ME. hwitnen = Icel. hvitna = Sw. hvitna = Dan. hvidne, whiten, become white; as *white*1 + *-en*1.] I. intrans. To become white; turn white; bleach: as, the sea whitens with foam.

Whitan gan the orisounte sheene
Al eisterward, as it is wont to done.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 276.

Willows whiten, aspens quiver.
Tennyson, Lady of Shalott.

Fields like prairies, snow patched, as far as you could see, with things laid out to whit. n.
Mrs Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, vi.

II. trans. To make white; bleach; blanch; whitewash: as, to whiten cloth; to whiten a wall.

Drooping lilies whitened all the ground.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

It [the mastic] is chewed only by the Turks, especially the ladies, who use it both as an amusement and also to whiten their teeth and sweeten the breath.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 4.

The walls of Churches and rich Mens Houses are whitened with Lime, both within and without.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 140.

=Syn. Whiten, Bleach, Blanch, Etiolate. Whiten may be a general word for making white, but is chiefly used for the putting of a white coating upon a surface: as, a wall whitened by the application of lime; the sea whitened by the wind. White for whiten is old-fashioned or Biblical. Bleach and blanch express the act of making white by removal, change, or destruction of color. Bleaching is done chemically or by exposure to light and air, as, to bleach linen or bones. Blanching is a natural process: celery and other plants are blanched or etiolated by excluding light from them, checks are blanched by fear, when the blood retires from the capillaries and leaves them pale. See also definitions and cuts under blanch.

white-necked (hwīt'nekt), a. Having a white neck; specifying various animals: as, the white-necked raven, Corvus cryptoleucus, a small raven found in western parts of the United States, having the concealed bases of the feathers of the neck fleecy white; the white-necked or chaplain crow, Corvus scapulatus; the white-necked otary, an Australian eared seal.

whitener (hwīt'nėr), n. [< whiten + *-er*1.] One who or that which bleaches, or makes white; especially, some chemical or other agent used for bleaching or cleaning very perfectly.

whiteness (hwīt'nes), n. [< ME. whytnesse, whitnesse; < *white*1 + -ness.] 1. The state of being white; white color, or freedom from any darkness or obscurity on the surface.

Says Al Kitib, they [the Moors] displayed teeth of dazzling whiteness, and their breath was as the perfume of flowers.
Irving, Granada, I.

2. Lack of color in the face; paleness, as from sickness, terror, or grief; pallor.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is pander than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., I. 1. 69.

3. Purity; cleanness; freedom from stain or blemish.

I am she;
And so will bear myself, whose truth and whiteness
Shall eyes stand as far from the detection
As you from duty.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, i. 1.

He had kept
The whiteness of his soul, and thus men o'er him wept.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 87.

whitening (hwīt'ning), n. [Verbal n. of whiten, v.] 1. The act or process of making white.—2. In leather-manuf., the operation of cleaning and preparing the flesh side of a hide on a beam, preparatory to waxing.—3. Tin-plating. See chemical plating, under plate, v.—4. Same as *whiting*1.

Three bright shillings, . . . which Peggotty had evidently polished up with whitening.
Dickens, David Copperfield, v.

whitening-slicker (hwīt'ning-slik'ėr), n. A kind of scraper or knife with a very fine edge, used by leather-dressers in whitening or cleaning the flesh side of skins before waxing.

whitening-stone (hwīt'ning-stōn), n. A fine sharpening stone used by cutlers.

white-pot (hwīt'pot), n. 1. A dish made of milk or cream, eggs, sugar, bread or rice and sometimes fruit, spices, etc., baked in a pot or in a bowl placed in a quick oven. Older recipes differ as to the ingredients, but in its more frequent form the dish is of the nature of a rice- or bread pudding.

To make a white pot. Take a pint and a half of cream, a quarter of a pound of sugar, a little rose water, a few dates sliced, a few raisins of the sun, six or seven eggs, and a little mace, a sliced pippin or lemon, cut scollop fashion for your dishes you bake in, and dip them in sack or rose water. Gentlewoman's Delight (1653).

When I show you the Library, you shall see . . . in her own hand . . . the best receipt now in England both for a hasty-pudding and a white pot. Steele, Spectator, No. 107.

But white pot thick is my Bacon's fare
While she loves a white pot, capon ne'er shall be,
Nor hare, nor beef, nor pudding, food for me.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Monday, l. 92.

2†. A drink consisting of port wine heated, with a roasted lemon, sugar, and spices added. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. '18.

white-pudding (hwīt'pud'ing), n. 1. A pudding made of milk, eggs, flour, and butter.—2. A kind of sausage of oatmeal mixed with suet, seasoned with pepper, salt, and sometimes onions, and stuffed into a prepared intestine. Compare black pudding.

white-rock (hwīt'rok), n. In the South Staffordshire coal-field, dikes of diabasic rock which there intersect the coal measures.

Microscopical examination shows that this white rock or "white trap" is merely an altered form of some diabasic or basaltic rock, wherein the feldspar crystals though much decayed, can yet be traced, the augite, olivine and magnetite being more or less completely changed into a mere pulverulent earthy substance.
Geikie, Text-Book of Geol., 2d ed., p. 250.

white-root† (hwīt'rōt), n. The Solomon's seal, Polygonatum multiflorum, or perhaps P. officinale.

white-rot (hwīt'rot), n. See rot.

whiterump (hwīt'rump), n. 1. Same as white-tail, 1.—2. The Hudsonian godwit, Limosa hæmastica: same as spotrump. Cr. Trumbull, 1888. [West Barnstable, Mass.]

white-rumped (hwīt'rumpt), a. Having a white rump or white upper tail-coverts: specifying various birds. White-rumped petrel, Leach's petrel, Cymochorea leucorrhoa, of a fuliginous color with white upper tail-coverts, found on both east and west coast of the United States. White-rumped sandpiper, Bonaparte's sandpiper, Tringa or Actodromas bonapartei, having white upper tail-coverts, abundant in many parts of North America. White-rumped shrike, the common American shrike, a variety of the loggerhead, Lanius ludovicianus excubitoroides. White-rumped thrush. See thrush!

white-salted (hwīt'sal'ted), a. Cured in a certain manner, as herring (which see). White-salted herring. See herring.

white-scop (hwīt'skop), n. Same as whitehead, 1. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Local, Connecticut.]

white-shafted (hwīt'shaf'ted), a. Having white shafts or shaft-lines of the feathers: as, the white-shafted fantail, Rhipidura albiscapa. Compare red-shafted, yellow-shafted.

whiteside (hwīt'sīd), n. The golden-eyed duck, Clangula glaucion. [Westmoreland, Eng.]

white-sided (hwīt'sī'ded), a. Having the sides white, or having white on the sides: as, the white-sided dolphin, or skunk-porpoise. See cut under Lagenorhynchus.

whitesmith (hwīt'smith), n. [< white + smith. Cf. blacksmith.] 1. A worker in tinware.—2. A worker in iron who finishes or polishes the work, in distinction from one who forges it.

whitespot (hwīt'spot), n. 1. A British noctuid moth, Diantheecia albimaculata.—2. Another British moth, Eumychus octomaculata.

white-spotted (hwīt'spot'ed), a. Spotted with white: as, the white-spotted pinion, Calymnia diffinis, a British noctuid; the white-spotted pug, Eupithecia albipunctata, a British geometrid moth.

whitespur (hwīt'spėr), n. In her., a title given to a certain class of esquires, from the spurs which they wore at their creation. Also called esquires' white spurs.

whitester, whitster (hwīt'stėr, hwīt'stėr), n. [Early mod. E. whytstare, wytstare, whytstar, < ME. whitstare, < white! + -ster.] A bleacher; a whitener. [Obsolete or local.]

Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet-mead.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 3, 14.

White's thrush. A ground-thrush, Geocichla (Oreocincla) varia. This bird was originally described as Turdus varius by Pallas, 1811, as T. aureus by Holandre, 1825, and as T. whitei by Eyton, 1836, when it was found as a straggler to Great Britain, and dedicated to G. White of Selborne. It is also known as Oreocincla aurea, O. whitei, and by other names. By some singular misapprehension White's thrush has been said to be "the only known bird which is found in Europe and America and Australia alike," the facts being (1) that various birds are so found, but no thrushes of any kind are so found, (2) that White's thrush has never been found either in America or in Australia, and has been found in Europe as an accidental visitant only, its habitat being as given under ground-thrush (which see), (3) that the supposed White's thrush of Australia is G. lunulata (Turdus lunulatus of Latham), and the true White's thrush, occurring as a straggler in Europe, was mistakenly recorded as Turdus lunulatus by Bloxam in 1837; whence a part of the myth, which in its rounded-out form extended to America.

whitestone (hwīt'stōn), n. A literal translation of the German Weissstein, the name of a rock now generally known as granulite, but sometimes called leptinite. The name Weisstein is now obsolete in Germany and whitestone has very rarely been used by English writers on lithology.

whitetail (hwīt'tāl), n. [Formerly also whittail, < white + tail. Cf. whiterump, wheatear.] 1. The wheatear or stonechat, Saxicola œnanthe. Also whiterump, white-arse, wittol, etc. See cut under wheatear.—2. A humming-bird of the genus Urochroa (which see, with cut).—3. The white-tailed deer of North America, Cariacus virginianus, in distinction from the blacktail (C. macrotis). See white-tailed deer (under white-tailed), and cut under Cariacus.

white-tailed (hwīt'tāld), a. Having the tail more or less completely white: noting various birds and other animals. White-tailed buzzard, Buteo albicaudatus, a fine large hawk of Texas and southward, having the tail and its coverts white with broad black subterminal zone, and many fine zigzag blackish lines. White-tailed deer, the commonest deer of North America, Cariacus virginianus, the whitetail. The tail is very long and broad, of a flattened lanceolate shape, and on the upper side concolor with the back, but it is pure white underneath, and very conspicuous when hoisted in flight. See cut under Cariacus. White-tailed eagle, Haliaetus albicilla, the common sea-eagle or ern of Europe, etc. White-tailed emerald, Elvira chionura, a small humming-bird, 3¼ inches long, chiefly green, but with the crissal and tail feathers white, the latter tipped with black. This species inhabits the United States of Colombia (Veragua) and Costa Rica. A second is E. cupreiceps little different. The feature named is unusual in this family. Compare Urochroa (with cut) and Urosticte.

White-tailed Emerald (Elvira virginea).

White-tailed gnu, Catoblepas gnu, the common gnu in distinction from C. gorgon, whose tail is black. See cut under gnu. White-tailed godwit, Limosa ægocephala, a species widely distributed, closely resembling the bar-tailed godwit. White-tailed kite, the black-shouldered kite of the United States, Elanus leucurus. See cut under kite. White-tailed longspur, the black-shouldered or chestnut-collared longspur, Centrophanes ornatus, a very common fringilline bird of the western parts of North America. White-tailed marlin. See marlin (b). White-tailed mole, Talpa leucura, an Indian species. White-tailed ptarmigan, Lagopus leucurus, a ptarmigan peculiar to the Rocky Mountain region of North America, in winter pure white all over, including the tail, contrary to the rule in this genus. The nearest approach to this condition is found in L. hemileucurus of Spitzbergen.

white-thighed (hwīt'thīd), a. Having the femoral region white, or having white on the thighs: as, the white-thighed colobus, Colobus vellerosus, a semitopknotted ape of Africa.

Common Whitethroat (Sylvia cinerea).

white-thorn (hwīt'thôrn), n. [< ME. whythe thorne, witthorn; < white! + thorn!.] See thorn!

whitethroat (hwīt'thrōt), n. 1. One of several small singing birds of the genus Sylvia, found in the British Islands. The common whitethroat is S. cinerea. The lesser whitethroat is S. curruca. The garden-whitethroat is S. hortensis, also called billy whitethroat and greater pettichaps. See cut in preceding column.

2. The white-throated sparrow, or peabody-bird, of the United States, Zonotrichia albicollis.—3. A Brazilian humming-bird, Leucochloris albicollis. The character implied in the name is very unusual in this family.

white-throated (hwīt'thrō'ted), a. Having a white throat: specifying many birds and other animals: as, the white-throated sparrow, Zonotrichia albicollis, the most abundant kind of crown-sparrow found in eastern parts of the United States. See cut under Zonotrichia.—White-throated blue warbler. See warbler.—White-throated finch. See finch!.—White-throated monitor, a South African varan, Monitor albigularis.—White-throated thickhead. Same as thunder-bird, 1.—White-throated warbler. See warbler.

whitetip (hwīt'tip), n. A humming-bird of the genus Urosticte.

white-top (hwīt'top), n. A grass, the white bent, or florin, Agrostis alba.

white-tree (hwīt'trē), n. A tree of Australia and the Malay archipelago, Melaleuca Leucadendron, a probable variety of which, M. minor, furnishes cajeput-oil.

whitewall (hwīt'wâl), n. Same as white-baker. [Prov. Eng.]

whitewash (hwīt'wosh), n. 1. A wash or liquid composition for whitening something. Especially (a) A wash for making the skin fair.

The clergy . . . were very much taken up in reforming the female world. I have heard a whole sermon against a white wash. Addison, Guardian, No. 116.

(b) A composition of quicklime and water, or, for more careful work, of whiting, size, and water, used for whitening the plaster of walls, woodwork, etc., or as a freshening coating for any surface. It is not used for fine work.

Some dilapidations there are to be made good; . . . but a little glazing, painting, whitewash, and plaster will make it [a house] last thy time. Vanbrugh, Relapse, v. 3.

2. False coloring, as of character, alleged services, etc.; the covering up of wrong-doing or defects: as, the investigating committee applied a thick coat of whitewash. [Colloq.]—3. In base-ball and other games, a contest in which one side fails to score. [Colloq.]

whitewash (hwīt'wosh), v.; pret. and pp. whitewashed, ppr. whitewashing. [< whitewash, n.] I. trans. 1. To cover with a white liquid composition, as with lime and water, etc.

There were workmen pulling down some of the old hangings and replacing them with others, altering, repairing, scrubbing, painting, and white washing.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xliii.

2. To make white; give a fair external appearance to; attempt to clear from imputations; attempt to restore the reputation of. [Colloq.]

A white-washed Jacobite; that is, one who, having been long a non-juror, . . . had lately qualified himself to act as a justice, by taking the oaths to Government.
Scott, Rob Roy, viii.

When white-washed, he quits the politician's strife
At ease in mind, with pockets filled for life.
Lowell, Tempora Mutantur.

3. To clear by a judicial process (an insolvent or bankrupt) of the debts he owes. [Colloq.]—4. In base-ball, etc., to beat in a game in which the opponents fail to score.

II. intrans. To become coated with a white inflorescence, as some bricks.

The bricks made from them [clays on the Hudson River] usually "whitewash" or "saltpetre" upon exposure to the weather. C. T. Davis, Bricks, etc., ii. 44.

whitewasher (hwīt'wosh'ėr), n. [< whitewash + -er!.] One who whitewashes.

white-water (hwīt'wâ'tėr), n. A disease of sheep.

white-water (hwīt'wâ'tėr), v. t. To make the water white with foam by lobtailing, or splashing with the flukes, as a whale: as, "There she white-waters!" a cry from the masthead.

white-wave (hwīt'wāv), n. A British geometrid moth, as Cabera exanthemaria.

whiteweed (hwīt'wēd), n. [From the color given by its flowers to a field.] The common oxeye daisy, a composite plant, Chrysanthemum Leucanthemum. Also called marguerite, and by the Indians white man's weed, its introduction and rapid spread in America being compared to the occupation of their country by the palefaces.

whitewing (hwīt'wing), n. 1. The white-winged or velvet scoter, sea-coot, or surf-duck, Œdemia fusca deglandi: so called along the Atlantic coast of the United States. Various plumages of the bird are distinguished by gunners as black, gray, May, great May, and eastern whitewing; and it has many other local names. See cut under velvet.

2. The chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs: so called from the white bands on the wing.—Whitewing doves, the pigeons of the genus Melopelia. See white-winged.

white-winged (hwīt'wingd), a. Having the wings white, wholly or in part: specifying various birds.—White-winged blackbird, the lark bunting, Calamospiza bicolor, the male of which is black with a conspicuous white wing-patch. See cut under Calamospiza.—White-winged coot. See coot, 3.—White-winged crossbill, Loxia leucoptera, a North American species, the male of which is carmine-red with two white wing-bars on each wing.—White-winged dove, Melopelia leucoptera, a pigeon found in southwestern parts of the United States, with a broad oblique white wing-bar. See cut under Melopelia.—White-winged gull, lark, sandpiper. See the nouns.—White-winged scoter. Same as whitewing, 1.—White-winged snowbird, a variety of the common black snowbird, Junco hyemalis aikeni, with white wingbars, found in the mountains of Colorado. Compare cut under snowbird.—White-winged surf-duck, the velvet scoter. See whitewing, 1, and cut under velvet.

whitewood (hwīt'wụd), n. A name of a large number of trees or of their white or whitish timber. The whitewoods of North America are the tulip-tree, Liriodendron Tulipifera, and the basswood, Tilia Americana; also, in Florida, the Guiana plum, Drypetes crocea, and the wild cinnamon, Canella alba (see Canella[1], and whitewood bark, below). In the West Indies Tabebuia Leucoxylon, the whitewood cedar, and T. pentaphylla, both formerly classed under Tecoma, are so named, together with Ocotea Leucoxylon and the white sweetwood, Nectandra Antillana (N. leucantha of Grisebach). The cheesewood, Pittosporum bicolor, of Victoria and Tasmania, and Lagunaria Patersonii, a small soft-wooded malvaceous tree, found in Queensland and Norfolk Island, are so named, and a large handsome tree Panax elegans, of eastern Australia, is the mowbulan whitewood. Locally, in England, the linden, Tilia Europæa, and the wayfaring tree, Viburnum Lantana, and in Cheshire all timber but oak, are called whitewood. (Britten and Holland.) Whitewood bark, the white cinnamon, the bark of Canella alba.

whiteworm (hwīt'wėrm), n. Same as white-grub.

whitewort (whīt'wėrt), n. An old name of the feverfew, Chrysanthemum Parthenium, and of the Solomon's-seal, Polygonatum multiflorum.

whitflaw (hwīt'flâ), n. Same as whiteflaw, whitlow, whickflaw.

whither (hwiтн'ėr), adv. and conj. [Formerly also whether; with change of orig. d to th, as in hither, thither, father, etc.; < ME. whider, whidir, whedir, hwader, whader, wader, qwader, qwedur, hweder, whither, < AS. hwider, hwæder, to what place, whither, = Goth. hwadre, whither; < Teut. hwa*, who, + compar. suffix -der, -ther: see who, and cf. whether and the correlative adverbs hither and thither.] I. interrog. adv. 1. To what place?

Gentill knyghtes, whether ar ye a wey?
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 24.

Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?
Wordsworth, Intimations of Mortality, st. 4.

2†. To what point or degree? how far? [Rare.]

Whither at length wilt thou abuse our patience?
B. Jonson, Catiline, iv. 2.

II. rel. conj. 1. To which place.

Sothly, soth it is a selcouthe, me thinkes,
Whider that lady is went and wold no lenger dwelle.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 701.

Then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them.
Shak., C. of E., v. 1. 155.

From this countrey towards the South there is a certaine part called Serings hall whither he sayth that a man was not able to saile in a moneths space, if he lay still by night, although he had every day a full winde.
Hakluyt's Voyages, p. 6.

What will all the gain of this world signifie in that State whither we are all hastening apace?
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. xii.

2. Whithersoever.

Nor let your Children go whether they will, but know whether they goe, in what company, and what they have done, good or euill. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 64.

Thou shalt let her go whither she will. Deut. xxi. 14.

A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 3. 22.

Where has now to a considerable extent taken the place, in conversational use, of whither: thus, it would seem rather stilted to say "whither are you going?" instead of "where are you going?" Whither is still used, however, in the more elevated or serious style, or when precision is required.

Any whither. See anywhither.

Yee haue heard that two Flemings together
Will vndertake or they goe any whither,
Or they rise once to drinke a Ferkin full
Of good Beerekin. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 192.

Wood and water he would fetch vs, guide vs any whether.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 154.

No whither. See nowhither.

Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi? And he said, Thy servant went no whither. 2 Ki. v. 25.

whither-out (hwiтн'ėr-out), interrog. adv. and rel. conj. In what direction outward; whence and whither.

"Lorde," quod I, "if any wigte wyte whider-oute it groweth" Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 12.

whithersoever (hwiтн'ėr-sō-ev'ėr), adv. [< whither + soever.] To whatever place.

Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.
Mat. viii. 19.

whitherward (hwiтн'ėr-wârd), interrog. adv. and rel. conj. [< ME. whiderward, hwaderward, whaderward; < whither + -ward.] Toward what or which direction or place. [Obsolete or archaic.]

And asked of him whiderward she wente.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 782.

Hitherward wentest thou? William Morris, Sigurd, iii.

whiting[1] (hwī'ting), n. [< ME. whytynge; verbal n. of white[1], v.] Chalk which has been dried either in the air or in a kiln, and afterward ground, levigated, and again dried. In trade it has various names, according to the amount of labor expended on it to make it fine and free from grit: thus being ordinary or commercial whiting, then Spanish white, then gilders' whiting, and finally Paris white, which is the best grade. Whiting is used in fine whitewashing, in distemper painting, cleaning plate, making putty, as an adulterant in various processes, as a base for picture moldings, etc. Also whitening.

When the father hath gotten thousands by the sacrilegious impropriation, the son perhaps may give him [the vicar] a cow's grass, or a matter of forty shillings per annum, or bestow a little whiting on the church, and a wainscot seat for his own worship.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 144.

When you clean your plate, leave the whiting plainly to be seen in all the chinks, for fear your lady should not believe you had cleaned it.
Swift, Advice to Servants (Butler).

whiting[2] (hwī'ting), n. [< ME. whytynge (= MD. wytinghe, wittingh = MLG. witink, also witek, witeke); < white[1] + -ing[3].] 1. A gadoid fish of Europe, Merlangus vulgaris, or another of this genus. It abounds on the British coast, and is highly esteemed for food. It is commonly from 12 to 18 inches long and of one or two pounds weight, though it grows much larger. It is readily distinguished from the haddock and some other related fishes by the absence of a barbule. The flesh is of a pearly whiteness.

Whiting (Merlangus vulgaris), one-fourth total size.

And here's a chain of whiting's eyes for pearls,
A muscle-monger would have made a better.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iv. 1.

2. In the United States, one of several scienoid fishes of the genus Menticirrus, as M. americanus, the silver whiting, or surf-whiting, or M. littoralis.—3. The silver hake, Merluccius bilinearis.—4. The menhaden. Bermuda, bull-head, or Carolina whiting. See bonjohn(a). Whiting's-eye, a wistful glance; a leer, or amorous look.

I saw her just now give him the languishing Eye, as they call it, that is, the Whiting's Eye, of old called the Sheep's Eye.
Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing Master, iv. 1.

whiting-mop[1] (hwī'ting mop), n. [< whiting[2] + mop[1].] 1. A young whiting.

They will scorn you their measures like whiting mops, as if their feet were fins, and the tongues of their knees oiled.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 2.

2. Figuratively, a fair lass; a pretty girl.

I have a stomach, and would content myself
With this pretty whiting mop.
Massinger, Guardian, iv. 2.

whiting-pollack (hwī'ting-pol'ak), n. See pollack.

whiting-pout (hwī'ting pout), n. A gadoid fish, the bib, Gadus luscus.

whiting-time[1] (hwī'ting-tīm), n. Bleaching-time. Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 3. 110.

whitish (hwī'tish), a. [< ME. whitissh, < white[1] + -ish[1].] Somewhat white; white in a moderate degree; albescent.

His taste is whitish and whitesche his colloure.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 91.

In stooping he saw about a yard off, something whitish and square lying on the dark grass. This was an ornamental note-book of pale leather stamped with gold.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, viii.

whitishness (hwī'tish-nes), n. The quality of being somewhat white; albescence.

You may more easily make the experiment, by taking good vegetable vitriol of a deep blue and comparing with some of the entire crystals . . . some of the subtile powder of the same salt, which will comparatively exhibit a very considerable degree of whitishness.
Boyle, Exper. Hist. of Colours, II. i. 12.

whitleather (hwīt'leтн'ėr), n. [Early mod. E. whittleather, whittle ther; < white[1] + leather.] 1. Leather dressed with alum; white leather. See leather.

Hast thou so much moisture
In thy whit leather hide yet that thou canst cry?
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, v. 1.

2. The nuchal ligament of grazing animals, as the ox, supporting the head: same as paranuchal. See cut under ligamentum.

whitling (hwīt'ling), n. [< Sw. hvitling, a whiting; as a hvit[1] + -ling[1].] The young of the bull trout. Imp. Dict.

whitlow (hwīt'lō), n. [A corruption of whitflaw, whiteflaw, for whickflaw, a dial. var. of quickflaw, perhaps simulating white[1] + low[4], a fire, as if in ref. to the occasionally white appearance of such swellings, and to the inflammation.] 1. A suppurative inflammation of the deeper tissues of a finger, usually of the terminal phalanx; felon, panaritium, or paronychia.—2. An inflammatory disease of the feet in sheep. It occurs around the hoof, where an acrid matter collects, which ought to be discharged.

whitlow-grass (hwīt'lō-gras), n. Originally, either of two early blooming little plants, Saxifraga tridactylites and Draba verna (Erophila vulgaris), regarded as curing whitlow. In later times the name has been confined to Draba verna (vernal whitlow-grass), and thence extended to the whole genus. The section Erophila, however, of this genus, to which D. verna belongs, is now separated as an independent genus. See Draba, and cut under silicle.

whitlowwort (hwīt'lō-wėrt), n. See Paronychia[1], 2 (with cut).

Whit-Monday (hwīt'mun'dā), n. [< whit[2] (for white[1]) + Monday.] The Monday following Whitsunday. In England the day is generally observed as a holiday. Also called Whitsun-Monday.

whitneyite (hwīt'nī-īt), n. [Named after J. D. Whitney, an American geologist (born 1819).] A native arsenide of copper, occurring massive, of a reddish white color and metallic to submetallic luster, and found in the copper region of Lake Superior.

whitrot (hwīt'rot), n. [Sc. also quhitred, quhittret, whitrack, origin uncertain. Cf. E. dial. (Cornwall) whatneck, a white-throated weasel.] A weasel. [Scotch.]

Whitsont, n. An old form of Whitsun.

whitsour (hwīt'sour), n. [Appar. < white[1] + sour.] A variety of summer apple.

whitstert, n. See whitester.

whitsult (hwīt'sult), n. [< white[1] + soult[2], sult.] A dish composed of milk, cheese, curds, and butter.

Their meat whitsult as they call it, namely, milke, soure milke, cheese, curds, butter.
R. Carew, Survey of Cornwall, folio 66.

Whitsun (hwīt'sun), a. [Formerly also Whitson, also Hwitson, Hweson, < ME. whitson-, wytsun-, hwesen (= Icel. Hvíta sunnu), Whitsun; abbr. of Whitsunday or the common first element of Whitsunday, Whitson week, etc.] Of, pertaining to, or observed at Whitsuntide, following Whitsunday, or falling in Whitsun week; generally used in composition: as, Whitsun-ale; Whitsun Monday, etc. Whitsun day. See Whitsunday.

Whitsun-ale (hwīt'sun-āl), n. [Also Whitson-ale, Whitsun-Ale, Whitsun-ale.] A festival formerly held in England at Whitsuntide by the inhabitants of the various parishes, who met generally in or near a large barn in the vicinity of the church, ate and drank and engaged in various games and sports.

May games, Wakes and Whits-ales &c. If they be not at unreasonable hours may justly be permitted.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 270.

Whitsunday (hwīt'sun-dā), n. [< ME. whitsunday, whith sounday, witsondai, wisson-day, hwite sune-dei, hwite sune-dai, etc., < AS. hwita sunnan-dæg, only in dat. case hwitan sunnan dæg (= Icel. hvítasunnu-dagr, ref. also hvítadagar, 'white days,' a name for Whitsunweek, hvíta-daga vika, 'white-days-week,' hvítasunnudags-vika, Whitsunday's week) = Norw. Kvitsunnedag, Whitsunday), < hwit, white, + sunnandæg, Sunday: see white[1] and Sunday. The name refers to the white garments (Icel. hvíta-vaðhar, white weeds) worn by candidates for baptism. The notion which has been current that Whitsunday is derived from the G. pfingsten, Pentecost (see Pinkster and Pente- cost), is ridiculous.] 1. The seventh Sunday after Easter; a festival of the church in commemoration of the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost.

Have halle of flowres as fresh as May,
Chapelett of roses at Whitsunday.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 2278.

Tewysday a for whith Sunnday, we cam to Canterbury, to Seynt Thomes Messe. And ther I offeryd, and made an ende of my pylgrymage.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 6.

2. In Scotland, one of the term-days (May 15th or, from the Old Style, May 26th) on which rents, annuities, ministers' stipends, etc., are paid, servants are engaged and paid, etc. The Whitsunday removal term in the towns is now fixed by law as May 28th.

Whitsun-farthings (hwit'sun-far"thingz), n. pl. Pentecostals.

Whitsun-lady (hwit'sun-la"di), n. The leading female character in the merrymakings at Whitsuntide.

Whitsun-lord (hwit'sun-lord), n. The master of the revels at the old Whitsuntide festivities.

A cooper's wife, or some such busy spark Dlumbating the high constable and his clerk
And all the neighbourhood from old records
Of antique proverbs, drawn from Whitsun-lords.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, Prol.

Whitsuntide (hwit'sun-tīd), n. [< ME. whitsontyde, witsontyde, whytsontyde, whitesunetide, whitsuntide; < Whitsun + tide.] The season of Pentecost, comprehending the entire week which follows Pentecost Sunday. In the Church of England Whitsunday was appointed in 1549 as the day on which the reformed Book of Common Prayer was to be used for the first time. Whitsuntide along with Easter, was one of the two great seasons for baptism in the ancient church, and received the name of White Sunday (Dominica Alba) from the albs or white robes of the newly baptized, as Low Sunday was also called Alb Sunday (Dominica post Albas or in Albis depositis). See Pentecost.

The weke afore witsontyde come the kynge to Cardoell, and when he was come he axed Merlin how he hadde spedde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), I. 60

The king then left London for the North a little before Whitsuntide, as the contemporary writer of Croyland tells us. J. Gairdner, Richard III., vi.

Whitsun-week (hwit'sun wēk), n. [< ME. whitsun weke, wyttsun wake; < Whitsun + week[1].] The week which begins with Whitsunday.

So it befelle that this Emperour cam, with a Cristene Knyght with him, into a Chirche in Egypt and it was the Saturday in Wyttsun wake. Mandeville, Travels, p. 290.

whittaw (hwit'a), n. [Appar. for whittawer.] Same as whit tawer.

Men are busy there mending the harness, under the superintendence of Mr. Goby the whittaw, otherwise saddler. George Eliot, Adam Bede, vi.

whit-tawer (hwit'a-èr), n. [< whit[2] for white + tawer[1]. Cf. whitaver.] A worker in white leather; especially, a saddler. Halliwell.

whitten (hwit'n), n. [Appar. < white + -n, orig. adj. inflection ending.] A name assigned in some old books to the guelder rose, Viburnum Opulus (also called snowball tree), but properly belonging to the wayfaring tree, V. Lantana, alluding to the white under surface of its leaves, and so used in large portions of England.

whittle-whattle (hwit'i-hwot-l), n. [A varied reduplication; cf. twattle twattle.] Vague, shuffling, or enjoling language; hence, a person who employs cajolery or other deceptive means to gain an end. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

whittle-whattle (hwit'i-hwot-l), v. i. [Sc.] To mutter; whisper; waste time by vague cajoling language; talk frivolously, shilly-shally. [Scotch.]

What are ye whittle-whattlen about, ye gowk — said his gentle sister, who suspected the tenor of his murmurs. Scott, Pirate, vi.

whittle[1] (hwit'l), n. [< ME. whitel, hwitel, < AS. hwitel = Icel. hvitell = Norw. kvitel), a blanket or mantle, lit. a 'white mantle,' < hwit, white. Cf. F. blanket, nlt. < F. blanc, white.] Originally, a blanket; later, a coarse shaggy mantle or woolen shawl worn by West-country women in England. [Old and prov. Eng.]

When he stereweth hem to streeche the straw ri has whitel,
So for hus gloteye and grete synne he hath a reuen's penaunce. Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 8.

Her figure is tall, graceful and slight, the severity of the outlines suiting well with the severity of her dress, with the brown stuff gown and plain gray whittle.
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, ii.

whittle[2] (hwit'l), n. [Altered for 'thwittle, < ME. thwitel, a knife, lit. 'a cutter,' < AS. þwītan, E. thwite, dial. white, cut: see twite.] A knife; especially, a large knife, as a butcher's knife or one carried in the girdle.

There's not a whittle in the unruly camp.
Shak., T. of A., v. 1. 183.

The long crooked whittle is gleaming and bare!
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 56.

I've heerd tell as whalers wear knives, and I'd ha' giv'n t'gang a taste o' my whittle if I'd been cotched up just as I'd set my foot on shore.
Mrs Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, iv.

whittle[2] (hwit'l), v.; pret. and pp. whittled, ppr. whittling. [Formerly also whitle; < whittle[2], n.] I. trans. 1. To cut or dress with a knife; form with a whittle or knife; as, to whittle a stick.

I asked about a delightful jumping-jack which made its appearance, and wished very much to become the owner, for it was curiously whittled out and fitted together by Mr. Toby's own hands. The Atlantic, LXV. 98.

2. To pare, or reduce by paring, literally or figuratively.

We have whittled down our loss extremely, and will not allow a man more than three hundred and fifty English slain. Walpole, Letters, II. 69.

3. To intoxicate; make tipsy or drunk. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

After the Britons were well whittled with wine, he fell to taunting and girding at them.
Verstegan, Rest. of Decayed Intelligence (ed. 1628), p. 239.

II. intrans. 1. To cut wood with a pocket-knife, either aimlessly or with the intention of forming something; use a pocket-knife in cutting wood or shaping wooden things.

Here is a boy that loves to run, swim, . . . make faces, whittle, fish, tear his clothes.
O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

The Meggat boys . . . produce knives simultaneously from their jackets, split each a good splinter off the palings, and begin whittling.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 264.

2†. To confess at the gallows. [Cant.]

When his last speech the loud hawkers did cry,
He swore from his cart, it was all a damn'd lie:
Then said, I must speak to the people a little,
But I'll see you all damn'd before I will whittle.
Swift, Clever Tom Clinch.

Whittleseya (hwit'l-si-a), n. [Named after C. Whittlesey (see def.).] The generic name of a plant first found by Charles Whittlesey in the coal-measures at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and named by J. S. Newberry in honor of its discoverer (1853). This plant is known only by its leaves, of which the nervation is very peculiar, excluding it from all other known genera. The generic character, as given by Lesquereux, are "frond simple or pinnate; nerves fasciculate, confluent to the base, not dichotomous, fructification unknown." The leaves have a peculiar lunnate form, are somewhat fan-like in shape and dentate at the upper border, but entire on the sides and rapidly narrowing into a short petiole. This plant, of which the nervation has some analogy with that of the ginkgo, was placed by Lesquereux with the Yuccgarathece; Schenk considers it as possibly belonging to the gymnosperms. Whittleseya has been found in various localities, always low down in the coal measures.

whittle-shawl (hwit'l-shâl), n. Same as whittle[1].

whittlings (hwit'lingz), n. pl. Chips or bits produced in whittling.

whitwall (hwit'wâl), n. Same as writwall.

Whitwell stove. One of various forms of stove, on the regenerative principle, which are used for heating the air for the supply of an iron furnace working with the hot-blast. The heating surfaces in the Whitwell stove consist of broad spaces and flat walls instead of the checkerwork usually employed. Such stoves have been built having a height of 50 feet and a diameter of over 20.

Whitworth gun. See gun[1].

whity (hwī'ti), a. [< white + -y[1].] Rather white; whitish.

whity-brown (hwī'ti-broun), a. Of a whitish color with a brownish tinge; light yellowish-gray; as, whity-brown paper. Different shades of paper have at different times been so designated.

whityer (hwī'yèr), n. [< white + -yer, -ier. Cf. whiter, whitster.] The word survives in the surname Whittier.] A bleacher, a whitster.

whiz, whizz, n. and v. See whizz.

whirgig, n. A mechanical toy.

whizle (hwiz'l), v. i. [A freq. of whiz.] To whiz; whistle. [Rare.]

. . . as the wh is forward through pest chinck narrolye wee see it. Sir Thomas Elyot, Castle of Helth, i. 5.

whizz, whiz (hwiz), n. and v. [< pret. and pp. whizzed, ppr. whizzing. [= Icel. hvessa, hiss, run with a hissing sound, said of streams, etc.; an imitative word, like hiss, buzz, whistle, etc.] 1. To make a humming or hissing sound, like that of an arrow or ball flying through the air.

God, in the whizzing of a pleasant wind,
Shall march upon the tops of mulberry trees,
To cool all breasts that burn with any grief,
As whilom he was good to Moyses' men.
Peele, David and Bethsabe.

The exhalations whizzing in the air
Give so much light that I may read by them.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 44.

2. To move, rush, or fly with a sibilant humming sound.

How the quoit
Whizzed from the Stripling's arm.
Wordsworth, Excursion, vii.

Parried a musket ball with a small sword, inasmuch that he absolutely felt it whiz round the blade.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 442.

whizz, whiz (hwiz), n. [< whizz, v.] A sound between hissing and humming; a sibilant or whistling hum, such as that made by the rapid flight of an arrow, a bullet, or other missile through the air.

Every soul it passed me by,
Like the whizz of my cross-bow!
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

whizzer (hwiz'èr), n. A centrifugal machine used for drying sugar, grain, clothes, etc.

From the whizzer the wheat passes to the smut machine.
The Engineer, LXV. 2.

Kitchie's steam Whizzer. A machine for treating musty grain. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 178.

whizzingly (hwiz'ing-li), adv. [< whizzing, ppr., + -ly[2].] With a whizzing sound.

whizzing-stick (hwiz'ing-stik), n. Same as bull-roarer. Amer. Anthrop., III. 258.

who (hō), pron. [< ME. who, wha, wo, qwa, qua, quo, qui, hwo, hoo, ho (gen. whos, whas, whes, quas, hwas, hues, hwos, hos, wos, dat. whom, wham, whaem, wam, hwam, acc. whan, wan, hwan), < AS. hwa (gen. hwæs, dat. hwam, hwæm, acc. hwone, instr. hwi, hwy (see why[1])) = OS. hwē = OFries. hwa, wa. LG. we, wer = D. wie = OHG. MHG. wer, G. wer = Icel. hverr, hver = Sw. hvem = Dan. hvem, hvo = Goth. hwas, m., hwo, f. (gen. hwis, m., hwos, f., dat. hwamma, m., hwizai, f., acc. hwana, m., hwo, f., instr. hwe, pl. hwun, etc.); who, = Ir. Gael. co = W. pwy = Russ. kto, chto, who, what, = Lith. kas, who, = L. quis, m., quæ, f., quid, neut., who. Gr. πός, ποῖος (in deriv. πο-, where, etc., πότερος, whether) = Skt. kas, who (acc. kam, whom). For the neuter, see what. From this root are ult. when, whence, where, whether, which, whither, why, how, and (from the L. root) quality, quality, quantity, etc. Who, which, what were orig. only interrogative pronouns, which, whose, whom occur regularly and usually as relatives as early as the end of the 12th century, but who not until the 14th century.] A. interrog. Denoting a personal object of inquiry: What man or woman? what person? Who is declined, in both singular and plural alike, with the possessive (genitive) whose and the objective (dative or accusative) whom: as, who told you so? whose book is this? of whom are you speaking?

Quo made domne (dumb), and quo specande?
Quo made blisne (blind), and quo lockende?
Quo but ic, that have al wroght?
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2521.

Ho makede the so hardy
For to come in to mi Tur?
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 69.

Whom have I in heaven but thee? Ps. lxxiii. 25.

Whence comes this bounty? or whose is't?
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, iv. 2.

Art of me — at whose suit? — Tom Chartley, Dick Leverpool, stay, I'm arrested.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 2.

In certain special uses who appears (a) Inquiring as to the character or origin or status of a person: as, who is this man? (that is, what are his antecedents, his social standing, etc.); who are we (what sort of persons are we) that we should condemn him?

Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Rom. xiv. 4.

Please to know me likewise. Who am I?
Why, one, sir, who is helping with a friend
Three streets off. Browning, Fra Lippo Lippi.

Mr. Dalboys inquired, "Who were these people?" "O, only two humble neighbors" was the reply.
C. Reade, Love Me Little, iii.

(b) In exclamatory sentences, interrogative in form but expecting or admitting no reply: as, who would ever have suspected it!

Our heir apparent is a king!
Who dreamed who thought of such a thing!
Shak., Pericles, iii., Prol., l. 38.

B. rel. Introducing a dependent clause, and noting as antecedent a subject, object, or other factor, expressed or understood, in a clause actually or logically preceding. (a) With reference to the clause following, the relative may introduce — (1) A subordinate proposition explanatory or restrictive of the antecedent.

Idolatrie thus was borne,
For whom mani man is for-lorne.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 996.

He nadde bote a dogter he nyyste yn eir be.
Rob. of Gloucester, p. 89.

Witnesse on Job whom that we diden wo.
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 193.

A verse may find him who a sermon flies.
G. Herbert, The Church Porch.

The general purposes of men in the conduct of their lives . . . end in gaining either the affection or the esteem of those with whom they converse.
Steele, Tatler, No. 206.

Graft me still a friend in my retreat,
Whose I may whisper — solitude is sweet.
Cowper, Retirement, l. 742.

The antecedent is sometimes omitted, being implied in the pronoun, which is in this case usually called a compound relative.

Adraweth zoure swerdes & loke wo may do best
Rob. of Gloucester, l. 127 (Morris and Skeat, II. 6).

Ac bi casten hoore lot Anne he [Christ's garment] sceilde beo.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 50.

Now tell me who made the world.
Marlowe, Faustus, ii. 2.

The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for who.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 171.

There be who can relate his domestic life to the exactness of a diary.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xxvii.

Her we ask'd of that and this,
And who were tutors.
Tennyson, Princess, i.

(g) A clause dependent in form, but adding a distinct idea. Here the relative force is almost entirely lost, who becoming equivalent to and with a demonstrative pronoun.

He trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside
Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 116.

The yong man . . . at last married her, to whose wedding, amongst other guests, came Apollonius, who . . . found her out to be a Serpent, a Lamia.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 435.

(b) With reference to gender, who originally noted a masculine or feminine antecedent, whether human, animate, or other, the neuter being what, and whose, the possessive (genitive) of who, was also that of what and is still correctly used of a neuter antecedent (see what, 1). Moreover, before the appearance of the possessive its, whose place was filled by the neuter his (see he, I., C (b)), not only were neuter objects designated in the two other cases by he and him, but who and whom were sometimes substituted for that as the nominative and objective of the neuter relative (see the quotation from Puttenham). In modern use, however, who and whom are applied regularly to persons, frequently to animals, and sometimes even to inanimate things when represented with some of the attributes of humanity, as in personification or vivid description.

Men seyn over the walle stonde
Grete engynes, who wer nygh honde
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4194.

The nature and condition of man . . . is called humanitie, whiche is a generall name to those vertues in whome semeth to be a mutuall concorde and loue in the nature of man.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 8.

Such is the figure Ouall, whom for his antiquitie, dignitie and vse, I place among the rest of the figures to embellish our proportions.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 84.

Death arrests the organ of my voice,
Who entering at the breach thy sword hath made,
Sacks every vein and ardure of my heart.
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., ii. 7.

A green and gilded snake . . .
Who with her head nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth.
Shak., As you Like It, iv. 3. 110.

Two things very worthy the observation I saw in two of the walkes, euen two beech trees, who were very admirable to behold, not so much for the height, . . . but for their greatnesse.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 37.

Animals, who, by the proper application of rewards and punishments, may be taught any course of action.
Hume, Human Understanding, ix.

If strange dogs come by, . . . she [a doe] returns to the cows, who, with fierce lowings and menacing horns, drive the assailants quite out of the pasture.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. Selborne, xxiv.

A mirror for the yellow-billed ducks, who are seizing the opportunity of getting a drink.
George Eliot, Adam Bede, vi.

And you, ye stars,
Who slowly begin to marshal,
As of old, in the fields of heaven,
Your distant, melancholy lines!
M. Arnold, Empedocles on Etna, ii.

(c) With reference to the nature of its antecedent, who may note — (1) a particular or determinate person or thing (see (a)); or (2) an indefinite antecedent, in which case who has the force of whoso, whosoever or whoever and is called an indefinite relative. Its antecedent may be expressed, or it may be a compound relative.

Hwam ich biteche that bred that ich on wyne wete,
He me schal bitraye.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 40.

Quoe deth so he dezzye he dregeð alle faste.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1644.

Of cradce in the alde testament
Was mani biseninge [tokens], qwo to cowde rent.
Holy Rood (ed. Morris), p. 118.

"Whom the gods love die young," was said of yore.
Byron, Don Juan, iv. 12.

As who saith. Same as as who should say.

For he was synguler hym-self, and seyde feciamus,
As who seith more mede here-to than my worde one.
Piers Plowman (B), ix. 36.

My maister Burton, whan of Crists our Kinge
Was axed what is trouthe or sothfastnesse,
He nat a word answerde to that axinge,
As who saith, "no man is al trewe." I gesse.
Chaucer, Envoy of Chaucer to Bukton, l. 4.

As who should say, as one who says or who might say; as if one should say.

He doth nothing but frown, as who should say, "If you will not have me, choose."
Shak., M. of V., i. 2. 51.

The slave . . . holds
John Baptist's head a dangle by the hair,
With one hand ("look you, now," as who should say),
Browning, Fra Lippo Lippi.

The who, that one who, who: so also the whose, the whom. [Archaic.]

The whos power as now is falle
Gower, Conf. Amant., v.

Your mistresse from the whom I woe,
There's no disjunction to be made.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 389.

Who all, all the persons who, the whole number (who). [Colloq.]

I don't know who all for I aint much of a bookster and don't recollect. Haliburton, Sam Slick in England, xlviii.

Who but he, who else? he only, nobody else.

Every one repaireth to Wristhesley, honoureth Wriothesley (as the Assyrians did to Haman) and all things as done by his advice . . . and who but he?
Ponet, quoted in R. W. Dixon's Hist. Church of Eng., (xvi., note.

She made him Marquis of Anere, one of the Twelve Mareschals of France, Governor of Normandy, and conferred divers other Honours and Offices of Trust upon him . . . and who but he?
Howell, Letters, I. 1. 19.

Who that, who or whoever: as a relative, either definite or indefinite.

For who that entreth ther,
He his sauff euere more.
William of Shoreham, De Baptismo, l. 6 (Morris and Skeat, II. 63).

And dame Musyke commaunded curteysly
La Bell Pucell wyth me than to daunce, Whome that I toke with all my pleasaunce.
Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure (Percy Soc.), p. 70.

Syn. Who, which, and that agree in being relatives, and are more or less interchangeable as such, but who is used chiefly of persons (though also often of the higher animals), which almost only of animals and things (in old English also of persons), and that indifferently of either, except after a preposition, where only who or which can stand. Some recent authorities teach that only that should be used when the relative clause is limiting or defining, as the man that runs fastest wins the race, but who or which when it is descriptive or coordinating, as, this man who ran fastest, won the race, but, though present usage is perhaps tending in the direction of such a distinction, it neither has been nor is a rule of English speech, nor is it likely to become one, especially on account of the impossibility of settling that after a preposition, for to turn all relative clauses into the form "the house that Jack lived in" (instead of "the house in which Jack lived") would be intolerable. In good punctuation the defining relative is distinguished from the examples above by never taking a comma before it, whether it be who or which or that. Wherever that could be properly used but only there, the relative may be, and very often is, omitted altogether, thus, the house Jack built or lived in, the man (or the purpose) he built it for. The adjective clause introduced by a relative may qualify a noun in any way in which an adjective or adjective phrase, either attributive or appositional, can qualify it, and has sometimes a pregnant implication of one or another kind, as, why punish this man, who is innocent? (= seeing or although he is innocent; = this innocent man). But a relative is also not rarely made use of to add a coördinate statement, being equivalent to and with a following pronoun, as I studied geometry, which I found difficult (and (I) found it difficult). I met a friend, who kindly showed me the way (and he kindly), etc. This way of employing the relative is by some regarded as a Latinism, and condemned. It is restricted to who and which.

whoa (hwō), interj. [A var. of ho!.] Stop! stand still!

Come, Ile go teach ye hayte and ree, gee and whoe, and which is to which hand.
Heywood, Fortune by Land and Sea (Works, ed. 1874), (VI. 354).

whobub†, n. An obsolete form of hubbub. Also whoobub.

What a vengeance alls this whobub? can ye not rise out.
Beau. and Fl., Woman Pleased, iv. 1.

whodet, n. An obsolete form of hood.

I remember that he went not therwith a forces kayle for a sceptre and a whodet with two eares.
Sp. Dale, English Votaries, fol. 101.

whoever (hō-ev'ėr), indef. pron. [Who + ever.] Any person whatever; no matter who; any one without exception.

Forsoth by a solemne day he was wont to come to him and be guided, whom ever he [Arthur].
Wyclif, Mark xv. 6.

Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds.
Shak., C. of E., v. 1. 336.

Whoever in those glasses looks may find
The spots returned of graces, of his kind,
And by the help of so divine an art
At leisure view and dress his nobler part.
Waller, Upon B. Jonson.

I will not march one foot against the foe, till you all swear to me that whomever I take or kill in arms I shall quietly possess.
Swift, Battle of Books.

whole (hōl), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also wholle; with unorig. initial 'w'; prop., as in early mod. E., hale, < ME. hol, hool, < AS. hāl = OS. hēl = OFries. hēl = D. heel = OHG. MHG. G. heil, sound, whole, saved, = Icel. heill = Sw. hel = Dan. heel = Goth. hails, hale, whole, = OBulg. cělu, whole, complete; perhaps allied to Gr. κάλος, excellent, good, hale, and Skt. kalya, hale, healthy (> kalyāna, prosperous, blessed). From whole (AS. hāl) are also ult. E. wholesome, wholesale, wholly, heal[1], health, healthy, and the second element of wassail from the Scand. form (Icel. heill) are ult. E. hale[2], hail[2], etc. The change of initial ho- to who- was a dial. peculiarity, there being an actual change of pronunciation (hō to hwō), due to the labializing effect of the long ō; the change was reflected in the spelling, which in some words, as whole, whoop, whore, what, came into literary use, while the orig. pronunciation with simple h remained or prevailed. In dial. use the who- (hwo-) thus developed was afterward reduced in some districts to wo-, as wot for whot (orig. whote) for hot (orig. hote). Whole is one of the words which the American Philological Association and the English Philological Society include in their list of spellings to be amended, recommending the restoration of the old form hole, in keeping with the derived or related holy, heal[1], hale[2], etc. (Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., 1886, p. 127).] I. a. 1. Hale; healthy; sound; strong; well.

When his men saw hym hole and sounde,
For sothe they were ful fayne.
Robin Hood and the Monk (Child's Ballads, V. 15).

They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.
Mat. ix. 12.

A soul . . .
So healthy, sound, and clear and whole.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

2. Restored to a sound state; healed; made well.

What Man that first bathed him, after the mevynge of the Watre, was made hool of what maner Sykenes that he hadde.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 88.

Thy faith hath made thee whole, go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.
Mark v. 34.

He call'd his wound a little hurt,
Whereof he should be quickly whole.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. Unimpaired; uninjured; unbroken; intact: as the dish is still whole; to get off with a whole skin.

Hey brennen on the grene leaf,
And thog grene and hol be leaf.
Genesis and Exodus (l. E. T. S.), l. 2776.

My life is yet whole in me.
2 Sam. i. 9.

Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 1. 83.

4. Entire; complete; without omission, reduction, diminution, etc.: as, a whole apple; the whole duty of man; to serve the Lord with one's whole heart; three whole days; the whole body.

For all the hole temple is dedycate and halowed in the honour and name of the holy Sepulcre.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 27.

Ther is a parte of the hede of Seynt George, hys left Arme with the holl hande.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 10.

Whole we call that, and perfect which hath a beginning, a midst, and an end.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Assevehation, her whole mind
Blood thirsting on her arm reliev'd.
Chaucer, The Duellist, iii. 67.

Of the disgraceful dealings which were . . . kept up with the French Court, Danby deserved little or none of the blame, though he suffered the whole punishment.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

5. All; every part, unit, or member required to make up the aggregate: as, the whole city turned out to receive him.

Yeve ayn ye ordynaunces of our Gylde, ordeynd be alle the hol fraternite.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 103.

The whole race of mankind.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 1. 40.

The whole Anglican priesthood, the whole Cavalier gentry were against him.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

6†. Without reserve; sincerely or entirely devoted.

Have and ay shal how sore that me smerte,
Ben to yow trew and hool with al myn herte.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1691.

The Sheriff is ought se hole as he was, for now he wille shewe but a part of his frendshippe.
Paston Letters, I. 202.

7†. Unified; in harmony or accord; one.

I think of you as of God's dear children, whose hearts are whole with the Lord.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 60.

8. In mining, that part of a coal-seam in process of being worked in which the headings only have been driven, the rest remaining untouched, or before "working the broken" has begun. [North. Eng.] — A lie out of whole cloth. See *lie*¹. In or with a whole skin. See skin. — The whole box and dice. See *dice*¹. The whole kit. See *kit*³. The whole world. See world. To go the whole figure, the whole hog. See go. — Upon the whole matter. See matter. Whole blood, culverin, curvature. See the nouns. Whole cadence. Same as perfect cadence (which see, under cadence). Whole chest. See tea chest. Whole cradle, in mining, a platform suspended in the shaft, and nearly as large as the shaft itself; such a platform or cradle is hung by chains to a crab-rope let down from the surface, and is used for repairs, etc. Whole deal. See *deal*³, 1. — Whole flat, in working coal by the panel or barrier system, a whole panel, or such a portion of a seam as is distinctly separated from the rest by a barrier. [South Eng.] — Whole milk. See milk. Whole number, an integer, as opposed to a fraction. Whole press, hand presswork done by two men, one to ink and one to print. Whole shift. See shift, ¹. Whole sine of a circle, the radius. Whole stalls, in mining, a certain number of stalls of which the faces are on a line with each other. [South Wales coal field.] Whole step. See step, 14. Whole tone. See *tone*¹, a. Syn. 4 and 5. Entire, Total, etc. See complete.

II. n. 1. An entire thing; a thing complete in itself; the entire or total assemblage of parts; all of a thing without defect or exception.

It was not safe to leave him [Edward II.] a Part, by which he might afterward recover the whole.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 112.

"Tis not the whole of life to live,
Nor all of death to die.
Montgomery, Oh, where shall rest be found?

But, bad though they nearly all are as wholes, his [Dryden's] plays contain passages which only the great masters have surpassed.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 59.

2. A complete system; a regular combination of parts; an organic unity.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul.
Pope, Essay on Man, i. 267.

Nature is not an aggregate of independent parts, but an organic whole.
Tyndall, Radiation, § 16.

Actual whole. See actual. By the whole, wholesale.

If the currier bought not leather by the whole of the tanner, the shoemaker might have it at a more reasonable price.
Greene, Quip for an Upstart Courtier (Harl. Misc., V. 411).

Collective, composite, constituent, constituted whole. See the adjectives. — Committee of the whole. See committee. Definitive, dissimilar, essential, formal, logical, mathematical, metaphysical, natural whole. See the adjectives. On or upon the whole, all circumstances being considered or balanced against one another; upon a review of the whole matter.

Upon the whole, I do not know but he is most fortunate who engages in the whirl through ambition, however tormenting.
Irving, Imp. Dict.

The death of Elizabeth, though on the whole it improved Bacon's prospects, was in one respect an unfortunate event for him.
Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

Physical, positive, potential whole. See the adjectives. — Syn. Total, totality, entirety, amount, aggregate, gross, sum.

whole² (hōl), adv. [< ME. hool; < whole, a. (prop. the adj. in predicate use).] Wholly; entirely.

Therfore I aske yow counseth how we may beste be governed, for I putte me all hoolly in youre ordenaunce.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 317.

The ills thou dost are whole thine own,
Thou art Principal and Instrument.
Cowley, The Mistress, The Innocent, ill.

whole-colored (hōl'kul'ord), a. All of one color; unicolorous; concolor, opposed to party-colored.

whole-footed (hōl'fūt'ed), a. [< ME. hole-foted; < whole + footed.] 1†. Web-footed.

The hole foted fowle to the flod hyȝed.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 488.

2. Heavy-footed. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] 3. Unreserved; frank; free; easy; at ease; intimate. [Colloq.]

His chief Remissions were when some of his near'st Relations were with him, or he with them, and then, as they say, he was whole-footed, but this was not often, nor long together. Roger North, quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., I. 447.

whole-hoofed (hōl'hōft), a. Having undivided hoofs; solidungulate.

whole-length (hōl'length), a. and n. I. a. 1. Extending from end to end. — 2. Of full length; exhibiting the whole figure.

John Closterman was the artist who painted the whole-length portrait of Queen Anne now in the Guildhall.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 45.

II. n. A portrait or statue exhibiting the whole figure.

wholeness (hōl'nes), n. The state of being whole, complete, entire, or sound; entireness; totality; completeness.

There never can be that actual wholeness of the world for us which there must be for the mind that renders the world one. T. H. Green, Prolegomena to Ethics, § 72.

whole-note (hōl'nōt), n. See *note*¹, 14. — Whole-note rest. See *rest*¹, 8 (b).

wholesale (hōl'sāl), n. and a. [< whole + *sale*¹.] I. n. Sale of goods by the piece or in large quantity, as distinguished from retail. — By wholesale (or, elliptically, wholesale), in the mass; in the gross, in great quantities; hence, without due discrimination or distinction.

And are those fit to correct the Church that are not fit to come into it? Besides, What makes them fly out upon the Function, and rail by wholesale? Is the Priesthood a crime, and the service of God a Disadvantage?
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 189.

II. a. 1. Buying and selling by the piece or in large quantity: as, a wholesale dealer. — 2. Pertaining to the trade by the piece or quantity: as, the wholesale price. — 3. Figuratively, in great quantities; extensive and indiscriminate: as, wholesale slaughter.

wholesale (hōl'sāl), v. t.; pret. and pp. wholesaled, ppr. wholesaling. [< wholesale, n.] To sell by wholesale or in large quantities.

wholesaler (hōl'sā-lėr), n. [< wholesale + *-er*¹.] One who sells by wholesale; a wholesale merchant.

Articles which the consumer recognizes as single the retailer keeps wrapped up in dozens, the wholesaler sends the gross, and the manufacturer supplies in packages of a hundred gross. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 176.

whole-skinned (hōl'skind), a. Having the skin unbroken; sound; uninjured.

He is whole skinn'd, has no hurt yet.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, i. 1.

whole-snipe (hōl'snīp), n. The common snipe, Gallinago media or G. cœlestis, of Europe: so called in distinction from double-snipe and half-snipe (see these words).

wholesome (hōl'sum), a. [With unorig. w, as in whole; prop., as in early mod. E., holesome, < ME. hōlsom, holsum, helsam, halsam, wholesome, salutary (not in AS.); prob. suggested by Icel. heilsamr, wholesome, salutary, < heill, = E. whole, + -samr = E. -some; see whole and -some.] 1. Healthy; whole; sound in mind or body. [Obsolescent.]

Like a mildew'd ear Blasting his wholesome brother.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 65.

The purifying influence scattered throughout the atmosphere of the household by the presence of one youthful, fresh, and thoroughly wholesome heart.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, ix.

2. Tending to promote health; favoring health; healthful; salubrious: as, wholesome air or diet; a wholesome climate.

Or well of Helsey, whose waters, because they were bytter salt, and barcyne, ye sayd prophet helyd them and made them swete and holsome.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 53.

I did commend the black oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health giving air.
Shak., L. L. L., i. 1. 235.

The soile is not very fertile, subiect to much snow, the aire holesome.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 525.

3. Contributing to health of mind or character; favorable mentally or morally; sound; salutary: as, wholesome advice; wholesome doctrines; wholesome truths.

But to find citizens ruled by good and wholesome laws that is an exceeding rare and hard thing.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

I find it wholesome to be alone the greater part of the time.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 147.

With a wholesome fear of Burke and Debrett before my eyes, I suppress the proper name of the noble maiden.
Whyte Melville, Good for Nothing, i. 1.

4†. Profitable; advantageous; hence, prosperous.

When shall thou see thy wholesome days again?
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 106.

5. Clean and neat. [Now only prov. Eng.]

For, how Negligent soever People may be at Home, yet when they come before their Betters 'tis Manners to look wholsom.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 22.

Syn. Salutary, etc. (see healthy), nourishing, nutritious, invigorating, beneficial.

wholesomely (hōl'sum-li), adv. [< ME. holsumly, holsumliche; < wholesome + *-ly*².] In a wholesome or salutary manner; healthfully.

The hende knyȝt at home holsumly slepe
With inne the comly curtynes, on the colde morne.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1752.

Consideration for his wife seemed a wholesomely pervasive feeling with him. Scribner's Mag., IV. 740.

wholesomeness (hōl'sum-nes), n. [< ME. holsumnesse; < wholesome + -ness.] 1. The quality of being wholesome or of contributing to health; salubrity.

The wholesomeness and temperature of this climate doth not onely argue the people to be answerable to this Description, but also of a perfect constitution of body.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 103.

2. Salutariness; conduciveness to mental, moral, or social health.

whole-souled (hōl'sōld), a. Noble; generous; hearty.

whole-stitch (hōl'stich), n. In lace, the simplest kind of filling, in which the threads are woven together, as in cloth.

wholly (hō'li), adv. [With unorig. w, as in whole; prop. holely or holly, < ME. holely, hoolli, holly, holli, hollyche; < whole + *-ly*².] 1. Entirely; completely; perfectly; without reserve.

Sleep hath seized me wholly. Shak., Cymbeline, II. 2. 7.

To her my life I wholly sacrifice.
Spenser, Colin Clout, l. 475.

2. Altogether; exclusively; only.

Arthur saide, "I put me holly in God and in holy cherche, and in youre gode counselle." Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 104.

A bully thinks honour consists wholly in being brave.
Steele, Tatler, No. 217.

wholth (hōlth), n. [< whole + -th; intended to explain the lit. sense of health.] Wholeness; soundness; health. [Rare.]

That "perfect diapason" which constitutes health, or wholth, and for the use or abuse of which he, as a rational being, is answerable on soul and conscience to himself, to his fellow-men, and to his Maker.
Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 125.

whom (hōm), pron. The objective case (original and dative) of who.

whomever (hōm ev'ėr), pron. The objective case of whoever.

whommle, whomble (hwom'l, hwom'bl), v. t. Dialectal forms of whemmle.

I think I see the coble whombled keel up.
Scott, Antiquary, xl.

Whommle, "to turn a trough, or any vessel, bottom upwards, so that it will drain well," used in West Virginia.
Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XIV. 55.

whomso (hōm'sō), pron. The objective case of whoso.

whomsoever (hōm'sō-ev'ėr), pron. The objective case of whosoever.

whoobub† (hō'bub), n. Another spelling of whobub.

Had not the old man come in with a whoo-bub against his daughter.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 629.

whoop¹ (hōp), v. [Properly, as formerly, hoop, the initial w being unoriginal, as in whole, etc., and the proper pron. being hōp (as given in Walker), and not hwop, which, so far as it exists, is a perverted pronunciation, prob. due to the spelling; < ME. houpen, houpen, whoupen, < OF. houper, whoop, shout; cf. houp! interj., houp là! stop! stop there! Cf. *hoop*², hubbub, whoobub. There may have been some connection with AS. wōp, outcry, weeping (mod. E. woop*), Goth. wōpjan, crow as a cock, etc. (see weep); but none with Goth. hōpōn, boast.] I. intrans. 1. To shout with a loud voice; cry out loudly, as in excitement, or in calling to some one; halloo; shout; also, to hoot, as an owl.

Bi dill that thei mette Merlin with the Dragon in his hande that com hem a geins, and as soone as he saugh hem comynge he gan to whoupe.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 373.

I whoope, I call . . . Whoope a lowde and thou shalte here hym follow his horne.
Palsgrave, p. 781.

The Gaules stood upon the bankes with distant howping, hollaing, yelling, and singing, after their manner.
Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 408.

Some times they whoop, sometimes their Stygian cries
Send them to black Santos to the blushing skies.
Quarles, Emblems, i. 10.

2. In med., to make a sonorous inspiration, as that following the paroxysm of coughing in whooping-cough.

II. trans. 1. To hoot at; insult or deride with shouts or hooting; drive or follow with shouts or outcry.

Suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shak., Cor., iv. 5. 84.

If we complain, . . .
We are mad straight, and whoop'd, and tied in fetters.
Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, iii. 2.

I should be hissed,
And whooped in hell for that ingratitude.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, ii. 1.

2. To call or signal to by a shout or whoop. — To whoop it up, to raise an outcry or disturbance; hence, to hurry or stir matters up; work in a lively, rousing manner. [Slang.]

His rival is a prominent politician, with an abundance of party workers to whoop it up for him.
The Century, XXXVIII. 158.

whoop² (hōp), n. [Early mod. E. also hoop, hoorp: see *whoop*¹, v.] 1. A whooping or hooting cry, like that of the crane; a loud call or shout; a cry designed to attract the attention of a person at a distance, or to express excitement, encouragement, enthusiasm, vengeance, or terror.

Captaine Smith told me that there are some . . . will by hallowes and hoops understand each other.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 811.

You have run them all down with Whips and hola's.
Bp. Parker, Reproof of Rehearsal Transprosed, p. 26.

With hark, and whoop, and wild halloo,
No rest Benvolio's echoes knew.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 3.

2. In med., the peculiar sonorous inspiration following the attack of coughing in whooping-cough.

whoop[1] (hūp), interj. [See whoop[1], v.] Ho! hallo!

Whoop, Jug! I love thee. Shak., Lear, i. 4. 245.

whoop[2]† (hōp), n. Same as hoop[3] for hoopoe.

To the same place came his orison - mutterer, impaletocked, or lapped up about the chin like a tufted whoop.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 21.

whooper (hū'pėr), n. One who or that which whoops; a hooper: specifically applied in ornithology to a species of swan and of crane.

whoop-hymn (hūp'him), n. A weird melody chanted by the colored fishermen of the Potomac river while hauling the seine: more fully called fishing-shore whoop-hymn.

whooping (hū'ping), n. [Verbal n. of whoop[1], v.] A crying out; clamor; howling.

Nought was heard but now and then the howle
Of some vile curre, or whooping of the owle.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 4.

whooping-cough (hū'ping-kôf), n. An acute contagious disease of childhood, from which, however, adults are not always exempt, characterized by recurrent attacks of a peculiar spasmodic cough. This consists in a series of short expirations, followed (after a seeming effort) by a long strident inspiration, the whoop, and often accompanied by vomiting; pertussis. Also spelled hooping-cough.

whooping-crane (hū'ping-krān'), n. The large white crane of North America, Grus americana, noted for its loud raucous cry. See crane[1] (with cut).

whooping-swan (hū'ping-swon'), n. The hooper or elk. See swan.

whoop-la (hōp'la), interj. [See whoop[1], v.] Whoop! hallo! Also spelled hoop-la and houp-la.

The glad voices, and 'whoop-la' to the hounds as the party galloped down the valley.
Mrs E. B. Custer, Boots and Saddles, p. 109.

whoot† (hūt), v. [Also sometimes whute; var. spelling of hoot. Cf. whew.] Same as hoot.

The man who shews his heart
Is whooted for his oddities.
Young, Night Thoughts, viii. 2 n.

whop, whap (hwop), v.; pret. and pp. whopped, whapped, ppr. whopping, whapping. [Also wop; prob. var. of quap[1], quop[1], perhaps associated with whip. Cf. wap[2].] I. trans. To beat; strike, whip. [Colloq.]

Bunch had put his boys to a famous head where they might whop the French boys, and learn all the modern languages.
Thackeray, Philip, xvii.

II. intrans. 1. To vanish suddenly. Halliwell. [North. Eng.]—2. To plump suddenly down, as on the ground; flop; turn suddenly: as, she whopped down on the floor; the fish whopped over. [U. S.]

whop, whap (hwop), n. [< ME. whappe; < whop, v. Cf. quop[1], quap[1], and wap[1].] A heavy blow. [Colloq.]

For a whappe so he whyned and whesid,
And gitt no lasshe to the lurdan was lent.
York Plays, p. 326.

whopper, whapper (hwop'ėr), n. [< whop, whap, + -er[1]. Cf. wapper.] 1. One who whops. —2. Anything uncommonly large: applied particularly to a monstrous lie. [Colloq.]

This is a whopper that 's after us.
Marryat, Frank Mildmay, xx. (Davies.)

But he hardly deserves mercy, having told whoppers.
Harper's Mag., LXXII. 213.

whopping, whapping (hwop'ing), a. [Ppr. of whop, v. Cf. wapping.] Very large; thumping: as, a whopping big trout. [Colloq.]

whore (hōr), n. [With unorig. w, as in whole, etc.; < ME. hore, a harlot (not in AS.), < Icel. hóra, adulteress, = Sw. hora = Dan. hore = D. hoer = OHG. huora, huorra, MHG. huore, G. hure (Goth. hōr, f., not found, another word, hōrs, being used); also in masc. form, Icel. horr = Goth. hōrs, adulterer; cf. AS. hór*, adultery (in comp. hórcwēn, adulteress), < Icel. hór = Sw. Dan. hor = OHG. huor, adultery; cf. MHG. berge, f., a prostitute; OBulg. kurŭva = Pol. kurwa = Lith. kurva, adulteress (perhaps < Teut.). Some compare Ir. cairim, love, cara, friend, L. cārus, dear, orig. loving (see caress), Skt. chāru, agreeable, beautiful, etc. The word was confused or homiletically associated in early ME. with ME. hore, < AS. horu (horuc) = OS. horu, horo = OFries. hore = OHG. horo, filth, dirt. By some modern writers it has been erroneously derived from hire[1], as if 'one hired,' the notion really present in the equiv. L. meretrix, a prostitute (see meretrix). The vowel in this word was orig. long, and the reg. mod. form would be hoor* (hōr), the pron. hor instead of hōr (as given by Walker beside hor) is prob. due to the confusion with the ME. hore, filth, and to the later confusion of the initial ho- with who-, as also in whole. The word, with its derivatives, is now avoided in polite speech; its survival in literature, so far as it survives, is due to the fact that it is a favorite word with Shakspere (who uses it, with its derivatives, 98 times) and is common in the authorized English version of the Bible. The word in all its forms (whoredom, etc.) is generally retained in the revised version of the Old Testament, though the American revisers recommended the substitution of harlot, as less gross; in the revised version of the New Testament harlot (with fornicator for whoremonger, etc.) is substituted.] A woman who prostitutes her body for hire; a prostitute; a harlot; a courtezan; a strumpet; hence, in abuse, any unchaste woman; an adulteress or fornicatress. [Now only in low use.]

Do not marry me to a whore. Shak., M. for M., v. 1, 521.

Hee wooed her and used her his mistresse to bee,
And offered rich presents to Mary Ambree . . .
"A mayden of England, sir, never will bee
The whore of a monarche," quoth Mary Ambree.
Mary Ambree (Child's Ballads, VII. 119).

Thou know'st my Wrongs and with what pain I wear
The Name of Whore his Preachments on me pinn'd.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 184.

whore (hōr), v.; pret. and pp. whored, ppr. whoring. [< G. huren = Sw. hora = Dan. hore; cf. D. hoereren; from the noun.] I. intrans. To prostitute one's body for hire; in general, to practise lewdness. Shak., Othello, v. 1. 116. [Low.]

II. trans. To corrupt by lewd intercourse. [Low.]

He that hath kill'd my king and whored my mother.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 64.

A Vestal ravished, or a Matron whor'd,
Are laudable Diversions to a Lord.
Congreve, tr. of Eleventh Satire of Juvenal.

whoredom (hōr'dum), n. [< ME. horedom, hordom, < Icel. hordómr = Sw. hordom = OD. hoerdom, whoredom; as whore + dom.] Prostitution of the body for hire; in general, the practice of unlawful sexual commerce. In scripture the term sometimes applied metaphorically to idolatry, the devotion of the worship of the true God for the worshiped idols.

Fame . . . is with child by whoredom (see xxxviii. 4).
Ezek. xxiii. 27.

The whole Countrie overflowth with the sinne of that kinde, and now nowell as having no lawe to restrayne whoredome, adulterie, and like wickednesse of lief.
The Company of Merchants trading to Muscovy (Ellis's Ill. [Letters, p. 79).

whore-house (hōr'hous), n. [< ME. hor-hous = OHG. MHG. huorhus, G. hurenhaus = Sw. horhus = Dan. horehus, = whore + house.] A brothel; a house of ill fame. [Low.]

whoreman† (hōr'man), n. [< ME. horeman, adulterer (cf. Sw. Dan. hor karl, adulterer); < hore, adultery, + man.] An adulterer.

The multitude of thine hore men, . . .
The bodie is hangen that he hen.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 405.

whoremaster (hōr'mas'tėr), n. [Early mod. E. hore-maister; < whore + master.] One who keeps or procures whores for others; a pimp; a procurer; hence, one who practises lewdness. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 516. [Low.]

whoremasterly (hōr'mas'tėr-li), a. [< whoremaster + -ly[1].] Having the character of a whoremaster; libidinous. [Low.]

That Greekish whoremasterly villain.
Shak., T. and C., v. 4. 7.

whoremonger (hōr'mung'gėr), n. One who has to do with whores; a fornicator. Heb. xiii. 4 (fornicator, R. V.).

whoremonging† (hōr'mung'ging), n. Fornication; whoring.

Neither have they myxede of anything elles than vyce whoremonging and other kyndes of wickednes.
J. Udall, On 2 Pet.

whore's-bird† (hōrz'bėrd), n. A low term of abuse.

They'd set some sturdy whore's-bird to meet me, and beat out ha'f a dozen of my teeth.
Plautus made English (1694), p. 99. (Davies.)

Damn you altogether for a pack of whores'-birds as you are.
Cibber, Spiritual Quixote, iv. 3. (Davies.)

whore's-egg (hōrz'eg), n. A sea urchin.

whoreson† (hōr'sun), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also horeson, horson; < whore + son.] I. n. A bastard: used generally in contempt, or in coarse familiarity, and without exactness of meaning. [Low.]

Well said, a merry whoreson, ha!
Shak., R. and J., iv. 4. 10.

Frog was a sly whoreson, the reverse of John.
Arbuthnot, Hist. John Bull.

II. a. Bastard-like; mean; scurvy: used in contempt, or in coarse familiarity, and applied to persons or things.

A whoreson cold sir, a cough, sir.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 193.

The whoreson rich Innkeeper of Doncaster her father, shewed himself a rank cuttler to send her up at this time a year, and by the carriet too.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

whorish (hōr'ish), a. [< whore + -ish[1].] Of or pertaining to whores; having the character of a whore; lewd; unchaste. Shak., T. and C., iv. 1. 63. [Low.]

Your whorish love, your drunken healths, your bouts and shouts.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, I., iv. 1.

whorishly (hōr'ish-li), adv. In a whorish or lewd manner. [Low.]

whorishness (hōr'ish-nes), n. The character of being whorish. [Low.]

whorl (hwėrl or hwôrl), n. [< late ME. whorle, contr. of whorrel*, whowhil, whowrl, cf. OE. werrel, a spindle, whirl, etc., see whirl, and cf. whorl[2].] 1. In bot., a ring of organs all from the same node; a verticil. Every complete flower is externally formed of two whorls of leaves constituting the floral envelop or perianth, and internally of two or more other whorls of organs constituting the organs of fructification. The term whorl by itself is generally applied to a circle of radiating leaves, an arrangement of more than two leaves around a common center, upon the same plan with one another. Also whirl. See cuts under Lavandula, Paris, and Veronica.

2. In conch., one of the turns of a spiral shell; a volution; a gyre. The last whorl, opposite the apex or nucleus, and including the aperture of the shell is commonly distinguished as the body whorl. See spire, n. 2 (with cut), and cuts under Cassidaria, Pleurotomaria, and Scalaria. Also whirl.

Whorls of Ammonites subcostarius.

See what a lovely shell, . . .
Made so fairly well,
With delicate spire and whorl
To augure.
Tennyson, Maud, xxiv. 1.

3. In anat.: (a) A volution or turn of the spiral cochlea of man or any mammal. See cut under ear. (b) A scroll or turn of a turbinate bone, as the ethmoturbinal or maxilloturbinal. See cut under nasal. —4. The fly of a spindle, generally made of wood, sometimes of hard stone, etc. Also thwirl and pea wheel.

Elaborately ornamented leaden whorls which were fastened at the lower end of their spindles to give them a due weight and steadiness.
S. K. Handbook Textile Fabrics, p. 2.

Whorl of the heart. Same as vortex of the heart. See vortex.

whorled (hwėrld or hwôrld), a. Furnished with whorls; verticillate. In bot., zoöl. and anat. (a) Having a whorl or whorls; verticillate; volute; turbinate; as a whorled shell of a shell, or shell of a mollusk. (b) Disposed in the form of a whorl: as, whorled leaves; whorled turns of a shell.

whorler (hwėr'lėr or hwôr'lėr), n. A local spelling of whirler, retained in some cases in the trade.

whorn (hwôrn), n. A Scotch form of horn.

They hae's cure for the nath ill, . . . whilk is ane pint of yill . . . , boild wi' sope and hartshorn draps, and coomed down the creatur's throat wi' ane whorn.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxviii.

whort (hwėrt), n. [Also whurt; a dial. var. of wort[1].] The fruit of the whortleberry, or the shrub itself.

whortle (hwėr'tl), n. [Appar. an abbr. of whortleberry.] Same as whortleberry.

Carefully spying across the moor, from behind the tuft of whortles, at first he could discover nothing.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xxxi.

whortleberry (hwėr'tl-ber'i), n.; pl. whortleberries (-iz). [Early mod. E. also wharteberry, appar. intended for wortleberry* (not found in whortleberry ME. or AS.), < AS. wyrtil, a small shrub or root (also in comp. biscop-wyrtil, commonly biscop-wyrt, bishop's-wort) (= LG. D. wortel = OHG. wurzala, MHG. G. wurzel, root) (dim. of wyrt, root), + berie, berry: see wort[1] and berry[1]. The first element, however, has long been uncertain, the word having variant forms, hurtleberry, hurtherry, hartherry, showing confusion or perhaps ult. identity with hartberry in its orig. application (AS. heorthergc, berry of the buckthorn). See hurtleberry, hartberry, hurt[2], hartberry, huckleberry.] A shrub, Vaccinium Myrtillus, or its fruit. It is a low bush with numerous angled branches, and glaucous black berries which are edible. It grows in Europe, in Siberia, and in America from Colorado to Alaska. The name is extended to many other vaccinums bearing similar fruit. See huckleberry.

> At my feet
> The whortle berries are bedew'd with spray
> Dash'd upwards by the furious waterfall > Coleridge, The Picture, or The Lover's Resolution.

Victorian whortleberry, a prostrate or creeping shrub, Wittsteinia vaccinacea, of the whortleberry family found on mountain rocks in Victoria. It is exceptional in the order for its dehiscent anthers.

whose (hōz), pron. See who and what.

whosesoever (hōz so-ev'ėr), pron. The possessive or genitive case of whosoever. John xx. 23.

whoso (hō'so), indef. rel. pron. [< ME. whoso, hwase, whoso (cf. ME. dat. hwamso, whomso); cf. AS. swā hwa swā: see who and so[1].] Whosoever; whoever.

> Quo so wylle of curtasy here,
> In this boke he may hit here.
> Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 290.
>
> Then love
> Lies in their purses, and whoso empties them
> By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.
> Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 2. 130.
>
> Like Aspis sting that closely kills,
> Or cruelly does wound whom so she wills.
> Spenser, F. Q., V., xii. 30.

whosoever (hō so-ev'ėr), pron.: poss. whosesoever, obj. whomsoever. [< ME. who so ever, hwase ever; < whoso + ever.] Whoever; whatever person; any person whatever that.

> For hem semethe that whoso evere be meke and pacyent, he is holy and profitable. Mandeville, Travels, p. 170.
>
> With whomsoever thou findest thy gods, let him not live. Gen. xxxi. 32.
>
> Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. Rev. xxii. 17.
>
> He counts it lawfull in the bookes of whomsoever to reject that which hee finds otherwise than true. Walton, Reformation in Eng., I.

whot, whotet, whottet, a. Obsolete or dialectal forms of hot[1].

whucchet, n. [See which[2].] A hutch or coffer.

whummle (hwum'l), v. and n. A dialectal form of whemmle. Scott, Rob Roy, xxii.

whunstane (hwun'stān), n. Whinstone. [Scotch.]

> A vast, unbottom'd, boundless pit,
> Fill'd fou o' lowin' brunstane,
> Whae's raging flame, an' scorching heat,
> Wad melt the hardest whun stane!
> Burns, Holy Fair.

whurt, v. and n. An obsolete spelling of whir.

whurry, v. and n. An obsolete variant of hurry.

whurt, n. See whort.

whuskey (hwus'ki), n. A Scotch form of whisky[2].

why[1] (hwī), adv. and conj. [Early mod. E. whie; < ME. why, whi, hwi, wi (also in the phrase for why), < AS. hwi, hwy, hwig = OS. hwi = OHG. hwiu, wiu, hiu = Icel. hvi = Sw., Dan. hvi = Goth. hwe, why, for what (sc. reason); instr. case of AS. hwā, Goth. hwas, etc., who: see who, and cf. how[1].] I. interrog. adv. For what cause, reason, or purpose? wherefore?

> Turn ye, turn ye, . . . for whu will ye die?
> Ezek. xxxiii. 11.
>
> Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
> Prithee, why so pale
> Will, when looking well can't move her,
> Looking ill prevail?
> Prithee, why so pale?
> Sir John Suckling, Why so Pale?

Why so? for what reason? wherefore?

> And why so, my lord? Shak., W. T., II. i. 1.

II. rel. conj. For which reason or cause; on account of which; for what or which; also, as compound relative, the thing or reason for or on account of which.

> What I said so then I will declare at large now.
> Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 73.
>
> Ere. My sword is drawn.
> Ant. Then let it do at once
> The thing why thou hast drawn it.
> Shak., A. and C., iv. 14. 85.
>
> I owe you all my life so basely, sir, you are armed,
> And many, when they see your sword out and know why,
> Must follow your adventure. Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4.
>
> I am of late
> Shut from the world; and why it should be thus
> Is all I wish to know.
> Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iv. 4.
>
> I was dispatch'd for their defence and guard;
> And listen why, for I will tell you now.
> Milton, Comus, l. 43.
>
> Clearer it grew than winter sky
> That Nature still had reasons why
> Lowell, The Nomades.

Why, like other words of the same class, is occasionally used as a noun.

> Cursed were he that had none other why to believe than that I so say.
> Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 52.
>
> There 'tis when a man will be ignorantly officious, do services and not know his why. B. Jonson, Epicœne, ii. 2.
>
> In your Fancy carry along with you the When and the Why many of these things were spoken.
> R. Milward, Ded. to Selden's Table Talk.

For why (AS. for hwī). See for. The cause why, the reason why, the cause or reason on account of which something is or is to be done.

> The cause wha has boughtres made him dronken, and for to ly by him, wa this: because thei sawghe no man aboute hem but only here Fadre.
> Mandeville, Travels, p. 101.

The why and wherefore, the reason.

why[1] (hwī or wī), interj. 1. An emphatic or often expletive use of the adverb.

> A Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandam, having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Shak., T. G. of V., II. 3. 13.
>
> Why, this it is that spoils all our brave bloods.
> B. Jonson, Volpone, ii. 1.
>
> May. Where is your mistress, villain? when went she abroad?
> Fren. Abroad, sir? why, as soon as she was up, sir.
> Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.
>
> If her chill heart I cannot move,
> Why, I'll enjoy the very love.
> Cowley, The Request.
>
> Why, sure the girl's beside herself!
> Goldsmith, Epil. spoken by Mrs. Bulkley and Miss Catley.
>
> The while he heard, the Book man drew
> A length of make-believing face, . . .
> "Why, you shall sit in Ramsay's place."
> Whittier, Tent on the Beach.

2. Used as a call or an exclamation.

> Why, how now, Claudio! whence comes this restraint?
> Shak., M. for M., I. 2. 128.

Why, so, an expression of consent or unwilling acquiescence.

> Why, so! go all which way it will!
> Shak., Rich. II., II. 2. 67.

why[2] (hwī), n. A dialectal form of quey.

whyd, n. See whid[2].

whydah, whydah-bird. See whidah, whidah-bird.

whylet, n. and conj. An obsolete spelling of while.

whylearet, adv. A spelling of whilere.

whylenest, n. See whilenes.

whylest, adv. An obsolete spelling of whilst.

whylom, whylomet, adv. Obsolete spellings of whilom.

why-not (hwī'not'), n. [< why not? a formula often used in captious questions. Cf. what-not, n.] Any sudden or unexpected event or turn; a dilemma.

> When the church
> Was taken with a Why not? in the lurch.
> S. Butler, On Philip Nyes Thanksgiving.
>
> This game . . . was like to have been lost with a why-not.
> Sir J. Harington, in Nugæ Antiq. (ed. Park), II. 144.

Now, dame Selby, I have you at a whynot, or I never had lackardees. Sir Charles Grandison, IV. iv.

Whytt's disease. Tubercular meningitis, acute hydrocephalus.

wi' (wi), prep. A dialectal (Scotch) abbreviation of with[1].

wibble (wib'l), n. [A corrupt form of wimble.] A wimble. Tufts's Glossary of Thieves' Jargon (1798).

wicchet, n. An old spelling of witch.

wich (wich), n. See wick[4].

wichet, n. A Middle English form of witch.

wick[1] (wik), n. [Formerly and dial. also weck; < ME. wicke, weke, weyke, weke, < AS. weoca (for wēoca*), a wick (also in comp. candel-weoce, candle wick), = OD. wieke, a wick, = MLG. weke, a tike, LG. weke, wieke, lint for wounds, a wick, = OHG. wioh, MHG. wieche, wick, G. dial. (Bav.) wiechel, bunch of flax, = Sw. veke, a wick, = Dan. veiet, a wick, = Norw. vik, a skein of thread, also a bond; prob. ult. from the verb represented by AS. wīcan (pp. wicen), yield, give way: see weak.] A number of threads of cotton or some spongy substance loosely twisted together or braided, which by capillary action draws up the oil in lamps or the melted tallow or wax in candles in small successive portions to be burned; also, a piece of woven fabric used for the same purpose.

> The wicke and the warme fuyr wol make a fayr flaumbe.
> Piers Plowman (C), xx. 226.
>
> There lives within the very flame of love
> A kind of wick or snuff that will abate it.
> Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 124.
>
> The wick grew long and black, and cabbaged at the end.
> Irving, Bracebridge Hall, p. 93.

wick[2] (wik), n. [Also in comp. -wick, and assibilated -wich; also wike; < ME. wike, wyke, wic, < AS. wic, a town, village, dwelling, street, camp, quarter, = OS. wik = OFries. wik = D. wijk, quarter, parish, retreat, refuge, = MLG. wik, LG. wike, wik = OHG. wih (wihh-), a place, locality, MHG. wich = Goth. weihs, village, < L. vicus, village, street, quarter, = Gr. οἶκος, house, = Skt. veça, house, yard. The word enters, as -wick or -wich, into many place-names (being confused in some with wick[3] and wick[4], wich). From the L. vicus are ult. E. vicar, vicarage, vicinity, etc., vill, villa, village, villain, etc., and -ville in place-names; from the Gr. οἶκος are ult. economy, ecumenical, etc., the radical element in diocese, parish, and many scientific terms in eco-, oeco-, -ecious, etc.] 1. A town; village; a common element in place-names, as in Berwick (AS. Berewic), Warwick (AS. Wæreweic), Greenwich AS. Grenewic, Grēnawic), Sandwich (AS. Sandwic).

> Candytherry, that noble wyke. Rel. Antiq., II. 93.

2. A district: occurring in composition, as in bailiwick, constablewick, sheriffwick, shirewick.

wick[3] (wik), n. [Also in comp. assibilated -wich; = MLG. wik a bay; < Icel. vik, a small creek, inlet, bay. Cf. viking and wicking. Cf. also wick[2].] A creek, inlet, or bay. Scott, Pirate, xix.

wick[4] (wik), n. [Also wich (formerly wych); appar. a particular use of wick[2] or wick[3].] 1. A salt-spring; a brine-pit.

> The House in which the Salt is boiled is called the Wych-house, whence may be guessed what Wych signifies, and why all those Towns where there are Salt Springs, and Salt made are called by the name of Wych viz. Nampt-wych, Northwich, Middle*wich*, Droit*wich*.
> Ray, Eng. Words (1691), p. 207.

2. A small dairy house. Halliwell (under wich). [Prov. Eng.]

> Candle wright or candle wick, street took that name (as may be supposed) of the chandlers, &c. or otherwise wike, which is the place where they use to worke them. As scalding wike by the stockes market, was called of the powlters scalding and dressing their poultry there, and in divers countries dayrie houses, or cottages wherein they make butter and cheese, are usually called wickes.
> London (ed. 1580), p. 171. (Nares.) wick[5] (wik), v. t. [Appar. ult. < AS. wīcan, bend, yield: see wick[1].] To strike (a stone) in an oblique direction: a term in curling.—To wick a bore. See bore[4].

wick[6] (wik), n. [Also weck; < ME. wike, wyke, < Icel. vik, corner (munn-vik, the corners of the mouth).] A corner; especially, one of the corners of the mouth. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

> The frothe foined of his mouth vnfayre bi the wykes.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1572.

wick[7], a. [ME. wick, wikke, earlier wicke, wikke, wylle, wicche, bad, wicked; orig. a noun, < AS. wicca, wizard, wicce, witch: see witch[1] and wicked.] 1. Bad; wicked; false: with reference to persons.

> What I knew al here cast of here wyc wille,
> I-no mi3t suffer for sorwe & for reuthe.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4052.

2. Bad; wretched; vile: with reference to things.

> With poure mete, and feble drink,
> And with, swithe wikke clothes.
> Havelok (E. E. T. S.), l. 2458.
>
> Wiste appetyt cometh ay before sekenesse.
> Chaucer, Fortune, l. 55.

3. Unfavorable; inauspicious; baneful.

> For thilke ground that bereth the wedes wykke
> Bereth eke thise holsom herbes, and ful ofte,
> Nexte the foule nette, rough and thikke,
> The fliz waxeth swote and smothe and softe.
> Chaucer, Troilus, i. 946.

wick[8] (wik), a. [A dial. var. of whick for quick. Cf. wicked[2].] Quick; alive. [Prov. Eng.]

> There be good chaps there [at the Infirmary] to a man with: he's wick, whate'er they may be about cutting him up at after. Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, viii.

wicked[1] (wik'ed), a. and n. [< ME. wicked, wikked, wikkid, wykked, wykkyd, evil, bad, < wick, wicke, wikke, bad, + -ed[2], as if pp. of a verb wikken*, render evil or witch-like: see wick[7] and witch[1].] I. a. 1. Evil in principle or practice; deviating from the divine or the moral law; addicted to vice; depraved; vicious; sinful; immoral; bad; wrong; iniquitous: a word of comprehensive signification, including everything that is contrary to the moral law, and applied both to persons and to their acts; as, a wicked man; a wicked deed; wicked ways; wicked lives; a wicked heart; wicked designs; wicked works.

That ben fulle wykked Sarrazines and cruelle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 112

To see this would deter a doubtful man
From mischievous intents, much more the practice
Of what is wicked. Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iv. 1

Are men less ashamed of being wicked than absurd?
Jon Bee Essay on Samuel Foote.

To do an injury openly is, in his estimation, as wicked as to do it secretly, and far less profitable Macaulay, Machiavelli.

†2. Vile; baneful; pernicious; noxious.

That wynde away the wicked ayer may hurle
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 175.

Fairе Amorett must dwell in wicked chaines.
Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 24

As wicked dew as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen
Drop on you both. Shak., Tempest, I. 2. 321.

†3. Troublesome; difficult; hard; painful; unfavorable; disagreeable.

Hony is the more swete yif mowthes have first tasted an oures that ben wykyd. Chaucer, Boethius, iii. meter 1

The wallis in werre wikked to assaile
With depe dikes and derke doubull of water.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1565.

But this lande is full wicked to be wrought,
To hardde in hete, and over softe in weete
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 49

I pray, what a good, sir, for a wicked tooth?
Middleton (and others), The Widow, iv. 1.

4. Mischievous; prone or disposed to mischief, often good-natured mischief; roguish: as, a wicked urchin. [Colloq.]

Pen looked uncommonly wicked
Thackeray, Pendennis, xxvii.

The wicked one, the devil. Wicked Bible. See Bible.

—Syn. 1. Illegal, Immoral etc. (see criminal), Heinous, Infamous, etc. (see atrocious), unrighteous, profane, ungodly, godless, impious, unprincipled, vile, abandoned, profligate.

II.† n. sing. and pl. A wicked person; one who is or those who are wicked.

Then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume. 2 Thes. ii. 8

There lay his body unburied all that Friday and the morrow till afternoone, none daring to deliver his body to the sepulture, his head there wicked took and, nayling thereon his hoode, they fixe it on a pole, and set it on London Bridge. Stowe, Annals (1605), p. 468 wicked[2] (wik'ed), a. [< wicked[3] + -ed[2], here merely an adj. extension.] Quick; active. [Prov. Eng.]

Another Irish woman of diminutive stature complacently described herself to a lady hiring her services as "small but wicked." A. S. Palmer, Folk Etym., Int., p. xxii wickedly (wik'ed-li), adv. [< ME. wikkedly, wickedli, wikkedliche, < wicked[1] + -ly[2].] In a wicked manner.

Ro keppit hym full kantly, kobbit with hym sore,
Woundit hym wickedly in hir wode angur.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 11025

I have sinned, and I have done wickedly.
2 Sam. xxiv. 17

wickedness (wik'ed-nes), n. [< ME. wikkednesse; < wicked + -ness. Cf. ME. wickenes, wikenesse, wikenes, < wicke (see wick[7]) + -ness.] 1. Wicked character, quality, or disposition; depravity or corruption of heart; evil disposition; sinfulness: as, the wickedness of a man or of an action.

And al the wikkednesse in this worlde that man myzte wyrche or thynke
Ne is no more to the mercye of God than in the see a glede
Piers Ploughman (B), v. 291

And after thi mercies that ben fele,
Lord, fordo my wickydnesse.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 251.

Goodness belongs to the Gods, Piety to Men, Revenge and Wickedness to the Devils. Howell, Letters, ii. 11.

2. Wicked conduct; evil practices; active immorality; vice; crime; sin.

'Tis not good that children should know any wickedness.
Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 194

There is a method in man's wickedness,
It grows up by degrees. Beau. and Fl.

†3. A wicked thing or act; an act of iniquity.

What wickedness is this that is done among you?
Judges xx. 12.

I'll never care what wickedness I do
If this man come to good.
Shak., Lear, iii. 7. 99.

4. Figuratively, the wicked.

Those tents thou sawest so pleasant were the tents
Of wickedness. Milton, P. L., xi. 667.

—Syn. Unrighteousness, villainy, rascality, knavery, atrocity, iniquity, enormity. See references under wicked.

wicken (wik'n), n. [Appar. connected with wick[1], wicker[1], witch-elm, etc.; but early forms have not been found.] The mountain-ash or rowan-tree, Pyrus Aucuparia. Also wicky.

wicken-tree (wik'n-trē), n. Same as wicken.

wicker[1] (wik'ėr), n. and a. [Also dial. wigger; < ME. wiker, wykyr*; cf. Sw. dial. vikker, vekker, vekare, the sweet bay-leaved willow, = Dan. dial. vipper, vegre, also vogr, a pliant rod, withy (vogre kurv, vegre kurv, wicker-basket), vægger, vægger, a willow; cf. Bav. dial. wecket, bunch of tow on a distaff, G. weckel, a roll; ult. < AS. wican, etc., bend, yield: see wick[1] and weak.] I. n. 1. A small pliant twig; an osier; a withe.

Which hoops are knit as with wickers
Weed, Athenæ Oxon., I. (Richardson.)

For want of a pannier, spit your fish by the gills on a small wicker or such like.
Lauson (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 107).

Aye wavering like the willow-wicker,
Twee'n good and ill Burns, On Life.

2. Wickerwork in general; hence, an object made of this material, as a basket.

Then quick did dress
His half milk up for cheese and in a press
Of wicker pressed it. Chapman, Odyssey, ix. 551

Each (maiden) having a white wicker, overlaymn'd
With Apulia's tender youngelings. Acolastus Fullyonius, i.

3. A twig or branch used as a mark: same as withe[3].

II. a. 1. Consisting of wicker; especially, made of plaited twigs or osiers; also, covered with wickerwork: as, a wicker basket; a wicker chair.

Robin Hood swam to a bush of broome,
The liver to a wigger wand
Robin Hood and the Curtall Fryer (Child's Ballads, V. 274)

The lady was placed in a large wicker chair, and her feet wrapped up in flannel, supported by cushions
Steele, Tatler, No. 260.

The doll, seated in her little wicker carriage
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 40.

2. Made of flexible strips of shaved wood, rattan, or the like: as, wicker furniture; a wicker chair.

wicker[1] (wik'ėr), v. t. [< wicker[1], n.] To cover or fit with wickers or osiers; inclose in wicker work.

He looks like a musty bottle new wickered
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, I. 1.

Thir ships of light timber, Wicker with Oxen betweene, and cover'd over with Leather, serv'd not therefore to transport them fast. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

wicker[2] (wik'ėr), v. [Cf. wicker[1].] I. intrans. To twist, from being too tightly drawn. Child's Ballads, Gloss.

The nurice she knet the knot
And O she knet it sicker
The ladie did gie it a twig (twitch),
Till it began to wicker.
Lord of Warristoun (Child's Ballads, III. 311).

II. trans. To twist (a thread) overmuch. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

wickered (wik'ėrd), a. [< wicker[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Made of wicker. — 2. Covered with wickerwork.

wickerwork (wik'ėr-wėrk), n. Basketwork of any sort, anything plaited, woven, or wattled of flexible and tough materials, as osier, rattan, and shaved strips of wood.

wicket (wik'et), n. [< ME. wicket, wiket, wyket, viket, < MD. wicket, also wincket, < OF. wiket, wisket, wiquet, guichet*, F. guichet (Walloon wichet = Pr. guinquet, a wicket; a dim. form, prob. ult. from the verb seen in AS. wican, etc., give way: see weak[1], weak.] 1. A small gate or doorway, especially a small door or gate forming part of a larger one.

When the burnes of the burgh were broght vpon slepe
He (a cosi) warpit vp a wicket was hom with oute
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 11023

The clerke
That Januarie has shit the smale wyket
By which into his gardyn oft he wente
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 874

They stocked them w' but a wee wicket,
And Lammikin crap in Lammikin (Child's Ballads, III. 306).

"Say, Laste thou, Wilfrid?" Redmond cried
"Ooh that wicket by thy side
Scott, Rokeby, v. 9.

2†. A hole through which to communicate, or to view what passes without; a window, lookout, loophole, or the like.

They have made carres to barre the doors or use weapon and they have made wickets in every quarter of the house to shoote out att, bothe with bowes and with hand gonnes. Paston Letters, I. 23.

3. A small gate by which the chamber of a canal-lock is emptied; also, a gate in the chute of a water-wheel, designed to regulate the amount of water passing to the wheel. — 4. A half-high door. E. H. Knight. — 5†. A hole or opening.

Wicketes two or three thou make hem oouthe,
That yf a wicked wormе oon holes mouthe Issiege or stoppe an other open be,
And from the wicked wormе thus save thi bee.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 39.

6. In cricket, (a) The object at which the bowler aims, and before which, but a little on one side, the batsman stands. It consists of three stumps, having two bails lying in grooves along their tops. See cricket[2] (with diagram).

The wicket was formerly two straight thin battons called stumps twenty two inches high, which were fixed into the ground perpendicularly six inches apart, and over the top of both was laid a small round piece of wood called the bail Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 175.

A desperate fight . . . between the drovers and the farmers with their whips and the boys with cricket-bats and wickets. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, I. 4.

(b) A batsman's tenure of his wicket. If the batting side pass their opponents' full score with (say) six players to be put out, they are said to win "by six wickets" — a colloquial abbreviation for "with six wickets to go down." (c) The ground on which the wickets are set: as, play was begun with an excellent wicket. — 7. In coal mining. See wicket-work.

wicket-door (wik'et-dor), n. A wicket.

Through the low wicket door they glide.
Scott, Rokeby, v. 29.

wicket-gate (wik'et-gāt), n. A small gate; a wicket.

I am going to yonder wicket gate before me
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

wicket-keeper (wik'et-kē'pėr), n. In cricket, the player belonging to the fielding side who stands immediately behind the wicket to stop such balls as pass it. See diagram under cricket[2].

"I'm your man," said he. "Wicket keeper, cover-point, slip, or long-stop — you bowl the twisters, I'll do the fielding for you." Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. xiii.

wicket-work (wik'et-wėrk), n. In coal-mining, a variety of pillar and stall work sometimes adopted in the North Wales coal-field. The headings or stalls (called wicket-ts) are sometimes as much as 24 yards wide, and the pillars as much as 16. Two roadways are generally carried up each wicket.

wicking (wik'ing), n. [< wick[1] + -ing[1].] The material of which wicks are made, as in long pieces which can be cut at pleasure.

Generally the traces of musk cattle are in mass. like balls all melted together. It struck me it would make a good wicking for Esquimaux lamps
C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition (1870), p. 161.

wickiup, wicky-up (wik'i-up), n. [Amer. Ind.] An American Indian house or hut; especially, a rude hut, as of brushwood, such as is built by the Apaches and other low tribes: in distinction from the tepee of skins stretched on stacked lodge-poles. Wickiups are built on the spot as required, and are not moved.

After an hour's riding to the south we came upon old Indian wicky ups. Amer. Antiquarian, XII. 205 wick-trimmer (wik'trim'ėr), n. A pair of scissors or shears for trimming wicks; a pair of snuffers.

Wickliffite, n. and a. See Wycliffite.

wicky (wik'i), n.; pl. wickies (-iz). [Cf. wicken.] 1 Same as wicken. — 2. Same as sheep-laurel.

wicky-up, n. See wickiup.

Wicliffite, n. and a. See Wycliffite.

wicopy (wik'o-pi), n. [Also wiccup, wicup, wickup; of Amer. Ind. origin.] 1. The leatherwood, Dirca palustris. — 2. One of the willow herbs, as Epilobium angustifolium, E. hirsutum, and perhaps other species: distinguished as Indian or herb wicopy. See willow herb.

wid (wid), prep. An obsolete or dialectal form of with.

Sifter hole wuhn same ez a tray
Ef you fill it wid moss en daub it wid clay
J. C. Harris, Uncle Remus, xxii.

widbin (wid'bin), n. [A dial. form of woodbine.] 1. The woodbine, Lonicera Periclymenum. [Scotch.]

The rawn tree is (and the widdhin Round the witches' cot com's in Gregor, Folk-lore N. E. [Scotland. (Britten and Holland.)

2. The dogwood, Cornus sanguinea. [Prov. Eng.] Widbin pear-tree, the whitebeam, Pyrus Aria. [Prov. Eng.]

widdershins† (wid'ėr-shinz), adv. See withershins.

widdowt, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of widow[1].

widdy[1], widdie (wid'i), n. Dialectal forms of withy, 3.

widdy[2] (wid'i), n. A dialectal form of widow[1].

wide (wid), a. and n. [< ME. wid, wyd, < AS. wid = OS. wid = OFries. wid = D. wijd = LG. wied = OHG. MHG. wit, G. weit = Icel. vithr = Sw. Dan. vid, wide; root unknown.] I. a. 1. Having relatively great or considerable extension from side to side; broad: as, wide cloth; a wide hall: opposed to narrow.

Wide is the gate that leadeth to destruction
Mat. vii. 13

Shallow brookes and rivers wide. Milton, L'Allegro, l. 76

And wounds appear'd so wide as if the grave did gape
To swallow both at once Drayton, Polyolbion, i. 42

2. Having (a certain or specified) extension as measured from side to side; having (a specified) width or breadth: as, cloth a yard wide.

'Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but 'tis enough Shak., R. and J., III. i. 100

The city of Canea, capital of the western province of Candia, is situated at the east corner of a bay about fifteen miles wide Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 242.

3. Of great horizontal extent; spacious; extensive; vast; great: as, the wide ocean.

Comit castelles and couth and cuntre wide
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 5053.

For nothing this wide universe I call Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all Shak., Sonnets, cix.

Those perpetual exploits abroad won him wide fame
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

Within the cave
He left me, giant Polyphemus' dark cave;
A dungeon wide and horrible
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, iii.

The wide waste produced by the outbreak [of the Reformation] is forgotten Macaulay, Hallam.

4. Embracing many subjects, looking at a question from many points of view; applicable to many cases: as, a person of wide culture.

States have always been best governed by men who have taken a wide view of public affairs and who have rather a general acquaintance with many sciences than a perfect mastery of one Macaulay, Athenian Orators.

5. Capacious; bulging; loose; voluminous.

I huddle wonder of his wordes and of his wide clothes;
For in his bosome he bar a thyng that he blissed ofte Piers Ploughman (B), xvi. 253.

Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in Shak., M. N. D., II. i. 256.

6. Distended; expanded; spread apart; hence, open.

Against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isa. lvii. 4

Looking wistfully with wide blue eyes
Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

7. Apart or remote from a specified point; distant; hence, remote from the direct line or object aimed at, too far or too much to one side; deviating; errant; wild: as, a wide arrow in archery; a wide ball in cricket.

Many of the fathers were far wide from the understanding of this place Raleigh.

For Judæ both religions propose to go to the place [the river Jordan] where Christ was baptized, but happen to differ in their opinions and are three or four miles wide of each other Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 32.

I make the wide conjectures concerning Egypt, and her shepherd kings Lamb, Old and New Schoolmaster.

But all this, though not unconnected with our general theme, is wide of our immediate purpose
De Quincey, Style, iv.

8†. Amiss; unfortunate; ill; bad; hence, of little avail; useless.

It would be wide with the best of us if the eye of God should look backward to our former estate
Bp. Hall, Contemplations, xiii. 1.

9. In phonetics, uttered with a comparatively relaxed or expanded condition of the walls of the buccal cavity, said by some phonetists of certain vowels, as e, i, o, u, when compared with a, e, ä, ē. To cut a wide swath. See swath[1]. To give a wide berth to. See berth[1]. Wide-angle lens. See lens. Syn. Wide, Broad spacious, large, ample. Wide and broad may be synonymous, but broad is generally the larger and more emphatic: a wide river is not thought of as so far across as a broad river. Wide is sometimes more applicable to that which is to be passed through, as a wide mouth or aperture. It is another way of stating this fact to say that wide has more in mind than broad the limiting sides of the thing. Wide is also more generally applicable to that of which the length is much greater than the width but not to the exclusion of broad. Each may in a secondary sense be used of length and breadth, as, broad acres; a wide domain.

II. n. 1. Wideness; breadth; extent. [Rare.]

Emptiness and the waste wide
Of that abyss Tennyson, Two Voices.

2. In cricket, a ball that goes wide of the wicket, and counts one against the side that is bowling.

wide (wid), adv. [< ME. wide, wyde, < AS. wid (= G. weit), widely, < wid, wide: see wide, a.]

1. To a distance; afar; widely; a long way; abroad; extensively.

He habbe walke wide
Bi the se side.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 27.

The wounded coveys, reeling, scatter wide.
Burns, Brigs of Ayr.

Let Fame from brazen lips blow wide
Her chosen names. Whittier, My Namesake.

2. Away or to one side of the mark, aim, purpose, or direct line; hence, astray.

Nay, Corvo, . . . there walke you somewhat wide for ther you defende your owne righte for your temporal sou[illegible]
Sir T. More, Works (ed. 1557), II. 1151.

She him obayd and turnd a little wyde.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 5.

I understand you not, you hurt not me,
Your anger flies so wide.
Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 2.

His arrows fell exceedingly wide of each other.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 130.

3†. Round about; in the neighborhood around.

Old Melibœ is slaine, and him beside His aged wife, with many others wide Spenser, F. Q., VI. xi. 18.

Set wide. See set[1]. To run wide. See run[1].

widet (wid), v. t. [< ME. widen; < wide, a.] To make wide; spread or set far apart.

And wide hem [quinces] so that though the wynd hem shake, Noo droupe of hem until an other take
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 94.

wide-awake (wid'a-wāk'), a. and n. I. a. On the alert; keen; sharp; knowing. [Colloq.]

Our governor's a wide-awake he is. I'll never say nothin' agin him nor no man, but he knows what 's o'clock, he does, uncommon Dickens, Sketches, Tales, x. 2.

II. n. A soft felt hat: a name given about 1850.

She was one of the first who appeared in the Park in a low-crowned hat . . . a wide awake H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, xliii.

Some one . . . would with pleasure exchange on the spot his reproachable black coat and glistening hat for a shabby shooting-jacket and a wide awake with a cast of flies round it Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 622.

wide-awakeness (wid'a-wāk'nes), n. The character or state of being wide-awake or sharp. [Colloq.]

wide-chapped (wid'chapt), a. Having a wide mouth; wide-mouthed.

The wide-chapped rascal Shak., Tempest, I. i. 60.

wide-gab (wid'gab), n. The angler or fishing-frog, Lophius piscatorius. Also wide-gap, wide-gape, wide-gut. See cut under angler.

widely (wid'li), adv. 1. In or to a wide degree or extent; extensively; far and wide: as, a man who is widely known. 2. Very much; very; greatly; extremely: as, two widely different accounts of an affair. — 3. So as to leave a wide space; at a distance. [Rare.]

We passed Selinus, . . .
And widely shun the Lilybæan strand.
Dryden, Æneid, iii. 927.

wide-mouthed (wid'mouthd'), a. Having a wide mouth.

The little wide-mouthed heads upon the spout
Tennyson, Godiva.

Wide-mouthed salmon, the Scopelidæ.

widen[1] (wi'dn), v. [< wide, a., + -en[2].] I. trans. 1. To make wide or wider; extend in breadth; expand: as, to widen a street.

I speak not these things to widen our differences or increase our animosities, they are too large and too great already Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

The thoughts of men are widen'd with the process of the suns Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

He widened knowledge and escaped the praise
Lowell, Jeffries Wyman.

2. To throw open.

So now the gates are ope
Us for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers Shak., Cor., I. 4. 44.

3. In knitting, to make larger by increasing the number of stitches; opposed to narrow.

II. intrans. 1. To grow wide or wider; enlarge; extend itself; expand; broaden.

Arches widen and long aisles extend.
Pope, Temple of Fame, l. 205.

Ere Sigurd widens the day-light.
William Morris, Sigurd, ii.

2. In knitting, to increase the number of stitches: as, to widen at the third row.

widen[2†], adv. [ME., also widene, wydene (MHG. witene, wîten); < wide, a.] Widely; wide.

In habite of an hermite vn holy of werkes
Wende I wydene in this world wondres to here.
Piers Plowman (A), Prol., l. 4.

widener (wid'nėr), n. One who or that which widens, specifically, a form of boring-bit or drill so shaped as to form a hole of greater diameter than itself: same as broach, 12.

wideness (wid'nes), n. [< ME. wydenesse; < wide, a., + -ness.] The state or character of being wide; breadth; width.

This Temple is 64 Cubytes of wydeness, and als mauge in lengthe. Mandeville, Travels, p. 64.

wide-spread (wid'spred), a. Diffused or spread to a great distance; extending far and wide; being general.

To stand upon such elevated ground as to be enabled to take a larger view of the wide-spread and infinitely diversified constitution of men and affairs in a large society. Brougham.

There was a very wide-spread desire to hear him, and applications for lectures flowed in from all parts of the kingdom O. W. Holmes, Emerson, vii.

wide-stretched (wid'strecht), a. Large; extensive.

Wide stretched honours that pertain . . .
Unto the crown of France
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 4. 82.

wide-watered (wid'wâ'tėrd), a. Traversed or bordered by wide waters.

I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-watered shore,
Swinging low with sullen roar.
Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 75.

As when a lion rushing from his den
Amidst the plain of some wide-watered fen
Pope, Iliad, xv. 761.

wide-wheret (wid'hwar), adv. [< ME. wydewher, wydewhere (also wydewhere); < wide, adv., + where[1].] Far and wide; everywhere; in places far apart.

Wide where is wist
How that ther is diversite requered
Bytwexen thynges lyke, as I have lered
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 404.

Her dochter was stown awa frae her,
She sought for her wide-whare Rosmer Hafmand (Child's Ballads, I. 253).

wide-work (wid'werk), n. In coal-mining, a method of working coal, now nearly obsolete, but formerly followed in the South Yorkshire coal-fields. It was one of the many varieties of pillar-and-stall work.

widgeon, wigeon (wij'on), n. [Early mod. E. also wigeon, wygeon; prob. < ME. wigeon,* < OF. vigeon, found, with the variants vingeon, gingeon, as a name of the canard siffleur, whistling duck, or widgeon, formerly Anas flatularis, = It. vipone, a small crane, < L. vipio(n-), a kind of small crane. Cf. E. pigeon, alt. < L. pipio(n-).] 1. A duck of the genus Mareca, belonging to the subfamily Anatinæ. The European widgeon is M. penelope, the American is a distinct species, M. americana, each is a common wild-fowl of its own country, of the migrators and other habits common to the Anatinæ, breeding mostly in high or even hyperborean regions, and flocking in more temperate latitudes during the winter. They are also known as baldpates, from the white on the top of the head, whistler or whistling duck, whew, whewer, whim, from their cries, and by many local names.

Male in Winter Plumage (Mareca penelope).

2. By extension, some or any wild duck, except the mallard: usually with a qualifying term.

In Shropshire every species of wild duck, with the exception of Anas boschas, is called wigeon.
C. Swainson, Brit. Birds (1885), p. 156.

(a) The gadwall, Chaulelasmus streperus more fully called gray widgeon. See cut under Chaulelasmus. [Southern Italy.] (b) The pintail, Dafila acuta more fully, gray or late-tailed widgeon, or sea-widgeon. See cut under Dafila. [Local, U. S.] (c) The wood-duck, Aix sponsa, more fully, wood-widgeon. See cut under wood-duck. [Connecticut.] (d) The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. See cut under Erismatura. [Massachusetts.]

3†. A fool: alluding to the supposed stupidity of the widgeon. Compare goose, gudgeon[1].

If you give any credit to this juggling rascal, you are worse than simple widgeons, and will be drawn into the net by this decoy-duck, this tame cheater.
Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, iv. 2.

The apostles of this false religion,
Like Mahomet's, were ass and widgeon.
S. Butler, Hudibras, pt. i., ded.

4. A small teasing fly; a midge. Encye. Brit., XXIV. 561. [Local, Eng.] — American widgeon, Anas or Mareca americana, which differs specifically from the common widgeon of Europe, M. penelope; the green-headed widgeon. Also called locally bald-faced widgeon, southern widgeon, California widgeon, bald-crown, baldpate, bald-face, baldhead, whistler, preacher, whewt-duck, and smoking-duck. See cut above. — Black widgeon. Same as carre widgeon. (Devonshire, Eng.) — Bull-headed widgeon, the pochard, Fuligula ferina. — Carre widgeon, the tufted duck, Fuligula cristata. Also called black carre. Hants. See cut under tufted. [Somerset, Eng.] — Pied widgeon. (a) Same as pargansey. (b) The golden-eyed duck, Clangula glaucion. (c) The male goosander, Mergus merganser. — Popping widgeon. See popl. — Red-headed widgeon. Same as redhead, 2. — Snuff-headed widgeon, the pochard or redhead. Compare rare headed and weasel-headed. — White widgeon, the white merganser, nun, or smew, Mergellus albellus. See cut under smew. [Devonshire, Eng.]

widgeon-coot (wij'on-kōt), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. See cut under Erismatura. [Massachusetts.]

widgeon-grass (wij'on-gras), n. The grass-wrack, Zostera marina. Britten and Holland. [Local, Ireland.]

Widmannstättian (wid-man-stet'i-an), a. Pertaining to Aloys Beck von Widmannstatt, of Vienna (1753–1849). — Widmannstättian figures, the name given to certain peculiar markings seen on the polished surfaces of many meteoric irons (siderolites) when these have been acted on by an acid. They were first noticed by Widmannstatt in 1808, on the Agram meteorite. The general appearance of these markings may be learned from the annexed figure, which is a copy of a photograph, of natural size, of a part of an etched section of the Lenarto county (South Carolina) meteoric iron. The Widmannstättian figures are sections of planes of cleavage or of crystalline growth, along which segregation, or chemical change of some sort, has taken place, and whose form and position with reference to each other are in accordance with the laws governing the development of crystalline substances belonging to the isometric system. Reichenbach divided these figures into what he called a trias (more properly a triad) — namely, kamacite (Balkeneisen), taenite (Bandeisen), and plessite (Füll-eisen) — the first consisting so far as has been as yet made out, of distinct plates of iron with a comparatively small percentage of nickel; the second consisting of thinner plates enveloping the kamacite, and richer in nickel; and the third being a sort of ground mass filling the cavities and having less obvious indications of structure and generally a darker color than the others. It has frequently been stated that some meteoric irons do not exhibit the Widmannstättian figures, and that consequently their also race is not a proof of non-celestial origin; it is certain, however, that few, if any, siderolites do not show traces of some kind of structure, although investigators in this branch of science are by no means agreed as to what kind of figures are properly designated by the name Widmannstättian. A somewhat similar uncertainty prevails with regard to the figures developed by etching on the terrestrial iron of Ovifak, so that, at the present time, it cannot be said that the Widmannstättian figures furnish a positive criterion by which the authenticity of a meteoric iron may be established, yet it is certain that well-developed figures of this kind do render it highly probable that the specimen in which they are seen is extraterrestrial. A classification of meteoric irons on the basis of the different forms of figures which they exhibit, in the present condition of this branch of science, does not seem to be justifiable, although this has been attempted.

Widmannstättian Figures

widow[1] (wid'ō), n. [Formerly also widdow; < ME. widewe, wydewe, widwe, widue, wodewe (pl. widewen, widous), < AS. widewe, wydewe, wuduwe, widuwe, wuduwa, wodewe = OS. widuwa, widowa, widera = OFries. widwe = D. weduwe = LG. wedewe = OHG. wituwa (wituwā), MHG. witewe, witwe, G. wittwe = Goth. widuwō, widowō = W. gweddw = OPruss. widdewa = OBulg. vidova = Russ. vdova = L. vidua (?) = It. vedova = Sp. viuda = Pg. viuva = Pr. seuva = F. veuve) = Pers. bīva = Skt. vidhavā, a widow; of Gr. ἦθεος, unmarried. The word is usually explained, from the Skt., as 'without a husband,' as if Skt. vidhavā were < vi, without, + dhava, husband; but it is more prob. derived from the root (Skt.) vandh, lack. The L. viduus, lacking, deprived of, is prob. developed from the fem. vidua, taken as adj., widowed, deprived. Similarly the words for 'widower' are derived from those for 'widow.' From L. viduus are ult. E. void, avoid, etc.] 1. A woman who has lost her husband by death. In the early church, widows formed a separate class or order, whose duties were devotion and the care of the orphans, the sick, and prisoners.

And whan the Queen and alle the othere noble Ladyes sawen that thei weren alle Wydowes, and that alle the rialle Blood was lost, thei armed hem, and, as Creatures out of Wytt thei slowen alle the men of the Contrey that weren laft. Mandeville, Travels, p. 156.

We'll throw his castell down,
And make a widow of his gaye ladye.
Song of the outlaw Murray (Child's Ballads, VI. 233).

Widow is also used attributively (now only colloquially) as, "a widow woman," 2 Sam. xiv. 5.

How may we content
This widow lady? Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 548.

Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child? Locke, Of Government, § 123.

2. A European geometrid moth, Cabera lucidata, more fully called mourning widow: an English collectors' name. — 3. In some card-games, an additional hand dealt to the table, sometimes face up, sometimes not. — Hempen widow. See hempen. — Locality of a widow. See locality. — Mournful widow, mourning widow. See mournful widow, mourning widow. — Widow bewitched, a woman living apart from her husband, a grass widow.

What can you be able to do, that would be more grateful to them, than if they should see you divorced from your husband, a widow, nay, to live (a widow bewitched) worse than a widow, for widows may marry again. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 136. (Davies.)

Ay! and yo' were Sylvia Robson, and as bonny and light hearted a lass as any in all t' Riding, though now yo're a poor wake-bewitched. Mrs Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xxxix.

Widow's chamber, the apparel and furniture of the bed-chamber of the widow of a London freeman to which she was formerly entitled. — Widows' lawn, a kind of fine thin muslin, made originally for widows caps. [Eng.] — Widow's man. See the quotations.

As to Square, who was in his person what is called a jolly fellow, or a widow's man, he easily reconciled his choice to the eternal fitness of things. Fielding, Tom Jones, iii. 6. (Davies.)

Widow's men are imaginary sailors, borne on the books, and receiving pay and prize money, which is appropriated to Greenwich Hospital. Marryat, Peter Simple, vii., note. (Davies.)

Widow's mantle. See mantle. — Widow's ring. See ring. — Widows' silk, a silk fabric made with a very dull surface, and considered especially fit for mourning. — Widow's weeds, the mourning-dress of a widow.

widow[1] (wid'ō), v. t. [< widow[1], n.] 1. To reduce to the condition of a widow; bereave of a husband or mate: commonly in the past participle.

In this city he Hath widowed and unchilded many a one. Shak., Cor., v. 6. 154.

We orphaned many children,
And widowed many women. Peacock, War Song of Dinas Vawr.

2. To endow with a widow's right. [Rare.]

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do not mean to widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband. Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 529.

3. Figuratively, to deprive of anything regarded as analogous to a husband; bereave: sometimes with of.

The widow'd isle in mourning Drive up her tears. Dryden.

Trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widowed. J. Philips, Cider, ii. 74.

4†. To survive as the widow of; be widow to.

Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all. Shak., A. and C., i. 2. 27.

widow[2] (wid'ō), n. [Short for widow-bird.] A whidah-bird. — Mourning widow, a whidah bird of the genus Coliuspasser. See Vidua. — Widow of paradise, one of the whidah-birds. See Vidua, with cut.

widow-bench (wid'ō-bench), n. That share which a widow is allowed of her husband's estate, besides her jointure. Wharton.

widow-bird (wid'ō-berd), n. [An accom. form (simulating E. widow[1]) of whidah-bird.] Same as whidah-bird. Also weaver-finch.

widow-burning (wid'ō ber'ning), n. Same as suttee.

widow-duck (wid'ō-duk), n. The Viceroy duck, Dendrocygna viduata, one of the best-known tree-ducks.

widower[1] (wid'ō-er), n. [< ME. widewer, widwer = MD. weduwer = MHG. witewære, G. wittwer, a later substitute, with suffix -er, for the AS. wuduwa, a widower, etc., a masc. form to wuduwe, f., widow: see widow[1].] 1. A man who has lost his wife by death.

Wedewes and wedewers that here owen wil forsaken,
And chast leden here lyf. Piers Plowman (C), xix. 76.

Our widower's second marriage-day. Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 70.

2. See the quotation.

Let there be widowers, which you call relievors, appointed everywhere to the church-service. Bp. Hall Apologie against Brownists, § 19. (Encyc. Dict.) widower[2] (wid'ō-ėr), n. [< widow[1], v., + -er[1].] One who or that which widows or bereaves.

Hengist begirt with that fam'd falchion call'd
The 'Widower' of Women.
Milman, Samor, Lord of the Bright City, xi.

widowerhood (wid'ō-ėr-hud), n. [< widower[1] + -hood.] The condition of a widower.

Ine spousbod, other ine weoruhad. Ayenbite of Inwit (E. E. T. S.), p. 185.

widow-finch (wid'ō finch), n. Same as whidah-finch.

widowhead† (wid'ō hed), n. [< widow[1] + -head.] Widowhood.

Virginity, wedlock, and widowhead are none better than other, to be saved by, in their own nature. Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 187.

Upon you, who are a member of the spouse of Christ, the church, there can fall no widowhead, nor orphanage upon those children to whom God is father. Donne, Letters, lxxvi.

widowhood (wid'ō-hud), n. [< ME. wydowhood, wydewood, wedwhode, widewehad, < widow[1] + -hood.] 1. The state of a man whose wife is dead, or of a woman whose husband is dead, and who has not married again: generally applied to the state or condition of being a widow.

What have I done at home, since my Wife died?
No Turtle ever kept a widowhood
More strict than I have done.
Brome, Queens Exchange, i.

Mother and daughter, you behold them both in their widowhood. Torcello and Venice. Ruskin, Stones of Venice, II. ii. § 2.

He was much older than his wife, whom he had married after a protracted widowhood. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 137.

2†. A widow's right; the estate settled on a widow.

For that dowry I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survive me,
In all my lands. Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 126.

widow-hunter (wid'ō hun'tėr), n. One who seeks or courts widows for the sake of a jointure or fortune. Addison.

widowly (wid'ō-li), adv. [< widow[1] + -ly[2].] In a manner befitting a widow. [Rare.]

widow-maker (wid'ō mā'kėr), n. One who or that which makes widows by bereaving women of their husbands.

O, it grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widow-maker! Shak., K. John, v. 2. 17.

widow's-cross (wid'ōz krōs), n. See Sedum.

widow-wail (wid'ō wāl), n. 1. A dwarf hardy shrub, Cneorum tricoccon, of the Simarubaceæ, found in Spain and the south of France. It has procumbent stems, lance-shaped evergreen leaves, and clusters of pink sweet-scented flowers. The name extends to the only other species of the genus, C. pulverulentum, of Teneriffe.

2. Same as weeping widow. [Prov. Eng.]

widret, v. An obsolete form of wrather[2].

width (width), n. [< wide + th[1].] 1. Breadth; wideness; the broad extent of a thing from side to side; comprehensiveness: opposed to narrowness.

Whence from the width of many a gaping wound,
There issues many a soul into the air must fly.
Drayton, Battle of Agincourt, st. 142.

The two married
Apart by all the chasms a width
Tennyson, Geraint.

2. In textiles, dressmaking, etc., same as breadth, 5. Syn. 1. See wide.

widthwise (width'wīz), adv. In the direction of the width; as regards the width.

The stage is widthwise divided into five parts. Scribner's Mag., IV. 426.

widual†, a. An erroneous form of vidual. Bp. Bale, Apology, fol. 38.

widwet, widwehed†, n. Middle English forms of widow[1], widowhood.

wiet, wye[1]†, n. [ME. wie, wye, wige, also erroneously whe, < AS. wiga, a warrior, < wīg, war.] A warrior; poetically, a man.

Miȝtly marked he his way, & so manly he rides
That alle his wies were went he wist he neuer whider.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 903.

In god, Fader of heuene,
Was the Sone in hym-selue In a stuffe, as Ese
Was, whanne god wolde out of the wye y-drawe.
Piers Plowman (C), xix. 220.

The sonne of saint Elaine, the seemelich Ladie,
That weithes worshipen yet for hur werk hende.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 1227.

To the water thai went, the weghis to gedur,
Paris to purcew with prise men of Armes.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3684.

wiel†, n. See weel.

wield (weld), v. t. [< ME. welden (pret. welde, walde, welte, welded, weldede, pp. welt), < AS. gewealdan, gewyldan, have power over; a secondary form of the strong verb, ME. walden, wealden (pret. weold), < AS. wealdan (pret. wéold, pp. wealden), have power over, govern, rule, possess, = OS. waldan = OFries. walda = D. weiden = OHG. waltan, dispose, manage, rule, MHG. G. walten, rule, = Icel. valda, wield, Sw. välla (for välda*), occasion, cause, = Dan. volde, commonly forvolde, occasion, cause; Goth. waldan, govern; cf. Russ. vladeti, reign, rule, possess, make use of, = Lith. valdyti, rule, govern, possess; prob. < L. valere, be strong, have power; see valid.] 1. To have power or sway over; rule; govern; manage.

Now weemyd is the kyng that counte to weld,
Hade homage of all men, & honour full riche,
And begun for to gouerne as goome in his owne.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5381.

Adam . . . welte al Paradys, saving o tree.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 20.

Thence to the famous orators repair,
Those antient, whose resistless eloquence Wielded at will that fierce democratie,
Shook the arsenal, and fulmined over Greece.
Milton, P. R., iv. 260.

Where'er that Power may move
Which wields the world with never wearied love.
Shelley, Adonais, xlii.

2. To use or exert in governing; sway.

Her new born power was wielded at the first by unprincipled and ambitious men. De Quincey.

3. Hence, in general, to exercise; put to practical or active use, as a means, an instrument, or a weapon; use with freedom and ease, as, to wield a hammer.

As his will welt he after as wel as to fore.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 142.

In oure chapitre preye we day and nyght
To Crist that he thee sende heele and myght
Thy body for to wielden hastily.
Chaucer, Summoner's Tale, l. 229.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed.
Milton, P. L., xi. 645.

A potent wand doth Sorrow wield.
Wordsworth, Peter Bell.

4†. To have; possess; enjoy.

And sum prince axkle him, seyinge, Good maister, what thing doynge schal I welde euerlastyng lyf?
Wyclif, Luke xviii. 18.

And alway [he] slewe the kynges deere,
And welt them at his wyll.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 108).

Hast tell me, that hast seen him, Memphon,
What stature wields he, and what personage?
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., iv. 1.

To wield a good baton. See baton.

wield†, n. [< ME. weelde (cf. waelde, woelde, < AS. gewealdd, power); from the verb.] Command; power; management.

Doe weel bi hem of thi good that thou hast in weelde.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 43.

wieldable (wel'da-bl), a. [< wield + -able.] Capable of being wielded.

wieldance† (wel'dans), n. [< wield + -ance.] The act or power of wielding. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat, n.

wielder (wel'der), n. [< ME. weldere, possessor (= G. walter = Icel. valdare, valdi, ruler); < weld + *-er*1.] One who wields, employs, manages, or possesses.

Like the fabled spear of old mythology, endued with the faculty of healing the saddest wound it's most violent wielder can inflict.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Melanchthon and Calvin.

Erisk wielder of the birch and rule,
The master of the village school.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

wieldiness (wel'di-nes), n. The property of being wieldy.

wielding† (wel'ding), n. [< ME. weeldinge; verbal n. of weld, v.] Management; control.

Ye have hem in youre myght and in youre weeldinge.
Chaucer, Tale of Melibœus.

wieldless (weld'les), a. [Early mod. E. weeldelesse; < weeld + -esse.] Unmanageable; unwieldy.

That with the weight of his owne weeldlesse might
He falleth nigh to ground, and scarse recoucreth flight.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. iii. 39.

wieldsomet (weld'sum), a. [< weeld + -some. Cf. (for the form) G. gewaltsam, violent, powerful.] Capable of being easily managed or wielded. Golding.

wieldy (wel'di), a. [< ME. weldy, extended form of welde, < AS. wylde, dominant, controlling, < wealdan, rule, govern: see wield. Cf. unwieldy.] 1†. Capable of wielding; dexterous; strong; active.

So freash, so yong, so weldy semed he,
It was an heven upon him for to se.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 636.

2. Capable of being wielded; manageable; workable; not unwieldy. Johnson.

wier, n. See weir.

wierd†, wierdet, n. Obsolete spellings of weird.

wiery1†, a. An old spelling of wiry. Compare ivory for ivy.

wiery2†, a. [< AS. wær, a pool, a fish-pond.] Wet; moist; marshy.

Wiesbaden water. See water.

wife (wif), n.; pl. wives (wivz). [< ME. wif, wiif, wyf (pl. wif, wive, wifes, wives), < AS. wif, neut. (pl. wif), a woman, wife, = OS. wif, wib = OFries. wif = D. wijf = LG. wief = OHG. MHG. wip, G. weib = Icel. vif (used only in poetry, = Sw. vif = Dan. vie, woman; not found in Goth. and not traced outside of Teut.; root unknown. It cannot be connected, as commonly thought, with weave. Some compare Skt. √ vip, tremble, L. vibare, vibrate, quiver, OHG. weibôn, waver, be inspired, be irresolute, and suppose that the word orig. meant 'something inspired' (the Germans orig. seeing in woman sanctum aliquid et providum), or that it orig. meant 'trembling,' with ref. to the timidity of a bride. Some connect it with Goth. waibjan, wind, twine, in bi-waibjan, wind about, clothe, envelop, because of a woman's 'enveloping clothing,' or because she is the 'one who binds or unites herself.' These are all vagaries. The earlier Teut. word, the one with other Indo-European cognates, is that represented by queen, quean. The neuter or inadequate significance of the word is prob. indicated also by the formation in AS. of the appar. more distinctive word wifman, whence ult. E. woman.] 1. A woman: now only in rural or provincial use, especially in Scotland, and usually with an adjective, or in composition with a noun, implying a woman of humble position: as, old wives (unless a fishwife).

On the grene he saugh sittynge a wif,
A fouler wight ther may no man devise.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 142.

To sink the ship she sent away
Her witch wives every one.
The Laidley Worm of Spindleston Heugh (Child's Ballads, II. 294).

She . . . shudder'd as the village wife who cries
I shudder, some one steps across my grave.
Tennyson, Guinevere.

2. The mistress of a house; a hostess: called more distinctively the goodwife (correlative to goodman) or the housewife.

A prest . . .
Who h was so pleasaunt and so seruisable
Vnto the wif wher as he was at table
That she wolde suffre him no thing for to paye.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 4.

3. A woman who is united to a man in the lawful bonds of wedlock; a man's spouse; the correlative of husband.

He rode forth blithe
To Rymenhild his wyue.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 21.

The Soudan hathe 4 Wyfes, on Cristene and 3 Sarasines, of the which he on dwellethe at Jerusalem, and another at Damasce, and another at Ascalon.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 38.

A good wife is heaven's last best gift to man, his angel and minister of graces innumerable, his gem of many virtues, his casket of jewels.
Jer. Taylor.

All the world and his wife. See world. — Auld wives' tongues. See tale. — Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. See bill. — Dutch wife. See Dutch. — Inhibition against a wife. See inhibition. — Old wife. See old. — Old wives' tale. See tale. — Plural wives, consorts or concubines of the same man under a polygamous union. — Ratification by a wife. See ratification. — Wife's equity, in law, the general rule established by courts of equity that where a husband resorted to a court of equity to enforce his common law marital right to take his wife's property that court would, in general, oblige him to make a reasonable provision out of the fund for the benefit of his wife and children. This doctrine has been extended or superseded by acts which secure the whole property of a wife to herself.

wife† (wif), v. t. [< wife, n.] To take a wife; marry.

Ku. . . . Art you weary of wifeing?
Pe. I am so weary of it that, if this Eighth should tie to buy I would marry the Ninth to-Morrow.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 348.

wife-bound (wif'bound), a. Devoted or tied down to a wife; wife-ridden. [Rare.]

A wife-bound man now dost thou roar the walls Of high Carthage?
Surrey, Æneid, iv. 342.

wife-carl (wif'kärl), n. A man who busies himself about household affairs or woman's work. [Scotch.]

wifehood (wif'hud), n. [< ME. wifhod, wifhood, < AS. wifhād, < wif, wife, + hād, condition.] Wifely character or condition; the state of being a wife.

She taughte al the craft of fyn lovinge,
And namely of wyfhood the livinge.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 548.

The stately flower of female fortitude,
Of perfect wifehood.
Tennyson, Isabel.

wifekin† (wif'kin), n. [ME., < wife + *kin*1.] Womankind. Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 650.

wifeless (wif'les), a. [< ME. wiifles, wyfles, wyffles, < wife + -less.] Without a wife; unmarried.

Sixty yeer a wyfless man was he.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 4.

wifelike (wif'lik), a. [< wife + -like.] Resembling or pertaining to a wife or woman.

Wifelike government. Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 138.

Wifelike her hand in one of his.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

wifely (wif'li), a. [< ME. wifly, wyfli, < AS. wiflic, < wif, wife, + -lic, E. *-ly*1.] Pertaining to or befitting a wife; like a wife.

Yit is it bet for me
For to be deed in wyfly honestee
Than be a traitour living in my shame.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2701.

With all the tenderness of wifely love.
Dryden, Amphitryon, iii.

wife-ridden (wif'rid'n), a. Unduly influenced by a wife; ruled or tyrannized over by a wife; henpecked.

Listen not to those sages who advise you always to learn the counsel of a woman, and if you comply with her requests pronounce you wife ridden.
Mrs. Piozzi.

wiflet, n. [Origin obscure.] A kind of ax.

xj crosbowes whereof iiij of steele, and x wyndas. Item, j boresperc. Item, vj wiflets.
Paston Letters, I. 487.

wifmant, n. A Middle English form of woman.

wig1†, n. [< ME. wigg, < AS. wicg = Icel. viggr (vigga-), also vagr, a horse, steed; connected with AS. wegan, carry: see *way*1, *weigh*1.] A beast of burden, as a horse or an ass.

As the hi fwerd gafe loverdes loverd, and sire kingene king of alle tha ne wende after the sire unwurtheste wig one to ridene and that is asse.
Old Eng. Homilies, 2d ser., p. 89.

wig2 (wig), n. [Also wigg (and erroneously whig); early mod. E. wygge, = D. wig, wigge, a wedge, = G. weck, wecke, a sort of bread: see *wedge*1.] A sort of cake. [Obsolete or local.]

Home to the only fasten supper I have had of wiggs and ale.
Pepys, Diary, II. 117.

You may make wigs of the biscuit dough, by adding . . . currans.
Cott. of Receipts, p. 2. (Jamieson.)

wig3 (wig), n. [Abbr. of periwig: see periwig and peruke.] 1. An artificial covering of hair for the head, used generally to conceal baldness, but formerly worn as a fashionable head dress. Wigs are usually made to imitate the natural hair, but formal curled wigs are worn as part of their professional costume by judges and lawyers in Great Britain. Wigs are much used on the stage. See peruke.

I have often wanted him to throw off his great flaxen wig . . . with his usual Gothic vivacity, he said I only wanted . . . to convert it into a tete for my own wearing.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, ii.

I never believe anything that a lawyer says when he has a wig on his head and a fee in his hand.
Trollope, Phineas Redux, lxi.

1, Forms of Wig worn in Great Britain in the 17th and 18th centuries.
2: Time of James I.; 3, time of Charles I.; 4, 5, Restoration, Charles II.; 6, 7, time of William and Mary; 8, campaign wig, 1694; 9, Ramillie wig, 1706; 10, tete-wig, 1720; 11, 12, the Macaroni, 1772; 13, 14, wigs of 1780-90; 15, 16, wigs of 1785-95.

2. The full-grown male fur-seal of Alaska, Callorhinus ursinus. See cut under fur-seal. — 3. The head. [Colloq.] — Allonge wig.

See allonge.—Blenheim wig, a periwig: so named in honor of the battle of Blenheim (1704).—Campaign wig, a wig used in traveling, with twisted sidelocks and curled forehead. See 10 in cut on preceding page.—Cauliflower wig, a variety of peruke in the eighteenth century, close-curled, and covered with powder: so named from its supposed resemblance to a head of cauliflower when served at the table.—Welsh wig, a worsted cap. Simmonds.

wig[3] (wig), v. t.; pret. and pp. wigged, ppr. wigging. [< wig[3], n., the orig. sense being perhaps 'to put a wig on,' i. e. to set right without ceremony, or 'to snatch at (one's) wig,' to ruffle or handle (one) without ceremony. Compare wigging, where the ref. to ear-wigging in the quot. is prob. humorous, the term meaning 'wigging into one's private ear,' but alluding to earwig, an annoying insect.] To rate or scold severely. [Colloq.]

If you wish to 'scape wigging, a dumb wife's the dandy!
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 886.

wigan (wig'an), n. [Prob. from the town of Wigan in Lancashire, Eng.] A stiff, open canvas-like fabric, used for stiffening and protecting the lower inside surface of skirts, etc.

Wigandia (wi-gan'di-ä), n. [NL. (Kunth, 1818), named after J. H. Wigand (1769–1817), a physician in Hamburg.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Hydrophyllaceæ and tribe Nameæ. It is characterized by a broadly bell-shaped corolla, commonly exserted stamens, and a two-valved capsule. There are 5 or 4 closely related species, widely dispersed through mountain regions of tropical America. They are tall, coarse, rough hairy herbs, with large rugose alternate leaves and conspicuous forking scorpioid cymes. They are sometimes cultivated for ornament or as curiosities. W. urens has been called Caracas bell-leaf.

wig-block (wig'blok), n. A block shaped like the top of the head, designed to support a wig in the process of making or when not in use.

wigeon, n. See widgeon.

wigged (wigd), a. [< wig[3] + -ed[2].] Having the head covered with a wig; wearing a wig.

The best-wigg'd Prince in Christendom.
Moore, Twopenny Post-bag.

At one end of this aisle is raised the Speaker's chair, below and in front of which, invading the spaces of the aisle, are the desks of the wigged and gowned clerks.
H. Wilson, Congressional Government, II.

wiggen-tree, wiggin-tree (wig'en-tre, wig'in-tre), n. Same as wicken-tree. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

wiggert, a. An obsolete form of wicker[1].

wiggery (wig'er-i), n.; pl. wiggeries (-iz) [< wig[3] + -ery.] 1. The work of a wig-maker; false hair. [Rare.]

She was a ghastly thing to look at, as well from the quantity as from the nature of the wiggeries which she wore.
Trollope, Last Chronicle of Barset, xxiv.

2. Excess of formality; red tapism.

There is yet in venerable wigged Justice some wisdom amid such mountains of wiggeries and folly.
Carlyle, Past and Present, II. 17. (Davies.)

wigging (wig'ing), n. A scolding. See wig[3], v. [Colloq.]

If the head of a firm calls a clerk into the parlour and rebukes him, it is an earwigging; if done before the other clerks, it is a wigging.
Hotten's Slang Dict.

wiggin-tree, n. See waggon-tree.

wiggle (wig'l), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. wiggled, ppr. wiggling. [< ME. wiglen (= MD. wigheln = MHG. wigelen), reel, stagger; prob. a var. form of waggle.] To waggle; waddle; wriggle. [Provincial or colloq.]

wiggle (wig'l), n. [< wiggle, v.] A waggling or wriggling motion.

wiggler (wig'ler), n. One who or that which wriggles.

wiggletail (wig'l-tāl), n. Same as wriggler.

wighert, v. i. [Prob. imitative; cf. E. dial. wehee, wihee, neigh, whinny.] To neigh; whinny. [Rare.]

Sir Per. See you this tail?
Ibid. I cut it from a dead horse that can now
Neither wigher nor wag tail.
Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, iii. 2.

wighiet, n. [Also wehee; prob. imitative; cf. wigher.] The neighing of a horse; a neigh.

When the horn was laus, he gineth gon . . .
Forth with Wehee.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 146.

Hange on hym the heuy brydel to holde his hed lowe,
For he wil make wehe tweyes er he be there.
Piers Plowman (B), ix. 22.

wight[1] (wit), n. [< ME. wight, wyght, wyt, wiht, < AS. wiht, wuht, wyht, neut. and f., a creature, animal, person, thing, = OS. wiht, thing, pl. demons, = D. wicht, a child, = OHG. wiht, m. and neut., thing, creature, person, MHG. wiht, creature, thing, G. wicht, being, creature, babe, = Icel. vættr, a wight, vætta, a whit, = Sw. vätte, vitt = Dan. vætte, an elf, = Goth. waihts, f., waiht, neut., a thing; prob. orig. 'something moving' (a moving object indistinctly seen at a distance, whether man, child, animal, elf, or demon), < AS. wegan, etc., move, stir, carry: see weigh[1], wag[1]. The word, by a phonetic change, also appears as mod. E. whit[1]. It also appears unrecognized in aught, naught, not[1].] 1. A person, whether male or female; a human being: as, an unlucky wight.

There schulle ther fynde no Wight that will selle hem eny Vitaille or eny thing.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 180.

To you my purse and to non other wight
Complayne I, for ye be my lady dere.
Chaucer, Complaint to his Purse, l. 1.

She was a wight, if ever such wight were, . . .
To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.
Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 159.

No living wight, save the Ladye alone,
Had dared to cross the threshold stone.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 1.

2†. A preternatural, unearthly, or uncanny creature; an elf, sprite, witch, or the like.

"I conjure thee from elves and fro wightes."
Therwith the nyght-spel seyde he anonrightes.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 293.

3†. A space of time; a whit; a while.

She was falle aslepe a litle wight.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 366.

wight[2] (wit), a. [< ME. wight, wyght, wicht, wyht, wicht, wigt, nimble, active, strong, < Icel. vigr (neut. vigt), serviceable for war, in fighting condition (= Sw. vig (neut. vigt), nimble, active, agile), < vá (= AS. wíg), war; cf. vegja, fight, smite, Goth. weihan, fight, strive, contend, L. vincere, conquer; see victor, invincible. Cf. war, war, a warrior.] Having warlike prowess; valiant; courageous; strong and active; agile; nimble; swift. [Archaic.]

He was a knight full kant, the kyngez son of Lice,
And a wyght man in wer, wild of his dedis.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6085.

I is ful wight, God wat, as is a roe.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 100.

Le Baldre roasted out for fair play, adding 'that he would venture his nephew on him were he as wight as Wallace.'" Scott, Quentin Durward, xxxvii.

wight[1]†, n. A Middle English form of weight[1].

wight[4]†, n. See wite[1].

wightly† (wit'li), adv. [< ME. wightly, wihtliche, wy-tliche, wi-tli; < wight[2] + -ly[2].] Swiftly; nimbly; quickly; vigorously; boldly.

He tiche with the child he went to his house,
And bi-tok it to his wif tightly to kepe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 65.

She wol up wyghtly by a walle . . .
To the toppe of a ture A-fot ouer the water
Eftir to loke on hir lufe, longyng in heel.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 867.

Go wightly thou, and I wil keepe hym here.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 182. (Hart MS.)

For day that was wightly past.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

wightness† (wit'nes), n. [< ME. wightnes; < wight[2] + -ness.] Courage; vigor; bravery.

Though . . . wightnes, I wysse, A worthi Achilles
We have . . . geven to the greks this ground with oure help.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12139.

wighty (wit'i), a. [< wight[2] + -y[1].] Strong, active. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wigless (wig'les), a. [< wig[3] + -less.] Without a wig; wearing no wig.

Though wigless with his cassock torn, he bound:
From some facetious squire encouraged hounds.
Colman, Vagaries Vindicated.

wig-maker (wig'mā'ker), n. One who makes wigs, or who keeps up an establishment for the making and selling of wigs.

wigreve (wig'rēv), n. [For "wickreeve, < ME. "wikreve, < AS. wic-gerefa, a village or town officer who had supervision of sales, < wic, town, + gerefa, reeve: see wick[2] and reeve[1].] A bailiff or steward of a hamlet.

wig-tail (wig'tāl), n. The trogon-bird. See cut under Pharomacrus.

The wig-tail, a white bird about the size of a pigeon, having two long flexible, streamer-like tail-feathers.
Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 882.

wig-tree (wig'trē), n. The Venetian sumac, or smoke-tree, Rhus Cotinus: so named from its puffy peruke-like inflorescence. See smoke-tree and sumac[2].

wigwag (wig'wag), v. i. [A varied reduplication of wag[1].] To move to and fro; specifically, to signal by movements of flags. [Colloq.]

wigwag (wig'wag), a. and n. [< wigwag, v.] I. a. Writhing, wriggling, or twisting.

His midill entrayling with wig wag circuled hooping.
Stanihurst, Æneid, ii. 230.

II. n. 1. A rubbing instrument used by watch-makers. It is attached by a crank to a wheel of a lathe, which gives it a longitudinal movement of reciprocation.
E. H. Knight.

2. Signaling by the movements of flags: as, to practise the wigwag. [Colloq.]

In the army wig-wag system, a flag moved to right and left during the day, and a white light moved over a stationary red one at night, are readily made to answer the same purpose.
Sci. Amer., LIV. 16.

wigwag (wig'wag), adv. [An elliptical use of wigwag, v.] To and fro; with waggling motion: as, to go wigwag back and forth. [Colloq.]

wigwam (wig'wam), n. [Formerly also weekwam, from an Algonkin word represented by Etchemin weekuahom, a house, week, his house, neek, my house, keek, thy house, Massachusetts wiek or wek, his house, wehou-um-at in his or their house, etc.; Cree wi-wat, in their houses.] 1. The tent or lodge of a North American Indian, generally of a conical shape and formed of bark or mats, or now most often of skins, Wigwam.

laid over poles (called lodge poles) stacked on the ground and converging at the top, where is left an opening for the escape of smoke.

Ye Indeans . . . departed from their wigwames.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 428.

Finch, of Watertown, had his wigwam burnt and all his goods.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 43.

We then marcheden, . . . and, falling upon several Wigwames burnt them.
Old Mass. Hist. Soc. (1677), 2d ser., VIII. 142.

When they would erect a wigwam, which is the Indian name for a house, they stick saplins into the ground by one end, and bend the other at the top fastening them together by strings made of tlhome roots, the rind of trees or of the green weed of the white oak, which will dye into thongs.
Beverley, Virginia, iii. ¶ 10.

2. A large building; especially, a large structure in which a nominating convention or other political gathering is held. [Slang, U. S.]

wig weaver (wig'wē'vėr), n. A wig-maker. [Rare.]

He head . . .
Indebted to some smart wig weaver's hand
For more than half the tresses it sustains.
Cowper, Task, iv. 542.

wike[1]†, n. A Middle English form of week[1], week[2], week[4].

wike[2]†, n. [< ME. wike, office, service; appar. a use of wike, etc., week; cf. Goth. weko, course, < L. vex (vic-), change, regular succession, office, service: see vice[4], week.] Office; service.

Ich can do wel gode wike.
Owl and Nightingale, l. 603.

wike[3] (wik), n. [Cf. wicker[1].] A temporary mark, as a twig or branchlet, used to divide swaths to be mown in commons, etc. Also called wicker. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

wiking (wi'king), n. [An adaptation of AS. wícing, see viking.] A viking. [Rare.]

From the "wik," or creek where their long ship lurked, the Wikings, or "creek-men," as the adventurers were called, poured upon their prey.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 56.

wikket, a. A Middle English spelling of wicked.

wild[1] (wild), a., and n. [< ME. wilde, wielde, also willi, will, wil, < AS. wild, untamed, wild, = OS. wildi = OFries. wilde = D. wild, savage, proud, = OHG. wildi, MHG. wilde, G. wild, wild, savage (as a noun, wild beasts, game), = Icel. villr (for "vildr), wild, also bewildered, astray, confused, = Sw. Dan. vild = Goth. wiltheis, wild, uncultivated; prob. orig. 'self-willed,' 'willful,' with orig. pp. suffix -d (as in old, cold, etc.), from the root of will[1]; cf. W. gwyllt, wild, savage, gwyllys, the will. Hence wild n., wilderness, wilder, bewilder, etc.] I. a. 1. Self-willed; wayward; wanton; impatient of restraint or control; stirring; lively; boisterous; full of life and spirits; hence, frolicsome; giddy; light-hearted.

Pardon me if I suspect you still, you are too wild and airy to be constant to that affection.
Shirley, Witty Fair One, II. 2.

That the wild little thing should take wing, and fly away the Lord knows whither!
Colman, Jealous Wife, iii.

A wild unworldly-minded youth, given up
To his own eager thoughts.
Wordsworth, Prelude, iv.

Philip was a dear, good, frank, amiable, wild fellow, and they all loved him.
Thackeray, Philip, v.

2. Boisterous; tempestuous; stormy; violent; turbulent; furious; uncontrolled: used in both a physical and a moral sense.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boy
Till that my nails were anchored in thine eyes.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 29.

His passions and his virtues he confused,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult
That the whole man is quite disfigured to him.
Addison, Cato, iii. 2.

Long after night had overclouded the prospect I heard a wild wind rushing among trees.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, v.

3†. Bold; brave; daring; valiant.

Of the greatest of prowess & of great Troy,
That he hade conveyng with in company, & knew well the persones,
As the worthiest to wale & wildest to Armys.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4023.

4. Loose and disorderly in conduct; given to going beyond bounds in pleasurable indulgence; ungoverned; more or less dissolute, wayward, or unrestrained in conduct; prodigal.

He kept company with the wild prince and Poins.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 2. 24.

Suppose he has been wild, let me assure you
He's now reclaimed, and has my good opinion.
Lillo, Sparagus Garden, iv. 2.

5. Reckless; rash; ill-considered, extravagant, out of accord with reason or prudence; hap-hazard: as, a wild venture; wild trading.

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me:
I had it from my father.
Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 4. 76.

Are not our streets daily filled with wild pieces of justice and random penalties?
Addison, Tatler, No. 54.

The maddest opinions of every kind were abroad. Oddness and strange doctrines, with every wind of which men, having no longer an anchor whereby to hold were carried about and tossed to and fro.
Southey, Bunyan, p. lix.

Johnson, the young bowler is getting wild, and bowls a ball almost wide to the off.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown's School Days, II. 8.

6. Extravagant; fantastic; irregular; disordered; weird; queer.

Wild in their attire.
Shak., Macbeth, I. 3. 40.

Lay in her [Reason's] absence mind, fancy wakes
To imitate her; but, misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft.
Milton, P. L., v. 112.

When man to man gave willing faith, and loved
A tale the better that was wild and strange.
Bryant, Stella.

7. Enthusiastic; eager; keen; especially, very eager with delight, excitement, or the like. [Chiefly colloq.]

And there,
All wild to found an University
For maidens, on the spur she fled.
Tennyson, Princess, I.

As for Dolly, he was wild about the town, and the castle, and the Black Forest.
Whyte Melville, White Rose, I. xxviii.

8. Excited; roused; distracted; crazy; betokening or indicating excitement or strong emotion.

Your looks are pale and wild.
Shak., R. and J., v. 1. 28.

I grow wild:
And would not willingly believe the truth
Of my dishonour.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iv. 1.

The factions of Oates had driven the nation wild.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

9. Wide of the mark or direct line; standard, or bounds.

The catcher . . . must begin by a resolution to try for everything, and to consider no ball beyond his reach, no matter how wild.
W. Camp, St. Nicholas, XVII. 831.

10. Living in a state of nature; inhabiting the forest or open field; roving; wandering; not tame; not domesticated; feral or ferine: as, a wild boar; a wild ox; a wild cat; a wild bee. More particularly—(a) Noting those animals which in their relation to man are legally styled feræ naturæ (which see, under ferus) opposed to domitæ. (b) Noting beasts of the chase, game-birds, and the like, which are noticeably shy, wary, or hard to take under certain circumstances: opposed to tame, 1 (b) (2): as, the birds are wild this morning.

11. Savage; uncivilized; ungoverned; unrefined; ferocious; sanguinary: noting persons or practices.

The wildest savagery.
Shak., K. John, iv. 3. 48.

Nations yet wild by Precept to reclaim,
And teach mankind Arms, and Arts, in William's Name.
Prior, Carmen Seculare (1700), st. 37.

12. Growing or produced without culture; produced by unassisted nature, or by wild animals; native; not cultivated: as, wild parsnip; wild cherry; wild honey.

With wild wood leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave.
Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 2. 389.

It were good to try what would be the effect, if all the blossoms were pulled from a fruit-tree, or the acorns and chestnut buds, etc., from a wild tree.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 453.

13. Desert; not inhabited; uncultivated.

And that centre is full of grete forestes, and full wylde to them of the selve centre.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 32.

These high wild hills and rough uneven ways
Draws out our miles, and makes them wearisome.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 3. 4.

The plain was grassy, wild, and bare.
Tennyson, Dying Swan.

A wild shot, a random or chance shot. Ethiopian wild boar. Same as hallut. See cut under Phacochærus. Indian wild lime. See Limonia. To ride the wild mare! See ride. To run wild. (a) To grow wild or savage; take to a vicious course or a base way of living. (b) To escape from domestication and revert to the feral state. (c) To escape from cultivation and grow in a wild state. To sow one's wild oats. See oat. Wild allspice. Same as spice bush. Wild ananna, angelica. See the nouns. Wild animals, those animals, and especially those beasts, which have not been reclaimed from the feral state, or domesticated for the use and benefit of man: technically called feræ naturæ. Wild anise-tree. See anise. Wild apricot. See apricot. Wild ash. See ash. Wild ass, any member of that section of the genus Equus to which the domestic ass belongs, except this species. There are several species or varieties not all of which are well determined, native of northern Africa, and especially of western and central Asia. Some are very large, strong and swift animals, which have been distinguished from remote antiquity, and were formerly hunted for sport or for their flesh. Representations of the chase of wild asses are found on Assyrian monuments, and the Hebrew words translated 'wild ass' in the Bible indicate their swift fearlessness. See dziggetai and onager (with cuts), and hemionus. Wild balsam-apple, barley, basil. See the nouns. Wild bean. See Apios and Strophostyles. Wild bee, any bee excepting the hive-bee as domiciled by man: both social and solitary wild bees are of very numerous species and many genera of the two families Apidæ and Andrenidæ. See these words, and also such distinctive names as bumble-bee, carpenter-bee, upholsterer-bee, etc.; with various cuts, also mason bee and cuts under Anthophora and Ardenopa. Wild beet, Beta maritima of Europe, the supposed original of the cultivated beet, also sometimes, the marsh rosemary Statice Limonium. Wild bergamot, a strongly aromatic labiate plant, Monarda nitidiora, common in dry ground in North America. The corolla is commonly purplish, an inch long; cuts under Anthophora and Ardenopa. Wild birds, those birds which are not domesticated; specifically, in Eng. law, those birds that come within the provisions of an act passed in 1880, entitled the Wild Birds Protection Act, which prohibited the taking or killing of any wild bird between certain dates of each year, with some exceptions. But the species designated in the schedule annexed to the act were but about eighty in number, thus including but a small fraction of the actual avifauna of England, and some of the commonest song-birds it was declared to protect by this act were left unspecified. Wild boar, buckwheat. See the nouns. Wild brier, the dog-rose, Rosa canina; also, the sweet brier, Rosa rubiginosa. Wild camomile. Same as feverfew, 1. Wild canary, the American goldfinch, Spinus or Chrysomitris tristis. See cut under goldfinch. [Local, U. S.] Wild caper. Same as caper spurge (which see, under spurge). Wild cat. See wild-cat. Wild celery. See Vallisneria. Wild cherry, chestnut, china-tree, cicely. See the nouns. Wild cinnamon of the West Indies. See Canella. Wild clary, clove, cucumber, cumin. See the nouns. Wild coffee. See coffee and Triosteum. Wild columbine. See honeysuckle, 2. Wild cotton. (a) Same as cotton grass. (b) See Ipomæa. Wild dog, any feral dog, or dog in the state of nature; also, a ferine dog, or one run wild after domestication; a pariah dog; specifically the native wild dog of Australia, Canis dingo. See Canis, Canes, and cuts under buansuah, dhole, and dingo. Wild dove, in the United States, the common Carolina dove or mourning dove, Zenaidura carolinensis. The implied antithesis is wood pigeon namely, the passenger-pigeon. See cut under dove. Wild duck, any duck excepting the domesticated duck; specifically, the wild original of the domestic duck, Anas boschas (or boschas, or boshas). See cut under mallard. Wild elder. See elder. Wild engine. (a) A locomotive running over a railway without regard to schedule time. (b) A locomotive which by some accident or derangement has escaped from the control of its driver. Wild fig. See fig. Wild flag. See Paterson's. Wild fowl. See wild-fowl. Wild ginger. See ginger. Wild goat, any species of the genus Capra, in a broad sense, which has not been domesticated, as the ibex, etc.; specifically, the wild original of the domestic goat, C. ægagrus (see ægagrus, with cut). Several different Hebrew words rendered alike 'wild goat' in the Bible in different places are believed with good reason to mean any one of the ibexes, steinbocks, or bouquetins of Syria, Palestine, Arabia, and parts of Egypt—as, for example, the beden or jael-goat, technically C. jaela or jaela, and as inhabiting Mount Sinai named C. sinaitica by Hemprich and Ehrenberg. These wild goats differ little from the common ibex of the Alps. Wild goose, a bird of the goose kind, or genus Anser in a broad sense, which is wild or feral. In Great Britain the common wild goose is the graylag, Anser cinereus or ferus, and the term is applied to all the other species which visit that country. (See cut under graylag.) In North America wild goose unqualified commonly means the Canada goose, Bernicla canadensis. See cut under Bernicla. Wild-goose chase, see chase! Wild-goose plum. See plum! Wild gourd. See vine of Sodom, under vine. Wild hay, hide, honey, hyssop. See the nouns. Wild hop, the common bryony, Bryonia dioica. Wild horse, any specimen of the horse Equus caballus, now living in a state of nature. The wild original of the horse is unknown. All the wild horses of America and Australia, and probably all those of Asia, are the ferine (not truly feral) descendants of the domestic horse, which have reverted to the wild state. Wild huntsman, a legendary huntsman, especially in Germany, who with a phantom host goes careering over woods, fields, and villages during the night, accompanied with the shouts of huntsmen and the baying of hounds. Wild hyacinth, in the United States, the eastern camass, Camassia (Scilla) Fraseri; in England, the bluebell, Scilla nutans. Wild indigo. See Amorpha and Baptisia. Wild ipecac, ipecacuanha growing wild; also, Tricostema peduncularis. Wild Irishman, a rhamnaceous shrub, Discaria serratifolia, of New Zealand and Australia, having a tortuous stem and opposite branches of which the outermost form sharp spines, the leaves small, in fascicles, absent in old plants. Wild jalap. Same as man-of-the-earth. Wild jasmine. See jasmine and Ixora. Wild kale, land, lettuce, licorice, mangosteen, etc. See the nouns. Wild lemon, the May-apple Podophyllum peltatum, so named from the form and color of the fruit. Wild lime. See lime[1], Limonia, and tallow-nut. Wild mahogany, the white mahogany of Jamaica, Antirrhœa lucida. Wild mammee-apple, the West Indian tree Lucuma laterifolia, of the Guttiferæ. Wild mandrake, the May-apple Podophyllum peltatum. Wild mango. See Spondias. Wild mare. (a) The nightmare. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (b) A sea-saw. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., II. 4. 240. Wild marjoram. See marjoram, and cut under Origanum. Wild masterwort. Same as herb gerard. Wild mustard, nep, oat. See the nouns. Wild okra. See Malachra. Wild olive, onion, oyster. See the nouns. Wild orange. (a) See orange. (b) The West Indian caoutchouc-tree, Dendrites elastica or Geissoma ramiflora, of Guiana, without ground reported as a fit substitute for coffee: often misnamed nauseosa. Wild peach. See wild-orange. Wild pear, pigeon, plum, potato, etc. See the nouns. Wild pine. (a) The Scotch pine, Pinus sylvestris. (b) In the West Indies, a plant of the genus Tillandsia, especially T. utriculata. Wild pineapple. See pineapple, 2, pereon, and ottle. Wild pink. See Silene. Wild prune. See Prunus. Wild purslane, rice, sarsaparilla, etc. See the nouns. Wild rye. See rye and Terrell grass. Wild sheep, the wild original of the domestic sheep, or any feral species of the genus Ovis in a broad sense. (See Ovis and sheep.) Various species inhabit mountainous and high plateaus of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, as the aoudad, the argali, the bighorn, the bharhel, the mouflon, etc. See the distinctive names, including cuts under aoudad, argali, bighorn, and tragelaphus. Wild silkworm, any silkworm other than the ordinary domesticated Sericaria mori. See silkworm. Wild snowball. Same as guelder-rose, 1. Wild Spaniard. Same as spearmint, 1. Wild spinach, squill, strawberry, succory, swan. See the nouns. Wild sweet-pea. See Lathyrus. Wild sweet-william. See Phlox. Wild tamarind, tea, tobacco. See the nouns. Wild tuberose. See Spiranthes. Wild tulip, turkey, vanilla, vine, woad, etc. See the nouns. Wild woodbine, the Virginia creeper. The yellow jasmine, Gelsemium sempervirens, has been called Carolina wild woodbine. Wild wormwood. See Parthenium. Wild yam. See yam.

Syn. 1 and 6. Rude, impetuous, irregular, unrestrained, harebrained, frantic, frenzied, crazed, fanciful, visionary, strange, grotesque.

II. n. 1. A desert; an uninhabited and uncultivated tract or region; a waste.

The vasty wilds
Of wide Arabia.
Shak., M. of V., II. 7. 41.

One Destiny our Life shall guide;
Nor Wild nor Deep our common Way divide.
Prior, Henry and Emma.

We can now tread the regions of fancy without interruption, and expatiate in fairy wilds.
Goldsmith, Criticisms.

He would linger long
In lonesome vales, making the wild his home.
Shelley, Alastor.

2. pl. Wild animals; game.

In marcis and in meres, in myres and in waterres,
Bompynges dyuysen [dived]; "deere God," ich sayde,
"Whi e hadden these wilde suche witt and at what scole?"
Piers Plowman (C), xiv. 108.

At wild, crazy; distracted.

Trust hym never the more for the lylle that I sent yow by hym, but as a man at wylde, for every thyng that he told me is not trewe.
Paston Letters, III. 179.

wild[2]†, n. An obsolete variant of Weald, perhaps due to confusion with wild[1].

A franklin in the wild of Kent.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 1. 60.

wild-brain (wīld'brān), n. A giddy, volatile, heedless person; a harebrain.

I must let fly my civil fortunes, turn wild-brain, lay my wits upo' th' tenters, you rascals.
Middleton, Mad World, I. 1.

wildcat (wīld'kat), n. and a. I. n. 1. A cat of the original feral stock from which have descended some varieties of the domestic cat; the European Felis catus, living in a state of nature, not artificially modified in any way. Hence—2. One of various species of either of the genera

Felis and Lynx; especially, in North America, the bay lynx (L. rufus) and Canada lynx (L. canadensis), and sometimes the cougar (F. concolor). See *cat*1, and cuts under cougar and lynx.

II. a. Wild; reckless; haphazard: applied especially to unsound business enterprises: as, wildcat banking (see below); wildcat currency (currency issued by a wildcat bank); a wildcat scheme (a reckless, unstable venture); wildcat stock (stock of some wildcat or unsound company or organization). [Colloq., U. S.]

The first night of our journey was spent at Ashford, in Connecticut, where we arrived late in the evening, and here the bother of wild cat currency, as it was afterward called, was forced upon our attention.
Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past, p. 196.

The present system, though an immense improvement in every respect on the heterogeneous old breed of State and wild-cat banks that wrought ruin in 1836 and 1857, is nevertheless of the same dangerous character.
N. A. Rev., CXLI. 109.

Wildcat banking, a name given, especially in the western United States, to the operations of organizations or individuals who, under the loose State banking-laws which prevailed before the passage of the National Bank Act of 1863, issued large amounts of bank notes though possessing little or no capital.

The wild-cat banking which devastated the Ohio States between 1837 and 1860, and miseducated the people of those States until they thought irredeemable government issues an unhoped-for blessing, never could have existed if Story's opinion had been law.
W. G. Sumner, Andrew Jackson, p. 303.

Wildcat engine. See engine.

wildebeest (wil'de-bast), n. [D., = E. wild beast.] The gnu. [South Africa.]

wilder (wil'dėr), v. t. [A freq. form, < wild, a., prob. suggested by wilderness, and as to form by wander. Hence bewilder.] To cause to lose the way or track; puzzle with mazes or difficulties; bewilder.

So that it wildered and lost it selfe in those many byewaies.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 364.

We are a widow's three poor sons,
Lang wilder'd on the sea.
Romer Hafmand (Child's Ballads, I. 254)

When red morn
Made paler the pale moon, to her cold home
Wildered and wan and panting, she returned.
Shelley, Alastor.

wilderedly (wil'dėrd-li), adv. [< wildered, pp., + *-ly*2.] In a wildered manner; bewilderedly; wildly; incoherently.

It is but to thy passion and thy heat
Thou speak'st so wilderedly.
Sir H. Taylor, Isaac Commenus, ii. 2.

wildering (wil'dėr-ing), n. Same as wilding.

wilderment (wil'dėr-ment), n. [< wilder + -ment. Cf. bewilderment.] Bewilderment; confusion. [Poetical.]

This wilderment of wreck and death.
Moore, Lalla Rookh, The Fire Worshippers.

So in wilderment of gazing I looked up, and I looked down.
Mrs. Browning, Lost Bower, st. 57.

wildern†, n. [ME., also wilderne; prob. < AS. wildern*, < wilder, a reduced form of wilddeor, wild deer, a wild beast: see *wild*1 and deer. Cf. wilderness.] A wilderness.

Alse wurmes breden on wilderne.
Reliquiæ Antiquæ, I. 140.

wilderness (wil'dėr-nes), n. [< ME. wilder-nesse, wyldernys (= MD. wilderninsse); < wildern (or the orig. AS. wilder) + -ness.] 1. A tract of land inhabited only by wild beasts; a desert, whether forest or plain.

And after that Men comen out of Surreye, and entren in to Wyldernesse, and there the Weye is sondy.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 34.

Ich wente forth wyde where walkynge myn one,
In a wylde wyderneese by a wode-syde.
Piers Ploweman (C), xi. 61.

O for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
Some boundless contiguity of shade!
Cowper, Task, ii. 1.

2. A wild; a waste of any kind.

Environ'd with a wilderness of sea.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 1. 94.

The watery wilderness yields no supply.
Waller, Instruction to a Painter.

3. A part of a garden set apart for plants to grow in with unchecked luxuriance. Imp. Dict. —4. A confused or bewildering mass, heap, or collection.

Rome is but a wilderness of tigers.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 1. 54.

The land thou hast left a wilderness of wretches.
Fletcher (and Rowley), v. 1.

Flowering odours, cassia, nard, and balm;
A wilderness of sweets.
Milton, P. L., v. 294.

5†. Wildness.

Such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne'er issued from his blood.
Shak., M. for M., iii. 1. 142.

These paths and bowers doubt not but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease.
Milton, P. L., ix. 245.

=Syn. 1. Wilderness, Desert. See *desert*1.

Wilde's incision. In otology, a free incision down to the bone over the mastoid process, made in certain cases of disease of the ear.

wild-fire (wild'fir), n. [Early mod. E. wylde fyer, wylde fyre; < ME. wylde fir, wylde fyer, wylde fyr, wylde fur, wylde fure; < *wild*1 + fire.] 1. A composition of inflammable materials readily catching fire and hard to be extinguished; Greek fire; often used figuratively.

Faith his shield must be
To quench the balles of wilde-fyer pessentile.
Times Whistle (L. F. T. S.), p. 145.

Balls of wildfire may be safely touch'd,
Not violently sunder'd and thrown up.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iv. 2.

I was at that time rich in fame; for my book ran like wild fire.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxx.

2. Sheet lightning; a kind of lightning unaccompanied by thunder.

What is called "summer lightning" or "wild-fire" is sometimes a rather puzzling phenomenon.
P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 380.

3†. The blue flames of alcohol burnt in some dishes when brought on table, as with plum-pudding.

Swiche manere bake-metes and dish metes brennynge of wilde fir, and peynted and castelled with papir.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

4. In coal-mining, the name formerly sometimes given by miners to fire-damp. —5. Erysipelas; also, lichen circumscriptus, an eruptive disease, consisting of clusters or patches of papulæ.

A wylde fyr upon thair bodyes falle.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 262.

6. A disease of sheep, attended with inflammation of the skin. Wild-fire rash, a skin eruption, usually of infants only, consisting of papulæ arranged in circumscribed patches appearing in succession on different parts of the body: strophulus volaticus.

wild-flying (wild'fli-ing), a. Flighty.

If now they g redeem the emperor
From his wild-flying courses, this is she.
Beau. and Fl., Valentinian, I. 2.

wild-fowl (wild'foul), n. [< ME. wylde towle, wyldefoule, < AS. wild fugel, wild fowl: see *wild*1 and *fowl*1.] The birds of the duck tribe collectively considered; the Anatidæ; waterfowl: sometimes extended to other birds ordinarily pursued as game.

wildgrave (wild'grāv), n. [= G. wildgraf; < wild, game, + graf, count: see *reeve*2 and *grave*6.] The title of various German counts or nobles whose office originally was connected with the forests or with hunting.

The Wildgrave winds his bugle horn,
To horse, to horse! halloo, halloo!
Scott, Wild Huntsman.

wilding (wil'ding), n. and a. [< *wild*1 + *-ing*3.] I. n. 1. Plant that is wild or that grows without cultivation; specifically, a wild crab-apple tree; also, the fruit of such a plant.

And wildings of the seasons fruite
He did in scrip bestow.
Warner, Albion's England, iv. 29.

A choice dish of wildings here, to scald
And mingle with your cream.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

Matthew is in his grave, yet now
Me thinks I see him stand
As at that moment, with a bough
Of wildings in his hand.
Wordsworth, Two April Mornings (1798).

A leafless wilding shiver'ing by the wall.
Lowell, Under the Willows.

II. a. Wild; not cultivated or domesticated. [Poetical.]

O wilding rose, whom fancy thus endears
I fill your blossoms in my honest wave.
Scott, L. of the L., iv. 1.

Whose field of life, by angels sown,
The wilding vines o'errun.
Whittier, William Forster.

wildish (wil'dish), a. [< *wild*1 + *-ish*1.] Somewhat wild.

He is a little wildish, they say.
Richardson, Pamela, I. xxxii.

'Twould be a wildish destiny
If we, who thus together roam
In a wild country and far from home,
Were in this place the guests of Chance.
Wordsworth, Stepping Westward.

wildly (wild'li), adv. In a wild state or manner, in any sense.

wildly†, (wild'li), a. [< *wild*1 + *-ly*1.] Wild.

Lest red-eyed Ferrets wildly Foxes should Them undermine if rampir'd but with mould.
S. Clarke, Four Plantations in America (1670), p. 22.

wildness (wild'nes), n. [< ME. wyldernesse, wildnesse (cf. G. wildniss, desert, wilderness); < *wild*1 + -ness.] 1. The state or character of being wild, in any sense.

The perelle of youth for to pace
Without ony deth or distresse,
It is so fulle of wyldernesse.
Roun of the Rose, l. 4894.

Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 993.

Take heed sir: be not madder than you would make him: Though he be rash and sudden (which is all his wildness), Take heed you wrong him not.
Fletcher, Pilgrim, v. 6.

2†. A wild place or country; a wilderness.

Thise tyrannts put hem gladly not in prees,
No wildnesse ne no bussches for to wone.
Chaucer, Former Age, l. 54.

Wild's case. See *case*1.

wild-williams (wild wil'yamz), n. An old name of the ragged robin, Lychnis Flos cuculi.

wild-wind† (wild wind), n. A hurricane.

In the year of our Lord 1638, in November, here happened an hurricane or wild-wind.
Fuller, Worthies, I. 496.

wild-wood (wild'wud), n. and a. I. n. The wild, unfrequented woods; a forest.

The orchard, the meadow, the deep tangled wild-wood.
S. Woodworth, The Old Oaken Bucket.

II. a. Belonging to wild, uncultivated, or unfrequented woods. [Poetical.]

Aye the wild wood echoes rang
Oh, dearly do I love thee, Auld!
Burns, By Allan Stream.

wile1 (wil), n. [< ME. wile, wyle, < AS. wil, wile (also in comp. flyge wil, "a flying wile," an arrow), cf. Icel. vel, vél, an artifice, wile, craft, device, fraud, trick (> OF. guile, > E. guile: see *guile*1).] A trick or stratagem; anything practised for insnaring or deception; a sly, insidious artifice.

But hit is no ferly, thaz a fole madde,
And thurz wyles of wymmen be wonen to sorze.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2416.

Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.
Eph. vi. 11.

Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 27.

Syn. Maneuver, Stratagem, etc. See artifice.

wile1 (wil), v. t.; pret. and pp. wiled, ppr. wiling. [< *wile*1, n.] 1†. To deceive; beguile; impose on.

So perfect in that art was Pardell
That he Malbecco's halfen eye did wyle;
Six halfen eye he wiled wondrous well.
Spenser, F. Q., III. x. 8.

2. To lure; entice; inveigle; coax; cajole.

Say whence is yond warlow with his wand,
That thus wold wyle oure folk away?
Towneley Mysteries, p. 60.

She wiled him into se chamber,
She wiled him into ten.
Sir Hugh, or the Jew's Daughter (Child's Ballads, III. 337).

But court no anither tho' jolin ye be,
For fear that she wile your fancy frae me.
Burns, Oh Whistle and I'll Come to you.

3. To shorten or cause to pass easily or pleasantly, as by some diverting wile: in this sense probably confused with while.

Seated in two black horsehair porter's chairs, one on each side of the fireplace, the superannuated Mr and Mrs Smallweed wile away the rosy hours.
Dickens, Bleak House, xxi.

wile2†, n. A Middle English form of *while*1.

wile3†, n. Same as *weald*2, Weald (1).

The earth is the Lords, and all the corners thereof; he created the mountaines of Wales as well as the wilds of Kent.
Howell, Forreine Travell (ed. Arber), p. 99.

wilful, willful (wil'ful), a. [< ME. wilful, wil-full, wylfulle, willfulle, < *will*1, n., + -ful.] 1†. Willing; ready; eager; keen.

With his forefull folke to Phocus hes rides,
And is wilfull to seek to whom hem eares.
Alexander of Macedonie (E. E. T. S.), l. 412.

As that poet on the pavement the pepull beheld,
Haden wonder of the wrighes A wilfulle dowyre
To know of the tr[illegible] cosyng and the cause wete,
That were so fully avalt A a rowte gay.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 353.

When walls are so wilful to hear without warning.
Shak., M. N. D., v. 1. 211.

2. Due to one's own will; spontaneous; voluntary; deliberate; intentional: as, wilful murder; wilful waste.

Alle the sones of Israel halewiden wilful thingis[1] brought a willing offering (A. V.) to the Lord.
Wyclif, Ex. xxxv. 29.

The bye God on whom that we bileeve
In wilful poverte chees to lyve his lyf.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 872.

3. Obstinate and unreasonable; not to be moved from one's notions, inclinations, purposes, or the like, by counsel, advice, com-wilful mands, or instructions; obstinate; stubborn; refractory; wayward; inflexible: as, a wilful man; a wilful horse.

Like a wilful youth,
That which I owe is lost.
Shak., M. of V., I. 1. 146.

A wilful man never wanted woe.
Battle of Pentland Hills (Child's Ballads, VII. 242).

Wilful fire-raising. Same as arson[1]. [Scotch.] = Syn. 3. Untoward, Contrary, etc. (see wayward), self-willed, mulish, intractable, headstrong, unruly, heady.

wilfulhead† (wil'ful-hed), n. [ME. wilfulhed, < wilful + head.] Wilfulness; perverse obstinacy.

And nat be lyk tirannts of Lumbardye,
That usen wilfulhed and tirannye.
Chaucer, Good Women (1st version), l. 355.

wilfullingt, n. [< wilful + -ing[1].] A wilful act. [Rare.]

Great King, no more bay with thy wilfullings
His wrath's dread torrent.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Works, II., The Lawe.

wilfully, willfully (wil'ful-i), adv. [< ME. wilfully, wilfulli, wylfully, wilfullichi, < wilful + -ly[2].] 1†. Of free will or choice; willingly; voluntarily; gladly; readily.

Forte ye the flok of God that is among you, and purvey ye, not as constreyned, but wilfully. Wyclif, 1 Pet. v. 2.

Be nought to abashed to bydde and to be nedy
Sythe that wronghte al the worlde was wilfullich nedy.
Piers Ploughman (B), xx. 48.

Trowe ye that whyles I may preche,
And wynne gold and silver for I teche,
That I wol lyve in povert wilfully.
Chaucer, Prol. to Pardoner's Tale, l. 155.

They wilfully themselves exile from light
Shak., M. N. D., III. 2. 336.

2. By design; with set purpose; intentionally; especially, in a wilful manner; as following one's own will; selfishly; perversely; obstinately; stubbornly.

For he that winketh whan he sholde see,
Al wilfully, God lat him never thee.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 647.

The mother, being determinately, but I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Dumaresque, tried all ways.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, I.

Surely of such desperat persons as will wilfully followe the course of their owne follye there is no compassion to be had.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

If we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins.
Heb. x. 26.

Religion is a matter of our freest choice, and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy.
Fullerton.

3. In law, wilfully is sometimes interpreted to mean—(a) by an act or an omission done of purpose, with intent to bring about a certain result; or (b) with implication of evil intent or legal malice, or with absence of reasonable ground for believing the act in question to be lawful.

wilfulness, willfulness (wil'ful-nes), n. [< ME. wilfulnesse, < wilful + -ness.] 1. The character of being wilful; determination to have one's own way; self-will; obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.

Falsheed is soo fut of curstidnesse that hur worship shalle nowere have enterprise where it reigneth and bathe the wilfulnesse.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 71.

Men of business, absorbed in their object, which calls out daring, energy, resolution, and force, are often a wilfulness of temper.
J. F. Clarke, Self Culture, p. 292.

2. Intention; the character of being done by design.

The deliberateness and wilfulness, or as we prefer to call it the intention, which constitutes the crime of murder.
Mozley and Whiteley.

willily (wil'i-li), adv. [< wily + ly[2].] In a wily manner; by stratagem; insidiously; craftily.

They did work wisely.
Josh. ix. 4.

williness (wil'i-nes), n. The state or character of being wily; cunning; guile.

wilk (wilk), n. A dialectal form of whelk.

will[1] (wil), v. Pres. I will, 2 wilt 3 will, pl. will; imperf. I would, 2 wouldest or wouldst, 3 would, pl. would (obs. pp. would, wold). Will has no imperative and no infinitive. [< ME. willen (pres. ind. 1st and 3d pers. wille, wile, wille, wile, welle, weile, weil, weill (also contr. alle); 2d pers. wilt, wult, welt; pl. willeth, wulleth, welleth, wolleth; pret. 1st and 3d pers. wolde (> ME. would), walde, walte, wald (> Sc. wad), 2d pers. woldest, woldes, pl. wolden, walde, waide, walde, pp. wold; < AS. willan, wyllan (pres. ind. 1st and 3d pers. wile, wille, wylle, 2d pers. wilt, pl. willath, wyllath, pret. 1st and 3d pers. wolde, 2d pers. woldest, pl. woldon, ppr. willende) = OS. willian, willaan = OFries. willa, wella = D. willen = MLG. LG. willen = OHG. wellan, wollan, MHG. wellen, wollen, G. wollen = Icel. vilja = Sw. vilja = Dan. ville = Goth. wiljan (pret. walda) = OBulg. voliti, will, relieti, command, = Russ. velieti, command, etc., = Lith. welti, will, = L. velle (pres. ind. volo), wish. Prob. not connected, as usually asserted, with Gr. βούλεσθαι, will, wish, or with Skt. var, choose, select, prefer. From the same source are ult. E. will[2], wale[2], waln, weil[2], weal[1], weld[1], wilful, etc. From the L. verb are ult. E. volition, voluntary, volunteer, county, voluptuary, etc., nolens volens, etc.] A. As an independent verb. I. trans. To wish; desire; want; be willing to have (a certain thing done): now chiefly used in the subjunctive (optative) preterit form would governing a clause: as, I would that the day were at hand. When in the first person the subject is frequently omitted: as, would that ye had listened to us!

Wol ache 3it my sone hire wedde & to wife haue?
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4208.

"The toure vp the loft," quod she, "treuthe is there-inne,
And wolde that ge wrought as his worde techeth."
Piers Plowman (B), l. 13.

I wol him noght thogh thou were deed tomorwe.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 307.

And when thei were come to Merlyn, he thanked hem of that thei hadde solde, and that wolde hym so meche gode.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), I. 54.

Here I would not More to fit from his literal plain sense.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More (Parker Soc.), p. 252.

She moved him to ask of her father a field, and she lighted from off her ass; and Caleb said unto her, What wilt thou?
Judges i. 14.

Is this thy vengeance, holy Venus, thine,
Because I would not one of thine own doves,
Not ev'n a rose, were offer'd to thee?
Tennyson, Lucretius.

Would in optative expressions is often followed by a dative, with or without to, noting the person or power by whom the wish may be fulfilled: hence the phrases would (to) God, would (to) heaven, etc.

Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!
2 Sam. xviii. 33.

I am not mad: I would to heaven I were!
For then 'tis like I should forget myself.
Shak., K. John, iii. 4. 48.

II. intrans. To have a wish or desire; be willing.

In a simile, as Eue
Was, whanne god wolde out of the wyȝe drawe
Piers Plowman (C), xix. 230.

The foray brydel with the bit of gold
Gouerneth he, right as hime self hath wold.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1209.

All that falsen the kinges money or clippen it, also all that falsen or vse false measures, . . . wetyngly other than the lawe of the lord will, etc.
J. Mure, Instructions for Parish Priests (E. E. T. S.), l. 714.

They cryed to us to doe no more, all should be as we would.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 191.

B. As an auxiliary, followed by an infinitive without to. 1. To wish, want, like, or agree (to do, etc.); to be (am, is, are, was, etc.) willing (to do, etc.): noting desire, preference, consent, or, negatively, refusal.

But neuer man that place ne stede went
That sogerne wold ther for thyng stay.
Roman of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5804.

Quod Conscience, "thou flemed us from thee;
Thou woldest not oure lore leere."
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 76.

That day that a man would have another's landes or his goodes, that day he would have his life also if he could.
Inderwick Papers, 1587 (H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age), [App. II.]

And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.
John v. 40.

Oh, sir, the multitude, that seldom know any thing but their own opinions, speak that they would have.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, I. 1.

Will you permit the orphan nephew to whom you have been a father . . . to offer you a trifle (a ring)?
Scott, Antiquary, xxx.

2. To be (am, is, are, etc.) determined (to do, etc.); said when one insists on or persists in being or doing something: hence, must, as a matter of will or pertinacity: do (emphatic auxiliary) from choice, wilfulness, determination, or persistence.

Alas, the general might have pardon'd follies!
Soldiers will talk sometimes.
Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 1.

Fate a such a shrewish thing,
She will be mistris.
Chapman, Iliad, vi. 408.

Some not contented to have them (Saxons) a people of German race, will needs bring them from elsewhere.
Verstegan, Rest of Decayed Intelligence (ed. 1628), p. 2.

There stand, if thou wilt stand.
Milton, P. R., iv. 551.

If you will fling yourself under the wheels, Juggernaut will go over you, depend upon it.
Thackeray, Book of Snobs, iii.

Cholera, scurvy, and fever, the wound that would not be heal'd.
Tennyson, Defence of Lucknow.

3. To make (it) a habit or practice (to do, etc.); be (am, is, are, etc.) accustomed (to do, etc.); do usually: noting frequent or customary action.

Joves halt it greet humblesse
And vertu eek, that thou wolt make
A nyght ful ofte thyn heed to ake.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 481.

Whan he had souped at home in his house, he wolde walk before hym all his seruauntes.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 2.

I remember the hot summer Sunday afternoons, when the pavement would be red-hot, and the dust, and bits of straw, and scraps of paper, would blow fitfully about with every little puff of air.
E. H. Yates, Recollections and Experiences, I. vii.

4. To be (am, is, are, etc.) sure (to do, etc.); do undoubtedly, inevitably, or of necessity; ought or have (to do, etc.); must: used in incontrovertible or general statements, and often, especially in provincial use, forming a verb-phrase signifying no more than the simple verb: as, I'm thinking this will be (that is, this is) your daughter.

I am afeerd there wylle be sumthyng amys.
Coventry Mysteries (ed. Halliwell), p. 395.

Sixe comoun cubites, that will be nyne foot long.
Trevisa, tr. of Higden's Polychronicon (ed. Babington), [II. 235.

That will be unjust to man, will be sacrilegious to God.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

He was a considerate man, the deacon . . . ye'll no hae forgotten him, Robin?
Scott, Rob Roy, xxiii.

A little difference, my dear . . . There will be such in the best regulated families.
Thackeray, Philip, xxvi.

"Are you seeing any angels, Rob?" . . . "I'm not sure; . . . it is not easy to tell what will be an angel, and what will not. There's so much all blue up there."
Geo. MacDonald, What's Mine's Mine, xix.

5. To be (am, is, are, etc.) ready or about (to do, etc.): said of one on the point of doing something not necessarily accomplished.

As the queene hem saugh, she wiste well she was betraied, and wolde crye as she that was sore affraied and thei sette that yet she spake eny worde she sholde a-non be shame.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 465.

6. In future and conditional constructions, to be (am, is, are, etc.) (to do, etc.): in general noting in the first person a promise or determination, and in the second and third mere assertion of a future occurrence without reference to the will of the subject, other verb-phrases being compounded with the auxiliary shall. For a more detailed discrimination between will and shall, see shall, B., 2.

And al the bettre sulle ge spede n
If ge wolen ge with trewe the leden.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2304.

Yef we wollen don his seruise . . . we sollen habbe the mede we ligge inchoure.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 83.

At a knight than wol I first beginne.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 42.

Wife. O, we shall have murder! you kill my heart.
Host. No, I will shed no blood.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 3.

Without their learning, how will thou with them,
Or they with thee, hold conversation meet?
Milton, P. R., iv. 231.

Thou would'st have thought, so furious was their fire,
No force could tame them, and no toil could tire.
Pope, Iliad, xv. 844.

It was all to be done in the most delicate manner, and all would assist . . . Thackeray would lecture, so would W. H. Russell; Dickens would give a reading.
E. H. Yates, Recollections and Experiences, I. vii.

In such constructions will is sometimes found where precision would require shall. See shall, B., final note.

I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.
Shak., Much Ado, ii. 3. 119.

If we contrast the present with so late a period as thirty years ago, we will perceive that there has been nothing short of a national awakening.
W. Sharp, D. G. Rossetti, p. 40.

Would is often used for will in order to avoid a dogmatic style or to soften blunt or harsh assertions, questions, etc.

A pretty idle toy; would you take money for it?
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 1.

Would you say the Lord's Prayer for me, old fellow?
J. H. Ewing, Six to Sixteen, ii.

In all its senses the auxiliary will may be used with an ellipsis of the following infinitive.

Bot I wyl to the chapel, for chaunce that may falle.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2182.

And Pandare wep as he to water wolde.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 718.

Pan. I heartily beseech you what must I do?
Troil. Even what thou wilt.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, iii. 36.

First, then—A woman will, or won't, depend on't:
If she will do't, she will; and there's an end on't.
A. Hill, Love, Epil.

Will (you, he, etc.), will-you, he, etc.). See will[2].

will[1] (wil), n. [< ME. wille, wylle, < AS. willa = OS. willeo, willio, willo = OFries. willa = MD. wille, D. wil = OHG. willo, MHG. G. wille = Icel. vili = Sw. vilja = Dan. villie = Goth. wilja, will; from the verb: see will[1], v.] 1. Wish; desire; pleasure; inclination; choice.

> Man, y am more redy alwaye
> To forgeue thee thi mys gouernaunce > than thou art mercy for to preye,
> For thy wille were thee to enhaunce.
> Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 201.

I thanke God, I had no wille to don it, for no thing that he bebighten me. Mandeville, Travels, p. 35.

> I wol axe if it hir wille be
> To be my wyf, and reule hir after me.
> Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 270.

They who were hottest in his Cause, the most of them were men offter drunk then by thir good will sober.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xix.

2. That which is wished for or desired; expressed wish; purpose; determination.

> When Castor hade clanly consayuit his wille,
> He cawared hym boneetly with orryng a littill.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1918.

Thy will be done. Mat. vi 10

There is no greater Hindrance to Men for accomplishing their Will than their own Willfulness.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 72.

That eternal immutable law in which will and reason are the same. Burke, Rev. in France.

> He holds him with his glittering eye —
> The wedding-guest stood still,
> And listens like a three years' child:
> The Mariner hath his will.
> Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, i.

Here was the will, and plenty of it, now for the way.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, p. 4.

3. Wish; request; command.

Tell me now, Mr. Acres, in case of an accident, is there any little will or commission I could execute for you?
Sheridan, The Rivals, v. 3.

4. Expressed wish with regard to the disposal of one's property, or the like, after death; the document containing such expression of one's wishes; especially, in law, the legal declaration of a person's intentions, to take effect after his death. The essential distinction between a will and any other instrument or provision contingent upon death is that a will has no effect whatever until death, and may be freely revoked meanwhile, but a deed which may create or convey an estate in the event of death must take effect as binding the grantor in his life-time. In English law the word will was originally used only of a disposition of real property to take effect at death, the word testament being then used as in the Roman and civil law, of a disposition of personal property, hence the phrase now redundant, last will and testament. In modern usage the term will does not necessarily imply an actual disposition of property for an instrument executed with the formalities required by law, in which the testator merely appoints a guardian for his child or merely nominates an executor, leaving the assets to be distributed by the executor among those who would take by law, is a will. In respect of form, that which distinguishes a written will from other instruments consists in the ceremonies which the law requires for a valid execution, for the sake of guarding against mistake, fraud, and undue influence. Nuncupative wills, however, are not subject to these rules. These formalities are generally four: (1) The testator must subscribe at the end or foot of the writing. (2) He must do so in the presence of witnesses. In some jurisdictions three are required. In some jurisdictions it is enough that he acknowledge to the witnesses that the subscription he has previously made is his. (3) He must at the same time publish the will — that is, declare to the witnesses that it is his will. (4) They must thereafter in his presence and at his request, and in the presence of one another, subscribe their names as witnesses. In some jurisdictions a seal is necessary with the testator's signature. One whose testimony as a witness to a will would become necessary to prove it can take no gift by the will.

After Christ had made his will at this supper, and given strength to his will by his death, and proved his will by his resurrection, and left the church possessed of his estate by his ascension, . . . he poured out his legacy of knowledge. Donne, Sermons, xxviii.

> Her last will > Shall never be digress'd from.
> Ford, Broken Heart, v 3.

> O lead me gently up you hill, . . .
> And I'll there sit down, and make my will
> The Cruel Brother (Child's Ballads, II. 255).

5. Discretion; free or arbitrary disposal; sufferance; mercy?

> ge ar welcum to wrike wunder lykes,
> That here is, al is yowre awen, to hane at yowre wylle & wrike.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 856.

He had no firme estate in his tenement, but was only a tenaunt at will or little more, and use at will may leave it. Spenser, State of Ireland.

But by constreynt and force of the sayde fowle chaunngeable weather we straike all oure sayles and lay dryuynge in the large see at Goden spill vnto the worte morrowynge.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 68.

> Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.
> Ps. xxvii. 12.

The Prince was so devout and humble that he submitted his Body to be chastised at the Will of Dunstan Abbot of Glastenbury. Baker, Chronicles, p. 11.

6. The faculty of conscious, and especially of deliberate, action. The will should not be confused (as it is, however, by different writers) with self-control, desire, choice, or attention, although the first and last of these are special modes of volition. Nor is "willing" a table to move automatically across a room an act of will, for experiment shows that effort of this kind, however strenuous, fails to cause even the willer's own hand or foot to move. Normally, the consciousness of action is merged in sensations coming from the member moved, but in cases of anæsthesia the agent is still aware of being in action, and even more or less of what he is doing. This consciousness always involves a sense of opposition, whether in the form of a struggle or of a triumph, or in the negative aspect of a sense of freedom. (See freedom of the will, below.) We are always aware of some resistance, be it only the inertia of our limbs. Willing thus essentially involves perceptive sensation, the reflexio of Thomas Aquinas. (See reflection, 7.) When the real object with which we are in relation is studied with reference to the predicates attributed to it by the senses, the result is experience; but when the predicates we are inwardly inclined to attach to it are studied out, the operation is deliberation, terminating in choice, and commonly followed by acts of will. This cognitive process is the necessary condition of self-control. By a "strong will" is sometimes, and perhaps most correctly, meant great self-control, but more usually a power of bearing down the wills of others by tiring them out and by a domination like hypnotism is intended.

Appetite is the Will's solicitor, and the Will is Appetite's controller; what we covet according to the one by the other we often reject.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. viii § 3.

Every man is conscious of a power to determine in things which he conceives to depend upon his determination. To this power we give the name of will.
Reid, Intellectual Powers, II. 1.

7. The act of willing; the act of determining a choice or forming a purpose; volition.

> Even actual sins, committed without will,
> Are neither sins nor shame — much more compell'd
> Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, III. 2.

It is necessary to form a distinct notion of what is meant by the word Volition in order to understand the import of the word Will, for this last word properly expresses that power of the mind of which volition is the act. . . . The word will, however, is not always used in this its proper acceptation, but is frequently substituted for volition: as when I say that my hand moves in obedience to my will.
D. Stewart, Works (ed. Hamilton), VI. 384.

Antecedent will. See antecedent. At will (at) At command, in thorough mastery.

> He that can but two words of concord cannot find feare or fire or sore, vnlesse he haue his owne language at will.
> Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 75.

(b) At pleasure, at discretion. To hold an estate at the will of another is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor. See estate at will, under estate.

> . . . ge schal wite of . . . are some
> That ge long haue for lore lene me for to the,
> A him wisse a yen al wille.
> William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2956.

We know more from nature than we can at will communicate. Emerson, Nature, iv.

And if we think of various sensations in parts of our bodies we can produce them at will and can induce at our pleasure the bodily alterations through emotional excitement. F. H. Bradley, Mind, XIII. 87.

